3. In May 1870, F. and G., the trustees of a will, one of whom, F., was an experienced farmer, and the other, G., a solicitor, advanced a sum of 2,400*l.*, part of the trust estate, along with another sum of 2,600*l.* not part of the estate, making together 5,000*l.*, at 4*l.* per cent., on the security of a freehold farm, which in 1868 had been sold to the mortgagor, who was farming that and the neighbouring land on a peculiar system of husbandry. The trustees had power to advance on contributory mortgages. In 1868 the farm had been valued on behalf of the vendors, of whom G. was one, and also the solicitor, at 6,895*l.* This valuation was communicated to F. at the time of the mortgage; and no other valuation was made. Interest was paid in full but irregularly, down to November 1877, since which time the farm, which was situated on clay soil, in a wet situation, had become unsaleable and unlettable, owing to unfavourable seasons, and had yielded no income. The mortgagor became insolvent. Upon claim by the cestui que trust against F. and the executors of G. to be declared entitled to payment of the 2,400*l.* and interest since November 1877:—Held, notwithstanding that no valuation was used at the date of the mortgage other than the valuation made on behalf of the vendors at the time of the sale to the mortgagor, that G., the trustee, was himself one, and solicitor of the others, of the vendors to the mortgagor; and that the sum advanced was more than two-thirds of the estimated value of the farm—that the trustees were not liable to make good the deficient security. Re Godfrey, Godfrey v. Faulkner, 23 L. R., Ch. D., 483; 52 L. J., Ch., 820; 48 L. T. 853; 32 W. R. 23.

The test of liability always is, whether or not the trustees have acted as prudent men would have acted in dealing with their own property. The "two-thirds" rule is not enforceable with exact strictness. Id.

(c) Of Judgments.

4. A power to trustees to lay out money "in the public stocks or funds in Great Britain, or on any mortgage of freehold or leasehold estates, or any other real securities in England, Wales, or Ireland," does not authorise them to lend it on the security of a judgment, even since the 3 & 4 Vict., c. 105, s. 22. Johnston v. Lloyd, 7 Ir. Eq. R. 252.

(d) Of Leaseholds.

5. Defendant, being trustee under a will, containing no direction as to investment, lent part of the trust fund upon the security of unsurrendered copyholds, the deposit of a lease, and a bond. He was ordered to bring the money into court within six weeks. Wyatt v. Sharratt, 3 Beav. 498.

6. A power to invest trust moneys on real security in Ireland authorises a loan on lease-holds for lives, perpetually renewable at a head rent. Macleod v. Annesley, 16 Beav. 600; 17 Jur. 608; 22 L. J., Ch., 633; 1 W. R. 250.

The general understanding is, that a trustee should only lend to the extent of two-thirds of the value on agricultural freeholds, and to the extent of one-half on freehold houses. Semble, also, that one-half is the limit in the case of a leasehold renewable for ever at a large head rent. Ib.

Trustee made liable for a loss on a mortgage investment, he not having taken due precautions to ascertain the value of the property mortgaged. Ib.

Under a power to trustees of a settlement "to lay out and invest the trust moneys upon Government or real securities in England, Ireland, Scotland, or Wales," the trustee invested part of the trust moneys on leaseholds for lives in Ireland, with a covenant for perpetual renewal, subject to a head-rent. The property at the time of the investment was subject to certain charges, after payment of which barely sufficient surplus rents were left to pay the interest on the mortgage debt, and afterwards it became much depreciated in value, and insufficient to answer the debt:—Held, in a suit instituted by one of the cestui que trustent, to make the trustee liable for the loss arising from the investment, that leaseholds for lives in Ireland, with a covenant for perpetual renewal, if the same had been of adequate value, would not have been a breach of trust, but that having regard to the value of the property, the investment was a breach of trust. Ib.

1. Trustees being empowered under a settlement to invest moneys upon mortgage of freehold, copyhold, or leasehold estate, invested upon mortgage of leaseholds, with only fourteen years to run; the Court directed the mortgage to be called in, without prejudicing any question as to the liability of the trustees in the event of a loss. Pince v. Beattie, 9 Jur., N. S., 1119; 11 W. R. 979; 9 L. T., N. S., 315.

2. Under a power to invest in "real securities," trust funds were invested on mortgage of long leaseholds. The mortgagees of a one-sixth share of the trust fund commenced an action against the trustee to administer the trust estate, alleging that the investment was improper, and that the trust funds were in danger of being lost. Pending the action, the trustee paid the remaining five-sixth shares to the other persons entitled, who had not been made parties to the action in any way, and paid the plaintiff's share into court:—Held, that the trust funds had been improperly invested. Re Chennell, Jones v. Chennell, 47 L. J., Ch., 583; 8 L. R., Ch. D., 492; 26 W. R. 595; 38 L. T., N. S., 494. Affirming 47 L. J., Ch., 80.

Held, also, that under the circumstances, the action had been instituted unnecessarily, and therefore that the trustee was justified in partly distributing the fund, and was entitled to be paid his costs of the action, and costs, charges, and expenses as trustee out of the share in court. Ib.

3. As a general rule long terms of years do not answer the description of "real securities," within the meaning of a power for trustees to lend on mortgage of "real securities." Re

(e) Railway Mortgages or Debentures.

4. Under a power to invest trust money "on real securities," a trustee lent it to a railway company, on the usual assignment of the "undertaking," tolls, etc., the principal not payable till seven years:—Held, that whether real security or not, the investment was improper. Mant v. Leith, 15 Beav. 524; 16 Jur. 302; 21 L. J., Ch., 719.

5. A testator directed his trustees to invest in the funds, or on Government securities, or upon the security by way of mortgage of any freehold, copyhold, or leasehold hereditaments in England or Wales:—Held, that this did not authorise an investment upon the security of railway mortgages made in conformity with the 8 & 9 Vict., c. 16, s. 38, or in Great Northern Railway debenture stock. Mortimore v. Mortimore, 28 L. J., Ch., 558; 4 De G. & J. 472.

(f) Stock Mortgages.

6. A trustee sold consols, forming part of the trust estate, and invested the proceeds in a stock mortgage:—Held, that this was an improper investment. Whitney v. Smith, 4 L. R., Ch., 513; 17 W. R. 579; 20 L. T., N. S., 468.

7. The general rule, that where stock is standing in the names of trustees any party interested may have an order ex debito justitiæ, to have it transferred into court, does not apply to a case where there are discretionary trusts still to be performed. Under the statutory power to vary securities, a stock mortgage is an improper investment. But where trust funds had been lent on stock mortgage, and re-transferred before the institution of the suit:—Held, that this, though a mistake on the part of the trustees, was no reason for depriving them of the control of the fund. Bromley v. Kelly, 39 L. J., Ch., 274; 18 W. R. 374.

(g) On Second Mortgage.

8. Trustees lent trust moneys on a second mortgage of house property greatly out of repair, and the principal part was lost:—Held, that they were liable as for a breach of trust, notwithstanding a trustee indemnity clause, declaring they should not be liable for the insufficiency or deficiency in abuse of any securities except through their wilful default. Drosier v. Brereton, 15 Beav. 84.

In charging trustees for breaches of trust, and the costs of suit, it is immaterial how the trust was created, and whether for valuable consideration, or by the voluntary gift of the trustees themselves. Ib.

9. It is the duty of a trustee who executes a power to show that he has complied with the exigencies required by it. So, where he varies the investment of the trust fund, the burden of proof lies on him to show, that it is a fit and proper investment. Norris v. Wright, 14 Beav. 291.

Whether a trustee is justified in lending trust money on a second mortgage, without obtaining the legal estate, quære. Ib.

An estate of the value of 80,000*l.* was subjected to a first mortgage of 40,000*l.* and to two others, for 11,000*l.* and 6,800*l.*, and between the second and third there was a dispute as to priority. A trustee advanced 1,908*l.* trust money on the security of an assignment of an equal amount of the 6,800*l.*:—Held, that this was a breach of trust. Ib.

(h) Other Matters.

1. Semble, that in the absence of direction as to investment, trustees cannot properly invest on mortgage. Raby v. Ridehalgh, 7 De G. M. & G. 104; 3 Eq. Rep. 901; 3 W. R. 344; 1 Jur., N. S., 363; 24 L. J., Ch., 58.

2. Trustees lent trust money on mortgage, upon a valuation made on behalf of the mortgagor. The security proved greatly deficient:—Held, that the trustees were personally liable for the loss. Ingle v. Partridge, 34 Beav. 411.

3. Trustees had power to invest upon such securities as they should approve:—Held, that they were bound nevertheless to exercise a careful discretion in selecting a security as to value, and that an investment in trade buildings, not having ascertained that they were at least worth twice the money invested, was a breach of trust. Stretton v. Ashmall, 3 Drew. 9; 24 L. J., Ch., 277; 3 W. R. 4.

4. The trustees of a settlement, having invested the settled funds on a mortgage security, which turned out insufficient, and it not appearing that they took due precaution to ascertain whether the security was sufficient, were ordered to pay into court the whole amount of the trust funds, taking upon themselves the security. By the decree in the court below they were declared liable to pay so much only as the mortgaged premises, when sold, should prove insufficient to answer. Lockhart v. Reilly, Reilly v. Lockhart, 3 W. R. 227; 25 L. J., Ch., 697.

5. By an ante-nuptial settlement a sum of stock was settled upon certain trusts for the benefit of the wife and children of the marriage. The settlement contained powers for the trustees to sell the trust fund, and reinvest the proceeds in Government or real securities. By a contemporaneous memorandum, which was executed by the father, the wife, and the intended husband, and indorsed upon the deed of settlement, the trustees were empowered to advance any portion of the trust fund to the owners or lessees of Vauxhall Gardens, upon mortgage, either as first, second, or third mortgagees, for such time and at such rate of interest as the trustees might think fit. The trustees lent the whole of the trust fund to three persons, who afterwards became the joint proprietors of, and partners in, Vauxhall Gardens; but no written security was then taken by the trustees. One of these proprietors of the gardens subsequently retired from the partnership. Some time afterwards the trustees obtained a covenant from the two remaining partners to surrender the Vauxhall Gardens by way of mortgage, subject to two prior charges. This mortgage eventually proving a wholly inadequate security for the trust fund, a suit was instituted to compel the trustees to reinstate the stock:—Held, that under the circumstances the trustees must be considered, in having made the advance without security, and in having afterwards accepted the covenant of two only of the three joint-debtors, to have misapplied the trust fund, and that they had subjected themselves to the liability of replacing it. Fowler v. Reynal, 3 Macn. & G. 500; 21 L. J., N. S., Ch., 121; 15 Jur. 1019. Affirming 2 De G. & Sm. 749; 13 Jur. 649.

6. G. and H., trustees of a settlement, on the solicitation of D., the tenant for life of the settlement, lent the trust funds on a security which totally failed. G. was a solicitor, and in the transaction of the loan, no other solicitor was employed for the lenders, and no sufficient investigation of title was made:—Held, that the trustees were compellable to replace the trust fund. French v. Graham, 10 Ir. Ch. R. 522.

Held, also, that both being solvent, H. was bound to replace one moiety, and G. the other moiety, that G. was not entitled to be indemnified by the tenant for life, the onus of investigating the title having been cast upon him, but that H. was entitled to be recouped, by the tenant for life, the amount of his moiety. Ib.

7. If trustees lending money on mortgage have the same solicitor as the mortgagor, they must take the utmost precaution; if they trust implicitly in the solicitor, however high his reputation, they will be held responsible for any loss which his fraud may occasion. The indemnity clause usually inserted in settlements will not protect them. Sutton v. Wilders, 12 L. R., Eq., 373; 41 L. J., Ch., 30; 25 L. T. 292; 19 W. R. 1021.

5. Shares of Public Companies.

8. An investment in the shares or stock of a public company, which provides that the shares shall be registered in the name of a single person, is not a proper investment of trust funds. Consterdine v. Consterdine, 8 Jur., N. S., 906; 31 L. J., Ch., 807; 10 W. R. 727; 7 L. T., N. S., 122.

A testator gave his real and personal estate to three trustees, with power, in their "absolute discretion," when they should think fit, but not otherwise, to sell, and convert and invest upon certain securities or "upon the stocks, shares, securities," of any incorporated company paying a dividend:—Held, that the trustees were authorised to invest in railway stock bearing a fixed rate of interest, but that they ought not to allow part of the assets to remain on shares as invested by the testator himself, which, by the rules of the company, could only stand in the name of a single trustee. S. C. 31 Beav. 330.

Shares which, by the rules of a company, could only be held in the name of a single person, were bequeathed specifically to three trustees for A. for life, with remainder over:—Held, that they might lawfully be held in the name of a single trustee. Ib.

A power to trustees to invest in stock or shares of a public company, authorises the purchase of shares or stock in an incorporated company bearing a fixed rate of interest. Id.

1. Seamble, trustees having power to invest in the shares of trading companies ought not to invest in the shares of any company whose articles of association provide that the company should have a paramount lien and charge upon all the shares of any shareholder for all moneys owing to the company from him, alone or jointly with any other person, and that when a share is held by more persons than one, the company should have a lien and charge thereon in respect of all moneys so owing to them from all or any of the holders thereof, alone or jointly with any other persons. New London & Brazilian Bank v. Brookbank, 21 L. R., Ch. D., 302; 51 L. J., Ch., 711.

2. A power to invest trust funds "upon the security of the funds of any company incorporated by Act of Parliament," does not warrant their investment in preference railway shares. Harris v. Harris, 29 Beav. 107; 7 Jur., N. S., 955; 9 W. R. 444.

3. A will authorised investments in "shares of any established railway in full operation":—Held, that investments in shares in railways within the United Kingdom, established by Act of Parliament, were authorised. Edwards v. Thompson, 38 L. J., Ch., 65.

4. Certain old shares in a bank being in the name of one of two trustees, he received a circular asking him whether he would take new shares in respect of such old shares. The cestui que trust (a married woman, tenant for life without power of anticipation) urged him to take them, and she sent to the bank the form filled up by him. In the suit a call as to the old shares was directed to be paid out of the estate, but as to call on the new shares:—Held, that he could not be indemnified. Sheriff v. Butler, 14 W. R. 629; 14 L. T., N. S., 510; 12 Jur., N. S., 329.

5. A testator had, at the time of his death, one hundred shares in a bank with unlimited liability. By his will he directed his trustees and executors to convert his personal estate at their sole discretion, and at such time or times as they should think fit, and to invest the proceeds in shares in any public company incorporated by Act of Parliament and paying a dividend. The shares, which were very profitable, were retained by the sole trustee, who, subsequently, accepted twenty-five additional new shares allotted in respect of the old ones. The trustee then retired, and appointed two new trustees. Ultimately the bank stopped payment:—Held, that the original trustee had not committed a breach of trust in retaining the old shares, but had done so in accepting the new ones, and was liable to indemnify the testator's estate for losses incurred thereby. Edwards v. Edmunds, 34 L. T., N. S., 522.

6. A testator by a will dated in August 1862 bequeathed his shares in a public company, and the rest of his estate, to the trustees to convert, "immediately after his death, or so soon thereafter as they might see fit to do so." Part of the estate consisted of thirty-six shares in an unlimited banking company. At his death the shares were at a premium, and considered a good and safe investment. Soon after his death the bank issued new shares, offering them to the original shareholders at par. Nine were offered to the trustees in respect of the testator's shares, and being at a premium were purchased by them, though the trust for investment did not authorise investment in shares. The old and new shares were held together by the trustees until July 1866, when the bank broke:—Held, that the trustees should not have purchased the new shares, and should have sold the old shares in reasonable time after the testator's death; that reasonable time, in such case, if no cause is shown for delay, is a year after a testator's death; and that the trustees must replace not only the amount of the calls made upon all the forty-six shares and the purchase money of the shares purchased, but also the loss to the estate in respect of the shares having become valueless. Scutthorpe v. Tipper, 41 L. J., Ch., 266; 13 L. R., Eq., 232; 20 W. R. 276.

6. South Sea Stock.

7. A goldsmith, without any directions from the proprietors, subscribed lottery orders into the S. S. Company; he was held indemnified by the Act 6 Geo. 1, c. 4, s. 23, empowering all trustees, guardians, executors, etc., to make such subscriptions, and it would have been the same if the cestui que trust had forbidden him to subscribe. Trenchard v. Wanley, 2 P. W. 165. And in the next term, in Weaver v. Fowler (2 P. W. 170) Ld. Macclesfield made the same resolution.

8. Laying out trust money in S. S. stock where it subjects the trust to a loss, is not a good security, for the directors may trade away the whole stock whilst they keep within the terms of the charter; S. S. annuities and Bank annuities only, are proper and good security; for it is not in the power of the directors to bring any loss upon them. Traf-ford v. Boehm, 3 Atk. 444.

9. A., who his trustee for B. of 1,000*l.* S. S. stock, at the desire of B. borrows 4,000*l.* on this stock of the company, and B. receives the money; A. pays the 10 per cent. (under the 7 Geo. 1, sess. 2, sec. 7) to be discharged of the loan; though B. forbade the payment, yet he is liable. Balsh v. Hyham, 2 P. W. 453.

7. Other Securities.

10. Seamble, there is no impropriety in the temporary investment by trustees of trust money on a deposit note. Wilkins v. Hogg, 8 Jur., N. S., 25; 31 L. J., Ch., 41.

11. It is not necessarily a breach of trust, under a will directing trustees to invest in parliamentary stocks or funds, or on real securities, to continue in its actual state of investment part of the assets, consisting of turnpike bonds. Robinson v. Robinson, 1 De G. M. & G. 247; 21 L. J., N. S., Ch., 111; 16 Jur. 255. Reversing 11 Beav. 371; 18 L. J., N. S., Ch., 73; 12 Jur. 969.

A testator by his will gave his residuary personal estate to trustees upon trust, to get in the same, or to continue it, in or upon any of the parliamentary stocks, or on real securities, and to pay the interest and dividends thereof to his son for life, and after his decease to pay and transfer the stocks amongst his son's children equally. A considerable part of the testator's estate, consisting of London dock and bank stock and sewers bonds, was allowed by the trustees (who were the testator's executors), to remain unconverted for several years after the testator's death, and eventually a loss accrued to the estate from the sale of the bank stock and sewers bonds, but a gain arose from a sale of the London dock stock; certain turnpike road bonds, part of the testator's residuary estate, were never converted by the trustees at all. The payment of the amount due on the sewers bonds was secured by the rates and assessments, which the commissioners were authorised by Act of Parliament to levy, and the payment of the amount due in respect of the turnpike road bonds was secured on the toll houses and tolls payable thereat:—Held, that neither the sewers bonds nor the road bonds were real securities within the meaning of the testator's will; that the loss which arose on the sale of the sewers bonds and bank stock could not be set off against the gain that arose from the sale of the London dock stock, and that the tenant for life was entitled to 3½ per cent. per annum and no more, which would have been the amount payable to him if the conversion had been made within one year from the testator's death. S. C. 11 Beav. 371; 18 L. J., N. S., Ch. 73; 12 Jur. 969.

1. Lands vested in trust out of receipts, etc., to make certain payments, and lay out surplus upon mortgage or Government securities, with a view to accumulation, with bequest of such accumulations. On petition, a real estate contiguous to testator's real estate was permitted to be purchased under the circumstances, and to be considered as personal estate. Webb v. Shaftsbury (Lord), 6 Madd. 100.

2. There is a known established distinction in equity, between Government and real securities; "real" is a term adopted in the law, and must be understood to mean land securities only. Att.-Gen. v. Bowles, 3 Atk. 808.

I. LIABILITY OF TRUSTEE. IN GENERAL.

3. In charging trustees for breaches of trust and costs of suit, it is immaterial how the trust was created, and whether for valuable consideration, or by the voluntary gift of the trustees themselves. Drosier v. Brereton, 15 Beav. 221.

4. Trustee not to be charged with imaginary values, but only as a bailiff. Palmer v. Jones, 1 Vern. 144.

5. Trustee, investing money at his own discretion, runs risk of depreciation. Hancom v. Allen, Dick. 498.

6. Trustees investing trust money on an unauthorised security are responsible for any future loss, traceable to that first error. Fylor v. Fylor, 3 Beav. 550; 5 Jur. 187.

7. Trustees and their representatives chargeable in equity for a breach of trust, though no benefit derived from it. Adair v. Sham, 1 Sch. & Lef. 272.

8. A trustee is not answerable for an innocent mistake, and from which he derived no advantage; and a court of equity will grant a perpetual injunction to prevent any proceedings at law, grounded on such mistake. Crookshanks v. Turner, 7 Bro. P. C. 255.

9. Where trustees of a charity under an instrument of doubtful construction have acted honestly, though erroneously, they will not be charged in respect of past misapplication of the funds. Att.-Gen. v. Exeter (Corporation), 2 Russ. 45.

10. Trustees not answerable for having applied the trust property, even to what turned out a losing adventure, if without fraud or negligence. Wilkinson v. Stafford, 1 Ves. J. 41.

Trustee not answerable for having engaged the infant's name in an adventure, if, afraid of the consequences, he does not engage the property. Contra, Eden's case in the House of Lords cited. Ib.

11. A trustee who acts bonâ fide and exercises an honest discretion in the performance of his duties, is not chargeable with any loss which may occur. Selby v. Bowie, 9 Jur., N. S., 432; 11 W. R. 606; 8 L. T., N. S., 372; 1 N. R. 420; 2 N. R. 2.

1. Quere, how far a trustee is bound by notice of claims not under the deed of settlement. Re Croydon's Trust, 19 L. J., N. S., Ch., 172; 14 Jur. 54.

2. Trustee of lunatic renewing lease for his own benefit, declared guilty of breach of trust, and discharged. Exp. Phelps, 9 Mod. 357.

3. A trustee in a recognisance releases it without any consideration; decreed to pay the principal and interest not exceeding the penalty. Jevon v. Bush, 1 Vern. 342.

4. Trustee charged in respect of a misrepresentation to a purchaser having notice, and alleging only that he did not recollect the fact. Burrows v. Lock, 10 Ves. 470.

5. A trustee is not in all cases to be made liable, upon the mere ground of having deviated from the strict letter of his trust, for such deviation may be necessary or beneficial to the interests of the cestuis que trustent, but when a trustee ventures to deviate from the letter of his trust, he does so under the obligation and at the peril of afterwards satisfying the Court that the deviation was necessary or beneficial. Harrison v. Randall, 9 Hare 397; 21 L. J., N. S., Ch., 294; 16 Jur. 72.

A trustee who, having good reason to doubt the validity of an appointment, thinks proper to act upon it, must be affected by the consequences which follow upon the act. Id. 407.

6. A lady who accepts a trust, although not formally appointed trustee, is accountable for moneys actually received by her as such trustee, and cannot plead ignorance of the trust. Pearce v. Pearce, 22 Beav. 248; 2 Jur., N. S., 843; 25 L. J., Ch., 893.

7. A trustee was held not liable for the non-performance of a trust of which he was ignorant, but inasmuch as he had been guilty of negligence in not ascertaining the nature of certain deeds in his possession, or giving his cestuis que trustent an opportunity of doing so, the bill against him was dismissed without costs. Youde v. Cloud, 22 W. R. 764; 18 L. R., Eq., 634; 44 L. J., Ch., 93.

8. A suggestion by the trustees of a fund, that the administrator of one of the cestuis que trustent, who in that character was entitled to a distributive share of the fund, has unfairly obtained the letters of administration under which he claimed such share, is no defence in this court to a claim of the administrator; nor is it a defence for trustees to suggest that a deed under which the plaintiff derives his title from the cestuis que trustent was founded on mistake, or is otherwise subject to be displaced, for it is contrary to the course of the Court to direct an inquiry as to the validity or invalidity of a deed upon a suggestion in the answer of the defendants, the trustees of the fund to which it relates, where the ascertainment of the validity or invalidity of the deed is not essential to the safety of the defendants; and the fact of a bill having been filed to set aside the deed under which the claim is made, or to exclude the fund in question from its operation, is not a ground upon which the trustees can resist the legal title to receive the fund, for the Court cannot give the plaintiff in such other suit the benefit of an injunction to protect the fund upon the suggestion in the answer of the trustees, but the existence of such other suit entitles the trustees to retain such a portion of the trust fund as may be sufficient to answer their costs of such other suit. Devey v. Thornton, 9 Hare 22.

9. A husband and wife made a post-nuptial settlement of the wife's reversionary chose in action. The wife survived her husband, and it afterwards fell into possession. The wife having done no act to repudiate the settlement:—Held, in a suit to charge the trustees with a breach of trust, that it was no answer to say, that the settlement was void as against the feme covert. Thompson v. Finch, 22 Beav. 316.

A demand in respect of a breach of trust may be proved against the estate of an insolvent trustee. Id.

10. Under a power contained in a will to apply for A.'s advancement in life a portion of his reversionary share, B., the trustee, raised money by mortgage of the share, in order to pay A.'s apprentice premium to an apothecary. It was intended to apprentice A. to X., but it being discovered that X. was not a licensed apothecary, it was arranged by the solicitor acting in the matter that A. should be nominally apprenticed to Y., a licensed apothecary, but actually serve his time with X. The receipt for the whole amount was signed by Y., but only half was paid, and that to X., the remaining half being handed over to A.'s father, who gave Y. his promissory note for the amount, but never discharged the obligation. The purpose for which the money was raised having failed:—Held, that B., although not shown to have been guilty of more than negligence in following his solicitor's advice, was bound to bear the consequences of the mistake, and to replace the money borrowed on security of A.'s reversionary share. Simpson v. Brown, 13 W. R. 312; 11 L. T., N. S., 593.

11. In 1810 1,818*l.* consols and certain freehold estate was vested in trustees on the marriage of Mr. and Mrs. L., in trust for them successively for life, remainder to the children. In 1815 the trustees sold out the fund and lent it to L. on mortgage of his life interest in the freehold, on his bond and certain policies. One trustee died, and the survivor, having received back from L. the produce of the stock (1,115*l.*) eight days after, re-lent it to him upon no security, and it was lost; and the surviving trustee being out of the jurisdiction and the husband insolvent, upon a bill filed by the children to have the whole 1,818*l.* repaid from the estate of the deceased trustee, decree made with costs. Semble, it is no purging of an original breach of trust to do something different from that imposed by the deed creating the trust, even if the whole sum sold should have been replaced. Lander v. Weston, 4 W. R. 158; 3 Drew. 389; 25 L. J., Ch., 235; 2 Jur., N. S., 58.

12. As to liability of new trustees for breach of trust. See Exp. Geaves, Re Strahan, 8 De G. M. & G. 291; 2 Jur., N. S., 651; 25 L. J., Bk., 53; 4 W. R. 356.

13. E., who was named as trustee in a marriage settlement, never executed the deed; nor did he, for upwards of twenty years, interfere in carrying out the trusts thereof. Ultimately he signed a memorandum, indorsed upon the indenture of the settlement, relating to one particular portion of the trust property:—Held, that in respect of the property comprised in such memorandum, he was liable to answer for the negligence of himself and his co-trustees; but that the mere signing the memorandum above stated did not operate to extend his liability, so as to make him answerable for the entire amount of property comprised in the settlement. Malay v. Edge, 4 W. R. 213; 2 Jur., N. S., 80.

2. Unexplained loss of property by trustee or bailee attributed to negligence. Brown v. Sewell, 11 Hare 53; 17 Jur. 708; 22 L. J., Ch., 1063.

3. Defendant was trustee to plaintiff, an infant, and received for him 40*l.* in gold, of which he was robbed by his own domestic servant, together with 200*l.* of his own; Lord Chancellor allowed the trustee this 40*l.* on his own oath, for he was to keep it as his own. Morley v. Morley, 3 Ch. Ca. 2.

4. A decree having been made for a general account, and payment of a balance against a party who died, and his personal representative having delivered certain goods, part of the effects, to her own solicitor to be delivered over, is not answerable in the event of his being robbed of them. Tender of the goods not incumbent on her, she would not have been answerable if they had remained in her own possession till the accident. Jones v. Lewis, 2 Ves. 240.

2. As to Deeds.

5. Where there is no imputation of breach of trust in trustee, suffering deed to get out of his possession, he need not be party to bill for its restitution. Knye v. Moore, 1 Sim. & S. 61. S. C. nom. — v. Moseley, 1 L. J., Ch., 18.

6. Negligence cannot be imputed to trustees for leaving documents of title in the hands of one of their number, and allowing him to receive the income, and no authority to deal with the property can be implied even in favour of a bona fide purchaser from such trustee. Cottam v. Eastern Counties Railway Co., 1 John. & H. 243; 6 Jur., N. S., 1367; 9 W. R. 94; 3 L. T., N. S., 465; 30 L. J., Ch., 217.

Trust money was invested in railway debentures, payable to three trustees. The debentures were left in the hands of A., one of the trustees who was also allowed to receive the interest. A. forged the signatures of his co-trustees to a deed, purporting to be a transfer from the three, and delivered the debentures with the transfer to the purchasers, who paid full value to A., and had no notice of the forgery. They delivered the transfer to the railway company, who made an entry of it in their books, and the subsequent interest was paid by the company to the purchasers. On a bill filed by the other trustees after A. had been convicted of forgery:—Held, that the defence of purchaser for value without notice did not apply, and the debentures were ordered to be delivered up to the plaintiffs, and the transfer and entry thereof in the company's books cancelled. Id.

7. A trustee may, under special circumstances, be held responsible for the non-registration of the deed creating the trust. Macnamara v. Carey, 1 Ir. R., Eq., 9.

8. A testator died in 1810, in India, having bequeathed his English property to two infants, whom he acknowledged as his natural children; and having appointed his nephew, E., to be their guardian. Part of his property consisted of a bond, dated in 1810, in which he was obligee, the obligor being seised of real estate in Ireland. In 1811 E. obtained possession of the bond from the testator's executor; but he did not register it, nor did he ever take any steps towards realising the security. In 1821 the elder of the infants attained twenty-one; in 1832 she married; and in 1833, when the bond had become irrevocable, E., for the first time, informed the elder child and her husband of the existence of the bond; and upon finding it was then too late to register it, he handed it to the husband, directing him to see to it. No step was taken until E.'s death in 1870, after which, in 1871, a bill was filed, seeking to make E.'s estate liable as for a breach of trust. At this time the younger infant was dead, and had no legal personal representative; but his son, who was entitled to administer, was made a defendant. Semble, that E. was not at any time liable for any breach of trust. Sleeman v. Wilson, 13 L. R., Eq., 36.

9. A trustee was held not liable for the non-performance of a trust of which he was ignorant, but inasmuch as he had been guilty of negligence in not ascertaining the nature of certain deeds in his possession, or giving his cestuis que trustent an opportunity of doing so, the bill against him was dismissed without costs. Youde v. Cloud, 22 W. R. 764; 18 L. R., Eq., 634; 42 L. J., Ch., 93.

3. In Calling in the Trust Property or Enforcing Covenants for its Payment.

10. It being the duty of A., under the trusts of a settlement, to remit a sum of 1,000*l.* from India, to B., C., and D., in England, he permitted it to remain in the hands of private traders, in whose hands it was lost:—Held, that A. was responsible for it, though it had been properly invested by those parties, and been sold out at the request of the cestuis que trustent, and the loss was occasioned by their subsequent bankruptcy, and the bankruptcy of their correspondents in London, on whom they had drawn bills for the amount. Bacon v. Clark, 3 Myl. & C. 294.

1. Trustees are liable for not taking proper steps to get the trust fund transferred into their names. M'Gachen v. Den, 15 Beav. 84.

2. Trustees charged with loss occasioned by mere negligence, and costs follow of course. Caffrey v. Darby, 6 Ves. 488.

3. In 1826 a debt due from a firm at Calcutta was assigned to trustees in England, in trust to call in and invest on Indian securities, and accumulate. The debtors became bankrupts in 1830, and the trustees not having, in the meantime, taken proper steps to call in the money, a considerable portion of the debt was lost:—Held, that they were liable for the breach of trust, and ought to make good the accumulation which would have been produced; secondly, that one of the trustees who had been abroad with his regiment during that period was equally liable; but, thirdly, that they were to be excused during such a reasonable time as was necessary in order to communicate between England and India. Byrne v. Norcott, 13 Beav. 336.

4. On a marriage two of the wife's debtors, one of them the bankrupt, were appointed trustees of a fund, to be made up of their several debts:—Held, that the debts not being got in and invested, each trustee was liable only for his own default. Exp. Woodward, Re Turner, 3 Mont. & A. 232; 2 Dea. 401; 6 L. J., N. S., Bky., 60; 1 Jur. 585.

5. By a marriage settlement, a trustee was required, immediately after the marriage, to compel payment of a sum of money secured by a covenant in the deed; he neglected to do so even when required to call it in, and allowed the interest to fall into arrear. He was held liable to pay the costs of a suit instituted to compel him to perform the trusts. Kirby v. Mash, 3 Y. & Coll. 295; 8 L. J., N. S., Exch. Eq., 33; 3 Jur. 221.

6. A., on his marriage with B., by his marriage settlement, covenanted with a trustee, that he would, on Martinmas Day 1824, pay 10,000*l.*, the trusts of which were to be for A. for life, with remainder to B. for life, with remainder to the children of the marriage, and in default of children, for the persons therein mentioned. A. died in 1836, without having performed the covenant. After A.'s death a suit was instituted by B. against the trustee, to make him personally liable for the non-performance of the covenant. A reference was made to the Master to inquire whether A. was of ability, after 1824, to pay the 10,000*l.*, or any part of it. It appeared that A. had for seven years after 1824, an income of 1,800*l.* a year, but that he had no other property than this income, and that he had always lived up to or exceeded his income. The Master found that A. was of ability during these seven years to have paid 4,200*l.* in part performance of the covenant. No exceptions were taken to the report. On the hearing of the cause on further directions:—Held, that the trustee was liable to pay 4,200*l.*, and that, had the report been excepted to, it would have been confirmed. Mailland v. Bateman, 13 L. J., N. S., Ch., 273;

8 Jur. 926. And see Bateman v. Mailland, 14 L. J., N. S., Ch., 383.

7. Trustees made personally responsible for the consequences of their neglect to enforce a covenant contained in a marriage settlement. By a marriage settlement it was covenanted and agreed that 5,000*l.* consols, part of the wife's property, should be transferred to trustees upon certain trusts for the husband, and wife, and children. At the time of the settlement a sum of 4,946*l.* was standing in the name of the wife, but the trustees took no steps to enforce a transfer, and it was sold out and misapplied by the husband:—Held, that the trustees were personally responsible for the loss; and, secondly, that they were not relieved from their liability by the trustee indemnity clause declaring that they shall not be liable "for any casual or involuntary loss without their wilful default; but for such moneys only as should actually come to their hands." Fenwick v. Greenmoll, 10 Beav. 412; 11 Jur. 620.

8. A marriage settlement, made in 1811, recited that the husband was entitled to 20,000 rupees, secured by a note of the East India Company, and 10,000 rupees, part thereof, were thereby assigned (with certain property of the wife) to the trustees of the settlement, upon trust for the husband and wife for their lives, with remainder for the children of the marriage. One of the trustees died six weeks after the settlement was made. The husband died in 1819, and the wife in 1822. The trustees did not, nor did the survivor, take any steps during the lifetime of the husband to recover the 10,000 rupees. After they had attained their ages of twenty-one years, the children filed a bill against the surviving trustee and the representatives of the deceased trustee for an account of trust funds, charging them with the 10,000 rupees. Under a reference to the Master to inquire whether the defendant might, by due diligence, have received or got in the 10,000 sicca rupees, the defendant produced evidence, showing it to have been the common belief of persons who knew the husband, that he was not possessed of any such property, but no proof was given that the husband was insolvent; and the Court charged the surviving trustee with the fund, and interest from the death of the wife, and directed a reference to inquire the value of the 10,000 rupees at the time of the settlement. Simes v. Byre, 6 Hare 137.

9. Testator bequeathed 500*l.* to his executors, upon trust that they should lay out and invest the same in the public funds, or in such other security or in such other manner as to them should seem expedient, at interest, and apply the produce to a charitable purpose. One of the executors, who took the entire management of the estate, paid the debts, and most of the legacies of the testator, but neither specifically appropriated nor invested 500*l.* for the charity. He paid interest, however, on 500*l.* to the charity; at the same time receiving interest on the promissory note of a debtor to the estate, who was in good credit, but whose debt was the only fund available for payment of the legacy. The executor afterwards died. On the admission, by his representatives, that he had, in his lifetime, assented to the payment of the legacy to him—self as trustee:—Held, that his estate was severally answerable as for a breach of trust. Att.-Gen. v. Higham, 2 Y. & Coll. C. C. 634.

1. By a marriage settlement, a debt due from A. was assigned to A. and B., upon trust, with all convenient speed, to get in and invest in consols, for two and a half years. B. took no steps to get in the money, and A. then became bankrupt:—Held, that B. was responsible for the loss. Grove v. Price, 26 Beav. 193.

2. By settlement, dated in 1814, a legacy belonging to the intended wife was, with other property, vested in S. and R., upon trust to get in and invest, and pay the income to Mrs. E. for life, remainder as she should by will direct, remainder over, power being reserved to her to make a will. By her will, dated in 1829, she appointed the fund to her daughter for life (deceased), remainder to the plaintiffs, and made the defendants her executors, directing them to get in all the funds. In 1825 the balance unpaid of the legacy so settled had been transferred to new trustees of the settlement, and by them immediately sold out, and nothing more was ever known concerning such balance, or its application. In 1830 the defendants took out administration to the testatrix, with her will annexed (she not having power to appoint executors), limited to the balance of the legacy outstanding, and the accumulations thereof, if any. The defendants could not show that they had ever taken active or proper steps to inquire after the wasted fund, or to recover the same:—Held, that notwithstanding the lapse of time, and the irregularity of their succession as trustees, they would be clearly liable to make good the breach of trust (if any) committed in 1825. Taylor v. Millington, 4 Jur., N. S., 204.

But held, that by reason of a power contained in the settlement enabling the trustees to take and recoup themselves all costs out of the trust estate, and the fund wasted having been small, the plaintiffs had failed to establish a breach of trust. Ib.

3. A testator directed his estate to be accumulated until the death of the survivor of certain persons, and then to be divided among the children of his sister. By an order of the Court, 100*l.* a year out of the income of the estate was directed to be paid to one of those children, a lady, until the further order of the Court. By a marriage settlement the lady assigned to the trustees the whole of her share under the will of a testator, together with the accumulations, for herself for life, with remainder to her children. The 100*l.* a year was continued to be paid after marriage to her trustees, and by them allowed to be received and expended by the mother. The mother was living; and the estate had not yet become divisible under the will. Upon a bill by the children:—Held, that notwithstanding the order of the Court, the 100*l.* a year payable thereunder formed part of the funds comprised in the settlement, and ought to have been invested by the trustees, and they were ordered to make good the amount, subject to the right, as against the mother, to be recouped the amount out of her life interest in the fund. Barratt v. Wyatt, 8 Jur., N. S., 1045; 81 L. J., Ch., 652; 10 W. R. 454.

4. In a marriage settlement, dated in 1807, a recital was contained to the effect that a sum of stock had been transferred into the names of the trustees. The deed was executed by all parties. The stock never was transferred, and the person who ought to have transferred it became bankrupt in 1848. Both the trustees were dead. On bill filed in 1855, by a cestui que trust under the settlement, who came of age in 1839, to have the trust fund made good:—Held, that he was not too late, and the estates of the trustees declared to be jointly and severally liable to make good the fund. Story v. Gape, 2 Jur., N. S., 706.

5. In 1828 two trustees executed a marriage settlement, which recited that a sum of money (for which they also signed an indorsed receipt) had been paid to them as such trustees. The trustees had never in fact received the money, and by their neglect to do so it was ultimately lost. The trustees died, having left all their property upon trust for the payment of their debts:—Held, that a breach of trust had been committed, for which the estates of the deceased trustees were liable. Westmoreland v. Holland, 19 W. R. 302; 23 L. T., N. S., 797.

6. A marriage settlement executed in 1817, contained a covenant by the husband with a trustee to pay to the trustee within three years 3,000*l.*, to be held upon the usual trusts in favour of the husband and wife and the issue of the marriage, or else to secure that sum by mortgage. The money was neither paid nor secured, and the trustee never attempted to enforce the covenant, but acted as solicitor to the purchaser on a sale in 1846 by the covenantor for his own benefit of the property he had covenanted to mortgage. The trustee died in 1848; his sons had notice of the settlement in 1851. The covenantor became bankrupt in 1852, and applied to the widow and executrix of the trustee to prove for the 3,000*l.*, which she declined to do. Dividends of 11*s.* in the pound were declared in the bankruptcy, and new trustees of the settlement were appointed by the Court, whose proof was rejected as too late. The widow and executrix of the trustee died in 1865, and his sons entered into possession of his property as devisees and legatees under his will, but when cited to take out letters of administration to their father, they declined to do so. Upon a bill filed in 1867, by the widow and children of the covenantor and the new trustees, against the sons and administrator ad litem of the deceased trustee, in answer to which the sons admitted assets:—Held, first, that the sons having admitted assets, the administrator ad litem represented the deceased trustee sufficiently for the purposes of the suit. Woodhouse v. Woodhouse, 20 L. T., N. S., 209; 38 L. J., Ch., 481.

Held, secondly, that the rights of the plaintiffs were not barred by lapse of time, and that the sons were liable to make good the loss occasioned by the breach of trust to the extent of the assets of their father in their hands. Ib.

7. By a post-nuptial settlement dated in 1814, made in pursuance of an ante-nuptial agreement, after reciting that the husband had agreed to settle 1,000*l.* in manner thereafter mentioned, and to enter into the covenants thereafter contained, and reciting that this sum had been paid to G., it was witnessed that G. covenanted with the settlor that he would hold that sum upon trust, with the approbation of the settlor, to invest it, in the joint names of the settlor and himself, either in the public funds or in Government or real securities, and would hold the trust funds and securities upon trust for the settlor and his wife during their respective lives, and after their death upon trust for the benefit of their children; and the settlor covenanted that he would at the expiration of twelve months pay to G. another sum of 1,000*l.* to be held by him upon the same trusts as the first sum. G. died in 1821, and the settlor, having survived his wife, died in 1868. Neither of the sums was really paid to G., or invested in the joint names of G. and the settlor:—Held, first, that the settlor had constituted himself a trustee of the first sum, and that his estate was liable for his breach of trust in not seeing that it was invested, notwithstanding the Statute of Limitations. Stone v. Stone, 5 L. R., Ch., 74; 39 L. J., Ch., 196; 22 L. T., N. S., 182.

1. A trustee, who had no actual knowledge of his right to real property, suffered an adverse title to be acquired by lapse of time. A bill to make him accountable was dismissed. But the chirograph of a fine relating to the title having come to the trustee's hands, without the deed leading the uses, such dismissal was without costs. Youde v. Cloud, 44 L. J., Ch., 93; 22 W. R. 764; 18 L. R., Eq., 634.

2. A fund to which under the will of C. M. his widow was entitled for life, with remainder to her children, was left in the hands of her son Sir W. M., under an agreement, in which the children concurred, that he should be at liberty to use it in his business till the widow, Sir W. M., and R. (the trustees of C. M.'s will) should deem it advantageous to call it in and invest it. One of the children married Mr. P., and her share in the fund was settled so as to give her children an interest in it. R., who had no notice of this settlement, was repeatedly called upon by P. to take steps to call in the fund, but declined to do so. On a suit by P. and his infant children, after Mrs. P.'s death, seeking to make R. liable on the footing of wilful neglect and default for not having called in the fund:—Held, on appeal, that as a discretion was expressly given to the trustees, R. was not liable for any loss, as he appeared to have acted honestly to the best of his judgment in declining to call in the fund:—Held, further, that whether R. could or could not have been made a trustee for the infants by notice of the settlement, as he had no such notice he was not to be treated as having been a trustee for them, and they could not make him liable for anything for which P. could not; that P. could not complain of a trustee for not getting in a fund recoverable only in equity, and for which he might himself have sued; and that therefore the infants could not complain on that ground. Paddon v. Richardson, 1 Jur., N. S., 1192; 7 De G. M. & G. 563; 3 Eq. Rep. 933.

3. By deed made on the marriage of A. and B., C., the father of B., settled 1,000*l.* upon A. and B. and their issue, which sum was recited as having been paid to the trustees, and covenanted to pay another 1,000*l.* upon his decease, upon the same trusts. Shortly before C.'s death, he, by deed, gave to other trustees 5,000*l.* upon trusts nearly identical with the trusts of the settlement for A. and B. and their issue; and by his will, of the same date, he declared that what he had given to B. should be taken in full satisfaction and discharge of all claims and demands upon him in any right or manner whatsoever. The trustees of the settlement never received the 1,000*l.* under the covenant of C., and C.'s estate had long been administered. Bill by one of the children of A. and B. against the representative of one of the trustees of the settlement, claiming a portion of the two sums of 1,000*l.* and 1,000*l.* Defence, that the trustees never received either 1,000*l.*, and that the 5,000*l.* was in satisfaction:—Held (reversing 2 Jur., N. S., 1158; 5 W. R. 39), first, that the 5,000*l.* was to be taken in satisfaction of the 1,000*l.* covenanted to be paid. Davis v. Chambers, 3 Jur., N. S., 297; 5 W. R. 245; 7 De G. M. & G. 386.

Held, secondly, that although prima facie the recital in the settlement of payment to trustees is the strongest possible evidence to charge them, yet that the circumstances of this case negatived the receipt by the trustees. Id.

4. A testator died in 1810 in India, having bequeathed his English property to two infants, whom he acknowledged as his natural children; and having appointed his nephew, E., to be their guardian. Part of his property consisted of a bond, dated in 1810, in which he was obligee, the obligor being seised of real estate in Ireland. In 1811 E. obtained possession of the bond from the testator's executor; but he did not register it, nor did he ever take any steps towards realising the security. In 1821 the elder of the infants attained twenty-one; in 1832 she married; and in 1833, when the bond had become irrevocable, E., for the first time, informed the elder child and her husband of the existence of the bond; and upon finding it was then too late to register it, he handed it to the husband, directing him to see to it. No step was taken until E.'s death in 1870, after which, in 1871, a bill was filed, seeking to make E.'s estate liable as for a breach of trust. At this time the younger infant was dead, and had no legal personal representative; but his son, who was entitled to administer, was made a defendant. Semble, that E. was not at any time liable for any breach of trust. Sleeman v. Wilson, 13 L. R., Eq., 36.

Held, that the parties, by acquiescing for thirty-eight years, and waiting till E.'s death, had lost their right to make any claim against his estate. Id.

5. B., by his marriage settlement (1858), covenanted with the trustees, W. and another, for the payment six months after his death of 500*l.*, to be held by them in trust for his wife and issue of the marriage. By a separation deed (1859) to which W. was a party, but not as trustee of the settlement, S. covenanted with B. that she would immediately pay the settlement trustees 500*l.*, to be held on B.'s death in substitution for the 500*l.* under B.'s covenant, and in exoneration of his estate, and in the meantime on trusts for the wife and issue. The consideration for S.'s covenant moved entirely from B. S. died in 1868 without having paid the 500*l.*, leaving all her estate in trust for the wife for life and her issue. W. was her trustee and executor. The whole of S.'s estate consisted of certain bank shares. W. did not transfer the shares from S.'s name, but allowed the wife to receive the dividends. W. died in October 1877, and C. and P. were in April 1878 appointed trustees of S.'s will and of the settlement. The share certificates were handed to C. and P., who had constructive notice of the separation deed. The shares remained in S.'s name, the wife still receiving the dividends until December 1879, when the bank stopped, and the whole of S.'s estate was lost. B. having died in February 1878, the 500*l.* under his covenant became due in August 1878:—Held, that W. or C. and P., as trustees of the settlement, even if competent (which question the Court declined to decide), were never under any obligation to enforce the covenant of S. with B. Re Baker, Collins v. Rhodes, Re Seaman, Rhodes v. Wish, 44 L. T. 414. Reversed 20 L. R., Ch. D., 2350; 51 L. J., Ch., 315; 45 L. T. 658; 30 W. R. 858.

Held, also, that C. and P., being trustees for the beneficiaries under S.'s will, would not have been justified in paying out of her estate the 500*l.* due on her covenant. Ib.

Held, also, (1) that S.'s executors had not actively committed a devastavit of her estate, as against B.'s executors, as to the capital of the shares; (2) that the negligence of B. and his executors in not enforcing S.'s covenant was a sufficient answer to any claim by B.'s executors against S.'s executors charging them with devastavit by negligence as to the capital of the shares or the dividends, and also to any claim by B.'s executors that his estate, on paying the 500*l.* under his covenant, should be recouped out of his wife's interest. Ib.

1. Certain gas shares were settled upon trust for a woman for life, then for her husband for life, and then for her children. New shares were allotted in respect of the original shares, and the husband, without the interference of the trustee, obtained possession of the old and new shares, paid calls on the new shares, and disposed of all the shares. He then became bankrupt:—Held, that the trustee was only liable to make good to the estate the value of the shares less the amount paid for calls. Briggs v. Massey, 51 L. J., Ch., 447; 46 L. T. 354; 30 W. R. 325. Reversing 50 L. J., Ch., 747; 45 L. T. 139; 29 W. R. 926.

Prepayments. 2. Testator directed his trustees, at the expiration of three years after his death, to pay 10,000*l.* (which he charged on an estate devised to his son, one of the trustees) to his daughter's husband, on condition that he should, to the satisfaction of the trustees, give to them the best and most sufficient security in his power, so that the 10,000*l.* might be effectually secured to them upon certain trusts, for the testator's daughter and her children. The son paid the money to the husband before the expiration of the three years, and the trustees took a bond for securing it:—Held, they were justified in anticipating the time of payment, but not in taking the bond. Mills v. Osborne, 7 Sim. 30.

3. A. upon the marriage of his daughter, executed his bond and warrant to the trustees of the settlement, who were to hold it upon trust, inter alia, that in case the wife should die during the life of her husband, leaving no issue of the marriage her surviving, or leaving such they should all die under twenty-one, the money secured by the bond should not be called in, but the bond should be given up to A., his heirs, executors, and administrators, to be cancelled. The money was not to be called in during his life:—Held, that the trustees of settlement were bound to accept payment of the money secured by the bond from the executor of A., though the husband and wife objected to its being paid in. Kempland v. Humphries, 2 Jones 726.

4. Where a fund is vested by a settlement in trustees for A. for life and over, and the reversion has been subsequently settled, the person entitled to the life interest and the trustees of the subsequent settlement are entitled to call for a transfer of the trust fund, and can give the original trustees an effectual discharge although the settlement does not provide for a transfer of payment by anticipation. Anson v. Potter, 13 L. R., Ch. D., 141; 41 L. T. 582.

4. Payment of Trust Moneys to Persons not Entitled.

5. Trustees who, without sufficient cause, doubted the identity of their cestui que trust, and, in breach of trust, paid over the trust fund to others, were ordered to make good the same, and pay the costs and interest at 5 per cent., the accounts to be taken with rests. Hutchins v. Hutchins, 15 Jur. 869.

6. Trustees who paid over a trust fund to wrong persons, trusting to a marriage certificate which turned out to be a forgery, made responsible for so much of the fund as could not be recovered from those who had wrongfully received it. In a suit by the persons beneficially interested, to make good the moneys, with interest from the date of the wrongful payment, and the father of the recipients, who had sent the forged certificate of his marriage to the trustees, was also made responsible for the money. Eaves v. Hickson, 30 Beav. 136; 5 L. T., N. S., 598; 7 Jur., N. S., 1297; 10 W. R. 29.

7. A wife was entitled in remainder to a share of moneys in the hands of a trustee. She deserted her husband, and married another man. The trustee, relying upon her representations that she was legally married, advanced a portion of her reversionary share to the bigamous husband. The fund having fallen into possession:—Held, that the trustee was answerable to the husband for the money which he had so advanced. Sporle v. Barnaby, 10 Jur., N. S., 1142; 13 W. R. 151; 11 L. T., N. S., 412.

8. Payment by a trustee to an infant cestui que trust, nineteen years of age, on the false representation by herself and her parents, that she had attained the age of twenty-one, held to be a discharge to the trustee for the sum so paid. Overton v. Banister, 3 Hare 503; 8 Jur. 906.

9. Quare, whether a trustee, having prepared a deed of appointment under a power, but not knowing of the execution of it, shall be held to have had such notice so as to affect him in respect of his payment of the money to the legatee of the person who had the power under a subsequent will. Cothay v. Sydenham, 2 Bro. C. C. 391.

1. A trustee for a married woman, having received notice of a charge executed by her, was held personally liable for payments afterwards made to her; and that notwithstanding the validity of the charge was disputed by her, and no application had been made for an injunction. Hodgson v. Hodgson, 2 Keen 704; 7 L. J., N. S., Ch., 5.

2. If a trustee for payment of children's portions, pays one his full share, and the trust estate decays, he shall not be allowed it. Tilsly v. Throckmorton, 2 Ch. Ca. 132.

3. N. A. made a will, with certain trusts relating to his real and personal estate, and appointed trustees to carry them into execution. One of these trusts was for the payment of a legacy of 2,500*l.* as a portion to an eldest daughter. R. A. B., the father of this legatee, was one of the executors and trustees under the will. An Act of Parliament was obtained to carry some of the trusts of this will into execution; and under this Act, lands devised by N. A. were sold. The trustee under the Act was W. L. On a bill filed against him by the legatee of the 2,500*l.*, he sought to take advantage of the payment by him of that sum to R. A. B.:—Held, that R. A. B.'s receipt was no discharge of W. L.'s liability, as, by the terms of the Act, he was absolutely bound to pay the debts and discharge the children's portions; and it was not set up in the answer, nor proved, that R. A. B. had specifically received this money as trustee for his daughter. Lawrence v. Blake, 8 Cl. & F. 504; 6 Jur. 427.

4. A trustee or apparent trustee for A., who was in possession of an estate, was also committee of B., a lunatic who claimed the estate, and the trustee was properly aware of the claim. On a bill filed to recover the estate for B., it was decided that the estate was his:—Held, that the trustee was liable to B. for the rents received by him and paid to A. Wright v. Chard, 4 Drew. 673. Affirmed 6 Jur., N. S., 476; 29 L. J., Ch., 415; 8 W. R. 334; 2 L. T., N. S., 104.

5. The trustee of the will, who, acting on the opinions of counsel, had distributed the whole estate according to a different view, was ordered to pay to the representatives of the child the amount of the child's share and the costs of the suit. Boulton v. Beard, 3 De G. M. & G. 608.

6. A testator directed his trustees and executors to settle 4,000*l.* consols upon his daughter E. in case of her marriage; he also gave her upon the death of his widow one-third of his residuary estate, which was subsequently represented by 2,633*l.* 6*s.* 8*d.* stock. E., upon her marriage, in 1847, settled this fund. In 1859 the widow died. In December 1859 the trustees of the will executed a settlement of the 4,000*l.* consols, constituting P. and M. trustees of that fund, which was duly transferred to them. Shortly afterwards P. and M. were also appointed trustees of the settlement of 1847. In March 1860 the trustees of the will sold the 2,633*l.* 6*s.* 8*d.* stock, and paid the proceeds to P. without any authority from M. Shortly afterwards P., under a power of attorney from M., sold the 4,000*l.* consols, and received the proceeds. P. invested a portion of each of the funds received, but he retained the balances in his hands, and ultimately became bankrupt. Upon a bill, by E. and her children, against the trustees of the will, and against P. and M., charging breach of trust in respect of both funds, and deficiency in the investments to answer them, and seeking to make the former liable in respect of the payment to P. alone:—Held, that the trustees of the will were liable at the suit of the plaintiffs in respect of the irregular payment to P.; and that, having regard to the blended condition of the trust funds and the necessity of ascertaining how much of each fund was in a proper state of investment, the suit was not multifarious. Margetts v. Perks, 34 L. J., Ch., 109.

III. CRIMINAL BREACH OF TRUST.

7. The Court sanctioned criminal proceedings under s. 13 of the 20 & 21 Vict., c. 54 (similar to the 24 & 25 Vict., c. 96, s. 80), upon an affidavit that a trustee had paid 1,409*l.* into his own bankers, had drawn out the whole with the exception of 28*l.*, and had paid a private debt of 150*l.* out of the trust fund. Wadham v. Rigg, 1 Dr. & Sm. 216.

IV. IMPROPER TRANSFER OR SALE OF OR NON-INVESTMENT IN STOCK. OPTION OF CESTUI QUE TRUST.

1. Transfer or Sale, 7040.
2. Non-Investment, 7041.

1. Transfer or Sale.

8. Trustee, mistaking his power, sold stock without authority; decreed to replace it immediately: if at a less price, to invest the surplus in the same stock to the same uses. Powlett (Earl) v. Herbert, 1 Ves. J. 297.

9. Trustee of stock sells it; the cestui que trust has an option to have the stock or the produce, with interest. Forrest v. Elmes, 4 Ves. 497.

10. Executor and trustee having been guilty of a breach of trust, by selling out stock and dealing improperly with the money, the cestuis que trustent have an option to have the stock replaced, or the money produced by the sales, with interest at 5 per cent. or more, if more has been made by it, and the costs occasioned by his misconduct. Pocock v. Reddington, 5 Ves. 794.

11. If a trustee of stock transfer, cestui que trust may elect to have it replaced, or to have the money for which the stock sold. Harrison v. Harrison, 2 Atk. 121.

12. Trustee selling out stock, which was the trust fund, without corrupt motive, decreed to replace the stock with costs of so much of the suit as was occasioned by his act; but no option given to the cestui que trust to have the money produced by the sale invested, as there would if the trustee made anything, or sought to make anything, by the sale. O'Brien v. O'Brien, 1 Moll. 533.

1. Where bankrupt trustee has sold out stock, the cestui que trust may either prove for the price or for the value at the time of the bankruptcy. Exp. Gurner, Re Iveson, 1 M. D. & De G. 497.

2. Where a trustee, at the request of the cestui que trust, a married woman and tenant for life of the fund for her separate use, sold out the trust fund, and invested it on an improper security:—Held, in a suit by such tenant for life against the trustees, to have the trust fund replaced in a proper state of investment, that no costs ought to be given as between the plaintiff and the defendant on either side; held, also, that the costs of the parties, entitled in remainder, were to be paid by the plaintiff. Where a trustee, at the instance of a cestui que trust, a married woman, sold out stock, and placed the trust fund in an improper state of investment; he was charged only with the amount of the dividends which would have accrued due on the trust fund had it remained in its original investment. Where the trusts are to invest in any of the public stocks or funds, or on real securities, railway debentures, though real securities, are not real securities within the terms of the trust. Mant v. Leith, 21 L. J., N. S., Ch., 719; 16 Jur. 802; 15 Beav. 524.

3. Where trustees, having power to invest on Government or real security, and vary such investment from time to time, sold out stock for the purpose of investing the produce of the stock in a mortgage, which they were not justified in taking, it was held, that the Court could not treat the sale of the stock as lawful, and the investment as unlawful, so as to satisfy the trust by replacing the money; but that the whole must be treated as one unjustifiable transaction, and that the trustees must replace the stock. Phillipson v. Gatty, 2 H. & Tw. 459. Affirming 7 Hare 516; 13 Jur. 818.

4. A trustee properly invested trust money in Exchequer bills, but he kept them in the hands of a broker; upon a misapplication of them by the broker:—Held, that the trustee was personally liable for the value of the Exchequer bills at the time of the loss, and not for the stock the money would have purchased. Mathews v. Brise, 6 Beav. 239; 12 L. J., N. S., Ch., 263. Affirming 15 L. J., N. S., Ch., 39; 10 Jur. 105.

5. A trust fund is created by will to be laid out in the purchase of lands; an estate is purchased, and the trust money is laid out in repairs and improvements; this is a misapplication, and shall not be allowed: part of the trust money was sold out just before the dividend was payable; no allowance can be made to the tenant for life, who would be entitled to the dividend in the price: where a trustee sells out trust money, the cestui que trust may elect whether he will have it replaced, or be paid the produce of it. Bostock v. Blakeney, 2 Bro. C. C. 653.

2. Non-Investment.

6. Where there is a falling off of stock, without the neglect of trustee, he is not liable to make good the deficiency, but is answerable only as far as the value, especially where it was specific stock. Jackson v. Jackson, 1 Atk. 513.

7. Where a person, executor and trustee of legacy to be laid out in stock, has fully administered estate and assented to legacy, and retains legacy in his hands not as assets but as trustee, he is liable for breach of trust, and ordered to purchase stock at price of the time when he was first able to invest it. Byrnhall v. Bradford, 6 Madd. 235.

8. Where trustees may invest in stock or on real security, and they lend on personal security, they shall be answerable for the principal money only, and not for the value of the stock which might have been purchased. Marsh v. Hunter, 6 Madd. 295.

9. A trustee, who was directed by the will of the testator to invest the residue in consols, and to accumulate the dividends, invested it on mortgage of real estate; he was held liable to make good the amount of stock which would have been purchased in consols, together with the amount of accumulation which would have been produced by a proper investment of the dividends of such stock. Pride v. Fooks, 2 Beav. 480; 9 L. J., N. S., Ch., 234; 4 Jur. 213.

10. The testator directed his trustees to invest the residue of his personal estate in Government or real securities. Some of the cestuis que trustent and one of the trustees permitted the trust moneys to remain in the hands of the other trustee at interest:—Held, that, inasmuch as no investment was made, the trustees were chargeable with the whole amount of the trust funds possessed by them, with interest, but were not answerable for the amount of consols or any other particular security in which they might, according to the directions of the will, have invested the trust moneys. Shepherd v. Moulds, 4 Hare 500; 14 L. J., N. S., Ch., 366; 9 Jur. 506.

11. If trustees are directed to invest trust money on Government or real securities, and they do neither, they are answerable, at the option of the cestuis que trustent, either for the money or the stock which might have been purchased therewith. Husband and wife had a power to sell real estates, with the consent of the trustees; the moneys were, with all convenient speed, to be laid out in the purchase of other lands; and, until a convenient purchase could be effected, it was made lawful for the trustees, with consent of the husband and wife, to invest the money in government or real securities. A sale took place in 1811, and in 1816 the produce was lent by the trustees on personal security:—Held, that the trustees were liable for the stock which the money would have produced in 1816:—Held, also, that the trustees ought not to have consented to a sale without first providing the means of investing the purchase money. Watts v. Girdlestone, 6 Beav. 188; 12 L. J., N. S., Ch., 363; 7 Jur. 501.

12. A trustee having, under a settlement, a power of sale, with a trust for interim investments in the funds or on real security, concurred in a sale, and permitted the tenant for life to receive the purchase money, which was not invested according to the trust:—Held, that the cestui que trust has not the option of requiring the trustee to replace the purchase money with interest, or to buy such a sum of stock as the proceeds of the sale would have purchased, if invested at the time. Rees v. Williams, 1 De G. & Sm. 314.

1. Where a trustee neglects to invest on real or Government securities according to the trust, the cestui que trust has the right of selecting whether the trustee shall be answerable for the money or for the stock. A trustee, having the option of investing on mortgage or Government security, improperly took an insufficient mortgage security. Being held answerable, the Court decided that, having exercised his discretion, though improperly, he was answerable for the money lost, and not for the stock it might have produced. Ames v. Parkinson, 7 Beav. 379.

2. Trustees, authorised to lay out trust money in the public funds or on mortgage, invested it on a mortgage. The mortgage was paid off, and the amount was received by the tenant for life, who, contrary to the trusts, invested it in real estate:—Held, that the cestuis que trustent had the option of charging the tenant for life, either with the sum sterling received, or with the amount of 3 per cents. which might have been purchased therewith at the time the breach of trust was committed. Ouseley v. Anstruther, 10 Beav. 456.

3. Where a testator directs his trustees to invest trust moneys in Parliamentary stocks or funds, or on real securities, and they omit so to invest it, the cestuis que trustent have not the option of charging them with the moneys which could have been produced if the moneys had been invested in the funds, but are only entitled to have the trust moneys replaced, with interest at 4 per cent. Robinson v. Robinson, 1 De G. Macn. & G. 247; 21 L. J., N. S., Ch., 111; 16 Jur. 255. Reversing 11 Beav. 371; L. J., N. S., Ch., 73; 12 Jur. 969.

4. A trustee, by omitting to invest a sum of money sufficient to pay an annuity of 100*l.* a year to a party for life, is liable, when the parties in remainder become entitled to the fund, to make good any rise in the stock, assuming it had been purchased, and although the principal directed to be invested was paid, and a release obtained, still it was set aside, and the difference in value was directed to be paid to the cestuis que trustent, who were illiterate and ignorant of their rights. Aspland v. Watte, 25 L. J., Ch., 53; 3 W. R. 526.

5. A trustee, with power to invest in consols or on real security, who makes an improper investment, has the option of replacing either the actual sum misapplied with interest at 4*l.* per cent. per annum, or the sum which would have been produced by an investment in consols. Fisher v. Glavin, 38 L. J., Ch., 230.

6. A testator gave the residue of his personal estate to trustees, directing them to convert it into money and invest the proceeds in Government or real security, of which they were to stand possessed upon trust for A. during her life; and afterwards for B. The trustees permitted a share which the testator had in an Indian loan, bearing interest at 10 per cent., to remain for several years on that security, during which time they paid to A. the interest at 10 per cent. which it yielded annually; and the loan being afterwards paid off, they invested the money in the 3 per cents. at a time when the funds were so low that the amount of stock purchased was considerably greater than if the conversion had taken place at the end of a year from the testator's death:—Held, that the tenant for life was not entitled to the actual interest which the money yielded while it remained on the Indian security, but only to the dividends of so much 3 per cent. stock as would have been purchased with it at the end of a year from the testator's death; and that the trustees ought to be charged with the whole of the stock actually purchased, and all sums allowed in their discharge as payments to the tenant for life; not the sums which they had in fact paid her, but only a sum equal to what she would have received for dividends, if the money had been transferred from the Indian security, and invested in the 3 per cent. stock at the end of a year from the testator's death. Dimes v. Scott, 4 Russ. 195.

V. ADVANCES TO HUSBAND WITH CONCURRENCE OF WIFE.

1. Liability of Trustees, 7042.
2. Recouping the Trustees, 7043.
3. Where Empress Power to Advance or Invest with Consent of Wife. See XXIII. iv. ante.

1. Liability of Trustees.

7. Stock was settled on a wife, for her separate use, for life, with a power of appointment by will. The trustees, at the requests of husband and wife, sold out the stock, and paid the proceeds to the husband, who afterwards became bankrupt. The wife filed a bill to compel the trustees to replace the stock, and obtained a decree under which the trustees transferred part of the stock into court, and they were allowed time to transfer the remainder. The wife died, having by her will appointed the stock to her husband, and appointed him her executor. He filed a bill of revivor and supplement against the trustees and his assignees, claiming the stock under the appointment, and praying the same relief as his wife might have had. But as he had received the proceeds of the stock sold out, his bill was dismissed. Nail v. Punter, 5 Sim. 565.

8. By settlement before marriage, it was agreed, that 2,000*l.* in the hands of a trustee should be laid out in land, and settled on the husband for life; then to the wife for life, for her jointure, and to the children equally; and in default of issue, then to the wife in fee. The husband and wife being necessitous, the trustee paid them 600*l.* on a release and their joint bond of indemnity, and afterwards 400*l.* in the same manner, with a new agreement that the remaining 1,000*l.* should be laid out in an annuity, for the separate use of the wife, during coverture, and in fee in case of survivorship. The trustee afterwards paid the husband the remaining 1,000*l.*, and then he died, leaving his wife destitute. Upon a bill by the wife against the trustee's representative, upon this breach of trust, and to be paid what shall be due to her for the 2,000*l.*, the parties, on the recommendation of the Lord Chancellor, agreed to pay the wife 100*l.* per annum for life, tax free, together with the costs, which was ordered accordingly. Thayer v. Gould, 1 Atk. 615.

1. Where trustees under marriage settlement lend wife's money to husband with her consent, and husband becomes bankrupt, they cannot, on behalf of wife, prove for interest of money, but only for the principal, she having been supported by husband since marriage upon the principles applicable to wife's pin-money. Semble, scous, if they prove, to save themselves from consequences of their own act, her consent not having been given. Exp. Green, 2 Dea. & Ch. 113; 2 L. J., N. S., Bk^y., 2.

2. Where a testatrix gave a sum in stock to a feme covert, to be transferred into her name, the dividends to be for her sole and separate use, the principal remaining in the executor's hands until her youngest child attained twenty-one, when it was to become her own, or in case of her demise to devolve to her husband. The trustees transferred the stock into her own name alone, and she with her husband sold it out, and both signed the transfer:—Held, to constitute a breach of trust, and the trustees ordered to bring the fund into court, but that the wife had made a valid disposition of the dividends to accrue until the youngest child, born after the death of the testatrix, attained twenty-one. Crosby v. Church, 3 Beav. 485; 10 L. J., N. S., Ch., 212; 5 Jur. 50.

3. In his marriage settlement, a husband covenanted that any after-acquired property, exceeding 200*l.*, should be settled in the same manner as certain sums therein mentioned. The husband, as next-of-kin, became, in 1848, entitled to a sum exceeding the above amount, and he induced the administrator, who had notice of the trust, to pay the whole to him, the wife consenting, and signing a memorandum at the time. The husband died in January 1862, and in December following the surviving trustee of the settlement, in conjunction with the widow, filed a bill for a declaration that the estate of the administrator (he having died in 1853) was, in the hands of his representative, liable to make good the sum paid to the husband; and the Court held that the widow was entitled to have raised out of the real estate of the administrator (his personal estate having been fully administered) a sum sufficient to provide her an annuity equal to the interest of the misapplied fund; and that the right of the trustee of the settlement to sue was not barred by the Statute of Limitations. Cresswell v. Demell, 10 Jur., N. S., 354.

4. Settlement upon marriage, of stock, the property of the wife, in trust from time to time to receive the dividends, and pay them into the hands of the wife for her sole and separate use, her receipt to be a discharge; after her decease, if the husband should survive, for him for life; and after the decease of the survivor, to transfer the principal among the children, according to her appointment by will; in default thereof, equally; if no children, according to her appointment by will. The trustees, with the privity of the wife, sold the stock, and paid the money to the husband, taking his bond of indemnity; he died insolvent. Upon the bill of the widow and children, the fund, having been replaced by the trustees, was transferred to the account-general, upon the trusts of the settlement to trustees, to pay the dividends to the widow, from the death of the husband, with costs. Whistler v. Newman, 4 Ves. 129. See, as to the authority of this case, 5 Ves. 17. n. and 694. n.

5. A sum of money charged upon lands was, by a marriage settlement, assigned to trustees, to pay the interest to A., the husband, for his life, and after his death to pay the wife a jointure of 200*l.* a year; provided that it should be lawful for A., with the consent of the trustees, in writing, to call in the fund, and lay out and dispose of the same in the purchase of an estate of inheritance or freehold, for a term of at least three lives, or of a lease for a term of years, whereof ninety-nine years shall be unexpired, or otherwise advantageously, which purchase or disposal, when so made, should be settled and vested to the several uses, trusts, intents, and purposes thereinbefore mentioned in respect to the said sums. A portion of the fund was paid to the surviving trustee, who lent it to A., on a release being executed by A. and the wife B. and C. their son, and acknowledged by her:—Held, after the death of A., in a suit by B. to replace the trust fund, that the release as to her was inoperative. Smithwick v. Smithwick, 12 Ir. Ch. R. 181.

2. Recouping the Trustees.

6. Stock was settled on a wife, for her separate use, for life, with a power of appointment by will. The trustees, at the request of the husband and wife, sold out the stock, and paid the proceeds to the husband, who afterwards became bankrupt. The wife filed a bill to compel the trustees to replace the stock, and obtained a decree, under which the trustees transferred part of the stock into court, and they were allowed time to transfer the remainder. The wife died, having, by her will, appointed the stock to her husband, and appointed him her executor. He filed a bill of revivor and supplement against the trustees and his assignees, claiming the stock under the appointment, and praying the same relief as his wife might have had; but, as he had received the proceeds of the stock sold out, his bill was dismissed. Nail v. Punter, 5 Sim. 555.

7. A money fund belonging to the wife was vested in trustees, upon trust to pay the interest to the husband for his life, or until he should take the benefit of any Act for the relief of insolvent debtors; and, after his decease, or obtaining the benefit of such Act, upon trust to pay the interest to the wife for her life, the same to be paid to her, in case of the insolvency of the husband, to her separate use, and, after her decease, in trust for the issue. The trustees, at the instance of the wife, committed a breach of trust, by lending part of the trust funds to the husband, who afterwards was discharged as an insolvent. Upon a bill by the wife and her children to make the trustees answerable for the breach of trust:—Held, that the contingent interest of the wife for her separate use was not bound to make good to the trustees the money so advanced. Quere, whether her life interest, after death of husband, was so bound. Semble, if the discharge of husband as an insolvent had been concerted with her so as to get a present interest, and defeat the equity of the trustees, they would be entitled against her. Mara v. Manning, 2 J. & L. 311; 8 Ir. Eq. R. 218.

1. Trust money was settled on a married woman for life for her separate use, without power of anticipation, but with power to her to appoint the capital after her death by deed. The trustees lent part of the trust money to the husband on mortgage, and she consented to the investment by the mortgage deed. Part of the trust money having thereby been lost:—Held, that the wife had not, by executing the deed, appointed the reversion, so as to make it liable for loss. Fletcher v. Green, 33 Beav. 426.

Trustees committed a breach of trust, by lending trust moneys on mortgage; they instituted a suit to realise their security, in which the property was sold, and the produce paid into court and invested. In taking the accounts, they were debited with the cash, and not with the investment. On further directions, the stock was ordered to be sold, and the produce, after payment of the costs, was paid to the trustees. The funds having risen, there was a gain of 251*l.* by the investment:—Held, that the trustees were entitled to the benefit of this sum, in discharge of their liabilities. Ib.

2. The trustee of a marriage settlement concurred in a breach of trust, by lending the fund to the husband, on a security not warranted by the settlement:—Held, that the representatives of such trustee could maintain a bill against the husband and the cestui que trust, for the restitution of the fund. Greenwood v. Wakeford, 1 Beav. 576; 8 L. J., N. S., Ch., 323.

3. The trustees of a marriage settlement permitted the husband to retain the trust funds, which he appropriated to his own use. One of the trustees ultimately became entitled under the settlement to half the trust funds:—Held, that the estate of the husband was liable to refund to them his moiety. Butler v. Carter, 37 L. J., Ch., 270; 5 L. R., Eq., 276.

4. The trustees of a fund settled on a husband for life or until insolvency, and then to his wife for life for her separate use, at the solicitation of her husband, and with the concurrence of the wife, committed a breach of trust by lending part of the trust funds to the husband, who afterwards became an insolvent. In a suit against the trustees, charging them with a breach of trust, the husband and wife being parties to the suit:—Held, that the Court could make a declaration that the husband should recoup the trustees the amount which they were liable to make good to the trust funds; and that a cross-bill by the trustees was not necessary. Keays v. Lane, 3 Ir. R., Eq., 1.

Held, also, that the husband not being in insolvent circumstances at the time of the loan, his wife's separate estate in the trust fund was then reversionary; and, therefore, as it could not then be bound by her, it was not available to recoup the trustees. Ib.

5. A trust fund settled on husband, wife, and children in succession, was received by the husband and lent by him to his brother. A bill by one trustee against the other trustee, the husband and wife, and omitting the brother and children:—Held, sustainable, and a decree was made against the husband, reserving all rights against the brother and the trustees. Hughes v. Key, 20 Beav. 395.

The co-trustee, who had not joined as co-plaintiff, refused his costs. Ib.

6. By a marriage settlement of 1832, real and personal estate of H., the intended wife, was conveyed to trustees in trust for R., the intended husband for life, and after the death of the survivor of R. and H., in trust for the children of the marriage, as R. and H. or the survivor should appoint, and in default of appointment for the children equally. The trustees allowed R. to obtain possession of the trust fund, which he mixed with moneys of his own, and in 1861 one of the trustees commenced a suit to compel him to replace the fund. By arrangement of the trustees with R., he and H., by deed of the 25th September 1861, irrevocably appointed the fund equally among the children, four of whom were of age, and one (the plaintiff) a minor. On the following day the four adult children, and two years afterwards the plaintiff, when of age, executed a deed releasing the trustees from the trusts of the settlement. The children executed the release by the direction of their father, without any professional advice or assistance, and in ignorance of its contents or effect, and of their rights under the settlement. R. from time to time paid sums of money for the plaintiff; he purchased for the plaintiff a commission in the army, paid for his outfit, etc., made him an adequate yearly allowance, and paid a large sum for his promotion. No one of the sums so advanced was equal in amount to the plaintiff's share of the trust fund, nor was there any evidence that it was stated at the time of the advances, or understood between the plaintiff and R., that they were made out of the trust fund in R.'s hands:—Held, 1st, that the release should be set aside; 2nd, that R.'s position was that of a debtor to his five children for their respective shares of the trust fund; 3rd, that the sums advanced being respectively less in amount, that the plaintiff's share was not a satisfaction of it, pro tanto, and that R. was not entitled to credit for them. Reads v. Reads, 9 L. R., Ir., 409.

1. Into Investments in Name of or under Control of Trustee.

(a) When Invested on Personal Securities, 7045.

(b) When Invested in Land, 7046.

(a) When Invested on Personal Securities.

1. If executor, for benefit of the testator's estate, should invest part of it in the funds, or transfer money from one stock to another, this is not a conversion, but it may still be followed as much as if it had continued in the same condition at the testator's death. Waite v. Whormood, 2 Atk. 159.

2. Part of a sum of money which had been raised by a husband upon the security of property comprised in his marriage settlement, by means of a suppression of the settlement, was lent by him to the trustee of settlement upon his bond, the trustee being ignorant of the means by which the money had been raised. After the death of the husband, the wife, who was entitled to a life interest in the settled property, with remainder to her children, took out administration to her husband, and filed a bill in her own name, and in the names of her children, by herself, as their next friend, against the trustee, who had, in the meantime, taken the benefit of the Insolvent Debtors Act, praying that the sum due upon the bond (which the widow, as administratrix, offered to deliver up) might be replaced with interest upon the trusts of the settlement:—Held, that the widow and children had a clear equity to follow the money in the hands of the trustee, and that they would have had the same equity if, instead of being a trustee, he had been a stranger; and, semble, that such a claim would not have been barred by the trustee's discharge under the Insolvent Debtors Act, even if it had been proved (which it was not) that the bond debt had been included in his schedule. Buckridge v. Glasco, Cr. & Ph. 126; 10 L. J., N. S., Ch., 134; 5 Jur. 163.

3. When trust funds are invested on an improper security, the parties interested have a lien on the securities into which it is traced. Mant v. Leith, 15 Beav. 524; 16 Jur. 302; 21 L. J., Ch., 719.

4. Under circumstances of great peculiarity, and notwithstanding a great deal of intermixture backwards and forwards of cheques relating to trust funds:—Held, that the trust funds were traced into certain securities, and decreed for redemption accordingly. Harford v. Lloyd, 20 Beav. 310.

5. Held, that by instituting an administration suit, and obtaining an order against the trustee personally for payment of the trust moneys into court (which order had not been obeyed), the cestuis que trustent had not waived their right to pursue the trust money into the unauthorised investment. Francois v. Francois, 5 De G. M. & G. 108.

6. A defaulting trustee effected a policy of assurance on his own account (but in the name of the next friend of the cestui que trust, who was a married woman) with the approbation of the Master, as being the best security which it was in the trustee's power to give for the restoration of the trust fund. The amount secured by the policy became payable at the death of the trustee, which occurred before the Master had made his report:—Held, that the money was not general assets of the trustee, but was applicable in the first place to compensate the loss occasioned by the breach of trust. Ward v. Ward, 2 Sm. & Gif. 125; 18 Jur. 529.

7. Where a trustee mixes his own money with the trust fund, and takes security for the whole fund, if the security fail, the trust fund is entitled to priority of payment. But if the cestuis que trustent have elected to adopt the loan, they cannot compel the trustee to make good the deficiency. Lamb v. Orton, 2 N. R. 435.

8. E. effected a policy of assurance on his life in the name of two trustees, B. and M., for the benefit of his two daughters, and died largely indebted to M. M. received the policy money, and invested the greater part of it in debentures of a joint-stock banking company. These debentures he placed in a separate envelope, inscribed with the names of E.'s daughters, and paid them the interest until the bank stopped payment. The bank was subsequently wound up under the Joint Stock Company Winding-up Act, when M. was found to be largely indebted to the bank. M. survived his co-trustee, and became bankrupt (having previously handed over the debentures to a third party), and the official manager of the company was appointed official assignee of his bankruptcy. E.'s daughters claimed the debentures as being held in trust for them. Held, first, that there was a valid trust of the policy money in the hands of M., notwithstanding the fact of E. being indebted to him; secondly, that the debentures were well appropriated to the trust, and were not subject to M.'s liabilities to the bank. Eap. Boyd, Re Royal Bank of Australia, 5 W. R. 634.

9. If a trustee mixes a trust fund with his own moneys, as long as the mixed fund remains under his control, either in its original shape or in such a substituted form that it can be traced, it is primarily liable to answer the trust. Frith v. Cartland, 11 Jur., N. S., 238; 34 L. J., Ch., 301; 13 W. R. 493; 12 L. T., N. S., 175.

The rules as to following trust funds in the hands of a defaulting trustee apply against the assignees of the defaulting trustee as fully as against the trustee himself; and the evidence that the trust fund was acquired on the eve of the bankruptcy, and when the bankrupt was about to abscond with that and his other moneys:—Held, not to raise any equity in favour of assignees or general creditors, as against the owners of the trust fund. S. C. 2 Hem. & M. 417.

10. A testator, having moneys in his hands belonging to other parties, invested a portion, by their direction, together with his own moneys, in consols, and informed the parties of such investment, and duly accounted to them for the dividends. He afterwards sold out nearly the whole of the stock, and then replaced a portion of it, and, on his death, having directed his confidential clerk to buy stock to replace the rest, he expressed his wish that the stock to be purchased by the clerk should be appropriated to replace the trust stock. The clerk purchased a sum of stock in the testator's name; but the whole stock standing in the testator's name at his death was not sufficient to replace the trust moneys:—Held, that, under the circumstances, the stock standing in the testator's name at his death was impressed with a trust, and did not form part of his general assets. Robertson v. Morrice, 9 Jur. 122.

1. W. A., who at the time of his death in 1867 was carrying on the business of a farmer, gave his residuary personal estate to his widow and a co-trustee, upon trust to permit his widow to have the use and enjoyment of the household furniture, and the dividends, interest, and annual income and produce of his other residuary estate for life, and then upon trusts in favour of the testator's two sons. The testator's residuary estate consisted almost entirely of the household furniture and farm stock, and the widow, with the consent of her co-trustee, carried on the business of the farm. She took a new lease of the farm in her own name, and painted her own name upon the carts; but the financial part of the business was carried on through a joint banking account opened in the names of "the executors of the late W. A." In 1879 the widow presented her petition for liquidation. All the property in her possession consisted of the furniture and farm stock bequeathed by the testator, or of stock which had replaced the original stock in the ordinary course of business. Upon being sold, it realised a sum of 2,063*l.* 15*s.* 6*d.*, with produce estimated at 250*l.* still to be realised. The testator's residuary account had been passed at 1,917*l.* 7*s.* 6*d.*:—Held, that the farming stock in the hands of the widow was well ear-marked as trust property, and that only the life interest of the widow in the proceeds of the realisation passed to the trustees in the liquidation. Exp. Barber, Re Anslow, 42 L. T. 411; 28 W. R. 522.

2. Trust funds were vested in the purchase of transferable shares of a banking company, in the name of one of the trustees, who executed a declaration of the trusts thereof (the rules of the company not allowing shares to stand in the name of joint owners or cestui que trustent). The trustee was also a proprietor of shares in his own right in the same company, and made various sales and purchases of shares therein. There was nothing to distinguish which were the individual shares held by the different proprietors, the same being in the nature of capital expressed by quantity. The trustee contracted to assign a certain number of shares to the banking company as a security for advances which they made to him; he afterwards became bankrupt:—Held, that the trustee must be presumed to have transferred or pledged such shares as belonged to himself, and, so far as he had shares of his own, not to have transferred or pledged the shares of his cestui que trustent; and that, therefore, the cestui que trustent were entitled to so many of the shares standing in the name of the trustee at the time of his bankruptcy as could be presumed to be identical with the shares in which the trust funds were invested, from the fact that such a number of shares had always thenceforward stood in the name of the trustee. Pinkett v. Wright, 2 Hare 120; 12 L. J., N. S., Ch., 119; 6 Jur. 1102. Affirmed

S. C. sub nom. Murray v. Pinkett, 12 Cl. & F. 764.

3. An informal document, signed by a trustee who was indebted to the trust, construed to amount to an equitable mortgage in favour of the trust, notwithstanding a denial by the answer. Baynard v. Woolley, 20 Beav. 583.

4. A sole trustee, who had appropriated 4,000*l.*, part of the trust property, deposited in the box in which he kept the trust deed and the securities for other portions of the trust funds two policies of assurance, one on his own life for 2,000*l.*, the other on the life of his father for 3,000*l.*, inclosing them in an envelope with a memorandum, that "in the event of his" (the trustee's) "death," the amount of the inclosed policies was to be applied to the repayment of 4,000*l.* borrowed by him of the cestui que trust. Six years afterwards the trustee became bankrupt. The policy for 2,000*l.* was found by the officer of the Court of Bankruptcy inclosed with the memorandum in the box, the other policy having been paid to the bankrupt upon his father's death:—Held, as between the cestui que trust and the assignees in bankruptcy, first, that notwithstanding the words importing contingency, the memorandum was a valid declaration that the policy was, in any event, subject to the trusts of the settlement Re Bankhead, 2 Kay & J. 560.

Held, secondly, that there being a valid declaration of trust by the sole trustee, he was the proper person to be in possession of the policy; in other words, "the true owner" within the meaning of the 12 & 13 Vict., c. 106; and he being also in the reputed possession of the property when the bankruptcy took place, there was no separation of interests, the true owner and the reputed owner were the same person, and the 125th section did not apply. And an order was made, under the 130th section, for an assignment of the policy to the new trustees of the settlement. Id.

(b) When Invested in Land.

5. Remedy for a breach of trust is personal, and money produced thereby, laid out on an estate in Ireland, cannot be specifically followed; the party's assets were, however, marshalled in favour of the claim. Ow v. Bateman, 2 Ves. 19.

6. The Court is cautious in following money into land, but will do it if proved that the money was laid out in land; the doubt is on the proof: always done when admitted on the answer of person laying it out. Lane v. Dighton, Amb. 413.

Where money is sought to be followed into land, the admission by the personal representative of party laying it out will not bind the heir, but it will be ground of inquiry. Id.

7. Trustee for the purchase of land died without personal assets, but, having purchased land, the estates purchased were held not liable to the trust, the circumstances affording no presumption that they were purchased in execution of the trust. Perry v. Phillips, 4 Ves. 108. Affirmed 17 Ves. 173.

8. A., by marriage articles, covenanted that all lands he should afterwards purchase in the parish of K. should be to the uses of he articles. He purchased lands in K., and took a conveyance in fee in the name of his youngest son, without a declaration of trust:—Held, that youngest son was a trustee as to the lands for the parties entitled under the settlement. Blake v. Blake, 7 Bro. P. C. 241.

1. An executor by the very will empowered to purchase lands for the heir, yet, the purchase being in his own name, and he dead, insolvent as to the other assets, the heir could not follow the land to make a trust for him; though the executor had told the mother of the purchase he was about to make, and had her consent; and so the executor's heir went away with the land for want of express proof of the application of the trust money. Halcott v. Markant, Pre. Ch. 168.

2. Money settled to separate use of wife, and in event of no children to her absolutely, surviving husband, with power to trustees, with her consent, to invest it in land:—Held, that no lien existed on estates purchased by husband, having obtained the money from trustees; the circumstances not raising the presumption, as if he had been under an engagement to purchase, that his purchases were in pursuance of engagements, and upon evidence the fact of the application of trust fund, or the inability of husband by other means, not being made out. Lench v. Lench, 10 Ves. 511.

3. A trustee purchases lands out of the profits received out of the trust estate, and takes the conveyance in his own name; though possibly, if he be unable to make other satisfaction for the profits so misapplied, those lands may be sequestrated, yet they cannot be decreed to be a trust for the cestui que trust. Kirk v. Webb, Pre. Ch. 84. See also Heron v. Heron, id. 163.

4. A. dies intestate, leaving a wife and two daughters; after his death 200*l.* is found hid in a wall, and 200*l.* in a box. The widow lays out this money in land, and settles it to the use of herself for life, remainder to her daughters in tail, remainder to her own right heirs. After the death of the mother and two daughters, plaintiff, as administrator to the daughters, brings a bill against the heir-at-law, to have two-thirds of the 400*l.* out of the land as personal estate, and the Master of the Rolls decreed for him, but the decree was reversed by the Lord Keeper, money having no earmark. Kendar v. Milward, 2 Vern. 440. S. C. nom. Kindar v. Miller, Pre. Ch. 172.

5. Legatees allowed to follow money of testator laid out in land, etc., by executor. Ryall v. Ryall, 1 Atk. 59; cited in Ambl. 411.

6. The customer, having received a fund out of court, upon an undertaking to purchase and convey a house, etc., upon the trusts of his marriage settlement, and having deposited it with his bankers, drew on it from time to time, and amongst other things for the purchase of the house, which he procured to be conveyed to himself in fee, the deeds of which he deposited as a security for further advances; the Court, in deciding between the bankers and the trustees of the settlement, would presume that the purchase money of the house was drawn from the fund applicable for that purpose. Manningford v. Toleman, 1 Colly. 670; 14 L. J., N. S., Ch., 160; 9 Jur. 438.

7. Where a trustee states in writing to his cestui que trust that part of the trust moneys are laid out in a certain property, although not an investment warranted by the terms of the trust, and although the cestui que trust goes on receiving interest, and not the rents:—Held, that the cestui que trust might at his option take the property in which the trust funds had been laid out, as representing the whole trust fund, or might have it sold, and prove, if necessary, against the trustee's estate for the deficiency (if any). But the cestui que trust was not allowed to take the property as representing the actual portion of the trust fund laid out by the trustee, and prove for the balance. Thornton v. Stokill, 1 Jur., N. S., 751.

8. L. M. bequeathed 50,000*l.* to two trustees upon trust to invest in the purchase of lands in Wales, and to settle and convey the same to C. M. for life, with remainder to C. M.'s eldest son for life, with remainder to his first son in tail, with remainders over. C. M., who was also residuary legatee of the testator's estate, took out letters of administration, and subsequently he, with moneys amounting to 49,000*l.*, which were part of testator's personal estate, purchased the Lamphey and other estates, of which he took conveyances to himself in fee. The Lamphey estate C. M., by will, devised to his eldest son absolutely, subject, however, to the payments, charges, liabilities, and demands of his uncle L. M.'s will, and in exoneration of his, C. M.'s, other estates, which he devised to his younger children. The Lamphey estate, subsequently to the purchase, became much improved in value. A bill was filed by the younger sons of C. M., praying for a declaration that the Lamphey estate ought to be taken in satisfaction of the 50,000*l.* directed by the will of L. M. to be laid out in land. By his report the Master found that the Lamphey and other estates were purchased by C. M. by or with part of the personal estate of L. M., in execution or discharge of the trust for investment of the 50,000*l.* On exceptions to the report by the devisees of C. M.'s will:—Held, that the purchases having been made by the trustee C. M. with the trust moneys in his hands, a presumption arose that the purchases were made with a view to execute an obligation. Mathias v. Mathias, 3 Jur., N. S., 429; 3 Sm. & G. 552.

Held, also, that the moneys invested being trust moneys (and the circumstances attending the purchasers of the estates were enough to attribute them to the performance of the trust), the trustee could have no right to deal with the estates so as to alter or prejudice the rights of the remaindermen. Id.

9. Bank stock to the amount of 13,000*l.* was transferred to a trustee to sell and invest the produce in lands, which were to be settled on certain uses and trusts. S., the administrator of the trustee, laid out 38,650*l.* in the purchase of lands, which were conveyed to him absolutely. The price of the stock at the time of the purchase was 23,630*l.* By a subsequent deed reciting the purchase of the lands thereby conveyed, and of other lands also therein mentioned, and that a portion of the purchase money of the several estates, lands and premises, consisted of the 13,000*l.* bank stock, and that the lands were conveyed to S., in pursuance and part performance of the trusts declared of the stock, and that he was desirous of fully performing the trusts by conveying the several lands on the trusts, he conveyed part of the purchased lands accordingly. The entire value of the stock was not represented by the lands so conveyed:—Held, that there was no dedication to the trusts of any other lands than those actually conveyed by the trust deed. Sealy v. Stannell, 2 Ir. R., Eq. 326.

Held, also, that there was no lien in favour of the persons entitled to the trust estate, on the other purchased lands, and that their claim was simply that of creditors on foot of a breach of trust. Id.

1. In a suit to render the estate of a deceased trustee of a will liable for certain breaches of trust, a decree was made declaring the liability of the estate to make good what should be found due in respect of such breaches of trust, and directing accounts and inquiries. Before the chief clerk had made his certificate, but it having appeared in the course of taking the accounts and inquiries that the estate was liable for a considerable amount which the personal estate was insufficient to satisfy, the cestui que trust applied by petition, under 15 & 16 Vict., c. 86, s. 55, for the sale of certain real estate belonging to the deceased trustee, a mortgage on which had been redeemed by the existing trustee of the will:—Held, that the Court had jurisdiction to order the sale, and that it was in accordance with the practice of the Court in such a case, when once it had been ascertained that the real estate would have to be resorted to, to make an order for the sale of the real estate without waiting for further consideration. Bell v. Turner, 2 L. R., Ch. D., 409; 45 L. J., Ch., 681; 24 W. R. 451.

2. Into Hands of Bankers or Other Agents.

2. In 1843 trust moneys were standing to the credit of the trustees with certain bankers, who had clear and distinct notice that the money was trust money. The bankers transferred the money to themselves, without the knowledge or sanction of the trustees, in discharge of a debt due to them from the tenant for life of the fund, who afterwards became bankrupt. Decree for payment by the bankers of the trust fund, with interest, in a suit instituted against them by the trustees. Bridgham v. Gill, 24 Beav. 302.

3. Where money is paid into a banker's by a customer for a purpose specified, and instructions are given in writing, and those instructions are acted upon, although such sum is carried to the general account of the party paying it in, and although the money is not eventually applied, but comes again into the banker's hands after business has ceased to be carried on:—Held, that it is sufficiently earmarked to prevent its belonging to the general creditors. Farley v. Turner, 5 W. R. 666; 3 Jur., N. S., 532.

4. Where a sum of money was standing in the books of a banking company to the credit of "the account of the trustees of the late W. H.," and the bank, knowing that the trustees (each of whom had an overdrawn account at the bank) were not beneficially entitled, allowed them to transfer sums at different times from the trust account to their respective private accounts:—Held, that the cestuis que trustent were entitled to recover from the bank the sums so allowed to be transferred, and that it was immaterial whether or not the bank knew what were the circumstances of the trust, and also whether or not the bank profited by the transfer from the one account to the other, so long as they were aware that the money dealt with was trust money. Forster v. Manchester & Liverpool District Banking Co., 44 L. T. 406.

5. Trust money was so placed to a banking account that any of the trustees could draw out separately. One of them drew out money and bought a house as a residence for some of the cestuis que trustent, but took a conveyance to himself alone. He then deposited the deeds with another bank to secure his private balance, and afterwards became bankrupt. The co-trustees neglected to examine the banker's book for a long time after the purchase:—Held, that by reason of their negligence they were not entitled to priority over the security by deposit. Allan v. Scott, 12 L. T., N. S., 449.

6. A., in whom a lease was vested, deposited it with his bankers by way of equitable mortgage. The bankers afterwards received notice, as the fact was, that he was a mere trustee of the leasehold, but they subsequently obtained from him a formal mortgage of the legal estate:—Held, that the cestuis que trustent had priority over the bankers. Baillie v. McKean, 35 Beav. 177.

7. Bankers advanced to customers 300*l.* to redeem some railway stock which had been transferred to another firm as a security for that sum. The stock was thereupon transferred in blank to the bankers. Subsequently, the customers, in a letter to the bankers, stated that they had been requested by their principal to extend the term of the loan on the stock. The stock actually belonged to a third party, A.:—Held, that, after the receipt of this letter, the bankers had constructive notice of A.'s right to the stock, and that no subsequent advances made by the bankers to the customers could affect the stock. Locke v. Prescott, 32 Beav. 261.

8. Trust funds were invested in the purchase of transferrable shares in a banking company in the name of one of the trustees, who was also a holder of shares in his own right in the same company, and afterwards made various sales and purchases of shares therein. There was no distinguishing mark by which the shares could be traced, the same being in the nature of capital, expressed by quantity. The trustee agreed to assign some of the shares standing in his name to the banking company, as security for repayment of advances which had been made to him, but no transfer was made. He afterwards became bankrupt, without having shares sufficient to satisfy the trusts and his agreement to assign:—Held, first, that the banking company had no lien on any of the shares which had been held in trust; secondly, that although the shares held in trust might have been changed by sale and re-purchase, the trustee must still be considered as holding for the purposes of the trust the same number of shares out of a larger number that were standing in his name at the time of his bankruptcy; thirdly, that as no shares were transferred in pursuance of the agreement, no question as to whether the bank directors were purchasers with or without notice could arise; and of the two equities, for the cestui que trust and for the bank, the former must be preferred. Murray v. Pinkett, 12 Cl. & F. 764. Affirming Pinkett v. Wright, 2 Hare 120; 12 L. J., N. S., Ch., 119; 6 Jur. 1102.

1. Where money has been paid in to the ordinary banking account of a company, not being in any way ear-marked, the company will not, on an allegation that the money is impressed with a trust, such allegation not being admitted by the company, be restrained, on motion, from dealing with the money. Bank of Turkey v. Ottoman Co., 14 W. R. 819; 14 L. T., N. S., 884.

2. H., having a balance of 3,961l. 10s. 3d. at his bank, paid in 5,000l. trust money. Between the time of doing so and his death he paid in various sums, together amounting to 12,533l. 11s. 6d., and in the same interval drew out 18,847l. 4s. 4d. No part of this sum was devoted to the purposes of the trust, and he was still liable for the 5,000l. at the date of his death:—Held, that the balance remaining at his bank formed part of his general estate, and could not be appropriated by the beneficial owner of the 5,000l. Brown v. Adams, 39 L. J., Ch., 67; 4 L. R., Ch., 764; 17 W. R. 999; 21 L. T., N. S., 71.

3. When a customer has opened with his bankers separate accounts specially headed with the names of the trusts to which the moneys paid into those accounts belong, the bankers are not at liberty upon the bankruptcy of the customer to apply those moneys in payment of the balance due to them upon the customer's overdrawn private account. Exp. Kingston, Re Gross, 25 L. T., N. S., 250; 6 L. R., Ch., 632; 40 L. J., Bk., 91; 19 W. R. 910.

A county treasurer used to pay the county moneys into Bacon's Bank, but kept his private account at the National and Provincial Bank, and carried over the police rates to this account by cheques drawn on Bacon's Bank. In 1869 he opened a separate account with the National and Provincial Bank, headed "Police Account." Some of the items to his credit in this account could be traced as having come from county funds, but most of them could not. The cheques which he drew upon it were all headed "Police Account," and appeared to have been drawn only for county purposes. For the purposes of interest the National and Provincial Bank treated the accounts as one account, and the interest on the balance in his favour was carried to the credit of his private account. At the time when the police account was opened the manager of the bank knew that he was county treasurer, and understood that he had been in the habit of paying county moneys into the bank. In April 1870 he absconded, his private account being overdrawn, and the police account being in credit:—Held, that the bank was not entitled to set off the one account against the other, but that the county magistrates were entitled to recover the balance standing to his credit on the police account. Id.

4. When a trustee pays trust money into a bank to his credit, the account being a simple account with himself, not marked or distinguished in any other manner, the debt thus constituted from the bank to him belongs, so long as it remains due, specifically to the trust, as between the cestui que trust on the one side, and the trustee or his representatives on the other; and the state of things is not varied by the circumstance of the bank holding also for the trustee, or owing to him money in every sense his own. And where the account consists of a series of items in respect of moneys paid in, and drawn out by general cheques by the trustee, the mode of ascertaining what part of the balance is trust property, and what part the trustee's own money, is to hold, as in Clayton's case (1 Meriv. 572), that each cheque drawn out by the trustee is to be applied in payment of the earlier items of the opposite side of the account, i.e., in diminution of the trust fund pro tanto if those items arise from trust moneys paid into the account, or of the customer's own moneys pro tanto if they arise from moneys paid in on his private personal account. Pennell v. Daffell, 18 Jur. 273; 23 L. J., Ch., 115; 4 De G. M. & G. 372; 1 Eq. Rep. 579.

An official assignee under the Court of Bankruptcy received certain sums of money on account of bankrupt's estates, and paid them in to a general account standing in his own name at the bankers' where they were mixed with his own moneys:—Held, in a suit for the administration of his estate, that the balance at the bankers' was not "ear-marked" for the benefit of the bankrupt's estate, but they must come in pari passu with the other creditors. S. C. 1 W. R. 239, 499.

5. Trust moneys cannot be followed unless clearly identified. Where, therefore, a solicitor, having trust moneys in his hands, paid certain sums part of such moneys into his banking account without distinguishing them as trust moneys, and subsequently filed a liquidation petition:—Held, that the trustee in the liquidation was entitled to the balance of the moneys in the hands of the bank as against the persons claiming to be entitled as trustees of the alleged trust funds under the marriage settlement of the bankrupt. Exp. Hardcastle, Re Manson, 44 L. T. 523; 29 W. R. 615.

6. A banking company were employed as agents to collect money and to remit it to their employers. The bank received the money in cash, placed it with the other cash of the bank, and informed their employers that the money had been remitted; but before the money was actually remitted the bank went into liquidation:—Held, that the money was part of the general assets of the bank, and that the employers of the bank were not entitled to be paid in priority to the other creditors. Re West of England & South Wales District Bank, Exp. Dale & Co., 11 L. R., Ch. D., 772; 48 L. J., Ch., 600; 27 W. R. 815; 40 L. T. 712.

7. If money held by a person in a fiduciary character, though not as trustee, has been paid by him to his account at his banker's, the person for whom he held the money can follow it, and has a charge on the balance in the banker's hands. Re West of England & South Wales District Bank, Exp. Dale & Co. (11 L. R., Ch. D., 772), dissented from. Re Hallett's

1. A solicitor was employed by the trustees for sale of an estate, his duty being to receive the purchase moneys and pay them in to the trustees' banking account. He received large sums, paid them in to his private account, and died insolvent. His banking account at his death showed a large credit, principally made up of specific sums which corresponded with receipts by him on account of sales of the trust estate:—Held, that these specific sums could be followed by the trustees, and that there could not be a set-off allowed in respect of sums alleged to have been paid by the solicitor on account of the trust estate. Birt v. Burt, 36 L. T., N. S., 943.

2. Money was advanced to a solicitor by A. for the purpose of being invested on mortgage security. The solicitor wrote that he had invested the money on mortgage to M. on leaseholds in Camden Town, and that A. was receiving interest at the rate of 5 per cent. The solicitor in fact, subsequently to this, advanced large sums on mortgage to M., but no specific mortgage was made in favour of A. The draft, however, of a mortgage for the sum advanced in favour of A. was found unexecuted after the solicitor's death. The solicitor had died insolvent. A. applied that a sum equal to the sum advanced by him should be paid to him out of a large sum in court representing the moneys advanced by the solicitor to M.:—Held, that the solicitor was bound by his representation; that the money was trust money, and that A. ought to be paid in priority to the general creditors. Re Middleton v. Follock, Ex p. Wetherall, 35 L. T., N. S., 608.

3. A trustee employed a broker, who had notice of the trust, to sell out consols and invest the proceeds in railway stock. The broker sold the consols for cash, bought railway stock to the same amount for the settling day, and received the price of the consols in a cheque, which he paid into his account at his banker's. He stopped payment before the settling day, and went into liquidation. The trustee claimed so much of the broker's balance at his banker's as was attributable to the price of the consols:—Held, that as the price of the consols was known by the broker to be trust money, it could be followed, and that the claim must therefore be allowed. Ex p. Cooke, Re Strachan, 4 L. R., Ch. D., 123; 46 L. J., Bky., 52; 35 L. T., N. S., 649; 25 W. R. 171.

3. Shuffling the Funds of two Different Settlements.

4. If a solicitor who is trustee of two funds for different cestui que trustent, shuffles one for the other for the purpose of concealing a fraud he has committed, a co-trustee, who has unwillingly been led to do an act which enabled the solicitor to deal with the fund, cannot claim a restoration of the fund dealt with, though it remained in the name of the fraudulent trustee. Case v. James, 7 Jur., N. S., 616; 30 L. J., Ch., 749; 9 W. R. 528; 4 L. T., N. S., 272; 29 Beav. 512. Affirmed 7

Jur., N. S., 869; 30 L. J., Ch., 749; 9 W. R. 771; 4 L. T., N. S., 664.

A trustee of a settlement, unknown to his cestui que trust, sold the trust fund, and applied the proceeds to his own use. He represented that the money had been lent on mortgage, and they pressed for its reinvestment. He afterwards induced his co-trustee of a second fund to join him in transferring it into his name, and take as security a transfer of a mortgage, which in the result proved to be a forgery. He afterwards made a small addition to the fund out of his own moneys, and gave notice to the cestui que trust of the first fund that it had been replaced, and they immediately put a distringas upon the stock. He afterwards died insolvent, leaving the stock standing in his name. Upon a bill by the surviving trustee of the second fund, against the cestui que trust of the first fund, asking that the stock might be restored to him:—Held, that the plaintiff had no remedy against the cestui que trust of the first fund; that the cestui que trust of the second fund, had they known the facts, might have stopped and reclaimed it prior to the notice; that the notice of reinvestment to the cestui que trust of the first fund amounted to a valid transfer, which made them as against the plaintiff purchasers for value without notice of the fraud; and that the bill must be dismissed with costs. Id.

5. A trustee of two different settlements, having applied to his own use funds subject to one of the settlements, replaced it by funds which under a power of attorney from his co-trustee under the other, he transferred into the names of himself and his co-trustee in the former. In a suit in respect of breaches of trust of the former settlement, the trustees of it transferred the fund thus replaced into court on motion:—Held, that the transfer was equivalent to an alienation for value without notice, and that cestui que trustent under the other settlement could not follow the trust fund. Thorndike v. Hunt; Brown v. Butter, 3 De G. & J. 563; 5 Jur., N. S., 879; 28 L. J., Ch., 417; 7 W. R. 246; 32 L. T. 346.

4. Relief against Purchasers with Notice.

(a) In General, 7050.

(b) Following Specific Property into Hands of, 7052.

(a) In General.

6. Relief for cestui que trust of lease against assignment or sale by trustee. Rook v. Staples, Cary 76.

7. All persons coming into possession of property, bound by a trust with notice of the trust, are chargeable in equity as trustees. Adair v. Sham, 1 Sch. & Lef. 262.

8. Trustees in will to support contingent remainders, joining with tenant for life in destroying such remainders, are guilty of breach of trust, and purchaser with notice of trust is liable to make good the estate. Gorges v. Pye, 7 Bro. P. C. 221; Pre. Ch. 308; 1 P. W. 128.

9. If trustees, to preserve contingent remainders, join in sale to one, without notice, the purchaser will be safe; contra, if he have notice. Willoughby v. Willoughby, Amb. 284.

1. If the persons claiming under the breach of trust have notice of it, then they are subject to the same trust; so if the conveyance be voluntary, or without a valuable consideration; but if for a valuable consideration, and without notice, the purchaser will hold the land discharged, and the trustees must buy and settle other land to the same uses. Mansell v. Mansell, 2 P. W. 681.

2. Both the trustee and the assignee are responsible to the cestui que trust for profits subsequent to an assignment in breach of trust. Vandebende v. Livingston, 3 Swan. 625.

3. A purchaser, with notice implied or constructive, from a trustee, will be bound by the trust, although there has been a fine levied to him and five years' non-claim. Thompson v. Simpson, 2 Dr. & War. 459.

4. Length of possession will not prevail against charitable trusts, where the land was purchased with notice of the trusts. Att.-Gen. v. Christ's Hospital, 3 Myl. & K. 344.

5. A purchaser or mortgagee shall not protect himself by taking a conveyance from a trustee after notice of the trust; for by taking such conveyance he becomes the trustee himself. Saunders v. Dehery, 2 Vern. 271.

6. A person knowingly inducing trustees to lend trust money to his debtor, on a security not warranted by the trusts, in order that when advanced, such person may obtain thereout payment of his debt, is accountable to the cestui que trustent. Flyer v. Flyer, 3 Beav. 550; 5 Jur. 187.

7. Where a trustee lends trust money in breach of the trust, and the borrower, with notice of the trust, applies the money to his own use, he cannot be permitted to separate the loan from the trust, and insist, that the loan being barred by the statute, the trust is barred also. Ernest v. Croydill, 6 Jur., N. S., 740; 29 L. J., Ch., 680; 8 W. R. 736.

8. A. made a voluntary surrender of copyholds to a trustee upon trust for F. during her life; and if at her death she left children who attained twenty-one, upon trust to sell and divide the money among them; but if that event did not take place, upon trust for A. in fee. Afterwards, by a deed reciting that the trustee was seised of the premises upon trust for F. and her husband and A., the trustee and F. and her husband and A. concurred in demising the premises for a valuable consideration to G., for a long term of years:—Held, that the lessee was to be considered as having notice of the trust for the benefit of the children of F., and that the lease was void as against them. Malpas v. Ackland, 3 Russ. 273.

9. Testator gave leasehold premises to his daughter for life, if his term or terms and interest should therein for so long subsist, for her sole and separate use, notwithstanding her present or future coverture, and after her decease to her children equally, their executors, etc., during all the remainder of the estate, term or terms, and interest therein which should be then to come and unexpired. No trustees being interposed, the husband, having possession, was held accountable according to the uses of the will, both as to the original leases, and also as to reversionary leases, granted to him, as the person entitled under the will of the former tenant upon favourable terms, and the equity was established against a purchaser from him with notice. Parker v. Brooke, 9 Ves. 583.

10. T., a trustee, lent trust money on mortgage to M. By an arrangement on the marriage of M.'s daughter, a valuable leasehold interest was granted by M. out of the mortgaged premises, and put in settlement, T. being the person who managed it and the solicitor who prepared the lease and settlement, neither the daughter nor her husband being informed of the mortgage. T. afterwards, with his co-trustee and their cestui que trustent, filed a bill to foreclose the mortgage and sell discharged of the lease, if necessary:—Held, that the parties deriving under the settlement must be fixed with notice of the mortgage and trust, and could not rely on T.'s conduct as a defence even against him, and therefore could not object to his being a co-plaintiff. Quære, whether, if notice were not shown, such an equity against a trustee would be a defence. Tracycross v. Moore, 13 Ir. Eq. R. 250.

11. A trustee of a money fund, in violation of his duty, lent the trust money to F. upon the security of a judgment, F. at the time not being aware that it was trust money. Subsequently F., at the request of the cestui que trust, and by the direction of the trustee, paid the interest to the cestui que trust, who was entitled to it during her life. The trustee afterwards threatened to issue execution on the judgment. F. stated to the cestui que trust that if she did not interfere to protect him against the demand of the trustee, he would be obliged to pay him, and she not having done so, F., as he alleged, paid the money to the trustee, who thereupon satisfied the judgment on record. Upon a bill against F. and the trustee, filed after the decease of the tenant for life, by the person entitled absolutely to the trust fund, it was decreed that F. should pay the money with interest. Sheridan v. Joyce, 1 J. & L. 401; 7 Ir. Eq. R. 115.

12. A fraudulent abstraction of trust property by the trustee, and a fraudulent receipt and appropriation of it by another person for his own personal benefit, place the receiver in the same situation as the trustee from whom he received it, and he becomes subject in a court of equity to the same rights and remedies as may be enforced by the parties beneficially entitled against the fraudulent trustee himself; and when it is said that the person who receives under such circumstances is converted by the Court into a trustee, the expression is used for the purpose of describing the nature and extent of the remedy against him, and denotes that the parties entitled beneficially have the same rights and remedies against him as they would be entitled to against an express trustee who had fraudulently committed a breach of trust. Rolfe v. Gregory, 4 De G. J. & S. 576; 5 N. R. 257.

But the relief against the receiver in such cases is founded on fraud and not constructive trust, and therefore the right of the party defrauded is not affected by lapse of time, or, generally speaking, by anything done or omitted to be done so long as he remains without any fault of his own in ignorance of the fraud that has been committed. Id.

(b) Following Specific Property into Hands of.

1. A trustee, in violation of his duty, lent the trust money to F., upon the security of judgment; F. at the time not being aware that it was trust money. Subsequently F. was informed that it was trust money, and recognised and acknowledged the title of the trustee thereto:—Held, that from the time he had notice of the trusts, F. was a trustee of the money, and as such liable for the safety of it. Sheridan v. Joyce, 1 J. & L. 401; 7 Ir. Eq. R. 115.

2. A., the trustee of a fund settled on B., a married woman, to her separate use, with a restraint against anticipation, lent the same to C., D., & Co., who were merchants, but not ordinary bankers, and who had actual notice of the nature of the trusts to which the fund was liable. C., D., & Co. entered the transaction in their ledger and balance book, as an account opened with B., and down to the time of their bankruptcy regularly paid the interest of the fund to her, during A.'s lifetime, through him, but, after his death, directly to her. C., D., & Co. became bankrupts:—Held, that they had made themselves in fact direct trustees of, and were jointly and severally liable to restore, the trust fund. Eap. Watson, Re Acraman, 7 Jur. 1001.

3. A trustee de facto held liable to account as a trustee de jure. Hennessy v. Bray, 33 Beav. 96.

The estate of a tenant for life was liable to forfeiture on his mortgaging it. He mortgaged it to A. unknown to the parties taking under the forfeiture:—Held, that A. was liable to account to them for the rents, at all events from the filing of the bill, and beyond that, from the time he had notice of the trusts creating the forfeiture. Id.

4. Courts of equity will not lend their assistance to enforce the specific performance of ordinary contracts for the sale and purchase of chattels, unless there be something very special in the nature of the contract. On the other hand, if a trust be created, the circumstance that the subject matter is a personal chattel will not prevent this Court from enforcing the due execution of that trust. Poolley v. Budd, 14 Beav. 34.

Trusts may be constituted not merely by direct declaration of trust, but also by the constructive operation of the consequences flowing from the acts of parties. Thus equity will enforce the execution of a trust, not only against the trustees themselves, but against all persons who obtain possession of the property affected by the trust, provided they had notice of it. Id.

A., who sold 500 tons of iron, stacked on his wharf, to B., in consideration of a bill accepted by a third party, gave an acknowledgment engaging to deliver it to the bearer, he (A.) "having been paid for the same." B. mortgaged the iron, and the bill having been dishonoured, A. refused to deliver the iron.

The mortgagee proceeded in equity to make A. responsible for the iron:—Held, that A. had no ownership or property in the iron so stacked, and was a trustee, and therefore a demurrer for want of equity was overruled. Id.

5. Where by one deed of settlement, a fund and estates of the wife were settled to her for life, remainder in trust for the children of the marriage, and by another deed the husband settled a rent charge on his estates in trust for the wife for life; she, after her husband's death, obtained, by fraud and concealment of the settlement, the fund to be transferred to her, and assigned her life interest in her estates to a party with notice of the fraud:—Held, that the rents of her estates and the rent charge were liable to be applied in replacing the fund, and a receiver appointed. Woodyatt v. Gresley, 8 Sim. 180.

6. In March 1840 A., and B., a solicitor at Carmarthen, raised 2,500*l.* by sale of a sum of stock, of which they were trustees, with the intention of lending it on mortgage to C., who resided at Carmarthen, but spent part of the year in London. A. enabled B. to receive the 2,500*l.* for the purpose of the loan, and intrusted him with the conduct of the transaction. Accordingly B. prepared the mortgage deed; and on the 29th May 1840 through his London agents, and by arrangement between him and C.'s solicitor, procured C. (who knew that the money was in B.'s hands) to execute it, and to sign a receipt on the back of it for the 2,500*l.* The agents took the deed away with them, and shortly afterwards procured A. to execute it, and then sent it to B. It having been arranged between B. and C. that the mortgage money should be paid into the Carmarthen Bank to C.'s credit, B., on the 31st May, paid 513*l.*, and, on the 31st October, 1050*l.* accordingly, in part of the 2,500*l.* In November he died insolvent:—Held, that, as between A. and C., A. was to be treated as mortgagee for the whole 2,500*l.* West v. Jones, 1 Sim., N. S., 205; 20 L. J., N. S., Ch., 362.

7. A trust fund of 1,500*l.* created under marriage settlement, by which certain lands were limited to husband for life, remainder to first and other sons in tail, with power to husband of leasing for forty-one years or three lives at best rent, was directed by deed to be conveyed, etc., to same uses, etc., and in meantime, trustees, with the consent of husband, were empowered to lend money on certain security; husband purchased leasehold for 8,911*l.* to which he took the assignment to himself alone, and obtained purchase money out of trust fund to amount of 11,696*l.*, taking security for 1,400*l.* less than 11,696*l.*; husband granted lease at great undervalue for his own term to attorney who managed the purchase, which purchase proved very beneficial:—Held, that the first son of marriage was entitled to follow that part of trust fund which had been misapplied, and to have benefit of purchase, and to have lands sold discharged of lease to attorney, whose equity against him (the son) as personal representative of father was barred by notice of settlement and breach of trust. Phayre v. Perce, 3 Dow 116; 1 Bl. N. S. 129, 594.

A person who has notice cannot avail himself of an act of trustees in breach of their trust. Ib.

1. M. devised estates to trustees, for his daughter, an infant, with power to the trustees to demise and lease the same for any term not exceeding twenty-one years, "at the best yearly rent that could be gotten for the same, without taking any fine or premium, with power to appoint new trustees. In pursuance of this power the trustees, some time afterwards, appointed R. sole trustee, and conveyed to him the devised estate upon the trusts and subject to the powers expressed and declared by the will of M., and for "no other trust, intent, or purpose whatsoever." By an indenture of lease between R. and B., certain part of the premises said to be described in and devised by the will of M., was demised by R. to B. for twenty-one years, in consideration of the yearly rent of 1,100*l.*, the first five years of which rent was to be paid in advance, in a manner therein provided, and the remainder after the expiration of such five years, by equal quarterly payments:—Held, first, that enough appeared from the evidence to fix B., the lessee, with notice of the trustees' title. Booth v. A'Beckett, 1 Moo. P. C., N. S., 201.

Held, secondly, that as the granting of such a lease was a breach of the trusts of the will of M., the same ought to be declared void and set aside, and the premises assigned to the persons to be appointed trustees of the will of M. Ib.

2. Trust moneys standing in the names of three trustees were invested in railway debentures under the authority of the trust deed. These debentures were subsequently transferred to a purchaser for value by one of the three trustees, who forged the signatures of his co-trustees to the instrument purporting to effect the transfer, and absconded with the proceeds:—Held, that the purchaser who had taken the transfer with notice of the trust, and without inquiry into the circumstances attending the alleged signatures, could not insist upon his purchase as against the co-trustees, who were entitled to have such forged transfer cancelled. Cottam v. Eastern Counties Railway Co., 1 John. & H. 243; 6 Jur., N. S., 1367; 9 W. R. 94; 3 L. T., N. S., 465.

3. A., one of three sureties, who had become bound to the extent of 2,000*l.* to a corporation for the due accounting of the office of its treasurer by B., received formal notice from the corporation that B. was a defaulter, and on the next day took from B. a deposit note of a bank for 2,300*l.*, which had been placed in the bank by B., one month previously, in the name of his daughter. On a bill filed by the corporation against B., who had absconded, and the three sureties, to make good the amount found due by B., ultra the 2,300*l.*:—Held, establishing the liability of the trustees, that the circumstances under which A. received the 2,300*l.*, were such as ought to have induced him to make inquiry, and that, having neglected to do so, he was bound to restore that amount, with interest after the rate of 5*l.* per cent. Berwick-upon-Tweed (Mayor) v. Murray or Dobie, 7 De G. M. & G. 497; 3 Jur., N. S., 847; 26 L. J., Ch., 201.

4. Where the produce of a specific legacy misapplied by A., an administrator, being traced into post obit securities given by B. to

C.:—Held, that the cestui que trust was entitled to a charge on the securities. Hartford v. Lloyd, 20 Beav. 310.

A specific legacy of 6,000*l.* consols, bequeathed to the plaintiff, was unnecessarily and improperly sold out by the administrator, A., with the aid of B., and the produce carried partly to the banking account of A., and the remainder to that of B. A series of shifting of cheques and transfer of moneys took place, but the sum of 2,908*l.* was traced to B. About this time, B. laid out moneys in the purchase of a post obit security; and though the trust moneys could not be distinctly traced into the securities, yet the Court held, from the suspicious character of the transactions, that such was the just inference, so far as to throw on the other side the onus of disproving it; and this not having been done:—Held, that the plaintiff had a charge on the securities for the 2,908*l.* and interest. Ib.

In addition to this, B. had sold and transferred the securities to C., in consideration of a debt then owing. C. had notice that the money by which the securities had been obtained had been derived from A., though C. had no notice of the breach of trust:—Held, that C. could not set up an adverse title against A., and, a fortiori, that C. could not do so against the plaintiffs (A.'s) cestui que trust. Ib.

5. A., one of three trustees, executed an assignment of leasehold property held jointly by them, to a purchaser, and forged the signatures of his co-trustees, and also the requisite assent of the cestui que trust to the sale. A. was a solicitor, and acted as such on behalf of the purchaser:—Held, that the circumstances attending the transaction were sufficient to affect the purchaser with notice of some trust, if not the actual nature of it; and that he had constructive notice of the trust through the knowledge of A., his solicitor. Boursot v. Savage, 2 L. R., Eq., 134; 14 W. R. 564; 14 L. T., N. S., 299.

Held, also, that the execution by one of the three joint tenants was a valid assignment of the legal interest in one-third to the purchaser, but that the actual and constructive notice of the trust disentitled him to the beneficial interest, and reconveyance was ordered. Ib.

6. The trustee of stock, being beneficially entitled to one moiety undivided, assigned his interest to a mortgagee, who placed a distringas on the moiety. The trustee afterwards sold out a moiety and absconded. On a bill by the cestui que trust of a moiety:—Held, that he was entitled to the remaining moiety, but the Court gave the mortgagee his costs. Wilkins v. Sibley, 4 Giff. 442.

J. and F. were trustees under a marriage settlement of 2,700*l.* consols, in trust for D. and his wife, but to which they ultimately became entitled beneficially. J. bequeathed his interest in the fund to the plaintiffs, in trust for his children. F., on the death of D.'s wife in 1848, sold out a moiety of the fund, and divided the proceeds between himself and the plaintiffs. The other moiety was left standing in his name. In 1851 F. assigned a moiety of the remaining fund to S., by way of mortgage, who caused a distringas to be placed on it. In July 1852 F., without the knowledge of S., sold out a moiety of the fund, appropriated the proceeds to his own use, and absconded. In 1854 new trustees (S. being one) were appointed, and the fund then standing in their names was paid into court. On the death of D., in 1860, the plaintiffs claimed the remaining fund:—Held, that they were entitled to it as against S. (who also claimed it in right of F.), but, that as it was by S.'s diligence that the fund in court had been preserved, he was relieved from paying the costs of the suit. S. C. 9 Jur., N. S., 888; 11 W. R. 897; 8 L. T., N. S., 760.

1. In 1830 a settlement of certain property held under renewable leases, was made in favour of A. In 1831 A., being about to marry, made a settlement of this property for the uses of the marriage. The deed of 1830 was not registered. The settlement of 1831 was registered. In 1840 A., being in actual possession, sold to B., and B., who had no actual notice of the settlement of 1831, entered into possession, and made alterations in the premises. After the death of A., his son, who was entitled under the settlement of 1831, filed a bill against B. to set aside the sale, for an account and for waste:—Held, that it was not necessary to register the deed of 1830; that the registered settlement of 1831 prevailed against the bonâ fide purchase of B., and that the Court below had properly declared him to stand possessed of the leases as a trustee for the parties beneficially interested under that settlement. But held also, that he was entitled to indemnity against the covenantors in the leases which he was thus declared to hold as trustee; that an inquiry ought to be made as to alleged improvements and as to alleged waste; and that he was entitled to be allowed the benefits of these improvements; and that, being a bonâ fide purchaser, without misconduct, he ought not to be charged with costs. Mill v. Hill, 3 H. L. Ca. 828.

2. The manager of a benefit building society established under 6 & 7 Will. 4, c. 32, deposited, in pursuance of a resolution passed by the directors but contrary to the provisions of the Act and the rules of the society, money of the society with a finance company of which he was also manager. The company gave a cheque to the manager for the repayment of the money to the building society, but he did not pay over the money to the society:—Held, that the money was trust money improperly deposited with the finance company, that the giving the cheque to the manager was no discharge to the company, nor repayment to the building society, and that, therefore, the trust money being still in the hands of the finance company, a suit would lie on behalf of the real owners to recover it, and that without making the directors of the building society parties to it. Hardy v. Metropolitan Land & Finance Co., 41 L. J., Ch., 257; 7 L. R., Ch., 427; 20 W. R. 425; 26 L. T., N. S., 407.

3. Where trust moneys are improperly advanced to traders for the purposes of their trade, they knowing them to be trust moneys, the Court will not follow the moneys into the hands of the traders, so as to affect them with the consequences of a breach of trust; and where moneys so lent produced a larger rate of interest to the tenant for life than if invested in the funds, the Court will not, in favour of the persons entitled in remainder, make the trustees liable for the surplus, or hold that such surplus ought to have been converted into capital. Stroud v. Gwyer, 6 Jur., N. S., 719; 28 Beav. 130.

VII. OTHER BREACHES OF TRUST.

4. By indenture of the 3rd March 1832, executed upon the marriage of J. H. and E. R., the sum of 400*l.*, the fortune of E. R., the intended wife, was assigned to the trustees, D. B. and C. B., upon trust, that they should invest the same, as soon as conveniently might be, either in some public bank, stocks, or fund, or else upon one or more good and sufficient securities, either real or personal, and in such manner as they, the said trustees, should in their discretion think fit. The money was paid to one of the trustees, C. B., and, shortly after the execution of the settlement, the trust fund was lent by the same trustee to Sir J. C., upon the security of his bond to both trustees, with warrant of attorney collateral. During the lifetime of Sir J. C. the interest was regularly paid; but upon his death, which was in 1835, the security proved worthless, and the trust fund was lost. In 1842 D. B. filed the present bill against his co-trustee, C. B., and J. H., and his wife, seeking a declaration that the trustee, C. B., was responsible for the breach of trust, and praying that he might be ordered to bring in said sum of 400*l.*, and invest same upon the trusts of the settlement. It appeared that J. H., the husband, was fully aware of the loan, and had concurred in it; but that the plaintiff, though not active in the breach of trust, was acquainted with all the circumstances of the affair shortly after its occurrence. E. H., the wife, was not in any manner implicated in the transaction:—Held, that though the conduct of the defendant, C. B., was free from any moral blame, yet that he was responsible for the consequences of the breach of trust, and was therefore bound to bring in sufficient funds to secure the wife in the event of her surviving her husband. Buckley v. Buckley, Dr. 375.

5. A trustee, having power to vary trust funds, admitted that he had sold part of the funds, but did not show how the produce had been invested:—Held, on such an admission, that he was liable to make good the fund. Meyer v. Montrieux, 5 Beav. 146; 11 L. J., N. S., Ch., 398.

6. Where trustees of lands held subject to a mortgage, by a deed conveyed their estate therein to other persons, and the mortgagee filed a bill against them and others to foreclose, alleging that he was advised that the deed was a breach of trust, to which the trustees demurred, the demurrer was allowed with costs. Tryon v. Westminster Improvement Commissioners, 2 Giff. 434.

7. Certain policies of insurance effected by a father on his life, as a provision for his daughters, were assigned to a trustee upon trust for such of the daughters as the father should appoint, and certain estates were demised to the same trustee upon trust, out of the rents and profits, to secure the payment of the premiums. The trustee advanced some sums of money in payment of the premiums, and the father appointed the bonuses which had accrued upon the policies to three of his daughters, and the three daughters soon afterwards authorised the trustee to receive the sum paid by the office for the bonuses, and invest part thereof as a fund to keep down the premiums, and a part of the sum was applied in satisfaction of the arrears of such premiums. A subsequent appointment was made in favour of the other daughters, of the residue of the sums to be received on the policies, and which was intended to equalise the shares:—Held, that the first appointment was a fraud upon the power, its immediate object being to relieve the father, and its necessary consequence to relax the diligence of the trustee in enforcing the right of the daughters against the father; and that the application of the trust funds in pursuance of the appointment by the trustee, who knew that the appointment was fraudulent, was a breach of trust for which he was responsible to the objects of the power. Harrison v. Randall, 9 Hare 397; 21 L. J., N. S., Ch., 294; 16 Jur. 72.

1. Bequest of consols to A. B., a feme covert, to be transferred to her in her own name, and the interest to be for her separate use, and the principal to remain in trust of the executors till the youngest of her children attained twenty-one, when the principal was to be her own; or, in case of her demise, it was to devolve to her husband. The trustees, on the death of the testatrix, transferred the fund to A. B.; she and her husband afterwards sold it out, and they both signed the transfer:—Held, that a breach of trust had been committed, but that A. B. had made a valid disposition of the dividends which might accrue previously to her youngest child, born after the death of the testatrix, attaining twenty-one. Crosby v. Church, 3 Beav. 485; 10 L. J., N. S., Ch., 212; 4 Jur. 50.

2. Moneys secured by judgments, the property of the wife, were by ante-nuptial settlement assigned to trustees upon trust for her during her life, and in case there should be issue of the marriage, upon certain trusts for their benefit, and if no issue, upon trust to permit the wife to dispose of the moneys to such persons as she, whether sole or married, by any deed or writing, with or without power of revocation, to be by her sealed and delivered in the presence of or attested by two or more witnesses, should appoint, or in default of appointment, gift, or devise, to her next-of-kin, under the Statute of Distributions. There was no issue of the marriage. The surviving trustee received a portion of the moneys secured by the judgments, and paid a part thereof to the husband during his lifetime, and the remaining part to the wife after his death. No appointment by deed or writing was ever executed by the wife:—Held, that the wife took only a life interest, with the power of appointment, and as she had not duly executed the power, the payments to her and her husband were invalid, and accordingly the trustee was bound to replace the fund for the benefit of the next-of-kin of the wife. Reid v. Thompson, 2 Ir. Ch. R. 26.

3. Where, on marriage, a settlement is made of the wife's property to herself for life, to her separate use, with remainder as she should appoint, by any writing signed by her, and attested by two witnesses, and for default of appointment to the children of the marriage, and the trustees part with the trust fund upon the joint application of the husband and wife, by letter, not attested by any witness, the trustees, after the death of the wife, must make good the trust fund for the children. Hopkins v. Myall, 2 Russ. & M. 86.

4. A testator bequeathed certain leaseholds to his son, whom he also appointed his executor, with directions to sell, and reimburse himself a debt, etc., due to him from the testator, and to stand possessed of the surplus, if any, upon the trusts of the will. The son never proved the will, but took possession of the leaseholds in satisfaction of his debt, and afterwards bequeathed them to the plaintiff. Upon a bill filed by the latter twenty years after the death of the elder testator, to recover the said leaseholds:—Held, that the trusts of the will must be performed, and the leaseholds sold, and accounts taken; the balance, if any, to be made good out of the son's estate. Smith v. Bakes, 20 Beav. 563.

5. A testator directed his trustees to invest a sufficient sum on Government or real securities or railway stock to produce an annuity of 100*l.* a year, and after the death of the annuitant to call in and divide the principal among his brothers then living, or the children of such as should be then dead. The testator left three brothers; and the trustees (of whom the annuitant was one) provided for the annuity in part by appropriating a railway debenture for 1,500*l.*, which bore interest at first at 5*l.* per cent., and afterwards at 4*l.* per cent., and in part by interest paid by one of the brothers upon a loan to him of moneys of the testator. A child of another brother who was dead, having filed a bill, during the annuitant's life, against the surviving trustees, to have a sufficient fund properly invested:—Held, that he was entitled to an inquiry as to what sum should have been invested at the end of a year from the testator's death to meet the annuity, and to a declaration that the trustees were liable to make good the sum so ascertained. Starkey v. Dyson, 24 W. R. 37.

6. A fund was vested in trustees for A. for life, remainder for B. for life, remainder for such persons as A. should by will appoint. A. appointed that certain legacies should be paid out of the fund after B.'s death, and named B. her executor. B. proved the will, and the trustees then handed over the whole fund to B., who spent it and died insolvent. On a bill by the legatees against the original trustees:—Held, that they were discharged by the payment to A.'s executor. Hayes v. Oatley, 41 L. J., Ch., 610; 14 L. R., Eq., 1; 26 L. T., N. S., 26.

7. A trustee gave the estate in a mortgage in trust for A. absolutely, executed a reconveyance, and signed a receipt for the mortgage money, and handed it to one of A.'s executors, who was also his own solicitor, and who afterwards misapplied the money:—Held, that the money having got into the hands of the executor, the trustee was not liable. Waugh v. Wyche, 2 W. R. 485; 2 Drew. 318; 23 L. J., Ch., 833.

VIII. WHEN IT AMOUNTS TO A SPECIALTY DEBT.

1. Breach of trust can fail only on the personal estate of a trustee. Vernon v. Vandry, 2 Atk. 119.

2. A. and B. are trustees under a deed, by which neither of them is to answer for the other; A. receives a sum of money under the trust, and gives a writing under hand and seal acknowledging it, and that B. had received no part of it; A. never placed out the money, and dies; this writing is a specialty and good against the executor, but not against the heir of A., he not being mentioned in it. Gifford v. Manley, Forrest. 109.

3. A cestui que trust, claiming compensation for a breach of trust against the representatives of the trustee, can only come in as a simple contract creditor. Kearnan v. Fitzsimon, 3 Ridgw. P. C. 1.

4. The money due in respect of a breach of trust, where the trust is created by instrument under seal, is a specialty debt. Wood v. Hardisty, 2 Colly. 542; 15 L. J., N. S., Ch., 328.

5. N., reciting that he was entitled to a simple contract debt due to him by his sons, A., B., C., and D., who were partners in trade, assigned it to A. and B. upon trust, if they should think fit to call in the same, to invest it on good and solvent security, and hold same upon certain trusts. A. and B. sealed and delivered the deed, and afterwards misapplied the trust moneys:—Held, that the breach of trust was a debt of A. and B. by specialty, not binding their heirs. Cumming v. Cumming, 3 J. & L. 64; 8 Ir. Eq. R. 723.

6. By deed between A. and B., it was agreed that a sum in the hands of A., but belonging to B., should be laid out in the funds in A.'s name, and in trust for B. A. died, never having vested the money:—Held, that B. was a specialty creditor of A. for the amount. Mavor v. Davenport, 2 Sim. 227.

7. A. and B., solicitors, in partnership, jointly attended to the management of certain settled funds, of which A. and E. were trustees, who had executed the settlement. E. was the client of A., who represented to E. that he had a good mortgage security on which to invest a portion of the trust moneys; and E., accordingly, assented to his making such investment. A. did not, however, invest the money on the mortgage, but paid it into the bank of his firm, to their partnership account there; the proceeds being applied, with the knowledge of B., to the use of the firm. A. died in insolvent circumstances, leaving B. him surviving:—Held, that B. was personally liable to E. for the money; and that E. was pro tanto a specialty creditor of A.'s estate. Eager v. Barnes, 7 L. T., N. S., 408; 31 Beav. 579.

8. The creditors of a bankrupt appoint the Bank of England as the place where the estate shall be deposited. A dividend is declared; two of three assignees sign drafts for the dividends, which they forward to the other assignee for his signature; he also signs them, and receives the money, which he applies to his own purposes. Upon his death a creditor's suit is instituted for the administration of the assets:—Held, first, that under the covenant which the assignees entered into with the commissioners, the misapplied dividends were a special contract debt due from the estate of the assignee who had misapplied them to the estate of the bankrupt; secondly, that the estate of the assignee was liable, under 49 Geo. 3, c. 121, s. 4, to pay 20 per cent. upon the funds misapplied; thirdly, that the 20 per cent. was not a specialty, but a simple contract debt; fourthly, that the 20 per cent. was part of the general estate of the bankrupt, and did not belong to the creditors entitled to the misapplied dividends. Wackerbarth v. Powell, Buck 495, in part reversed on appeal, 2 G. & J. 151.

9. Under the usual decree, in a creditors' suit, the Master has no jurisdiction to enter a claim founded on an alleged breach of trust committed by the testator, by investing the trust funds on improper securities. Costerton v. Costerton, 2 Keen 774; 7 L. J., N. S., Ch., 302.

10. By marriage settlement a sum of 5,000*l.* was vested in trust to permit the wife, in case she should survive her husband, to receive the interest of during her life; and in case there should be no issue of the marriage, in trust for the husband absolutely, with power to the trustees, with the consent of the husband and wife, to invest the money in Government or on real security. The money was afterwards, with the consent of the husband and wife, lent on mortgage. The husband died without issue; and by his will bequeathed his interest in the 5,000*l.* to A. upon certain trusts, and appointed him his executor. The wife afterwards marries B., and upon her marriage the interest of the 5,000*l.* was assigned to A. upon trust to pay the yearly interest on the 5,000*l.* to the wife for life; and A. covenanted with the wife that he, his executors, etc., would stand possessed of the premises assigned to him upon the trusts therein mentioned. The 5,000*l.* was paid to A. out of the produce of a sale had in a suit in which he was a defendant; and A. represented to B.'s wife that he had invested the money upon Government security; and paid her interest according to the rate it would have borne if it had been so invested. The money was not, in fact, so invested, but was applied by A. to his own use:—Held, in a suit for the administration of A.'s assets, that the new trustee of B.'s last marriage settlement was entitled to rank as a specialty creditor for the difference between the amount of the interest actually paid by A., and interest upon the 5,000*l.*, calculated at 6 per cent.; and also (there being a deficiency of the assets to pay the 5,000*l.*, which was a debt by simple contract) as a specialty creditor for any future deficiency in the interest, calculated at 6 per cent. Jameson v. Farver, 3 Ir. Eq. R. 346.

By marriage articles, the intended husband covenanted with the trustees, that a certain sum of money should be vested in the trustees, and the survivor of them, and the executors and administrators of such survivor for ever, upon the trusts specified in the articles. The marriage was celebrated, and the husband, with the assent of the trustees, obtained possession of the money:—Held, in a suit for the administration of the assets of the husband, that the trustees were entitled to rank as specialty creditors of the husband, in respect of that sum of money. Id.

11. Where a bill was filed against A. and B., on an admitted breach of trust by B., and the accounts prayed to be taken and the real estate of B. applied in payment of the plaintiff's claim and the other creditors; afterwards a creditor's suit was instituted against the representatives of B., and the usual decree made; the plaintiffs in the first suit claimed priority over the plaintiffs in the second suit, as to the fund in court, but held that after the payment of costs in the first suit, the fund was to be applied amongst all the creditors of B. Smith v. Birch, 3 Beav. 10; 9 L. J., N. S., Ch., 394; 4 Jur. 670.

1. A deed, appointing new trustees, recited, that they had agreed to become trustees, and then assigned the trust premises to them to hold on the trusts of the original deed. There was no express agreement or declaration that they would execute the trusts:—Held, that a debt created by a breach of trust, was not a specialty debt. Wynoh v. Grant, 2 Drew. 312; 23 L. J., Ch., 834; 2 Eq. Rep. 1135.

J. G. and W. G. are appointed as new trustees of a settlement, and commit a breach of trust by investing the fund on a bad security, so that it is lost. J. G. dies, and W. G. becomes bankrupt. On bill filed for an account, and decree made declaring that such dealing was a breach of trust, and on the question whether it did not constitute a specialty debt:—Held, that it constituted a simple contract debt only, and the acceptance of the trusteeship could not be held a covenant and constituting a specialty debt. S. C. 2 W. R. 486.

2. A. & B. were trustees of a settlement, and a breach of trust was committed, B. being the guilty party. The trust fund was ultimately restored, and A.'s costs were directed to be paid out of B.'s estate:—Held, that these costs were not a specialty debt, as against B.'s estate. Lookhart v. Reilly, 27 L. J., Ch., 54; 1 De G. & J. 464.

A. paid a sum on account of his costs, after the 19 & 20 Vict., c. 97, and it was held that the sum was paid in the character of surety, and therefore that, under the 5th section, he was entitled to claim as a specialty creditor on account of it. Ib.

Held, also, that the Mercantile Law Amendment Act had a retrospective operation so as to be applicable to obligations incurred prior to the passing of the Act, and applied to that portion of the costs of A. which he had paid since the passing of the Act. Ib.

3. A. covenants under hand and seal to settle a sum of stock upon certain trusts, and subsequently appropriates this sum to his own use:—Held, that the violation of the obligation so entered into constituted a debt by specialty in favour of the trustees against the assets of A. Re Hankinworth, Lovell v. Sherrin, 2 W. R. 34; 2 Eq. Rep. 329.

4. R. having certain property conveyed to him upon trust, by three deeds, two of which he executed and one of which he did not execute, but possessed the estate conveyed and committed breaches of trust under all three, died, and two suits were instituted, but one only prosecuted, and five questions arose under it:—1. Whether the plaintiff as a creditor under the deed not executed by R. was a creditor by specialty? 2. Whether under the second deed certain creditors were by specialty? 3. Whether a bond creditor of R. by which his heirs were expressed to be bound, was to take precedence of all on the real estate?

4. Whether the liability of R. under the second deed survived to his co-trustee? and 5. How the costs should be paid:—Held, that the plaintiff was a simple contract creditor, those under the other deeds specialty creditors, and the obligee in the bond entitled to precedence on the real estate; that the liability of R. did not survive; and costs of obligee out of the estate, of plaintiff out of the personality. Jenkins v. Robertson, 1 W. R. 298; 1 Eq. Rep. 123.

The words "it is declared" are sufficient to create a contract between the trustee and cestui que trust. Ib.

5. Trust property being vested in three trustees, a part of which is outstanding upon mortgage, the mortgage is called in, the money received by one, and applied to his own use. He lives many years, and his executors, after his death, continue to pay the interest. His estate is insufficient even to pay specialty debts; and the Master, in a suit in which his estate is administered, finds that the money so misapplied is a specialty debt due to the representatives of the surviving co-trustee. The trust deed which was executed by the trustees contained the words, "And it is hereby declared and agreed between and by all the said parties hereto," that the property should be held upon certain trusts. Exceptions are taken to the Master's finding, for that he should have found that there was no debt, or if there was, that it was not a specialty debt:—Held, that the trust deed constituted a covenant, being under hand and seal, and a contract between all the parties to it; and there being a clear right to sue at law, this Court, in declaring that there was a covenant, could also allow such money so received and misapplied as a specialty debt due from the estate of the deceased trustee, who received the money, to the estate of his surviving co-trustee. The breach of trust, if any, was not in allowing the receipt of the money, but in the misapplication of it. Exceptions overruled with costs. Alexander v. Foster, 5 W. R. 33.

6. A breach of trust will constitute merely a simple contract debt, unless there is something in the creation of the trust to raise a liability on covenant against the trustee. Adey v. Arnold, 2 De G. M. & G. 482; 16 Jur. 1123.

By deed of indorsement under seal, appointing new trustees, and executed by them, a trust fund was assigned to the new trustees, "to hold unto them, their executors, administrators, and assigns, as their own money, property, and effects, but nevertheless upon the trusts and for the ends, intents, and purposes declared by the within indenture;" but there was no declaration of trust by the trustees:—Held, that a loss which occurred by a breach of trust did not constitute a specialty debt. Ib.

Semble, a declaration by trustees in a deed executed by them, that they will apply a trust fund in a particular manner, will be construed to amount to a covenant; and any loss to the trust fund arising from a breach of trust will constitute a specialty debt. Ib.

7. A trustee under a deed, the terms of which would amount to the creation of a contract, is not a specialty debtor if he has not executed the deed, although he has acted under it. Richardson v. Jenkins, 1 Drew. 477; 17 Jur. 446; 22 L. J., Ch., 874.

The words "covenant or agree" are not necessary in a trust deed to constitute a specialty contract. A declaration by the trustee that he will stand possessed on certain trusts, etc., is sufficient. Id.

1. By a decree, the estates of two deceased trustees were declared severally liable to replace a fund. The representatives of one only admitted assets, and the decree directed payment by them, and an account of the other. The whole being paid by the former:—Held, that their right to contribution against the estate of the latter constituted a mere simple contract debt, although as against both estates the demand was a specialty debt. Priestman v. Tindall, 24 Beav. 244.

2. A trustee executed a deed acknowledging that he had trust money in his hands, and that he intended to secure it on property in which he had a reversionary interest. The deed contained no covenant to pay the money:—Held, that having regard to the absence of a covenant in the deed to repay the debt, and to the fact of the existence of an antecedent liability on the part of the trustee to pay, the debt had not been converted by the deed into a specialty debt. Brook v. Harwood, 37 L. J., Ch., 209; 3 L. R., Ch., 225; 16 W. R. 410; 18 L. T., N. S., 622.

3. Where a trustee, by deed under his hand and seal, accepted the trusts of a will, and afterwards committed a breach of trust, and died insolvent:—Held, that the cestuis que trustent were not entitled to rank as specialty creditors in the administration of his assets. Holland v. Holland, 38 L. J., Ch., 398; 4 L. R., Ch., 449; 17 W. R. 657.

4. A defaulting trustee, under a will, executed a deed under seal, whereby, after reciting that he held in his hands trust moneys to a certain amount, which he proposed to secure by a mortgage on his own estate, he conveyed certain property to the cestuis que trustent by way of mortgage. The deed contained a proviso for redemption and a power of sale, but no covenant to pay the mortgage debt or interest. The mortgaged estate was insufficient to cover the debt:—Held, that the deed did not convert the debt into a specialty debt. Isaacson v. Harwood, 3 L. R., Ch., 225; 37 L. J., Ch., 209.

IX. DELAY OR ACQUIESCENCE. EFFECT.

5. Trustee not protected by acquiescence of the cestui que trust, not duly informed. Ryder v. Bickerton, 3 Swan. 81.

6. Trustees lending money on personal security, is not of itself such gross neglect as to amount to a breach of trust, and the legatee (and afterwards his assignee) having acquiesced in such loan a bill to charge the trustees was dismissed. Harden v. Parsons, 1 Eden 145.

7. Devisees in trust to sell for payment of debts, assign to the son of the devisor; the creditors receive the interest from him for eleven years, and agree with him for an increase of interest on their debts; the original trustees continue liable. Hardwick v. Mynud, 1 Anstr. 110.

8. Trustees having committed breach of trust by granting longer leases than they had power by deed to do; the fact of the cestuis que trustent receiving rent from the lessees in ignorance of the invalidity of their leases, did not operate as a new agreement. But the cestuis que trustent having neglected to look into their rights, no account directed beyond filing the bill, and no costs given to the plaintiff. Bones v. East London Water Works, 3 Madd. 375.

9. A cestuique trust concurring or acquiescing in breach of trust:—Held, not entitled to relief; subject to inquiry into circumstances which induced concurrence or acquiescence. Walker v. Symonds, 3 Swan. 64.

10. On the hearing of a cause, commenced in 1888, to charge a trustee with the loss occasioned by the bankruptcy of his co-trustee, whom, ten years before, he had permitted to acquire sole possession of the trust fund, the Court not being satisfied that all the circumstances as to the fact and time of cestui que trust's knowledge of the breach of trust were in evidence, directed an inquiry as to that fact, with liberty to either party to examine the co-trustee. Broadhurst v. Balguy, 1 Y. & Coll. C. C. 16.

11. Where property has been administered and applied without complaint according to an uniform course of management for a long series of years, the Court will not, by an interlocutory order, disturb the possession, upon the ground that such application is a breach of trust, unless it is perfectly clear that the party in whom the property is vested is a mere naked trustee, and has not, even to a limited extent, any of the rights or interests of an owner. A motion for the appointment of a receiver of the estates vested in the Irish Society, at the instance of one of the London companies claiming a beneficial interest in the income of the estates, was therefore refused. Skinner's Co. v. Irish Society, 1 Myl. & C. 162.

12. Construction of a clause in a marriage settlement. A court of equity will not direct payments made under a mistaken construction of a doubtful clause in a settlement, to be refunded after many years of acquiescence by all parties and after the death of one of the authors of the settlement, especially where subsequent family arrangements have proceeded on the footing of that construction. Clifton v. Cockburn, 3 Myl. & K. 76.

13. If a person interested under a will files a bill for an account against the executors, not seeking to charge them for wilful default, and dies pending the suit, his personal representative cannot charge them by bill of revivor and supplement, if the acts complained of were known to the deceased plaintiff. Garrett v. Noble, 6 Sim. 504; 3 L. J., N. S., Ch., 159.

14. S. deposited 900*l.* in a scrivener's hands, who without his consent laid it out on a defective mortgage; S. received the interest for many years, and noticed the mortgage in his receipts; decreed, he shall bear the loss. Clark v. Perrier, 2 Freem. 48.

15. A cestui que trust, discovering a breach of trust, but not receiving any benefit from it, or conniving in it for any purpose, and not recognising the transaction, is not precluded from complaining of it merely on the ground that he abstained from making such complaint until long after he first knew of it. Phillipson v.

Gatty, 7 Hare 516; 13 Jur. 318. Affirmed 2 H. & Tw. 459.

Where stock stood invested in trust, for the mother for life, with remainder to her son and daughter and their children, the daughter knew of an application by the son for a loan from the trustees of part of the trust moneys, upon his personal security, and that the trustees were willing to make the loan, with the consent of her mother, the tenant for life, and that the loan was, in fact, afterwards made. The daughter objected to the loan in her communications with her mother, but did not otherwise oppose it, and had not any communication with the trustees on the subject:—Held, that this was not such acquiescence on the part of the daughter to the loan as to preclude her from charging the trustees with the breach of trust, in a suit instituted seven years after the transaction took place; held, also, that the daughter was not precluded from so charging the trustees, by the fact that she knew that the mother had (untruly) stated to her son that she (the daughter) had consented to the loan, such statement of the daughter's consent never having been communicated to the trustees, or constituted any part of the sanction or authority under which they acted. Ib.

It was not necessary to decide the simple case, whether, if the daughter had permitted the son, in the belief that the daughter assented to it, to obtain the loan from the trustees, they could have availed themselves of any defence to the suit which the son might have as against the daughter; for, in this case, the letters of the son to the mother, requesting the loan, and upon which the mother's consent was given, proposed not to affect the daughter's rights as against the trustees. Ib.

1. Where a party at the time of the misapplication of a trust fund by the trustee was cognisant of the fact, but had then no right or interest whatever to the fund, and afterwards acquired such right as administrator to the cestui que trust:—Held, that his rights as administrator were not affected by such previous knowledge on the ground of acquiescence. Where, therefore, the trustee in such a case became bankrupt after committing a breach of trust, the administrator of the cestui que trust was not prevented from proving for the amount of the interest on the trust fund which accrued due in the lifetime of the cestui que trust. Esop. Smith, Re Clark, 2 M. D. & De G. 113.

2. The plaintiff, deliberately and with full notice, accepted the benefits under his mother's will, which prohibited him from setting up any claim on account of any error, irregularity, or impropriety in the execution of the trusts of her father's will:—Held, that he could not maintain a suit against the executor of the father's will, to make him accountable for the profits made by the employment of part of the trust funds in his business. Egg v. Dewey, 10 B. 444; 16 L. J., N. S., Ch., 409; 11 Jur. 1023.

3. Half of a trust fund, held on the trusts of a settlement of 1778, was re-settled by a settlement of 1791. In a suit to administer the trusts of the settlement of 1778, that half was, in the year 1809, ordered to be transferred to the trustees of the settlement of 1791. The transfer was never made, nor was it ever applied for by the trustees of the settlement of 1791. In 1827 the parties beneficially entitled under the settlement of 1791 were adult and sui juris. The then present investment of the trust fund was, as it had for many years before been, an investment in India, subject to the control of the trustees of 1778; but those trustees were, and had long been, in England. The parties so beneficially entitled knew of and acquiesced in the investment, and never required that their half of the fund should be transferred to the trustees of 1791. The trust fund was afterwards lost by the failure, in 1830, of a house of business in India:—Held, that the parties beneficially entitled were precluded from insisting that the trustees of 1778 were liable to make good the loss by reason of their not having made the transfer to the trustees of 1791. Munch v. Cookerell, 5 Myl. & C. 179; 9 L. J., N. S., Ch., 153; 4 Jur. 140. Reversing on this point 9 Sim. 339; 3 Jur. 36. Distinction between the degree of knowledge and sanction necessary to exonerate trustees from a breach of trust, and that which is necessary to preclude the cestui que trust from complaining of an omission which, if concurred in by the cestui que trust, did not constitute a breach of trust. Ib.

4. C. and G. being trustees of a sum of money for B., B. gave a receipt for the money to G., and left the money in his hands on security of his bond. G. having become insolvent, C. was held liable to make good the deficiency, there having been no acquiescence sufficient to bind B. Byass v. Gates, 2 W. R. 487.

5. A cestui que trust held under the circumstances not barred by delay or acquiescence. Hawkins v. Gardner, 2 Sm. & Giff. 441.

6. Husband and wife, in 1840, conveyed real estate, to which the wife was entitled in fee expectant on the death of A. B., to trustees, in trust for sale, to invest the moneys arising therefrom in the stocks or funds or upon real security, and to pay the dividends, etc., to such person or persons, etc., as the wife should direct or appoint; and in default thereof, to pay the same to the wife for life, for her sole use and benefit; and after her death, to her next-of-kin. The trustees sold the property, and invested the proceeds, with the concurrence of the wife, upon securities not mentioned in the settlement. The trust fund having been lost, the wife, as if the fund was in existence, exercised her power of appointment in favour of her infant children, who shortly afterwards, by their next friend, instituted a suit against their parents and the representatives of the trustees of the settlement, for the purpose of making the latter liable for the loss of the trust fund:—Held, that the fund had been dealt with by the trustees with the knowledge and concurrence of the wife, who had complete dominion over it, in a way not contemplated by the settlement; and therefore the bill, being a devise to make the trustees liable, by means of an execution of a power of appointment, for acts done by the wife, must be dismissed, but without costs. Brewer v. Swirles, 18 Jur. 1069; 23 L. J., Ch., 542; 2 W. R. 339; 2 Eq. Rep. 493.

7. A testator by his will bequeathed the residue of his property to his executors, W. C. and N., in trust to invest and pay the income to his widow for life, and after her decease (in the events which happened) to five children. The eldest child attained twenty-one in 1839, and the youngest in June 1846. The three executors proved the will, but N., a solicitor, was almost entirely the acting trustee. The money was left by his co-trustees in the hands of N. alone; and on the youngest child attaining twenty-one, he, on behalf of himself and the other children, attempted to obtain payment from N., and in 1848 addressed a letter to N. consenting in effect to receive payment by instalments of 50%. In 1849 a bill was filed by the five children for the purpose of making the three trustees responsible:—Held, that it was the duty of the trustees N. and C., not only to have the money in their hands, but to explain to their cestuis que trustent what their rights were; and that not having been fully informed at the time of what their rights were, there was nothing in the conduct of the plaintiffs, whether in the way of acquiescence or of giving time, to deprive them of their remedy against the trustees, who were held jointly and severally liable accordingly. Burrows v. Walls, 3 W. R. 327; 5 De G. M. & G. 233; 3 Eq. Rep. 960.

1. A testator gave the residue of his property to trustees, with a direction to convert all his personal estate and invest the amount in the Bank of England, in trust to permit his wife to receive the rents and profits, dividends, or other annual produce for her life, and after her death to go among her children in the manner limited in the will. Part of the property was 24l. per annum Long Annuities. The trustees did not sell these Long Annuities, but paid the dividends for many years to the tenant for life. Two of the children joined with her in an assignment by way of mortgage of their shares in the residue. It appeared that the tenant for life had asked the trustees to convert:—Held, that the non-conversion was a breach of trust; that the children had not acquiesced, because the dividends received by the mortgagee were received in respect of life interest; and that the tenant for life did not acquiesce by merely receiving the dividends which were paid to her. Bate v. Hooper, 3 W. R. 639; 5 De G. M. & G. 338.

2. It is not necessary that acquiescence on the part of a cestui que trust in an improper investment should be evidenced by writing, if otherwise proved. Macleod v. Annesley, 17 Jur. 608; 22 L. J., Ch., 633; 16 Beav. 600; 1 W. R. 250.

3. A testator gave all his residuary real and personal estate upon trust to convert, part on his own decease and part on his wife's death, and gave the proceeds among his seven children. By a codicil this will was revoked as to one-seventh, out of which a legacy was given, and the residue to his daughter for life, and after to her children. The property was converted, and the income paid until 1838, when it appeared that a security of a malt-house, etc., upon which it had been invested was deficient by the insolvency and death of the mortgagor and the existence of deeds by which it had been previously assigned over. The trustees' defence was, that they were protected by a clause of indemnity in the will which referred to diminution by insolvency or insufficient security, and that the cestuis que trustent had acquiesced by a letter and subsequent acts:—Held, that the clause referred to was not an indemnity, as the words "without their wilful default" controlled the others; that no sufficient acquiescence was proved; and that the onus of showing diligent inquiry on the part of the trustees (which had not been shown) lay upon them and not on the cestuis que trustent. Stretton v. Ashmall, 3 W. R. 4; 3 Drew. 9; 24 L. J., Ch., 277.

4. A tenant for life acquiesced in a breach of trust by sanctioning a trustee in lending the trust moneys upon what at the time were insufficient securities. Subsequently the securities were increased in value, and but little was lost by the improper investment; but owing to continued neglect on the part of the trustee, considerable costs were incurred, and the fund thereby decreased:—Held, that the right of the tenant for life against the trustee for subsequent laches was not lost by his original acquiescence. Lockhart v. Reilly, Reilly v. Lockhart, 4 W. R. 438; 25 L. J., Ch., 697.

5. A widow, a tenant for life, desiring an increase of income, induced a trustee to invest out of a trust fund a sum exceeding two-thirds of its value on mortgage of copyhold house property, at interest at 5l. per cent. After the rents had become insufficient to pay the interest, her daughter, on her marriage, became entitled to one-fourth of the trust fund. The trustee having stated to the husband and wife the deficiency in the widow's income, and its cause, they accepted a small sum of money in hand in lieu of their one-fourth, and made no objection for ten years, when the widow died. Becoming then entitled to the three-fourths part of the fund, they sought by suit to charge the trustee with the deficiency:—Held, that they had so far acquiesced in the investment, and could not complain of it. Farrar v. Barraclough, 2 Sm. & G. 231; 2 W. R. 244.

6. In a marriage settlement, a husband covenanted with the trustees, that his heirs, executors, administrators, and assigns would after his death pay to his wife a jointure of 40l. per annum; and that they would pay the trustees 400l. for the benefit of the children of the marriage, in case there should be any. The husband became indebted to one of the trustees, who entered up judgment against him, and insured the husband's life for the amount of the judgment. Upon the sale of the trust property:—Held, that the assignee of the trustees' judgment was entitled, in respect of incumbrance, to priority to the settlor's wife and children; and that in considering the dealings between a trustee and his cestui que trust, the length of time in which the acts of the former had been acquiesced in, with the knowledge of the latter, was to be taken into account in favour of the trustee. Re M'Kenna, Exor. Busteed, 5 L. T., N. S., 241.

7. A trustee permitted his co-trustee, the father of one of the cestuis que trustent, to sell out the trust fund, the co-trustee depositing with him a packet of title deeds by way of indemnity. The son, on coming of age in 1851, had an interview with the trustee upon the subject. In 1855 the father, when dangerously ill, spoke to the son about the breach of trust, and desired him to call on the trustee, and obtain from him and keep the packet of deeds, which the son did. The son afterwards received a letter from his father, while still dangerously ill, requesting the son, in the event of the father's death, not to hold the trustee responsible, and inclosing the form of a memorandum for the son to copy and sign and send to the trustee, and by which the son, in consideration of the delivery up of the deeds, discharged the trustee from all liability. The father died in 1859, and in 1861 the son filed a bill, seeking to make the trustee liable for the breach of trust:—Held, that the son had by his conduct so acquiesced in the breach of trust, as to preclude him from complaining of it. Farrant v. Blanchford, 1 De G. J. & S. 107; 9 Jur., N. S., 423; 32 L. J., Ch., 237; 11 W. R. 294; 7 L. T., N. S., 770. Reversing 11 W. R. 178.

When a breach of trust has been committed, from which a trustee alleges that he has been released, it is incumbent upon him to show that such release was given by the cestui que trust deliberately and advisedly, with full knowledge of all the circumstances, and of his own rights and claims against the trustee. Acquiescence may, however, be an answer to the cestui que trust; and therefore where a cestui que trust, with full knowledge of all the circumstances of the breach of trust, had taken no proceedings for ten years:—Held, to amount to acquiescence on his part. Id.

1. A trustee holding a fund in trust for three children, allowed their father to receive the income of their shares during their minorities, considering him to be unable to maintain them. Two of the children attained twenty-one in their father's lifetime, and received their shares of the capital. The father died, bequeathing his property to the three children equally, and appointing the trustee his executor. The youngest child attained twenty-one soon after his death, and within a few weeks received her share of the capital of the trust fund, and signed a receipt expressing her approbation of the mode in which the income had been applied during her minority. About half a year afterwards, she and her two sisters received their shares of the father's estate, and gave a release by deed to the trustees. After this she filed a bill to charge the trustees with the dividends accrued on her share of the trust fund during her minority:—Held, that after having, with a knowledge of the facts, received from the trustee her share of her father's estate, which was primarily liable to the claim, and given him a release, she could not maintain the claim against him. Aveline v. Melluish, 2 De G. J. & S. 288; 10 Jur., N. S., 788; 12 W. R. 1020; 10 L. T., N. S., 830.

2. A cestui que trust, whose interest is reversionary, is not bound to assert his title until it comes into possession. He is not, however, less capable of giving his assent, by acts or otherwise, to a breach of trust by reason of his interest being in reversion. Life Association of Scotland v. Siddall, Cooper v. Greene, 7 Jur., N. S., 785; 9 W. R. 541; 4 L. T., N. S., 311; 3 De G. F. & J. 58.

A cestui que trust is not bound by acquiescence, unless fully informed of his rights, and of all the material facts and circumstances of the case. Id.

Although the onus lies upon a party relying upon acquiescence to prove the facts upon which the consent of the cestui que trust is to be inferred, there may be cases in which, from great length of time, such facts would be presumed. Id.

3. Certain commissioners were empowered by an Act of Parliament to levy rates and to apply them for certain specified purposes. They had applied part, and intended to apply more, of the proceeds of such rates towards defraying the expenses of an application to Parliament for an extension of their powers, such an application not being one of the purposes mentioned in the Act. An injunction was granted (see 1 W. R. 323) restraining the commissioners from such further intended application. And on the hearing of the cause on a motion for decree:—Held, that although, if an earlier application to the Court had been made, the misapplication of the trust funds might have been prevented, yet that the commissioners were bound to replace the trust funds; but under the circumstances, delay having taken place in applying to the Court, the commissioners were exonerated from payment of the costs personally. Att.-Gen. v. Eastlake, 2 Eq. Rep. 145; 17 Jur. 801.

4. A testator devised a farm to his son, to be valued by A., and one-third of the valuation to be paid to the plaintiff. In 1833 A. bought the farm himself for 750*l.*, and paid one-third to the plaintiff, who accepted it. In 1850, A. being dead, the plaintiffs filed a bill to set aside the sale for inadequacy of consideration:—Held, that considering the lapse of time and the death of A., the plaintiff was too late, and the bill was dismissed. Baker v. Read, 18 Beav. 398. S. C. on appeal 3 W. R. 118.

5. A cestui que trust having, with knowledge, received the income of an improper investment:—Held, bound to give credit for the difference between it and the income which would have arisen from a proper investment of the trust fund. Davies v. Hodson, 25 Beav. 177.

A testator gave funds to trustees, to pay the income to his wife or otherwise, for the maintenance of his seven children, till the youngest should attain twenty-five if a son, and if a daughter till that age or marriage; and when the youngest should attain twenty-five, to divide the same equally amongst his children, the shares of the daughters to be for their separate use. The trustees, four years after the testator's death, sold out the funds and invested the proceeds in railway shares (which resulted in great loss). The youngest child attained twenty-five. Upon a bill by a married daughter of the testator claiming her original share of the funds:—Held, that she, though aware of the sale of the trust funds, either immediately before or shortly after the purchase of the railway shares, had not sanctioned the breach of trust; that she was bound to assume that the discretion vested in the trustees was properly exercised; and though she did not complain for some years afterwards, that she was entitled to have her share of the stock replaced, allowing for the sums paid for maintenance beyond those which would have arisen from the dividends of the trust stock. S. C. 27 L. J., Ch., 449.

1. By a marriage settlement made in 1821, stock belonging to the wife was assigned to B. and another, upon trust for the separate use of the wife for life, with remainder for the husband for life, with remainder, in default of children of the marriage, for B. The trustees neglected to have the stock transferred to them, and it remained in the name of the wife, and in 1822 the husband sold it, and possessed himself of the proceeds. B. died in 1829, the husband in 1858, and the wife in 1864. There were no children. In 1866 B.'s executors claimed the trust fund from the husband's estate:—Held, that their claim was not barred by the Statute of Limitations, or by acquiescence, or by the fact that B. was one of the trustees whose negligence rendered the misapplication of the trust fund possible. Butler v. Carter, 5 L. R., Eq., 276; 16 W. R. 388; 18 L. T., N. S., 11.

2. The Court will not visit a trustee with the consequences of a breach of trust, committed with the sanction or by the desire of the cestui que trustent, or of one committed without such sanction or desire, if when it comes to the knowledge of the cestui que trustent he has acquiesced in and obtained the benefit for a long period. Griffiths v. Porter, 25 Beav. 236.

Two trustees, A. and B., joined in the receipt of trust money. A. allowed B. to retain the cheque for the money, which, against the remonstrances of D., he placed in the hands of a solicitor, to invest on mortgage, and it was lost:—Held, that both were liable. Id.

Two trustees, A. and B., had allowed trust money to be received by their solicitors. The cestui que trust authorised its investments on a mortgage by B. alone. The money being in danger, and the solicitors pressed, a mortgage was given, but as to which B. exercised no judgment, and it turned out insufficient:—Held, that both trustees were liable for the loss. Id.

A tenant for life received 5*l.* per cent. on a mortgage improperly taken by trustees, and for which, on a loss, they were made responsible:—Held, that he was only entitled to 4 per cent. in taking the account of income, and that 1 per cent. must be taken as part of the subsequent income. Id.

3. Where trustees are made liable for a breach of trust, the tenant for life having received the benefit, they are entitled to be recouped out of the interest of the tenant for life, although they have since ceased to be trustees. Barratt v. Wyatt, 30 Beav. 442.

4. When trustees have committed a breach of trust in order to discharge themselves, they must clearly show that their cestui que trust, on becoming beneficially entitled, adopted the transaction. Cope v. Clark, 18 W. R. 279.

5. A trustee, by omitting to invest a sum of money sufficient to pay an annuity of 100*l.* a year to a party for life, is liable, when the parties in remainder become entitled to the fund, to make good any rise in the stock, assuming it had been purchased; and although the principal directed to be invested was paid, and a release obtained, still it was set aside after a subsequent delay of ten years, and the difference in value was directed to be paid to the cestui que trustent, who were illiterate and ignorant of their rights. Aspland v. Watte, 25 L. J., Ch., 53; 1 Jur., N. S., 968; 3 W. R. 626.

6. Even where the Statute of Limitations does not apply, the Court will not entertain a suit by a cestui que trust, instituted for the purpose of challenging the accounts settled by his trustees, when the accounts and matters had been investigated twenty years before, and he had every opportunity of going into them. Lapse of time alone will be a sufficient bar to such a suit. Bright v. Legerton, 6 Jur., N. S., 1179; 29 L. J., Ch., 852; 8 W. R. 678; 29 Beav. 60. Affirmed 3 L. T., N. S., 713; 7 Jur., N. S., 559; 9 W. R. 239; 30 L. J., Ch., 338.

7. A husband survived his wife, who was one of several equitable tenants in common. He was advised by counsel that he had no title as tenant by the curtesy, his wife never having been in possession, and that if he intended to set up such a title, he ought not to sue with his infant daughter in a partition suit which was then in contemplation. The suit was nevertheless instituted by him as the next friend of the daughter, and in 1830 a decree was obtained. A partition was made under the decree, and the legal estate in the daughter's share conveyed to the use of the father during the infancy of the daughter, in trust for her maintenance, and afterwards to her own use in fee. The daughter attained twenty-one in 1843, and married in 1847. In 1852 the father filed a bill to be relieved from the trusts, on the ground of mistake, and to have his title as tenant by the curtesy established:—Held, among other things, that length of time and acquiescence and the marriage of the daughter, although without the father's consent, before the father disputed the daughter's title, constituted a sufficient answer to the suit; and that possession obtained in the character of trustee cannot be retained as one adverse to the cestui que trust, after the legal estate under which the possession was taken has determined. Stone v. Godfrey, 5 De G. M. & G. 76; 18 Jur. 524; 23 L. J., Ch., 769.

8. At the time when the conveyance was completed, the trustee of the will of a testator whose property was at the date of the will under contract for sale to a railway company, and who was a solicitor, took counsel's opinion as to the person to whom the purchase money was payable, and who ought to join in the conveyance, and the opinion was given in favour of the devisee. The trustee accordingly paid the money to her, and informed the plaintiff of the result, but no settlement of accounts was come to between the plaintiff and the trustee up to the time of the institution of the action, and the plaintiff had not executed any release or discharge to the trustee. This action was brought to recover the money out of the trustee's estate, after his death, and nearly five years after the payment had been made:—Held, that no case of acquiescence was made out against the plaintiff, and that he was entitled to recover from the trustee's estate the moneys received from the railway company, the amount to be recouped to the trustee's representative by his co-defendant, the devisee. Wilson v. Donald, Re Jackson, 44 L. T. 467.

9. A cestui que trust, who with knowledge that his trustee has committed a breach of trust, obtains from him a part only of that to which he is entitled, does not thereby waive his right to such relief as he may be able to obtain unless an intention so to do can be clearly inferred from the surrounding circumstances. In November 1860 an order was made in a suit for administering the trusts of the will of J. C., to which H. C., a former trustee, was defendant, directing her to pay into court a sum of money in respect of breaches of trust committed in 1843 and 1845, the amount of which had been ascertained by the chief clerk in the suit. H. C. went abroad, and substituted service of the order was made upon her. By the order on further consideration, in 1863, H. C. appearing by counsel, certain sums of money to which she was entitled, and her life interest under the testator's will, were ordered to be impounded and paid over "to the account of H. C. funds applicable for the repayment of trust funds misappropriated," and an inquiry was directed as to what steps should be taken to obtain restitution of the funds. Certain other orders were made in the suit, but no personal order was made on H. C. for payment of the amount of her defalcation, nor any steps taken against her, although she returned to England in 1870, where she remained till her death in 1880, and her residence was known to the then trustees of the will and some of the cestui que trustent. On her death the surviving trustee of the will of J. C. brought this action against her executors, claiming the administration of her real and personal estate on behalf of himself and all the other creditors, alleging himself a creditor in respect of the unpaid balance of the sum representing the breach of trust. At the date of the institution of the action several beneficiaries under J. C.'s will were infants:—Held, that the action was not an attempt to enforce a stale demand, and that the cestui que trustent must not be taken to have elected to abandon their claim against her, and to rest content with impounding her life interest: that there being a debt due from H. C. at her death to the estate of J. C., and the trusts of his will not being completed, the surviving trustee was the proper person to bring the action, and that the cestui que trustent need not be parties; although as between a cestui que trust and a stranger the claim of the cestui que trust is barred by lapse of time operating against his trustee, lapse of time is no bar as between a cestui que trust and his trustee. Re Cross, Harston v. Tenison, 20 L. R., Ch. D., 109; 51 L. J., Ch., 645; 45 L. T. 777; 30 W. R. 376. Reversing 30 W. R. 313.

Constructive Trust.] 1. A constructive trust may be barred by long acquiescence. Exp. Hasell, 3 Y. & C. 617; 3 Jur. 1101.

2. Though no time bars a direct trust, as between cestui que trust and trustee, a constructive trust barred by long acquiescence, though the true state of the fact may be easily ascertained, and the ground of original relief was clear, and even arising out of fraud. Beekford v. Wade, 17 Ves. 97.

3. A testator died in 1810, in India, having bequeathed his English property to two infants, whom he acknowledged as his natural children; and having appointed his nephew,

E., to be their guardian. Part of his property consisted of a bond, dated in 1810, in which he was obligee, the obligor being seised of real estate in Ireland. In 1811 E. obtained possession of the bond from the testator's executor; but he did not register it, nor did he ever take any steps towards realising the security. In 1821 the elder of the infants attained twenty-one; in 1832 she married; and in 1833, when the bond had become irrevocable, E., for the first time, informed the elder child and her husband of the existence of the bond; and upon finding it was then too late to register it, he handed it to the husband, directing him to see to it. No step was taken until E.'s death in 1870, after which, in 1871, a bill was filed, seeking to make E.'s estate liable as for a breach of trust. At this time the younger infant was dead, and had no legal personal representative; but his son, who was entitled to administer, was made a defendant:—Held, that the parties, by acquiescing for thirty-eight years, and waiting till E.'s death, had lost their right to make any claim against his estate. Semble, that E. was not at any time liable for any breach of trust. Sleeman v. Wilson, 13 L. R., Eq., 36.

By Married Woman with Separate Estate with Clause against Anticipation.] 4. A married woman, restrained from anticipation, cannot agree to release her trustees from liability incurred by their disregard of that restraint. Dickson v. Hook, 14 W. R. 552.

5. Quere, whether a married woman who is entitled to the interest of a fund to her separate use, without restraint upon anticipation, can be bound by acquiescence in an improper investment of the fund. Davies v. Hodgson, 4 Jur., N. S., 252.

6. Trustee of separate property of married woman, without power of anticipation, joining in a lease for which a fine was paid and received by a third person:—Held, a breach of trust, although the feme covert (being a minor at the time) joined in the lease. Booth v. Purser, 1 Ir. Eq. R. 37.

7. Personal estate was by settlement vested in trustees for R., a married woman, for life, without power of anticipation; and in case there should be no issue of the marriage, in case M., her husband, should survive her, as she should by deed or will appoint, and in case she should survive, for her absolutely. W., the acting trustee of the settlement, at the instance of the wife, applied the property in discharge of her husband's liabilities. M. died, and by R.'s request the trustee took no steps to realise his assets. R. married again after the lapse of some years, and in her marriage settlement recited her wish to give credit to W. for all payments made by the trustees at her request:—Held, that R. had lost her right to make the trustee liable for his breaches of trust. Rutherford v. Maziore, 13 Ir. Ch. R. 204.

8. Slaves in the West Indies were bequeathed to executors, upon trusts for a niece of the testator for her life with remainder to her children. The executors having renounced and disclaimed, administration with the will annexed was granted to the niece, who afterwards married a minor. Before her husband had attained twenty-one the husband and wife executed a settlement, reciting that the husband was, in right of the wife, possessed of the slaves, theretofore the property of her late uncle; but not in any manner referring to the will. The settlement purported to assign the slaves to trustees, in trust to sell and invest the proceeds and pay the income for the separate use of the wife for life, without power of anticipation, with trusts by way of remainder to the children of the marriage. Before the husband came of age, the husband and wife sold the slaves without noticing the settlement in the contract, but paid part of the purchase money to one of the trustees of the settlement, the other trustees not concurring in or being in fact aware of the sale or payment. An amicable bill was then filed on behalf of the infant children of the marriage, to have the trusts of the settlement carried into execution, or a new settlement made in conformity with an offer of the husband to execute such settlement on receiving 3,500*l.* out of the wife's fortune. This bill contained an allegation that the proceeds of the slaves had been invested in the names of the trustees. The trustees, by their answer, admitted the truth of this allegation. The husband and wife, answering separately, disputed the validity of the settlement, and refused to be bound by it; but the husband offered to execute a settlement on the terms above mentioned. The decree declared the settlement void, and directed a new settlement to be made upon the footing of the offer made by the husband. A settlement was accordingly executed, and the 3,500*l.* paid to the husband. Afterwards it was discovered that the admission in the trustees' answer was incorrect, the trustee who received the proceeds of the slaves having applied the money to his own use, and having by false statements induced his co-trustees to believe and admit upon the answer that the investment in their names and his had been made as there stated. His circumstances were such that any attempt to recover the amount at any period would have been hopeless. More than twenty years after the wife was aware of these circumstances she instituted a suit against the co-trustees to make them personally liable for the breach of trust:—Held, first, that the above facts, independently of the admission of the co-trustees in their answer, did not render them personally liable in respect of the proceeds of the sale of the slaves, the title of the settlors not having been such as to enable the trustees legally to possess themselves of the fund; and, secondly, that in the circumstances of the case, that admission did not create any such liability. Derbishire v. Home, 3 De G. M. & G. 80.

Semle, that a clause restraining a married woman from anticipation does not exempt her from the ordinary consequences of lapse of time and acquiescence; also, that in the circumstances above stated, the administratrix committed a breach of trust by marrying without providing for the security of the trust property; also, that having, by her separate answer in the first suit, refused to be bound by the first settlement, she could not afterwards sue the trustees for non-performance of the trusts of it; also, that her having concealed from them the nature of her title when she assumed to settle the funds, would of itself have been a defence to such a suit. Id.

X. REMEDY BY WAY OF INJUNCTION.

1. Injunction to restrain an action at law to recover money lent in breach of trust, refused. Lambert v. Lambert, 5 Ir. Eq. R. 339.

2. When any Act involving a breach of trust is intended to be done, though not in its consequences irremediable, the Court will prevent it by injunction. Att.-Gen. v. Aspinall, 2 Myl. & C. 613; 7 L. J., N. S., Ch., 51; 1 Jur. 812.

XI. OTHER REMEDIES.

3. Cestuis que trustent do not, by enforcing their remedy against a defaulting trustee personally, lose their lien on the security on which the trust money has been invested. Francis v. Francis, 5 De G. M. & G. 108.

4. Sale declared to be made subject to the trusts of the testator's will, where, under a decree that his real estate (which was devised in strict settlement, subject to debts) should be sold, the sale had been effected by collusion between the creditors and tenants for life. Manaton v. Moleworth, 1 Eden 18.

5. The trustee of a voluntary deed under which he is also a cestui que trust having concurred in allowing the settlor to dispose of parts of the trust property:—Held, that he was not entitled to have the relief granted on a bill filed by one of the cestuis que trustent extended for his benefit. Parnell v. Hingston, 3 Sm. & G. 337.

6. Where trustees lent the trust moneys to one of the cestuis que trustent, upon a contract which constituted a breach of trust, the Court, in a suit by the trustees against all the cestuis que trustent, refused, as against the cestuis que trustent who had obtained the loan, to make a decree for the repayment of the money, contrary to the terms of the contract. Phillipson v. Gatty, 2 H. & Tw. 459. Affirming 7 Hare 516; 13 Jur. 318.

7. Under 15 & 16 Vict., c. 86, s. 42, a cestui que trust is not entitled as of right to a decree for execution of the trusts unless the case is in its particular circumstances a proper one for making such a decree. McWade v. Brodhurst, 24 W. R. 232.

8. An actual sale of goods for money, the vendor intending to use the purchase money in making a voluntary payment and the purchaser knowing of that intention, is not a fraudulent transfer within s. 6, sub-s. 2, of the Bankruptcy Act 1869. If a debtor on the eve of bankruptcy voluntarily makes good trust money which he has misapplied, the payment cannot be set aside as a fraudulent preference of the trust estate. Ewp. Strubbins, Re Wilkinson, 17 L. R., Ch. D., 58; 60 L. J., Ch., 547; 44 L. T. 877; 29 W. R. 653.

Within three months before the filing of a liquidation petition the debtor, who was one of the executors of a will, sold some goods to his co-executor with the intention of applying the purchase money in repaying to the testator's estate money which he had improperly abstracted from it. This intention was known to the co-executor, and the purchase money was, with his knowledge, immediately after its payment by him, paid by the vendor into a bank to the credit of the executors:—Held, that the transaction was not either a fraudulent preference within s. 92 of the Bankruptcy Act 1869, or a fraudulent transfer of property within s. 6, sub-s. 2, and that neither the co-executor nor the testator's estate could be compelled to refund the money. Id.

XII. INQUIRIES. WHEN DIRECTED.

1. On motion, reference directed to inquire whether defendant trustee remains accountable for any acts done by him as such, and if not, to settle release. — v. Osborne, 6 Ves. 455.

2. Estates being devised to trustees to be sold for payment of debts, and subject thereto for the testator's infant children, the surviving trustee retains possession of one of the estates in satisfaction of debts, which he alleges himself to have paid, the testator being insolvent. On a bill for an account and conveyance of this estate by one of the children, and the representatives of another, forty-five years after the testator's death, stating that they had recently discovered the facts, special inquiries directed to ascertain whether they had any notice of the circumstances, whether they had in any manner released, and whether the trustee had advanced to the amount of the value of the estate. Chalmers v. Bradely, 1 Jac. & Walk. 51.

3. Where discretion of trustee is to be exercised on matters of fact, Court will substitute a Master, but not if upon matter of opinion or judgment. Walker v. Walker, 5 Madd. 424.

4. In the answer to a bill for relief in respect of a breach of trust, it was alleged that some of the cestuis que trustent had assented thereto:—Held, that the parties sought to be charged were entitled to an inquiry as to that fact. Fyler v. Fyler, 3 Beav. 550; 5 Jur. 187.

5. Inquiry refused as to the concurrence of cestuis que trust, in a breach of trust, where it was not alleged by the answer, and was unsatisfactorily proved by the evidence. Lincoln v. Wright, 4 Beav. 427; 10 L. J., N. S., Ch., 331.

6. A suit was instituted, after a great lapse of time, and after the death of all the trustees of a will, to make the estates of such trustees liable for breaches of trust in the administration. Their representatives being personally ignorant of the matters, the Court refused to declare the liability in the first instance, but directed inquiries. Kirkman v. Booth, 11 Beav. 273; 18 L. J., N. S., Ch., 25; 12 Jur. 525.

7. On the hearing of a cause, commenced in 1838, to charge a trustee with the loss occasioned by the bankruptcy of his co-trustee, whom, ten years before, he had permitted to acquire sole possession of the trust fund, the Court not being satisfied that all the circumstances as to the fact and time of cestui que trust's knowledge of the breach of trust were in evidence, directed an inquiry as to that fact, with liberty to either party to examine the co-trustee. Broadhurst v. Balguy, 1 Y. & Coll. C. C. 16.

8. A cestui que trust concurring or acquiescing in breach of trust, not entitled to relief; subject to inquiry into circumstances which induced concurrence or acquiescence. Walker v. Symonds, 3 Swan. 64.

9. Where a trustee of Navy 5l. per cent. stock dissented from the conversion of it to 4l. per cents., under the statute 3 Geo. 4, c. 9, and it was charged by the bill that the dissent was given under circumstances injurious to the property, an inquiry was directed as to how he ought to have acted. Angell v. Dawson, 3 Y. & Coll. 308; 8 L. J., N. S., Exch. Eq., 50.

Where by the terms of a settlement 7,000l. stock was vested in trustees, upon certain specific trusts, and the bill alleged that one of the trustees had sold out the stock and applied part of it in discharge of a claim in no way connected with the trust:—Held, although the bill did not make a case or pray for inquiry upon this point, that the plaintiffs were, nevertheless, entitled to an inquiry; the trustee, by his answer, stating that the stock so applied had been included in the settlement by mistake, notwithstanding that he himself had been a party to, and had executed the settlement. Id.

10. Where a decree has declared that a corporation is liable to make good the loss occasioned by a breach of trust, the Court will not specifically charge the loss upon the general corporate property; but will leave the plaintiff to enforce his remedy by the usual process against a corporation. An order, therefore, contained in such a decree, directing inquiries into the corporate property and the special trusts to which it was subject, with a view to charge the loss upon such portion of that property as should be subject to any special trust, was reversed. Att.-Gen. v. East Retford (Corporation), 3 Myl. & C. 484; 8 L. J., N. S., Ch., 49; 2 Jur. 1079. Reversing on this point 2 Myl. & K. 35, 62.

11. In a suit for the administration of the estate of a deceased trustee which was instituted by persons claiming to be his creditors by virtue of a breach of trust, against his executor and devisee in trust, subject to the payment of debts, and the persons beneficially interested under his will, and in which the executor and devisee in trust by answer admitted his testator's breach of trust, but the persons beneficially interested by answer denied it, and in which no evidence was entered into on the part of the plaintiffs, the common administration decree in a creditors' suit was made, without any special direction for inquiry respecting the breach of trust. Teague v. Fisher, 3 W. R. 587.

12. A trustee having sold certain trust property, and allowed the proceeds to be received by one of the cestuis que trustent, inquiry directed as to the application of such proceeds, in order to ascertain the specific remedy which the trustee might have against such cestui que trust. Racham v. Siddall, 1 Macn. & G. 607; 2 H. & Tw. 44; 16 Sim. 297; 12 Jur. 640.

2. Rate of, 7067.
3. Compound Interest and Rests, 7068.
4. Liability for Interest or Profits. Election of Cestui que Trust, 7069.

1. Liability for. In General.

1. A trustee or executor is chargeable with interest, although not prayed by the bill. Woodhead v. Marriot, C. P. C. 62.

2. An executor or trustee insolvent at the time they place out money at interest, shall, if they make any, pay interest, as they run no risk; secus, of one who is in good circumstances. Bromfield v. Wytherley, Pre. Ch. 1506; 1 Eq. Abr. 398, but cited and overruled, 1 Bro. C. C. 360.

3. Although a trustee is not directed to put money out at interest, yet, if he makes interest, he shall account for it. Lee v. Lee, 2 Vern. 548.

4. Court ordering loss on trust estate, in consequence of conduct of trustees, to be made up by the trustees personally, refused interest on the amount, which was comparatively but a small sum. Bone v. Cooke, 13 Price 343; M'Clell. 168.

5. Trustee bound to pay interest on money retained a length of time. Trimleston v. Hamill, 1 Ball & B. 385.

6. Executors not liable to interest on balances, unless the purpose for which the money is retained, appear to be answered; but trustees and guardians are, without such proof. Dawson v. Massey, 1 Ball & B. 231.

Person bound by recognisance to account annually, and retaining money in his hands, though no use be made of it, must pay interest on such balances. Id. 230.

Interest decreed upon balances kept by guardian in banker's hands. Id. 219.

7. Trustees charged with interest for wilful misconduct, as not paying money into court pursuant to an order, but slight difference in the sums admitted and reported in his hands, is not sufficient, and further inquiry whether he made interest to be directed, unless a strong case. Sammes v. Rickman, 2 Ves. J. 36.

8. Interest decreed against the estate of an accounting party, who had dealt with certain funds, in such a manner, that the Court would have given interest on the balances in his hands against him personally, but who had taken the benefit of the Insolvent Act before there was any decree charging him with interest. Moons v. De Bernales, 1 Russ. 301.

9. A testator directed his trustees and executors to invest the residue of his estate on good freehold security; the trustee retained in his hands a balance of between 300*l.* and 400*l.* for a period of more than two years, part of which money was in the hands of his bankers:—Held, under the circumstances, that he was not responsible for interest during that time, although he had been informed of certain persons who were desirous of borrowing money on freehold security, he having employed a solicitor to procure a proper investment. Wyatt v. Wallis, C. P. C. 155. n.; 8 Jur. 117.

To fix a trustee in such a case with a breach of trust, the cestui que trust must find out some person having a proper security, and desirous of borrowing a considerable portion of the trust money, and then inform the trustee of the offer. Id.

10. Owners of a privateer acting for themselves and the crew, in the sale of the prizes, having neglected to render accounts, and delayed the distribution of the proceeds, charged with interest on the balances, and costs. Pearce v. Green, 1 Jac. & Walk. 135.

The first duty of an agent, receiver, trustee, or executor, is to be constantly ready with his accounts, and neglect in this is a ground for charging him with interest. Id.

11. Where, on a bill to call a trustee to account, he, by answer, submits readily to it, though found in debt, he shall pay the interest for the balance only from the time of the account liquidated, and no costs; secus, if he controverts the account; there, if found in arrear, he shall pay interest and costs. Parrot v. Treby, Pre. Ch. 254.

12. A marriage settlement, made in 1811, recited that the husband was entitled to 20,000 rupees, secured by a note of the East India Company, and 10,000 rupees, part thereof, were thereby assigned (with certain property of the wife) to the trustees of the settlement, upon trust for the husband and wife for their lives, with remainder for the children of the marriage. One of the trustees died six weeks after the settlement was made. The husband died in 1819, and the wife in 1822. The trustees did not, nor did the survivor, take any step during the lifetime of the husband to recover the 10,000 rupees. After they had attained their ages of twenty-one years, the children filed a bill against the surviving trustee and the representatives of the deceased trustee for an account of trust funds, charging them with the 10,000 rupees. Under a reference to the Master to inquire whether the defendant might, by due diligence, have received or got in the 10,000 sicca rupees, the defendant produced evidence, showing it to have been the common belief of persons who knew the husband, that he was not possessed of any such property, but no proof was given that the husband was insolvent; and the Court charged the surviving trustee with the fund, and interest from the death of the wife, and directed a reference to inquire the value of the 10,000 rupees at the time of the settlement. Simoes v. Eyre, 6 Hare 137.

1. Trust being established, interest was given against the trustees' estate before the filing of the bill, viz., from the death of the person subject to whose life interest the plaintiffs claimed. Hawkins v. Gardiner, 2 Sm. & Gif. 441.

2. Rate of.

2. A special case is requisite for charging trustee or executor with a higher rate of interest than 4l. per cent. Woodhead v. Marriott, C. P. C. 62.

3. In three cases the Court charges more than its usual rate of 4l. per cent. upon balances due from a trustee, viz.: first, where the trustee, in the opinion of the Court, ought to have received more than 4l. per cent.; secondly, where he has received more; and, thirdly, where he is in the opinion of the Court to be presumed to have received more. Examination of circumstances with reference to the applicability of the third of these rules. Penny v. Avison, 3 Jur., N. S., 62.

4. Interest at 5l. per cent. is only exacted in cases of grave misconduct or fraud on the part of a trustee. Imperial Credit Association v. Coleman, 21 W. R. 696.

5. A trustee of a charity estate, who has used the balances of the rents in carrying on his trade, will be charged with interest at 5 per cent., but not with annual rests. Att.-Gen. v. Solly, 2 Sim. 518.

6. Trustees under a will decreed to pay interest at 5l. per cent. per annum, on balances mixed by them with their own moneys, and used in their own business, although the will authorised them to invest the residue on "good private securities." Westover v. Chapman, 1 Colly. 177.

7. If trustees, for the purpose of their own trade, use trust moneys which, according to the directions of the will, they ought to have otherwise invested, in a decree against them directing an account, compound interest will be charged. Townend v. Townend, 1 Giff. 201; 5 Jur., N. S., 506; 7 W. R. 529; 33 L. T. 143.

8. A trustee wilfully applying trust moneys to his own use, is chargeable with interest at 5l. per cent.; but where, under the trusts of a doubtful will, the tenant for life, who was also a trustee, neglected to make proper investments, she was held chargeable with interest at 4l. per cent. only, and the decree was made without costs. Mousley v. Carr, 4 Beav. 49; 10 L. J., N. S., Ch., 160.

9. Bequest of personal estate in trust, to invest it in Government or real securities and to permit the interest to accumulate until it amounted to 500l., and from time to time, when it amounted to that sum, to lay out or invest such interest in Government or real securities, to be applied in the same manner as the principal; the trustees retaining the trust moneys in their business, an inquiry was directed what would have been the amount of the personal estate, and the interest thereof, if it had been invested and accumulated in the manner directed by the will, and the trustees were decreed to pay the amount, and were charged with interest at 5 per cent. on a balance in their hands. Brown v. Sansome, 1 M'Clel. & Y. 427.

10. Where trustees improperly retain balances, or cause or permit trust money to be lost, they are chargeable for the same with interest at 4 per cent. Robinson v. Robinson, 1 De G. M. & G. 247; 21 L. J., N. S., Ch., 111; 16 Jur. 255.

11. A tenant for life, having received 5 per cent. on an investment, which she knew to be and insisted was improper, was ordered to account for the excess beyond 4 per cent., for the benefit of the trust. Baynard v. Woolley, 20 Beav. 583.

12. Trustees, under a misrepresentation that the fund was invested in stock, charged with interest at 5l. per cent. upon the same principle as if they had sold out stock and used the money, viz., an option to the cestui que trust, to have the actual profit or 5 per cent. Bate v. Scales, 12 Ves. 402.

13. The testator directed his executors to lay out the residue of his estate in the purchase of lands or upon heritable or personal securities, at such rate of interest as they should think reasonable; the executors lent the fund to one of themselves on a bond, at 4 per cent., when 5 per cent. might have been made by heritable or Government securities:—Held, liable to pay interest at 5 per cent. Forbes v. Ross, 2 Cox 113.

14. Interest upon exchequer bills allowed, at 5 per cent. from the time of the sale, upon the ground that a claimant had a right to consider it as a debt from that time, and had elected so to consider it. Devaynes v. Noble, 1 Meriv. 580.

15. Trustees, with power to invest on real security, in the presence of their cestuis que trustent, agreed with the solicitor, who had long been employed in managing the property, to leave their fund in his hands, he paying 5 per cent. interest; but it did not appear that anything more was clearly explained to the cestuis que trustent than that they were to receive 5 per cent. interest. On the bankruptcy of the solicitor, it appeared that the only security taken by the trustees was a deposit of the deeds of an estate, which the solicitor had contracted to purchase:—Held, that the trustees must make good the loss upon this security, with 4 per cent. interest. Hooker v. Platt, 1 Jur. 473.

16. By a deed, A. agreed that B. should insure her life, and that the costs of such insurance, and the payments for keeping the same on foot, should be paid out of the property charged; and she directed the trustees to make the necessary payments for effecting and keeping on foot the policies. The trustees did not make the payments, but the policy was kept on foot by B.:—Held, that he was entitled to interest thereon at 4l. per cent. Hodgson v. Hodgson, 2 Keen 704; 7 L. J., N. S., Ch., 5.

17. Trustees, in breach of trust, lent trust money to one of them, F., and his partners in trade. F. and his partners gave their bond to F. and his co-trustees for the amount payable with interest at 5 per cent. No action could be maintained on the bond:—Held, in a suit to make the trustees liable for a breach of trust, that F. was only liable to pay 4 per cent. on the loss which had accrued to the trust fund. Fletcher v. Green, 33 Beav. 426.

18. Interest at 5l. per cent. given against the trustees on a sum lost by breach of trust. Munch v. Cockerell, 5 Myl. & C. 179; 9 Sim. 339; 9 L. J., N. S., Ch., 153; 4 Jur. 140; 3 Id 36.

1. Where a defaulting trustee has misapplied trust money, the Court will charge him with 5l. per cent. interest, unless it be shown that he has made more by the user of it. Berwick (Mayor) v. Murray, 3 Jur., N. S., 847; 26 L. J., Ch., 201.

2. A deceased trustee had invested money on mortgage at 5 per cent. on an insufficient security, and for some years, both before and after his decease, interest was paid at that rate to the cestui que trust; but some years after his decease the payment of interest ceased:—Held, that his estate was chargeable with interest at the rate of 5 per cent. from the time of the last payment. Price v. Price, 42 L. J., N. S., 626.

3. A trustee, with power to invest the trust property in leasehold or chattel personal securities, or upon the personal security of any person, advanced, at the request of his cestuis que trustent, some of the property to two ladies on the security of mortgages (with the usual covenants) of a leasehold house in which the ladies were living, and of the furniture in it. The trustee was also the lessor of the house. The mortgagors became insolvent, paid no rent, and no part of the principal or interest on the loan. The trustee, as lessor, determined the lease by entry, and then sold all his interest in the leasehold premises and the furniture; but he thereby so mixed the trust property with his own that it was impossible to distinguish the one from the other, or to pronounce with certainty how much of the proceeds of the sale was his, and how much belonged to the cestuis que trustent. The advance had been made at 5l. per cent. After some delay, the trustee replaced the principal money of the loan, but invested it against the wishes of his cestuis que trustent in 3l. per cent. consols, the dividends on which, however, were paid to them:—Held, that the trustee was bound to make good to the trust estate the whole of the money advanced on the loan, with all interest due thereon at the rate of 5l. per cent. per annum, to be computed up to the date of the decree; and that he must pay the costs of the suit. Cook v. Addison, 38 L. J., Ch., 322; 7 L. R., Eq., 466; 17 W. R. 480; 20 L. T., N. S., 212.

4. When a trustee has employed trust funds for his own benefit he will be charged as of course with simple interest at 5 per cent. Burdick v. Garrick, 37 L. J., Ch., 369; 5 L. R., Ch., 233; 18 W. R. 387.

5. D. claimed a fund as next-of-kin to J. D., who had sailed from England in 1814, and had never since been heard of. The fund came into possession of a trustee in 1844, who retained it in his own hands, and refused to pay it over to D. without direct and positive proof of the death of J. D.:—Held, that the trustee must pay over the whole fund, together with interest at 5l. per cent. from the time when he ought to have invested it. Dobson v. Pattinson, 5 W. R. 771.

6. Where there is a direction in the will to accumulate, and the trustee has failed to comply with the direction, he will be charged with interest at 4l. per cent. from one year after the testator's death. Amiss v. Hall, 3 Jur., N. S., 584.

7. The trustee of a will held a fund upon trust (after the determination of a previous life interest) to transfer and pay the same to a child when and as he should attain twenty-one, with a proviso that in case the child should be under age at the determination of the life interest the income of the fund or any part thereof should or might be applied for or towards his maintenance, education, and advancement, and the surplus, if any, should accumulate to and become part of the fund. After the child attained twenty-one (the life interest having previously determined), the trustee retained the fund without making any arrangement with the child or explaining to him his rights:—Held, that the trustee must be taken to have continued to hold the fund after the child attained twenty-one, upon the same trusts and with the same obligations to accumulate as before, and that he was liable to account for the fund with compound interest. Wilson v. Peake (3 Jur., N. S., 155) distinguished; Amiss v. Hall (3 Jur., N. S., 584) observed upon. Re Emmett's Estate, Emmet v. Emmet (No 2), 17 L. R., Ch. D., 142; 50 L. J., Ch., 341; 44 L. T. 172; 29 W. R. 464.

Part of the fund had been invested at 5l. per cent. or other rates of interest upon authorised securities, and the rest of it had been either improperly invested or had not been kept separate from the trustee's own moneys:—Held, that as to so much of the fund as had been invested at 5l. per cent. or any other rate upon authorised securities, interest must be calculated at the rate actually yielded; that the rest of the fund must be treated as having been in the trustee's hands uninvested, and that under the circumstances he must be charged with interest thereon calculated at 4l. per cent. only. Id.

3. Compound Interest and Rests.

8. A trustee of a charity estate, who has used the balances of the rents in carrying on his trade, will be charged with interest at 5 per cent., but not with annual rests. Att.-Gen. v. Solly, 2 Sim. 518.

9. The order to take an account with rests is always a matter entirely discretionary with the Court, on a consideration of the circumstances. Where A. held funds, part of the estate of B., but held them as security to cover liabilities into which he had entered on account of B., the estate itself being otherwise clearly answerable for such liabilities, and where the creditors of B. had not required him to invest the balance which might probably exist after his liabilities had been indemnified:—Held, that, in the absence of any positive stipulation, he was not, on the final settlement of accounts with the creditors, bound to pay a larger interest than 5 per cent. on the money he had so retained, and the account was not to be taken with rests. Under such circumstances, if the fund had been paid into court, it would have realised 4 per cent. with yearly or half-yearly rests, which being equal to 5 per cent. without rests, A. was held liable to that interest, on the equitable principle of putting the creditors into the same situation as if he had paid the fund into court in the ordinary manner. Court v. Roberts, 6 Cl. & F. 65.

1. A trustee of a marriage settlement, who allowed a sum of 350*l.* to remain in the hands of a trading firm for a period exceeding fifteen years after the death of the tenant for life, but who eventually, and before the bill was filed, paid the principal, with 5*l.* per cent. interest:—Held, liable to account with annual rests, and also to the costs of the suit. Jones v. Fawell, 21 L. J., Ch., 725.

2. A testator, by his will, gave his residuary real and personal estate to trustees, upon trust for his wife for life, and after her decease upon trust for his children; and he directed that after the death of his wife, and during the minority of any of his children, the trustees should apply, towards the maintenance of his children, a certain portion of the income of their then expectant shares, and accumulate the surplus income of each such share at compound interest. After the death of the widow, the sole surviving trustee neglected to accumulate the surplus income of each child's share, and invested large portions of the testator's estate in exchequer bills and other securities not authorised by the trusts of the will:—Held, that the investments which had been made being improper investments the executor was chargeable in the same manner as if he had retained the moneys in his own hands; but, under the circumstances of the case, as it did not appear that he had benefited himself by it, and had not employed the sums so retained in trade, that he was chargeable only with interest at 4*l.* per cent. Knott v. Cottee, 16 Jur. 752.

Held, also, that as the trustee had been guilty of a breach of trust in neglecting to accumulate the surplus income of each child's share, he was to be charged with annual rests. Id.

Held, also, notwithstanding he was chargeable as above, that he was entitled to his usual costs of suit, as between solicitor and client, out of the estate. Id.

3. J. C. bequeathed the residue of his personal estate to J. L. A., in trust "to pay and apply the same to the relief of such persons resident within the parish of St. E. as might be sufferers from accidental losses or misfortunes, which should not have been occasioned in any way by their own imprudence or misconduct." The testator directed that the residue "should remain in the hands of J. L. A., to be bestowed in such portions as the cases might deserve, with the joint consent and approbation of the rector and churchwardens for the time being of the parish of St. E." J. L. A. kept the whole trust fund in his hands for twelve years, concealed from the rector and churchwardens. Upon its being accidentally discovered, the fund was invested by J. L. A. in 3*l.* 5*s.* per cent. annuities without the concurrence of the rector and churchwardens, and afterwards transferred into court, under the provisions of the Trustee Relief Act:—Held, that J. L. A. was to be charged with interest at 5*l.* per cent. on the balance of cash in his hands on the 30th August 1843, with annual rests in computing the same, and with interest at 5*l.* per cent. on dividends received half-yearly. Held also, that investment by a trustee in 3*l.* 5*s.* per cent. annuities was an improper investment. Att.-Gen. v. Alford, 18 Jur. 592.

4. When a trustee has employed trust funds for his own benefit, he will be charged as of course with simple interest at 5*l.* per cent. But compound interest will only be given when the money has been used in trade, and the payment by a solicitor of it into his bank to the general account of his firm is not such an employment of the money in trade as to make him liable to be charged with compound interest. Burdick v. Garrick, 37 L. J., Ch., 369; 5 L. R., Ch., 233; 13 W. R. 387.

5. Where there is an express direction to accumulate trust property, and the accumulation is not made, the trustees are liable to account upon the footing of yearly or half-yearly rests. Feltham v. Turnor, 23 L. T., N. S., 345.

4. Liability for Interest or Profits. Election of Cestui que Trust.

6. Where a trustee has an infant's money to lay out for his benefit, and employs it in his trade, the Court will give an option for the benefit of the infant either to have interest or the profits of the trade. Anon., 2 Ves. 630.

7. If a trustee mixes trust funds with his private moneys, and employs both in a trade, an adventure of his own, the cestui que trust may, if he prefers it, insist upon having a proportionate share of the profits, instead of interest on the amount of the trust funds so employed. Dooker v. Somes, 2 Myl. & K. 655; 3 L. J., N. S., Ch., 200.

8. Where trust property is employed in trade without authority, the cestuis que trustent must elect to take either the profits for the whole period, or interest for the whole period. Circumstances may arise to entitle them to take profits for one and interest for another part of the period; but a notice of dissolution of partnership, published for a particular purpose, and not accompanied by a settlement of accounts or a transfer of the property is not sufficient. Heathcote v. Hulme, 1 Jac. & Walk. 122.

9. Difficulties of enforcing a cestui que trust's right (however clear) to participate in profits of trade, carried on in part with trust fund. Wedderburn v. Wedderburn, 4 Myl. & C. 41; 8 L. J., N. S., Ch., 177; 3 Jur. 596. Affirming 2 Keen 722.

10. Trustees, under a misrepresentation that the fund was invested in stock, charged with interest at 5 per cent. upon the same principle as if they had sold out stock and used the money, viz., an option to the cestui que trust to have the actual profit or 5 per cent. Bate v. Soales, 12 Ves. 402.

11. When trust funds are, without authority, lent to traders, with notice of the trust, and employed in their business, such traders are not liable to account to the cestui que trust for a share of the profits of the business. Stroud v. Gwyer, 28 Beav. 130; 6 Jur., N. S., 719.

12. Where trustees lend or use trust money in trade, they are chargeable not only with the money and interest, but with the profits made in the trade, the interest generally being 5 per cent. Robinson v. Robinson, 1 De G. M. & G.

247; 21 L. J., N. S., Ch., 111; 16 Jur. 225. And see S. C. 11 Beav. 371; 18 L. J., N. S., Ch., 73; 12 Jur. 969.

1. Where executors were empowered to lend such parts of the trust funds as they should think proper to one of the cestuis que trustent, and did so, and he employed the loan in trade:—Held, that the case was to be considered as if he were a stranger, and that he was not liable to account to the estate for the profits of the loan in trade. Parker v. Blozham, 20 Beav. 295.

2. Though the employment of a trust fund in trade by a firm is technically a breach of trust, yet if the amount of profit attributable to capital alone is not ascertainable, and the trustees acted bonâ fide and accounted to the cestui que trust for the value of her share with 5 per cent. compound interest, the Court would not call upon them for an account of the profits, so as to enable her to exercise an option between the profits and the compound interest. Vyse v. Foster, 42 L. J., Ch., 245; 8 L. R., Ch., 309; 21 W. R. 207; 27 L. T., N. S., 774.

II. PROFITS.

3. Trustees cannot deal with trust fund for their own benefit; if stock is purchased with trust money, in whatever name it may stand, the profits belong to fund. Phayre v. Peres, 3 Dow 128; 1 Bli. N. S. 594.

4. Both the trustee and the assignee are responsible to the cestui que trust for profits subsequent to an assignment in breach of trust. Vandebende v. Livingston, 3 Swan 625.

5. Profit derived by a trustee, either from the trust property or from his office of trustee, belongs to the cestui que trust. Sudgen v. Crossland, 3 Sm. & G. 192.

6. It is no answer to the rule, that persons standing in the situation of trustees or agents must account to their cestuis que trustent or principals, or for all benefit which they themselves obtain by virtue of that character, that in the course of acquiring the benefit which has been derived by the trustee or agent, he incurred a possibility of loss; it is sufficient, if the transaction has resulted in gain obtained by virtue of the trusteeship or agency, to give the benefit to the cestuis que trustent. Williams v. Stevens, 1 L. R., P. C., 352; 15 W. R. 409; 36 L. J., P. C., 21; 4 Moo. P. C., N. S., 235.

7. A sum of 10,000*l.* trust money was agreed to be laid out in land and settled, but the trustees bought South Sea stock with the money, which increased to 30,000*l.* As the trust would have suffered by the fall, so shall it have the benefit of the rise of this stock. Anon., 1 P. W. 648.

8. The sole proprietor of a recipe for medicine assigned it on the marriage of his daughter to trustees for her and her husband for their lives, and then to their children. The mother destroyed the recipe, but communicated verbally the contents to the eldest for the benefit of the younger children. Upon bill filed by the younger children against the eldest, he was declared to hold secret in trust for the settlement, and was decreed to account for profits since mother's death; and as a sale was impracticable, an issue was directed to ascertain the value of the secret. Green v.

Folgham, 1 Sim. & S. 398. S. C. nom. Green v. Church, 1 L. J., Ch., 203.

9. A trustee entered into a contract for the sale of trust property, and it was agreed that the purchaser should, out of the purchase money, retain a private debt due to him from the trustee. On a bill by the trustee:—Held, that this Court would not decree the specific performance of such a contract. Thompson v. Blackstone, 6 Beav. 470.

10. E. C. assigned a legacy to A. B. upon trust to pay a debt due to him; but before the execution of the deed, L., another creditor of E. C., assigned his debt to A. B. for a sum considerably less than its amount. The debtor and creditors were parties to this transaction. Under a decree made in the cause the chief clerk certified that A. B. was entitled to the full amount of the debt assigned by L.; and on motion to vary the certificate, on the ground that A. B. was, when he purchased the debt, acting as trustee for E. C., and was therefore only entitled to the amount actually paid, it was held that A. B. was entitled to the full amount of the debt. Crompton v. Huber, 1 Jur., N. S., 465; 3 W. R. 347.

11. Sale of a testator's share in a partnership trade, and the property belonging to it, by his executors to his partners for the purpose of being re-sold to one of his executors, set aside, and his estate held entitled to his aliquot proportion of the subsequent profits, as if the partnership had continued. Interest allowed at 5 per cent. on sums paid out of his estate. Cook v. Collingridge, Jac. 607; 1 L. J., Ch., 74.

12. Trustee of an infant having saved 3,000*l.* out of the profits of his estate, lays it out in a purchase of lands lying near the infant's estate, with the consent of his grandmother, declaring the trust for the benefit of the infant, if he, when at age, shall agree to it; infant dies within age; the trustees shall account to the infant's executors for the 3,000*l.*, but the profits of the land set off against the interest. Winchelsea v. Norcliffe, 1 Vern. 435.

13. Where executor or trustee, entrusted with disposition of some church preferments, made a presentation to A., under a secret condition for his own benefit, the presentation was set aside, and he was decreed to present a more proper person. Richardson v. Chapman, 7 Bro. P. C. 317.

14. A. bequeathed a leasehold interest in a colliery to B. and C. upon certain trusts, and appointed B., C., and D. his son executors. B. and C. renounced the trust and did not prove. D. proved the will and entered into possession of the property. He made a profit of the colliery and continued to work at a profit, although it ought to have been sold twelve months after the death of A.:—Held, that he could not make a profit of his trust; that the clear proceeds of the colliery formed part of A.'s personal estate; and that, although the lease of the colliery ought to have been sold twelve months after the death of A., yet, as that was not done, its value would not be ascertained as at the time when it ought to have been realised, but that the amount actually realised by D. must be accounted for by him, he being allowed his reasonable expenses. Lord v. Wightwick, 23 L. J., Ch., 235; 18 Jur. 253; 2 Eq. Rep. 349.

15. The corporation of the city of Toronto, in Canada, was authorised by an Act of the Legislature of Canada to issue debentures to assist in the construction of a railway. At that period B. was the mayor and a member of the finance committee, and took an active part in passing a bye-law, which authorised the issue by the corporation of debentures for the completion of the railway. B. at that time was engaged in co-partnership with H., and their firm purchased of the contractors for the railway company some of the debentures so issued which had been assigned to the contractors by the corporation. B. and his partner afterwards sold the debentures, and thereby realised a large profit. This transaction was without the knowledge of the corporation:—Held, that B. must, in the circumstances of his being a member of the corporation, and the manner in which he acted throughout the transaction, be treated as the trustee of the corporation, and was not entitled to any benefit received from the sale of the debentures, and was liable to account to the corporation for the ascertained and unquestioned amount of profit made and received by him in the transaction in which he had engaged in respect of the sale of the corporation debentures. Bones v. Toronto (City), 11 Moo. P. C. 463.

Held, also, that it made no difference that the profit from the sale of the debentures was made by B. and his partner jointly, and not by B. alone. Ib.

1 The rule of the Court is imperative, that, in the absence of any contract for that purpose, no person can, by acting as trustee, derive any pecuniary benefit to himself. Crosskill v. Bomer, Bomer v. Turner, 32 Beav. 86.

Three trustees, two of whom were bankers, were empowered to carry on a business, and to borrow money from any bankers or other persons for that purpose. The bankers made advances of money to the trust at compound interest:—Held, that, having regard to their fiduciary character, they could make no profit, and were entitled to simple interest only on their advances. Ib.

2. Nothing can be better settled, or more in conformity with the dictates of justice, than the rule, that persons standing in the situation of trustees or agents must account to their principals or cestuis que trustent for all the benefits which they themselves obtain by virtue of that character or relation. Williams v. Stevens, 12 Jur., N. S., 952.

It is no answer to say, that in the course of acquiring the benefit which has been derived by the trustee or the agent, he incurred a possibility of loss. That may well be; but if the transaction has resulted in gain, and is one in which the trustee or the agent was in reality enabled to accomplish what he has done by virtue of his trusteeship or his agency, the consequence results, that the whole benefit of the transaction belongs to the person whom he must be considered to have represented throughout. Ib.

3. A tenant for life of a trust estate mortgaged it, and it was sold by the mortgagee. After the sale the purchaser and mortgagee, for a nominal consideration, assigned to the tenant for life certain alleged arrears of interest and profits of part of the trust fund, which, as the plaintiff alleged, the trustees had made in excess of the interest for which they had accounted. A bill filed against the trustees, on the title conferred by this assignment, for an account of their profits, was dismissed with costs. Hill v. Boyle, 4 L. R., Eq., 260.

4. A trustee who was a solicitor, sold out stock forming part of the trust estate and invested it on mortgage. He acted in the transaction as solicitor for the mortgagor as well as for the trust estate, but made no charge against the trust estate for his services, being paid for them by the mortgagor. He also derived some profit as a solicitor in consequence of the employment of part of the mortgaged estate for building purposes:—Held, that the plaintiff could not charge him with the profit thus made, as having been made by the employment of the trust estate in his business. Whitney v. Smith, 4 L. R., Ch., 513; 17 W. R. 579; 20 L. T., N. S., 468.

5. The plaintiff was tenant for life under the settlement executed on her marriage, part of the settled property consisting of a sum of 15,500*l.* This sum was allowed to remain in the hands of the plaintiff's father, who employed it in trade, he covenanting at his death to pay it to the trustees. Upon the death of the father, 10,000*l.*, part of the 15,500*l.*, was allowed to remain in the business, such investment being unauthorised by the settlement. Large profits accrued to the 10,000*l.*, some of which, with the plaintiff's consent, had been paid to her husband:—Held, that the plaintiff was entitled in respect of income to 4 per cent. on the original 10,000*l.* and upon all accretions of profits retained and employed in the business, and that the rest of the profits must be regarded as capital subject to the trust of the settlement, and must be made good out of the husband's estate, so far as he had received any part thereof. Re Hill, Hill v. Hill, 50 L. J., Ch., 551; 45 L. T. 126.

6. A trust was created by a debtor for the benefit of creditors, and the trustee had the power to bind the debtor personally and heritably for the benefit of the trust. By the terms of the trust deed, the trustee was likewise required to do all in his power to keep the residue of the trust estate as large as possible for the debtor. The trustee purchased an annuity granted by the debtor after the date of the trust deed. The trustee died. His representatives sought to enforce the annuity against the grantor. It was held that they could not do so, and a decree of the Court of Session affirming their right, was reversed, a trustee being bound not to do anything which can place him in a position inconsistent with the interests of the trust. Hamilton v. Wright, 9 Cl. & F. 111.

7. A trustee will not be permitted to place himself in a position in which his personal interest will conflict with those of the trust; and if he does place himself in such a position, and acquires benefits from so doing, those benefits will be transferred to the trust estate. Bennett v. Gaslight & Coke Co., 52 L. J., Ch., 98; 48 L. T. 156.

On the insolvency of a person who had a lucrative agency agreement with a gas company for the sale by him, at a commission, of their sulphate of ammonia, the company renewed the agency agreement for a limited period to two of the trustees of the insolvent's estate appointed by the creditors' trust deed for the benefit of the estate. Before the expiration of that agreement and the winding-up of the trust, one of those two trustees obtained for his firm from the company a fresh agency agreement, to commence from the expiration of that agreement, and to be on less lucrative, though still beneficial, terms:—Held, that the trustee was not at liberty, by obtaining a fresh agreement for the benefit of his own firm, to render it contrary to his own interest to press for a renewal of the old agreement, or a grant of a new one, for the benefit of the trust estate, and that the interest of the trustee under the fresh agreement must be transferred to the trust estate. Hamilton v. Wright (9 Cl. & F. 111) followed. Id.

1. Where trustees acquire a benefit as ostensible owners of trust property, that benefit cannot be retained by them, but must be surrendered to those who are beneficially interested. Aberdeen Town Council v. Aberdeen University, 2 L. R., App. Cas. (Sc.), 544.

III. SET-OFF BETWEEN PROFIT AND LOSS ON VARIOUS INVESTMENTS.

2. When trust funds are invested on several improper securities, the trustees, in accounting, are not entitled to set off the gain on one against the loss on the other. Robinson v. Robinson, 11 Beav. 371; 18 L. J., N. S., Ch., 73; 12 Jur. 969. And see S. C. 1 De G. M. & G. 247; 21 L. J., N. S., Ch., 111; 16 Jur. 285.

3. A testator gave the residue of his personal estate to trustees, directing them to convert it into money, and invest the proceeds in Government or real security, of which they were to stand possessed, upon trust for A., during her life, and after her death for B. The trustees permitted a share, which the testator had in an Indian Loan, bearing interest at 10½ per cent., to remain for several years on that security, during which time they paid to A. the interest at 10½ per cent. which it yielded annually; and the loan being afterwards paid off, they invested the money in 3 per cent. at a time when the funds were so low, that the amount of stock purchased was considerably greater than if the conversion had taken place at the end of a year from the testator's death:—Held, that the tenant for life was not entitled to the actual interest which the money yielded, while it remained on the Indian security; but only to the dividends of so much 3 per cent. stock as would have been purchased with it, at the end of a year from the testator's death; that the trustees ought to be charged with the whole of the stock actually purchased, and all the sums actually received in respect of the Indian rate of interest, and that they ought to be allowed in their discharge as payments for the tenant for life, not the sums which they had in fact paid her, but only a sum equal to what she would have received for dividends if the money had been transferred from the Indian security, and invested in the 3 per cent. stock at the end of a year from the testator's death. Dimes v. Scott, 4 Russ. 195.

4. Account decreed against a trustee, who having engaged the trust property in an adventure, afterwards renounced it for the trust, and declared it to be on his own account, though no part of the trust money actually laid out. Wilkinson v. Stafford, 1 Ves. J. 32.

5. Where lands are devised in trust to maintain an infant till twenty-three, and then to account, and for want of a devise over, the lands belong to the heir; the infant and heir may have an account in the meantime, upon suggesting the insolvency of the trustee. Tilley v. Simpson, Mos. 244.

6. Where property is vested in trustees for the benefit of A.,—on a bill filed for the purpose of establishing securities given by A., the Court will not direct any accounts against him in his absence, nor appoint a receiver. Brown v. Blount, 9 L. J., Ch., 74.

7. The purchaser of scrip shares in a provisionally registered railway company neglected to send in his scrip to be registered, after the Act of Parliament incorporating the company had been obtained. The company, in consequence, registered the original allottee of the shares as the owner liable to the company for calls, and, in compliance with the provisions of the Railway Act, sent him the sealed certificate of ownership. The allottee, being unable to find the scripholder, sold the shares in the market:—Held, in a suit afterwards brought by the scripholder, that the allottee was a trustee of the proceeds of the shares for the plaintiff, and liable as such to account; held, also, that the plaintiff was entitled, under the circumstances, to the costs of suit as against the defendant, although the sum recovered did not exceed 9*l.* Beckett v. Bilbrough, 8 Hare 188; 19 L. J., N. S., Ch., 522; 14 Jur. 238.

8. Bill by cestuis que trustent and two of the trustees under a marriage settlement, against the executrix of the settlor and the remaining trustee, praying payment of the trust money, or a general administration of the settlor's assets, and seeking to impeach a prior security, claimed over the settlor's property by the defendant trustee:—Held, that a demurrer by the trustee for multifariousness and for general want of equity, must be overruled: first, because the matters contained in the bill were all matters of account, and the defendant was interested in taking the account; and, secondly, because there was a general equity against him in his character of trustee. But, semble, that a partial demurrer for want of equity would have been sustainable. Addison v. Walker, 4 Y. & Coll. 442; 10 L. J., N. S., Exch. Eq., 73.

1. A testator, who died in 1852, bequeathed all the residue of his real and personal estate to trustees, unto and to the use of his granddaughter, who, with her husband, in 1856, requested the trustees to render an account. The trustees offered to allow them, "or any other person, or an accountant named by them," to inspect the accounts, but the acting trustee refused to allow their solicitor to do so, on the ground that he had lent money to them and was not inquiring in their interest, but in his own. A bill was filed for an account, which was ordered, and also that the defendants pay all the costs up to the hearing. Kemp v. Burn, 9 Jur., N. S., 375; 11 W. R. 278.

2. Account decreed against a trustee, who having engaged the trust property in an adventure, afterwards renounced it for the trust, and declared it to be on his own account, though no part of the trust money actually laid out. Wilkinson v. Stafford, 1 Ves. J. 32.

3. Quere, the trustee of leaseholds settled to separate use of married woman, bound to see that head-rents are paid, or liable as for wilful default, if the premises are evicted for non-payment of rent. Booth v. Purser, 1 Ir. Eq. Rep. 40.

4. In ordinary cases it is the duty of trustees to get in the funds, but where under the terms of the instrument constituting the trust it is the duty of the trustees not to do so if in their discretion they consider it inexpedient, misconduct on their part must be proved in order to render them liable for loss, and the ordinary rules as to wilful neglect and default have little application. A cestui que trust sought to charge a trustee with breach of trust in not recovering moneys, which were recoverable only in equity:—Held, that as under the circumstances the cestui que trust might have himself sued, he could not make the trustee liable for not doing what he could at any time have himself done. Paddon v. Richardson, 1 Jur. 1192; 7 De G. M. & G. 563; 3 Eq. Rep. 933.

5. Trustees are mere stake-holders, and cannot be affected with more than they actually received without wilful default. Sed quere. Pybus v. Smith, 1 Ves. J. 189.

6. A creditor, who makes out a prima facie case of misconduct in trustees, is entitled to a decree that they shall account for whatever they might have received without their wilful default or neglect; though, in a prior suit instituted by another creditor, and conducted without collusion, a common decree for an account has been previously made against them. Shepherd v. Tongood, T. & R. 379.

7. A bill was filed against trustees, praying that the amount of the trust fund which the trustees had, "or but for their wilful default might have, received might be ascertained." At the hearing the bill was dismissed as against one trustee, and the amount and particulars of the trust fund were directed to be ascertained. Nothing was said about wilful default, nor did the trustee ask that the bill might be dismissed as to wilful default. The Master made his report, which stated certain facts, and referred to certain documents, from which, it was alleged, it would appear that there had been wilful default. At the hearing, upon further directions, a decree was made, referring it to the Master, to inquire whether the trustee "could with the diligence, and without wilful neglect or default, have received" more than a particular stated fund; but, upon appeal it was held that the direction as to wilful default should be struck out of the decree. Coope v. Carter, 21 L. J., N. S., Ch., 570.

As a general rule, in order to obtain a direction for inquiry as to wilful default against an executor or trustee, the bill must allege a case, pray for it, and one case, at least, must be proved; and, semble, that if from admission or proof a suspicion arises whether wilful default has or has not been committed, and it appears likely that further evidence can be obtained, the Court ought to direct an inquiry short of directing wilful default, but in such a way as to call the defendant's attention to it, with the view to ground thereon a new order at a future stage, directing an inquiry for wilful default. Id.

8. P., a member of a firm of bankers, was trustee of a marriage settlement; and, by a breach of trust, paid a sum of 17,000*l.*, part of the trust fund, into the bank to his separate account. S., another partner of the firm, subsequently was introduced into the trust; and a deed was executed, reciting that the trust fund consisted of 13,000*l.*, and assigning certain bond debts belonging to the firm to the trustees by way of security for the 13,000*l.* These bonds were placed in a box, and remained at the bankers'; but all except one were afterwards paid off, and other bonds substituted for them. It did not appear that S. had any notice that any further sum than 13,000*l.* ever belonged to the trust. Afterwards the firm became bankrupt, and new trustees of the settlement were appointed:—Held, first, that the new trustees could prove against S.'s separate estate for the 13,000*l.*, but not for the remaining sum of 4,000*l.* Secondly, that as to the original bond, which still remained, and of which P. was sole obligee, he was both reputed and true owner, and therefore the "order and disposition" clause of the Bankruptcy Consolidation Act did not apply. Thirdly, that as to the substituted bonds, of which the firm were obligees, the firm were both reputed and true owners, but fixed with a trust for the cestui que trustent of the settlement; and therefore, in this case also the "order and disposition" clause did not apply. Fourthly, that a trustee who comes in as a new trustee of a settlement in which there is a covenant to settle after acquired property, will not be held liable for wilful default in not securing any property that may fall in either before or after he has been appointed a trustee, unless he has had notice, or reasonable ground for suspicion, that such property exists. Epp. Geaves, Re Straham, 4 W. R. 536; 2 Jur., N. S., 651; 25 L. J., Bky., 53; 8 De G. M. & G. 291.

1. The surviving trustee of a will cannot be made liable for wilful default in respect of purchase money which was received from the sale of part of the testator's estate by a deceased co-trustee alone and misappropriated, though he joined in the receipt for the sake of conformity. Re Fryer, Martindale v. Piquot, 5 W. R. 552; 26 L. J., Ch., 398; 3 Jur., N. S., 485.

2. An executrix and trustee under a will directing an immediate sale, allows her co-trustee to sell and retain the money, joins in the conveyance and signs the receipt, and also in an assignment of railway shares where the receipt of both was necessary. On an administration summons and decree for common accounts:—Held, that she could not be made liable for wilful neglect or default on such a decree; and a certificate of the chief clerk declaring her liable disallowed. Blakely v. Blakely, 3 W. R. 288; 1 Jur., N. S., 368.

3. Where an auctioneer trustee sold property of a testator, and died thirteen months afterwards insolvent, with the purchase money in his hands, his co-trustee not having in the meantime taken any proceedings to compel him to pay over or invest the money:—Held, that there had been wilful default on the part of the surviving trustee, and that he must be charged with all moneys which, but for such default, he might have received. Williams v. Higgins, 16 W. R. 390; 18 L. T., N. S., 525.

4. When on a bill, against a firm of solicitors who were the trustees of a settlement, for an account, but in which there was no charge of wilful neglect or default, and no relief prayed as against it, the plaintiff succeeded in establishing his case: the Court directed an inquiry as to the defendants' dealings with the trust fund, and if on taking the accounts it should appear that they had been guilty of wilful neglect or default in the discharge of their duty, they should be charged, in taking the accounts, with such wilful neglect or default. Nash v. Howell, 21 L. T., N. S., 743.

5. A solicitor purchased an estate from his client and took possession thereof: the sale was set aside:—Held, that A. was chargeable with the rents which, without wilful default, he might have received, although no special charge of wilful default was made by the bill. Adams v. Sworder, 3 N. R. 623; 12 W. R. 615; 10 L. T., N. S., 49; 4 De G. & S. 448; 23 L. J., Ch., 236.

6. A bill to administer the estate of a testator, charging the trustee with wilful default, was filed by a person interested in the estate in remainder, the tenants for life not being parties to the suit:—Held, that the decree must be confined to an account of wilful default as to the capital, and that no relief could be obtained with respect to the income of the estate. Whitney v. Smith, 4 L. R., Ch., 513; 17 W. R. 579; 20 L. T., N. S., 468.

2. Allegations in Pleading.

7. A bill was filed against trustees, praying that the amount of the trust fund which the trustees "had, or but for their wilful neglect or default might have, received might be ascertained." At the hearing the bill was dismissed as against one trustee, and the amount and particulars of the trust fund were directed to be ascertained. Nothing was said about wilful default, nor did the trustee ask that the bill might be dismissed as to wilful default. The Master made his report, which stated certain facts, and referred to certain documents, from which it was alleged that it would appear that there had been wilful default. At the hearing upon further directions, a decree was made referring it to the Master to inquire whether the trustee "could with due diligence, and without wilful neglect or default, have received" more than a particular stated fund; but upon appeal it was held, that the direction as to wilful default should be struck out of the decree. Coope v. Carter, 2 De G. M. & G. 292; 21 L. J., Ch., 570.

As a general rule, in order to obtain a direction for inquiry as to wilful default against an executor or trustee, the bill must allege a case, pray for it, and one case at least must be proved; and semble, that if from admission or proof a suspicion arises whether wilful default has or has not been committed, and it appears likely that further evidence can be obtained, the Court ought to direct an inquiry short of directing wilful default, but in such a way as to call the defendant's attention to it, with the view to ground thereon a new order at a future stage, directing an inquiry as to wilful default. Ib.

8. In order to obtain an inquiry as to wilful neglect and default, it is necessary that the bill should allege at least one specific act of wilful neglect and default. Dicta in Coope v. Carter (2 De G. M. & G. 292) explained. Massey v. Massey, 1 N. R. 15.

9. The rule of the Court is, that in order to obtain an inquiry as to wilful default, the plaintiff must allege a case for such an inquiry, must pray for it, and must prove at least one act of wilful default; and although it may not be necessary in order to obtain a preliminary inquiry upon which an inquiry as to wilful default may be afterwards founded, that he should conclusively establish such an act, yet there must be such a case made out with respect to some specific item alleged in the bill as raises a doubt in the mind of the Court. Sleight v. Lamson, 3 Kay & J. 292; 26 L. J., Ch., 553.

Lord Eldon's rule, that in order to obtain an inquiry as to wilful neglect and default against an executor or a trustee, the plaintiff must allege and prove at least one act of wilful neglect or default, is still the rule, and was not intended to be relaxed by Coope v. Carter (2 De G. M. & G. 292). Ib.

Dicta in that case, from which the contrary has been inferred, explained. Ib.

10. In order to let in evidence of wilful default by a trustee there must be a specific allegation of default. Lambert v. Lambert, 10 Ir. Ch. R. 500.

A general charge of wilful omission to let land is not sufficient as a ground for evidence of any particular omission. Id.

3. Practice.

1. On motion of trustee under a will for Master to take accounts, refused; wilful default being charged against him, and a cross-bill filed. Wallis v. Sarel, 8 Jur. 640.

2. A petition to carry into execution the trusts of a will, even though it seeks to charge a trustee for wilful default, may be rendered to the Master under the 15th section of the Chancery Regulation Act (Ireland). Johnston v. Johnston, 5 Ir. Ch. R. 493.

3. Special decree in a bill for an account, where the accounts and vouchers were alleged, under special circumstances, to be beyond the control and power of the accounting party. The plaintiff conveyed his property to trustees for the benefit of his creditors. The trustees, who were authorised to employ an agent, committed the management of the property to an agent. The agent rendered his account to the defendants, and left England taking with him the vouchers. The trustees being unable, from the absence of the documents, to furnish a satisfactory account, the plaintiff asked that they might be charged for what, without their wilful default, they might have received. The Court, however, in the first instance, made a special decree ordering a general account; and if, in taking the account, it should appear that the defendants could not render a satisfactory account by reason of the non-production of the documents and vouchers, it was referred to the Master to inquire, whether it was by the neglect or default of the trustees that they were unable to render a better account, with liberty to state special circumstances. Turner v. Corney, 5 Beav. 615.

4. A creditor who makes out a prima facie case of misconduct in trustees, is entitled to a decree that they shall account for whatever they might have received without their wilful default or neglect, though in a prior suit instituted by another creditor and considered without collusion, a common decree for an account has been previously made against them. Shepherd v. Tomgood, T. & R. 379.

5. When a decree for the common accounts against trustees, alleged to have committed a breach of trust, has been directed at the hearing of a cause, the Court has no power to vary or add to the decree in chambers, by directing an account as for wilful default. Cary v. Knowles, 15 L. T., N. S., 482.

III. OTHER MATTERS.

6. A mere agent of the trustee may not be accountable to the cestui que trust, but otherwise with respect to a substituted trustee, who accounts to nobody else. Myler v. Fitzpatrick, 6 Madd. 360.

7. A. is tenant for life of a trust, remainder to his sons. A., before a son is born, brings a bill against the trustees, and an account is decreed and afterwards taken. This account shall bind the sons, for all persons that could be made parties were parties to the suit. Leonard v. Sussex, 2 Vern. 527.

8. Trustees entered into possession of rent and profits, and paid them over under a trust deed to a married woman to her separate use: it afterwards appeared that she was not entitled to receive them, but that upon the true construction of a will they ought to have gone to another person. That person filed a bill, and a decree was made in favour, but an account of the rents and profits was only ordered from the date of the filing of the bill:—Held, that whether an account should be directed from the filing of the bill, or from an anterior time, is a matter of discretion, and that the direction had been rightly exercised. Vernon v. Wright, 7 H. L. Ca. 35.

9. To a bill by cestui que trust against the representatives of the trustees, charging breaches of trust, and asking, as consequential to other relief, that they might admit assets or set out accounts, one of the defendants put in an answer denying the breaches of trust, and alleging that the accounts had been settled, and a release given in the lifetime of the trustee, and refusing to admit assets or set out accounts. Exceptions to such answer were allowed, and the Court refused to let them stand over till the hearing, on the ground that the plaintiffs were entitled, before going to the expense of establishing their case, to know whether there would be assets to satisfy their claim in case of success. Brookes v. Boucher, 8 Jur., N. S., 639; 31 L. J., Ch., 821; 10 W. R. 708.

10. A testator made two persons his executors, and the same persons, with one other, the trustees of his real and personal estate. A decree was made for the administration of the estate, and the usual accounts ordered to be taken. The chief clerk required separate accounts to be taken of the receipts and payments of the executors, and of the receipts and payments of the trustees:—Held, that the accounts of the executors and trustees were rightly taken separately, and that the percentage for court fees was payable both on the gross receipts of the executors, and on the gross receipts of the trustees; and that the receipts of the trustees properly included (1) the residue handed over to them by the executors, (2) temporary loans advanced to them by their bankers, and (3) sums transferred from the trustees' deposit account at their bankers to their drawing account. Armitage v. Elworthy, 13 L. R., Ch. D., 91; 41 L. T. 608; 28 W. R. 283.

I. INDEMNITY CLAUSE.

1. Construction of a clause, giving trustees liberty to forbear enforcing payment; that it was for their indemnity, as, if with a view to insolvency, it might amount to fraud. Eap. Alook, 1 Ves. & B. 179.
2. The usual indemnity clause does not exonerate one of two trustees from a loss occasioned by a debt due from the other having been suffered to remain outstanding. Mucklow v. Fuller, Jac. 198.
3. Where it is a term of trust deed that each trustee shall be answerable only for one moiety, the Court will not extend the liability. Birle v. Betty, 6 Madd. 90.
4. Where testator had directed that his executors should not be liable for each other's acts, one of them, who was in good credit at the time, having called in a mortgage, and received the money, sends round the assignment to his co-executors, who execute it and sign a receipt:—Held, that as no part of the money should come to their hands, they should not be answerable. Wesley v. Clarke, 1 Eden 356.
5. Trustees made personally responsible for the consequences of their neglect to enforce a covenant contained in a marriage settlement. By a marriage settlement it was covenanted and agreed that 5,000*l.* consols, part of the wife's property, should be transferred to trustees upon certain trusts for the husband, and wife, and children. At the time of the settlement a sum of 4,946*l.* was standing in the name of the wife, but the trustees took no steps to enforce a transfer, and it was sold out and misapplied by the husband:—Held, that the trustees were personally responsible for the loss; and, secondly, that they were not relieved from their liability by the trustee indemnity clause declaring that they shall not be liable "for any casual or involuntary loss without their wilful default; but for such moneys only as should actually come to their hands." Fennick v. Greenwell, 10 Beav. 412; 11 Jur. 620.
6. The trustee indemnity clause does not exonerate a trustee from the consequences of a breach of trust. Brumridge v. Brumridge, 27 Beav. 5.
7. Trustees lent trust moneys on a second mortgage of house property greatly out of repair, and the principal part was lost:—Held, that they were liable as for a breach of trust, notwithstanding a trustee indemnity clause declaring they should not be liable for the insufficiency or deficiency in value of any securities, except through their wilful default. Drozier v. Brereton, 15 Beav. 221.

In charging trustees for breaches of trust and the costs of suit, it is immaterial how the trust was created, and whether for valuable consideration or by the voluntary gift of the trustees themselves. Id.

8. The indemnity of the trustees under a deed of trust does not give the persons employed by them a right as creditors against the trust fund. Worrall v. Harford, 8 Ves. 4.

9. The ordinary trustee indemnity clause affords no security to a trustee who neglects to take the necessary steps to secure the trust fund. Dia v. Burford, 19 Beav. 409.

Where a person nominated executor accepts the executorship, and assents to a bequest, and thereby becomes a trustee of the fund bequeathed, the rule as to the non-liability of executors for the receipts of their co-executors ceases to apply, and it becomes the duty of the trustee by notice or otherwise to make it impossible for a co-trustee to receive and misapply the fund, and he will not be protected against the consequences of neglect so to do by the ordinary trustee indemnity clause. Id.

10. If trustees lending money on mortgage have the same solicitor as the mortgagor, they must take the utmost precaution; if they trust implicitly in the solicitor, however high his reputation, they will be held responsible for any loss which his fraud may occasion. The indemnity clause usually inserted in settlements will not protect them. Sutton v. Wilders, 41 L. J., Ch., 30; 12 L. R., Eq., 373; 25 L. T. 292; 19 W. R. 1021.

11. Trustees made personally liable for loss arising from placing trust moneys with bankers on a deposit account, which was not authorised by the will, and that, notwithstanding a trustee indemnity clause against losses by a banker of moneys deposited for safe custody. Rehden v. Wesley, 29 Beav. 213.

12. L., by will, in 1854, after appointing three trustees, declared "such" (sic in the will, but "each" in the draft) trustee should be answerable only for losses arising from his own default, and not for involuntary acts, or for the acts or defaults of his co-trustees or trustee, and particularly that any trustee who should pay over to his co-trustee, or should do or concur in any act enabling his co-trustee to receive any moneys for the general purposes of her will, should not be obliged to see to the due application thereof, nor should such trustee be subsequently rendered responsible by an express notice or intimation of the actual misapplication of the same moneys. The three trustees joined in signing and giving receipts to two insurance companies for the two sums of money paid by them; but two of the trustees permitted their co-trustee to obtain the money without ascertaining whether he had duly invested it. That trustee having misapplied the money, a bill was filed for the purpose of making his co-trustees personally liable:—Held, that according to the true construction of the indemnity clause contained in the will, their concurrence in enabling their co-trustee to receive the money did not make them liable for the misapplication of the fund. Wilkins v. Hogg, 8 Jur., N. S., 25; 31 L. J., Ch., 41; 10 W. R. 47; 5 L. T., N. S., 467. Affirming 3 Giff. 116; 7 Jur., N. S., 566; 30 L. J., Ch., 492; 9 W. R. 688; 4 L. T., N. S., 434.

There are three modes in which a trustee may become liable, according to the ordinary rules of the court: first, where one trustee receives trust money, and hands it over to a co-trustee without securing its due application; secondly, where he permits a co-trustee to receive trust money without making due inquiry as to his dealing with it; thirdly, where he becomes aware of a breach of trust, either committed or meditated, and abstains from taking the necessary steps to obtain restitution; but the operation of these rules was excluded by the indemnity clauses contained in the will. Id.

1. A testator authorised his two trustees and executors, A. and D., to carry on his business, giving them full discretion as to its management, and power to employ collectors of debts and accountants. The will contained an indemnity clause, that each trustee should be answerable only for losses arising from his own default, and that any trustee who should pay over to his co-trustee, or should concur in any act enabling him to receive any moneys for the purposes of the will, should not be obliged to the application thereof, nor should such trustee be rendered responsible by an express notice of the actual misapplication of the same moneys. The business was carried on, with the consent of the beneficiaries, by one trustee, A., the testator's son, and an account was opened at the bank, and a letter signed by both executors and trustees, authorising the bank to honour the signature of the one trustee, viz., A., the son. Under this authority the trustee (A.) drew out, nominally for the business, large sums of money, which he misappropriated to his own purposes:—Held (following Wilkins v. Hogg, 3 Giff. 116), that in the absence of proof of gross negligence or personal misconduct on the part of the trustee D., he was fully protected by the Indemnity Clause, from liability in respect of the loss to the estate, occasioned by the default of his co-trustee, A. Pass v. Dundas, 48 L. T. 665; 29 W. R. 332.

II. EXPRESS AGREEMENTS BY CESTUI QUE TRUST FOR.

2. A trustee of two separate funds held not entitled to require from the cestui que trust of both funds a covenant of indemnity in respect of dealings with one of the funds before paying over the other fund, as to which there was no question; and the trustee was made to pay the costs of a suit instituted by the cestui que trust to obtain payment of the latter fund without any such indemnity. Price v. Loaden, 21 Beav. 508.

3. Where, by the terms of a marriage settlement, it was declared that a trustee should stand possessed of a debt, upon trust, in the first instance, to call in or compel payment of such debt, unless the cestuis que trustent consented to its remaining outstanding, and the trustee is requested by the cestuis que trustent to call in the debt, he is not entitled to an indemnity from them previously to his bringing an action, if necessary, for the same; and a trustee, under such circumstances, was made to pay the costs of a suit made necessary by his neglecting to bring the action. Kirby v. Mash, 3 Y. & Coll. 295; 8 L. J., N. S., Exch. Eq., 33; 3 Jur. 221.

4. A marriage being in contemplation, A. B., the intended wife, conveyed property to trustees for herself until marriage, and then for her separate use for life, without power of anticipation, and, subject to certain interests to her husband and children, if any, for herself. Before the marriage took effect, the trustees committed a breach of trust, against which A. B., by her solicitor, gave an indemnity. The marriage took effect two years after the settlement, and the husband died without children:—Held, that the indemnity was valid and subsisting, and that the trustees had been released from their liability. Ghost v. Waller, 9 Beav. 497.

5. Trustees of a marriage settlement transferred the trust fund to new trustees who were Americans, and apprehending this to be a breach of trust, they got from the husband a deposit of tobacco warrants, with liberty to sell. The trustees sold the tobacco warrants, and invested the produce in Exchequer bills, but it was afterwards decided, by a Court of Equity in England, that at the time of the execution of the deposit, no breach of trust had been committed, and that the old trustees had then no interest in the fund:—Held, that as there was no consideration for the deposit or agreement, the old trustees had no right, as against the husband or his representatives, to retain the Exchequer bills for the benefit of the infant children of the marriage. Meinertshagen v. Davis, 1 Colly. 353; 13 L. J., N. S., Ch., 457; 8 Jur. 973.

6. Where cestuis que trustent have entered into separate covenants by the trustees to pay, in certain proportions, the expenses of the trustees, and to indemnify them against liabilities incurred in the execution of trusts necessarily involving expense on their part, the trustees are entitled to file a bill against such cestuis que trustent jointly for a general account of the trust, in order that if the assets are exhausted, the liability of the cestuis que trustent under the covenants may be ascertained once for all. Singleton v. Selwyn, 9 Jur., N. S., 1149.

The existence in such a case of a creditors' suit for administering the trust does not necessarily prevent the trustees from instituting such suit on their own behalf. Id.

7. A testator by his will directed his trustees (in case E. A. should marry as therein mentioned, and her intended husband should, "well and effectually, and to the good liking of his said trustees, settle or secure to be paid" to or for the issue of the marriage, a sum equal to the provision made for them by the testator) to transfer to the children of the marriage sums of stock, varying according to the number of the children, and not exceeding in the whole 8,000*l.* 3*l.* per cent. The husband gave his bond for the amount, the trustees giving their written approbation, "provided

Where a person nominated executor accepts the executorship, and assents to a bequest, and thereby becomes a trustee of the fund bequeathed, the rule as to the non-liability of executors for the receipts of their co-executors ceases to apply, and it becomes the duty of the trustee by notice or otherwise to make it impossible for a co-trustee to receive and misapply the fund, and he will not be protected against the consequences of neglect so to do by the ordinary trustee indemnity clause. Id.

10. If trustees lending money on mortgage have the same solicitor as the mortgagor, they must take the utmost precaution; if they trust implicitly in the solicitor, however high his reputation, they will be held responsible for any loss which his fraud may occasion. The indemnity clause usually inserted in settlements will not protect them. Sutton v. Wilders, 41 L. J., Ch., 30; 12 L. R., Eq., 373; 25 L. T. 292; 19 W. R. 1021.

11. Trustees made personally liable for loss arising from placing trust moneys with bankers on a deposit account, which was not authorised by the will, and that, notwithstanding a trustee indemnity clause against losses by a banker of moneys deposited for safe custody. Rohden v. Wesley, 29 Beav. 213.

12. L., by will, in 1854, after appointing three trustees, declared "such" (sic in the will, but "each" in the draft) trustee should be answerable only for losses arising from his own default, and not for involuntary acts, or for the acts or defaults of his co-trustees or trustee, and particularly that any trustee who should pay over to his co-trustee, or should do or concur in any act enabling his co-trustee to receive any moneys for the general purposes of her will, should not be obliged to see to the due application thereof, nor should such trustee be subsequently rendered responsible by an express notice or intimation of the actual misapplication of the same moneys. The three trustees joined in signing and giving receipts to two insurance companies for the two sums of money paid by them; but two of the trustees permitted their co-trustee to obtain the money without ascertaining whether he had duly invested it. That trustee having misapplied the money, a bill was filed for the purpose of making his co-trustees personally liable:—Held, that according to the true construction of the indemnity clause contained in the will, their concurrence in enabling their co-trustee to receive the money did not make them liable for the misapplication of the fund. Wilkins v. Hogg, 8 Jur., N. S., 25; 31 L. J., Ch., 41; 10 W. R. 47; 5 L. T., N. S., 467. Affirming 3 Giff. 116; 7 Jur., N. S., 566; 30 L. J., Ch., 492; 9 W. R. 688; 4 L. T., N. S., 434.

There are three modes in which a trustee may become liable, according to the ordinary rules of the court: first, where one trustee receives trust money, and hands it over to a co-trustee without securing its due application; secondly, where he permits a co-trustee to receive trust money without making due inquiry as to his dealing with it; thirdly, where he becomes aware of a breach of trust, either committed or meditated, and abstains from taking the necessary steps to obtain restitution; but the operation of these rules was excluded by the indemnity clauses contained in the will. Id.

1. A testator authorised his two trustees and executors, A. and D., to carry on his business, giving them full discretion as to its management, and power to employ collectors of debts and accountants. The will contained an indemnity clause, that each trustee should be answerable only for losses arising from his own default, and that any trustee who should pay over to his co-trustee, or should concur in any act enabling him to receive any moneys for the purposes of the will, should not be obliged to the application thereof, nor should such trustee be rendered responsible by an express notice of the actual misapplication of the same moneys. The business was carried on, with the consent of the beneficiaries, by one trustee, A., the testator's son, and an account was opened at the bank, and a letter signed by both executors and trustees, authorising the bank to honour the signature of the one trustee, viz., A., the son. Under this authority the trustee (A.) drew out, nominally for the business, large sums of money, which he misappropriated to his own purposes:—Held (following Wilkins v. Hogg, 3 Giff. 116), that in the absence of proof of gross negligence or personal misconduct on the part of the trustee D., he was fully protected by the Indemnity Clause, from liability in respect of the loss to the estate, occasioned by the defalcations of his co-trustee, A. Pass v. Dundas, 48 L. T. 665; 29 W. R. 332.

II. EXPRESS AGREEMENTS BY CESTUI QUE TRUST FOR.

2. A trustee of two separate funds held not entitled to require from the cestui que trust of both funds a covenant of indemnity in respect of dealings with one of the funds before paying over the other fund, as to which there was no question; and the trustee was made to pay the costs of a suit instituted by the cestui que trust to obtain payment of the latter fund without any such indemnity. Price v. Loaden, 21 Beav. 508.

3. Where, by the terms of a marriage settlement, it was declared that a trustee should stand possessed of a debt, upon trust, in the first instance, to call in or compel payment of such debt, unless the cestui que trustent consented to its remaining outstanding, and the trustee is requested by the cestui que trustent to call in the debt, he is not entitled to an indemnity from them previously to his bringing an action, if necessary, for the same; and a trustee, under such circumstances, was made to pay the costs of a suit made necessary by his neglecting to bring the action. Kirby v. Mash, 3 Y. & Coll. 295; 8 L. J., N. S., Exch. Eq., 33; 3 Jur. 221.

4. A marriage being in contemplation, A. B., the intended wife, conveyed property to trustees for herself until marriage, and then for her separate use for life, without power of anticipation, and, subject to certain interests to her husband and children, if any, for herself. Before the marriage took effect, the trustees committed a breach of trust, against which A. B., by her solicitor, gave an indemnity. The marriage took effect two years after the settlement, and the husband died without children:—Held, that the indemnity was valid and subsisting, and that the trustees had been released from their liability. Ghost v. Waller, 9 Beav. 497.

5. Trustees of a marriage settlement transferred the trust fund to new trustees who were Americans, and apprehending this to be a breach of trust, they got from the husband a deposit of tobacco warrants, with liberty to sell. The trustees sold the tobacco warrants, and invested the produce in Exchequer bills, but it was afterwards decided, by a Court of Equity in England, that at the time of the execution of the deposit, no breach of trust had been committed, and that the old trustees had then no interest in the fund:—Held, that as there was no consideration for the deposit or agreement, the old trustees had no right, as against the husband or his representatives, to retain the Exchequer bills for the benefit of the infant children of the marriage. Meinertshagen v. Davis, 1 Colly. 353; 13 L. J., N. S., Ch., 457; 8 Jur. 978.

6. Where cestui que trustent have entered into separate covenants by the trustees to pay, in certain proportions, the expenses of the trustees, and to indemnify them against liabilities incurred in the execution of trusts necessarily involving expense on their part, the trustees are entitled to file a bill against such cestui que trustent jointly for a general account of the trust, in order that if the assets are exhausted, the liability of the cestui que trustent under the covenants may be ascertained once for all. Singleton v. Selwyn, 9 Jur., N. S., 1149.

The existence in such a case of a creditors' suit for administering the trust does not necessarily prevent the trustees from instituting such suit on their own behalf. Id.

7. A testator by his will directed his trustees (in case E. A. should marry as therein mentioned, and her intended husband should, "well and effectually, and to the good liking of his said trustees, settle or secure to be paid" to or for the issue of the marriage, a sum equal to the provision made for them by the testator) to transfer to the children of the marriage sums of stock, varying according to the number of the children, and not exceeding in the whole 8,000*l.* 3*l.* per cents. The husband gave his bond for the amount, the trustees giving their written approbation, "provided the bond was a settlement or security within the meaning of the will".—Held, that the bond so approved was a sufficient security within the meaning of the will. Bacchus v. Gilbee, 2 N. R. 502; 9 Jur., N. S., 838; 8 L. T., N. S., 714; 33 L. J., Ch., 23; 11 W. R. 49. Reversing 2 N. R. 310.

III. LOSS. WHAT CESTUIS QUE TRUSTENT, OR PARTS OF ESTATE LIABLE FOR.

1. Where trust fund is directed to be laid out in public funds till a purchaser can be found, and loss happens, it must fall in average on all those entitled to it. Chambers v. Chambers, Fitzg. 127.

2. The interest which a party takes under a settlement, is liable to make good any breach of trust or other liability which he may have incurred under it, and that though the settlement is effected by distinct deeds. Woodyatt v. Gresley, 8 Sim. 180.

3. In the year 1810 a sum of stock was transferred into the names of A. and B., in trust for a father and mother, in certain proportions, for their respective lives, with remainder to their children. Shortly afterwards the stock was transferred by A. and B. into the name of B. only, who appropriated it to his own use; in the year 1818 the father and mother filed a bill against A. and B. to have the stock replaced; and the children (two in number) were co-plaintiffs, and, being infants, sued by their father, as their next friend; but that suit was soon afterwards compromised, upon B. giving security for the payment of interest for the time past and for the time to come. A. subsequently died, and his personal estate was distributed among his legatees; and two of those legatees then died, having received their legacies, and the residuary personal estate of one of them was paid over to her residuary legatee. These distributions were made in ignorance of any demand arising out of the breach of trust in which it had concurred. The elder of the two children attained twenty-one in 1821, and the other in 1823. In 1833 they filed a bill alone against B. and the personal representative of A. and his surviving legatees, and the personal representatives of his deceased legatees, and the residuary legatee of one of those deceased legatees, and against the father and mother of the plaintiffs, praying to have the fund replaced:—Held, that the plaintiffs were entitled to call upon the surviving legatees of A. and the personal representatives and legatees of his deceased legatees to refund, and that without any previous inquiry as to whether the plaintiffs had known of or acquiesced in the breach of trust, or the compromise of the suit of 1818. Marsh v. Russell, 3 Myl. & C. 31; 6 L. J., N. S., Ch., 303; 1 Jur. 588.

4. The trustees of a sum of stock were empowered by the settlement to invest the trust fund in Government or real securities. They, with the sanction of one of the cestuis que trustent, sold out part of the stock, and lent the proceeds to another cestui que trust upon his personal security. The trustees were held liable to replace the stock sold out, but were allowed an indemnity with regard to the sum advanced out of the interest in the trust property of the cestui que trust receiving and sanctioning the advance. Phillipson v. Gatty, 7 Hare 516; 13 Jur. 318. Affirming 2 H. & Tw. 459.

5. A plaintiff sued his trustee, to make him responsible for a trust fund which had been wrongfully paid to the plaintiff's father. The plaintiff had, as one of the next-of-kin of his father, received two-thirds of his estate:—Held, that the father's assets in the hands of the plaintiff were primarily liable to make good two-thirds of the trust fund, in exoneration of the trustee. Orrett v. Corser, 21 Beav. 52; 1 Jur., N. S., 882.

6. An estate having once borne a charge in favour of legatees or creditors, is discharged, though the fund has been misapplied by the trustees. Omerod v. Hardman, 5 Ves. 736.

7. A loss happening by the default of a trustee appointed by a testator falls on the legatees, and the estate is discharged from it. Hutchinson v. Massarene, 2 Ball. & B. 54.

8. Where lands are devised to trustees to raise money for several purposes, and they raise the money out of the profits, the land is thereby discharged, and the persons concerned must resort to the trustees. Juon v. Brain, Pre. Ch. 143.

9. Trustees appointed for raising and paying a portion of 500*l.* to A. Trustee enters and gives judgment to A. for paying the 500*l.* to A. when raised; the trustee raises the 500*l.* and more, and becomes insolvent; whether the land is discharged. Harrison v. Cage, 2 Vern. 85.

10. Land settled in trust to pay debts is discharged as soon as the money is raised, though misapplied by the trustees. Anon., 1 Salk. 153.

11. If lands are appointed to pay debts, the heir is entitled to them when the debts are paid; and if to be sold, he is entitled to the surplus; but if there be any abuse, his remedy is against the trustee, and not against the purchaser. Culpepper v. Aston, 2 Ch. Ca. 115. Sed quare, if a purchaser with notice might not be affected.

12. Where a trustee was directed to apply the rents of a leasehold estate in paying the fines on renewal, and he misapplied the rents which ought to have been so employed:—Held, that the loss must fall on the tenant for life, and not upon the trust estate generally. Solly v. Wood, 7 Jur., N. S., 1225; 30 L. J., Ch., 813; 29 Beav. 482.

13. Where trust funds have been lost by a breach of trust, moneys recovered from the estate of a trustee who has made default for both principal trust funds and the income thereof, are applicable in the first instance in reduction of the principal debt. Re Grabowski, 37 L. J., Ch., 926; 6 L. R., Eq., 12.

14. It is a general rule of equity that when a person accepts a trust at the request of another, and that other is a cestui que trust, the cestui que trust is liable personally to indemnify the trustee against all losses accruing in the due execution of the trust. Jervis v. Wolvestan, 43 L. J., Ch., 809; 18 L. R., Eq., 18; 30 L. T., N. S., 452.

When the loss in respect of which such indemnity is sought occurs after the death of the cestui que trust the trustee is in the position of a creditor of the cestui que trust, and entitled to recover as a creditor from legatees to whom his estate has been paid. Ib.

J. and P., at the request of a settlor, accepted transfers of shares in an unlimited company upon trust for a tenant for life and remainderman. J. and P. were executors of the will of the settlor, and distributed the residue of his estate. Subsequently in the lifetime of the tenant for life large calls were made on the shares, and the remaindermen under the settlement disclaimed:—Held, that J. and P. as trustees were entitled to be indemnified against the liability out of the settlor's residuary estate, and to recover the capital which they had distributed among the residuary legatees. Ib.

1. On a bill filed, by an incumbrancer of the interest of a deceased tenant for life in a fund, against a party sought to be made accountable in respect of a breach of trust affecting the whole fund, to which suit the cestuis que trustent in remainder were also made parties, a decree directing the restitution of the whole fund was varied, on appeal, by limiting the relief to the restitution of so much only of the interest of the fund as had accrued in the lifetime of the tenant for life. Rackham v. Siddall, 1 Macn. & G. 607; 2 H. & Tw. 44. Varying, on this point, 16 Sim. 297; 12 Jur. 640.

2. By a marriage settlement in 1834 the husband gave a bond for 2,000*l.* to the trustees, to be paid within six months of the marriage, to be left outstanding with the consent in writing of the wife and husband, and to be called in with the like consent. Another debt of 4,000*l.* was included in the settlement. The 2,000*l.* was never got in. The husband became bankrupt in 1836. The trustees proved for the debt, but afterwards joined in a supersedeas, on the bankrupt guaranteeing to his creditors 1*l.* 6*d.* in the pound. The other creditors were so paid; the trustees never took their composition. In 1838 the wife and husband gave a written consent that the debt should remain out on the husband's bond. No other consent was ever given. The husband was again bankrupt in 1847. In 1834 the trustees had, at the instance of the husband (having no power to invest in the purchase of lands), purchased copyhold land and buildings with part of the 4,000*l.* The husband erected new and valuable buildings on the land at his own expense, increasing its value far more than 2,000*l.* There was no evidence to connect this outlay with the discharge of the bond debt:—Held, that the trustees could not be indemnified out of the increase of value of the land, caused by the husband's outlay upon it. Wiles v. Gresham, 2 Drew. 258; 23 L. J., Ch., 667; 2 W. R. 355; 2 Eq. Rep. 560. Affirmed 5 De G. M. & G. 770; 24 L. J., Ch., 264; 3 Eq. Rep. 116; 3 W. R. 87. And see 8 C. 1 Eq. Rep. 348.

3. A testatrix directed her trustees to pay the interest or annual rent of 2,000*l.* to Mrs. A. during her life, and after her death to divide that sum among her children; and to pay the interest or annual rent of a similar amount to Mrs. B. in life-rent, with the fee to her children. The trustees were empowered by the deed to realise, or to continue to "hold any or all of such shares or stocks" as might belong to the testatrix at her decease, "should they consider it advisable or expedient to do so, without any personal responsibility for loss, if any, thereby sustained;" with power also "to lend or place out on such securities, heritable or movable, as they shall consider advantageous, the aforesaid legacies of 2,000*l.* and 2,000*l.* respectively, the securities to be conceived in favour of my trustees, and that for the purposes of this trust and no otherwise." The testatrix at her death held 850*l.* stock of an unlimited bank. The trustees, at the desire of Mrs. A., and without consulting Mrs. B., set 200*l.* of this stock aside as part of the fund appropriated to Mrs. A., and realised the remainder. They afterwards, on the narrative of the purposes of the trust deed, and of the sums invested for the two specific legacies of 2,000*l.*, and that they had paid the residue, received their discharge from Mrs. A. and Mrs. B. Statements and separate accounts of interest on the investments allocated to each were sent half-yearly to Mrs. A. and Mrs. B. All the investments stood in the names of the testatrix's trustees. The bank became insolvent, and calls were made upon the trustees in respect of the 200*l.* stock. They sought to indemnify themselves for payment of the calls out of the whole trust estate. Mrs. B. objected to any portion of her legacy being taken:—Held, reversing the decision of the Court below, that the trustees had the power to sever and had severed the two legacies, and had placed them in separate investments for behoof of the respective beneficiaries, and therefore the trustees had no right to relief from the investments allotted to Mrs. B. and her family for liabilities incurred on those allotted to Mrs. A. and her family. Exp. Garland (10 Ves. 110) followed. Fraser or Robinson v. Murdoch, 6 L. R., App. Cas., 855; 45 L. T. 417; 30 W. R. 162.

IV. LIEN OF TRUSTEE ON BENEFICIAL INTEREST OF CESTUIS QUE TRUSTENT.

4. The interest of a cestui que trust, who concurs with a trustee in a breach of trust, is liable to indemnify the trustee. Booth v. Booth, 1 Beav. 125; 8 L. J., N. S., Ch., 39; 2 Jur. 938.

5. Where a trustee had permitted a tenant for life to possess himself of the fund, in breach of the trust:—Held, that he could not waive his right to resort to the interest of the tenant for life to re-place the fund, and having, by joining in a creditor's deed, by which the life interest was made applicable to the payment of debts, etc., inter alia, a debt due to the trustees, which he afterwards received, he was not precluded thereby from retaining the life interest, in order to make good trust fund. Fuller v. Knight, 6 Beav. Ch. 205; 12 L. J., N. S., Ch., 182.

6. Trustees who had improperly allowed perishable property to remain in specie, and to be enjoyed by the tenant for life, being made liable, were allowed, by means of an inquiry, in the same suit, to recover back against the estate of the tenant for life the amount overpaid to him. Hood v. Clapham, 19 Beav. 90; 1 Jur., N. S., 78; 24 L. J., Ch., 193.

7. The interest which a party takes under a settlement, is liable to make good any breach of trust or other liability which he may have incurred under it, and that though the settlement is effected by distinct deeds. Woodyatt v. Cresley, 8 Sim. 180.

1. A trustee of a marriage settlement, after the death of the husband, entered into an account with the widow, acting also as her solicitor:—Held, that the trustee was entitled to retain out of the dividends upon the trust fund the balance due upon such account. Russel v. Buchanan, 4 Jur. 430.

2. The right of a trustee, in whose name shares in a company in liquidation were standing, to an indemnity from his cestuis que trustent enforced. Hemming v. Maddick, 20 W. R. 433; 41 L. J., Ch., 522; 7 L. R., Ch., 395; 26 L. T. 565.

3. A policy of assurance on the life of H. was taken in the names of trustees, and a settlement was executed by virtue of which the bonuses payable on the policy were to be held upon trust for H., and the money assured, on the trusts of the settlement. H. obtained possession of and misappropriated a portion of the trust funds:—Held, that the trustees were not entitled as against H.'s executrix to impound or retain the bonuses to make good the trust funds misappropriated by H., not as being settled property, because there was a prior resulting trust of them for H.; nor by way of set-off, because they were not payable till after H.'s death. Hallett v. Hallett, 31 L. R., Ch. D., 232; 49 L. J., Ch., 61; 41 L. T. 725; 28 W. R. 321.

4. The representatives of a surviving trustee who had concurred with his co-trustee in a breach of trust by lending to the tenant for life on his promissory note, were held entitled to file a bill against such tenant for life, and the other cestuis que trustent, for replacing the funds, and the appointment of new trustee, with costs against the tenant for life, or out of the fund. Greenwood v. Wakeford, 1 Beav. 576; 8 L. J., N. S., Ch., 333.

5. A legacy bequeathed by P. was settled upon the marriage of W. A. and his wife, upon trust for the wife of W. A. for life, for her separate use, but without any restriction against anticipation, and after her death for her children. The legacy was not then paid, but subsequently the widow of P., having directed her executors to pay all the legacies bequeathed by her husband's will, they offered to pay the legacy in question, but required a receipt from three trustees of the settlement. At that time there was only one trustee of such settlement, and two more, namely, D. and A., were appointed. On such appointment the executors handed over a cheque for the amount of the legacy to X., who had acted as the solicitor of the trustees. X. handed this cheque to A., who, as she alleged, handed it over in the presence of X. to W. A. The money was afterwards received by W. A., and by him applied to his own purposes:—Held, semble, that A. might during the life of W. A.'s wife be entitled to the annual income of the fund. Gray v. Addison, 2 Jur., N. S., 662.

6. A tenant for life received 5l. per cent. on a mortgage improperly taken by trustees, and for which, on a loss, they were made responsible:—Held, that he was only entitled to 4 per cent. in taking the account of income, and that 1 per cent. must be taken as part of the subsequent income. Griffiths v. Porter, 25 Beav. 236.

7. Where trustees are made liable for a breach of trust, the tenant for life having received the benefit, they are entitled to be recouped out of the interest of the tenant for life, although they have since ceased to be trustees. Barratt v. Wyatt, 30 Beav. 442.

A testator directed his estate to be accumulated until the death of the survivor of certain persons, and then to be divided among the children of his sister. By an order of the Court, 100l. a year out of the income of the estate was directed to be paid to one of those children, a lady, until the further order of the Court. By a marriage settlement the lady assigned to the trustees the whole of her share under the will of a testator, together with the accumulations, for herself for life, with remainder to her children. The 100l. a year was continued to be paid after marriage to her trustees, and by them allowed to be received and expended by the mother. The mother was living; and the estate had not yet become divisible under the will. Upon a bill by the children:—Held, that notwithstanding the order of the Court, the 100l. a year payable thereunder formed part of the funds comprised in the settlement, and ought to have been invested by the trustees, and they were ordered to make good the amount, subject to the right, as against the mother, to be recouped the amount out of her life interest in the fund. S. C. 8 Jur., N. S., 1045; 31 L. J., Ch., 652; 10 W. R. 454.

8. G. and H., trustees of a settlement, on the solicitation of D., the tenant for life of the settlement, lent the trust funds on a security which totally failed. G. was a solicitor, and in the transaction of the loan no other solicitor was employed for the lenders, and no sufficient investigation of title was made:—Held, that the trustees were compellable to replace the trust fund. French v. Graham, 10 Ir. Ch. R. 522.

Held, also, that both being solvent, H. was bound to replace one moiety, and G. the other moiety, that G. was not entitled to be indemnified by the tenant for life, the onus of investigating the title having been cast upon him, but that H. was entitled to be recouped, by the tenant for life, the amount of his moiety. Id.

9. A. B. was tenant for life of a trust fund, with a general power to appoint by will, and, in default, it was settled on the plaintiff. A. B. ordered the trustees to pay over the fund to her on an indemnity, and she afterwards appointed the fund to the plaintiff and others, who filed a bill to make the trustees liable for a breach of trust:—Held, that, by the appointment, the fund became assets for answering A. B.'s liabilities, of which the indemnity was one, and that, therefore, the trustees were not liable. Williams v. Lomas, 16 Beav. 1.

10. Equity will endeavour to deliver a trustee from a misapplication of trust money, where he errs in the management only; but if he goes out of it with the approbation of the cestui que trust, it must be first made good out of the person's estate who consented. Trafford v. Boehm, 3 Atk. 444.

11. Tenant for life, who had obtained the benefit of a breach of trust, made responsible upon a bill for that purpose instituted by the trustees. M'Gachen v. Dew, 15 Beav. 84.

1. A bond was settled on B. for life, remainder to his wife M. for life, remainder to their children. The trustees permitted B. to receive the produce of the fund, and invest it in the purchase of a leasehold interest, not justified by the trusts of the settlement. B. having died, M., with a knowledge of all the facts, continued to receive the rents of the leaseholds, which produced a larger income than could have been derived from a proper investment. M., having died, and the leasehold having expired, a suit was instituted to compel the representative of the surviving trustee to pay to the children the amount misapplied. The surviving trustee during his life, and his representative, by their answer, asserted that the investment was proper within the trusts of the settlement:—Held, that the trustee had not a right to be indemnified out of the assets of M. to any greater amount than the excess of the rents received by M., over what would have been the produce of the fund if rightly invested. Bentley v. Robinson, 10 Ir. Ch. R. 287.

2. Trustees having no express authority to invest on mortgage, at the instance and for the benefit of some, but without regard to the interest of others, of their cestuis que trustent, invested part of their trust fund on mortgage of real estate. A loss having arisen from the investment:—Held, that the trustees were bound to make good the loss to the trust estate, but that they were entitled to be recouped by each of the cestuis que trustent who had induced them to make the investments, out of his estate and his interest in the trust fund, to the extent of the amount actually received by such cestui que trust from the trustees in consequence of such breach of trust. The notion that in any case trustees to whom no direction has been given to invest in any particular kind of security can safely invest on mortgage, not encouraged. Raby v. Ridehalgh, 1 Jur., N. S., 363; 24 L. J., Ch., 528; 7 De G. M. & G. 104; 3 Eq. Rep. 601; 3 W. R. 344.

3. A trustee, acting bonâ fide and with the concurrence of the heir-at-law, under a will which was supposed to be valid, but turns out to be invalid, is entitled to be indemnified out of the personal estate. Edgcombe v. Carpenter, 1 Beav. 171; 8 L. J., N. S., Ch., 171.

4. The rebuilding of a dissenting chapel was entrusted to three of the several trustees in whom the estate was vested. There being a deficiency of money, they borrowed, on a deposit of the deeds of the chapel, a sum of money which they paid. Interest was for a long time paid out of the chapel funds, but ultimately the representatives of the trustees were compelled to pay the money. The legal estate was vested in new trustees:—Held, that the representatives of the persons who had paid the money borrowed, had a lien on the deeds, but that they were not entitled to a decree for foreclosure or sale, as by granting such relief the trust would be altogether destroyed. Drake v. Williamson, 25 Beav. 622. S. C. nom. Darke v. Williamson, 4 Jur., N. S., 1009; 4 W. R. 824.

Against Estate of Married Woman.] 5. Where there is a clause against anticipation, and trustees pay the income to a married woman in advance, they are liable to pay it over again, and are not entitled to be reimbursed out of the subsequent income. Leach v. Way, 5 L. J., N. S., Ch., 100.

6. A trustee under a marriage settlement accepted an allotment of new shares in a bank, which afterwards failed. The settlement contained a clause against anticipation:—Held, that he had no claim to be indemnified out of the trust estate. Sheriff v. Butler, 12 Jur., N. S., 329; 14 W. R. 629; 14 L. T., N. S., 510.

7. One of two trustees of a marriage settlement, under which the wife took a separate estate for life without power of anticipation, having shares in a bank vested in him upon the trusts of the settlement, obtained an allotment of new shares at the request of the wife, and upon the faith of her representation that the purchase money should be paid out of certain savings of her separate estate. The bank failed, and calls were made upon the trustee, who filed a bill to enforce payment out of the wife's savings:—Held, that the savings of the wife's separate estate were liable to indemnify the trustee against all calls and liabilities incurred on her behalf in respect of the shares. Butler v. Cumpston, 7 L. R., Eq., 16; 38 L. J., Ch., 35; 17 W. R. 24; 19 L. T., N. S., 274.

Held, also, that money arising from savings of separate estate which had been invested by the wife in the names of the trustees of the settlement without any intimation that it was to be held on the trusts of the settlement, was liable to indemnify the trustee of the shares. Id.

8. By a marriage settlement the interest of a trust fund was limited to a wife for life, for her separate use, with power to the trustees, upon her consent in writing, to advance the trust fund to her husband, upon the security of his bond; if the trustees, with consent of the wife, advance the fund to the husband, but without her written consent, and without the husband's bond, and if the trust fund be lost by his subsequent bankruptcy, the trustees are entitled to be indemnified to the extent of the wife's interest. Cocker v. Quayle, 1 Russ. & M. 535.

9. R., by deed, assigned property in Scotland to B., as trustee, with a direction to pay to his sister Mrs. R., a married woman, during her life, the net income of the property, or such part of it as he might deem necessary for the support of her and her family; and he thereby declared the provision for Mrs. R. to be purely alimentary, and exclusive of the marital right of her then or any future husband, and that it should not be assignable, or subject to any deed which either she or such husband might grant in relation thereto, or debts which they might contract. Advances were made by A. to the husband of Mrs. R., for the support of his family, and on other accounts; to secure the repayment of which, B., with Mrs. R.'s consent, executed to A. a deed of assignation of her interest in the trust property, reserving 60*l.* per annum for aliment to Mrs. R. and her family. Upon appeal from, and reversing, the decision of the Court of Session:—Held, that the execution of the deed of assignation was ultra vires of B., and a breach of trust on his part, and that the deed was wholly invalid as against Mrs. R. Ritchie v. Rennie, 9 Jur. 435.

1. A married woman who is an annuitant under a will for life, for her separate use, without power of anticipation, is appointed executrix; but failing in obtaining probate, takes possession of and misappropriates the estate. In an administration suit asking the usual accounts against her, but not referring to her separate estate:—Held, that the arrears of the annuity were applicable to make good her misfeasances, but not the accruing payments. Pemberton v. Mc Gill, 8 W. R. 290.

2. A woman, on her marriage, settled a necklace upon trust for herself for life, with remainder to her eldest son. She also settled other property to her separate use for life, as to part of such property with, and as to other part without, restraint upon anticipation. She afterwards, in fraud of the settlement, sold the necklace, and appropriated the money to her own use:—Held, that the property settled to her separate use, with restraint upon anticipation, was not chargeable with the value of the necklace, but that the property settled without such restraint was so chargeable. Clive v. Carey, 1 John. & H. 199; 5 Jur., N. S., 487; 28 L. J., Ch., 685.

3. The separate estate of a married woman is not liable for general torts committed by her, nor for breaches of trust, unless the breaches of trust consist in appropriation of trust funds comprised in the same settlement as that creating her separate estate. Wayford v. Heyl, 44 L. J., Ch., 567; 20 L. R., Eq., 321; 33 L. T., N. S., 155; 23 W. R. 848.

V. LIEN OF CESTUIS QUE TRUSTENT INTER SE.

4. Where one cestui que trust procures the trust money to be laid out improperly, and part of it is consequently lost, the other cestuis que trustent are entitled, as against him, in a suit properly constituted for that purpose, to have their shares of the trust money made good out of his share of that which is ultimately recovered. But if the bill prays relief against the trustees only, the liability of the share of that cestui que trust cannot be enforced against him. Phillipson v. Gatty, 2 H. & Tw. 459. Affirming 7 Hare 516; 13 Jur. 318.

5. Under a will, a trustee held an aggregate fund, in trust, as to one-third each, for A., B., and C. respectively for life, with remainder to their respective children. He, without any authority under the will, transferred one-third of the fund to the trustees of the respective settlement of A., B., and C. The share of B. having been dissipated by her trustees:—Held, that B.'s children were entitled to participate in A.'s third, which was still remaining in her trustees' hands. Browne v. Butter, 24 Beav. 159.

VI. LIEN OF CESTUIS QUE TRUSTENT ON BENEFICIAL INTEREST OF TRUSTEES.

6. A bankrupt's reversionary interest under the trusts of a will ordered to be sold, and the proceeds applied in making good moneys which had come to his hands as trustee under the same trusts, and had been misapplied. Exp. Hardman, Re Molyneux, 3 M. D. & De G. 559.

7. A trustee and executor, who took a life interest in his testator's residuary real and personal estate, misappropriated and wasted portions of the estates specifically devised and bequeathed, and subsequently became bankrupt:—Held, that his estate in the residuary realty being legal could not be applied in making good his breaches of trust. For v. Buckley, 25 W. R. 170; 3 L. R., Ch. D., 508.

8. A testator devises freehold property to trustees, of whom the bankrupt is one, upon trust to sell and divide the proceeds equally amongst his brothers and sisters, including the bankrupt and his co-trustee. The cestuis que trustent, in consideration of a specific sum, stated in the deed, to be paid to each of them, but which was in fact not paid, convey the estate to the bankrupt, who, a few days afterwards, gives each of the cestuis que trustent two promissory notes, for the payment of the money by instalments, but the notes are never paid:—Held, that the cestuis que trustent had a lien on the estate in the hands of the bankrupt's assignees for the money still remaining unpaid. Exp. Lacey, 1 Dea. 557; 2 Mont. & A. 609; 5 L. J., N. S., Bky., 27.

9. A plaintiff sued his trustee, to make him responsible for a trust fund which had been wrongfully paid to the plaintiff's father. The plaintiff had, as one of the next-of-kin of his father, received two-thirds of his estate:—Held, that the father's assets in the hands of the plaintiff were primarily liable to make good two-thirds of the trust fund in exoneration of the trustee. Orrett v. Corser, 21 Beav. 52; 1 Jur., N. S., 882.

10. The personal interests of a trustee in a trust fund in court will be made applicable to the discharge of all claims against him as trustee. Irby v. Irby, 25 Beav. 633.

A. was entitled to a share of funds held upon the trusts of his father's marriage settlement, and for which his father's estate was liable. He was one of his father's executors. In a suit to administer the trusts of the settlement and his father's estate, a large balance was found due from A. as executor:—Held, that the trustees of the settlement were entitled to retain such balance out of A.'s share, and that purchasers from A., pending the suit, with notice of the proceedings, were bound by the same equity. Id.

11. An executrix and tenant for life unnecessarily and improperly sold out a sum of stock. A common decree for an account was made against her representatives:—Held, that her estate was liable to re-place the stock and dividends, and that relief might be had on further directions, though the particular matter was not charged by the bill. Davenport v. Stafford, 14 Beav. 319.

12. A trustee of a voluntary deed, under which he is also a cestui que trust, having concurred in allowing the settlor to dispose of parts of the trust property:—Held, that he was not entitled to have relief granted on a bill filed by one of the cestuis que trustent extended for his benefit. Parnell v. Hingston, 3 Sm. & G. 337.

1. A defaulting trustee cannot claim, as against his cestui que trustent, any beneficial interest in the trust estate, even although he may have become entitled thereto derivatively, for example, as being one of the next-of-kin of a cestui que trust who has died intestate. Jacobs v. Ryland, 17 L. R., Eq., 341; 43 L. J., Ch., 280.

VII. TO TRUSTEE FOR LIABILITY FOR TORTS.

2. A trustee, in due execution of his trust, directed the bailiff employed on the settled estate to have certain trees felled. The bailiff ordered the woodcutters usually employed on the estate to fell the trees. In doing so they allowed a bough to fall upon a passer by, who brought an action against the trustee and recovered heavy damages:—Held, that the trustee was entitled to an indemnity out of the trust estate. Bennett v. Wyndham, 4 De G. F. & J. 259.

VIII. PRIORITY OF TRUSTEE TO OTHER CLAIMS.

3. The right of a trustee to be indemnified out of the trust property is the first charge thereon, and it has priority to any charge created upon it by the cestui que trust. And, consequently, the right of a trustee of a public company to be indemnified out of the property has priority over the debenture creditors. Re Blackley, 35 Beav. 449.

4. A trustee has a primary charge (in priority of the general creditors) to be recouped, out of the life estate of a deceased tenant for life, the amount of trust money wrongfully received by him, and for the costs of suit. Williams v. Allen, 32 Beav. 650.

5. Under a marriage settlement the trustees were empowered, at the request of the husband and wife, to invest the trust fund in the purchase of real estate, and to resell the same. In exercise of this power the trustees, at the request of the husband and wife, bought certain real estate at a price which exceeded the whole of the trust fund, the husband promising to provide the balance out of his own moneys. The husband could not fulfil his promise, and C. P., one of the trustees, at the request of the husband and wife, borrowed the sum necessary to complete the purchase from a bank, and deposited with them the title deeds of the estate. C. P. died, and the husband was unable to repay the loan. In an action brought by the bank for an account and the realisation of their security, and for administration of C. P.'s estate:—Held, that the trust estate was entitled to a first charge upon the real estate purchased for the full amount of the trust fund; that, subject to such charge, the estate of C. P. was entitled to be indemnified out of such real estate for the amount borrowed by him, and actually invested in or about the purchase, and to enforce such indemnity by sale of such real estate without the consent of the husband and wife; the bank being entitled to stand in the place of C. P. as against the trust estate for the amount due to them. Re Pumfrey, Worcester City & County

IX. OTHER MATTERS.

6. A trustee held shares in a company on trust for an adult cestui que trust. He had applied for them at the request of the cestui que trust, who paid the money due to the company on the application and allotment. The trustee executed a transfer of the shares to the cestui que trust, and the latter sent it to the company for registration, but the directors refused to register it, and when an order was made to wind up the company the name of the trustee remained on the company's register as the holder of the shares. No further call had been made on them. The trustee brought an action against the cestui que trust, claiming an indemnity against liability on the shares. There was no evidence to show whether calls were likely to be made in the winding-up:—Held, that the action was a mere quia timet one, and that it was premature and could not be maintained. Ranelagh (Lord) v. Hayes (1 Vern. 189) not followed. Hughes-Hallett v. Indian Mammoth Gold Mines Co., 22 L. R., Ch. D., 561; 52 L. J., Ch., 418; 48 L. T. 107; 31 W. R. 285.

7. Where a trustee is required to make a transfer of a fund to new trustees, and he alleges that he has a lien for charges (though he may have a right, under the Act of Parliament under which he acts, or by agreement, to recover payment), he has no right to interpose any delay in the way of making the transfer in respect of his alleged claim. Wilson v. Parker, 10 Jur. 979.

8. Legacies in trust for the testator's son for his own use and benefit, provided no misfortune in business shall in the meantime have happened to him, so as to deprive him or his family of the benefit of it, the testator declaring his intention, his son's fortune being amply sufficient by this fund to form a certain and permanent provision for him or his family; but in case he fail in business at any time before the age of thirty-two, then in trust for the support of him, his wife, and children, as the trustees think proper, so long as he shall labour under the effects of any misfortune in trade: but as soon as he shall be freed and absolutely discharged from the effects of any misfortune or failure in trade, then (but not before) to be paid to him; otherwise, the interest to be continued to be paid for the support of him, his wife, and children, for his life; and if, at his death, he shall be under any difficulty from misfortune or failure in business, in trust for his wife and children according to his appointment by will, and if he shall leave no widow or child according to his disposition. There was a considerable settlement. The son, in the twenty-eighth year of his age, being discharged under a deed of composition, the legacy was decreed to him, the trustees and his children not opposing it; but the Court observed, that if he should not be discharged, as in case it should end in a bankruptcy, the trustees would not be indemnified. De Mierre v. Turner, 5 Ves. 306.

XXVIII. Release.

- I. By Court, 7084.
- II. By Cestui que Trust, 7084.
- III. To One of Several Trustees, 7085.
- IV. On Transfer of Funds to Cestui que Trust or Co-trustee, 7085.

I. BY COURT.

1. On motion, reference directed to inquire whether defendant, a trustee, remains accountable for any acts done by him as trustee, and, if not, to settle release. — v. Osborne, 6 Ves. 455.

II. BY CESTUI QUE TRUST.

2. Where the defendants were surviving partners, and executors and guardians of their deceased partner:—Held, that the cestuis que trustent were not barred by the lapse of thirty years, nor by partial releases executed on insufficient knowledge of the partnership affairs and state of accounts, from calling for inquiry and account, and claiming a share in the profits arising from the estate of deceased having been continued and used in the partnership, although during successive changes in the firm. Semble, time is only a bar in cases of trust when there has been a direct and independent dealing between the trustees and cestuis que trustent, and upon full information and examination of all the documents and evidence after that relation has terminated. Wedderburn v. Wedderburn, 2 Keen 722; 4 Myl. & Cr. 41; 8 L. J., N. S., Ch., 177; 3 Jur. 596.

3. A release by cestuis que trustent to trustees after a breach of trust, and whilst ignorant thereof, is invalid. Munch v. Cockrell, 5 Myl. & C. 179; 9 Sim. 339; 9 L. J., N. S., Ch., 153; 4 Jur. 140; 3 id. 36.

4. Releases given to trustees by their cestuis que trustent in respect of breaches of trust set aside on the ground of the releases having been obtained by the improper influence of the person for whose benefit the breaches of trust have been committed, and of the cestuis que trustent not having had independent professional advice in the matter of such releases. Lloyd v. Attwood, Attwood v. Lloyd, 5 Jur., N. S., 1322; 3 De G. & J. 614.

Although cestuis que trustent acting by an independent solicitor, to whom all the facts of the case are known, may be bound by a release given to their trustees under the advice of that solicitor, it rests upon the trustees to show that the cestuis que trustent acted in relation to such release by an independent solicitor. Ib.

Where cestuis que trustent, in ignorance of their rights, give a release to their trustees, even a deed of confirmation, also executed under the same circumstances, will operate nothing. Ib.

Two ladies, entitled to a trust fund which had been improperly lent by the trustees to A., who stood towards those ladies in loco parentis, were induced by A., not long after their coming of age, to execute releases to the trustees, taking from him a security for the money, which security was known by him to be worthless. No direct communication took place between the ladies and the trustees, nor did the trustees render any account to them, but the ladies were represented in the transaction by B., a solicitor, who was known to the trustees to have been for years the confidential adviser of A., and the transaction was conducted by B. and A.'s solicitors. B. was never, in fact, authorised by the ladies themselves to act for them, but was nominated by A., and the ladies did not at the time consider him to be acting for them:—Held, that under the circumstances the trustees could not avail themselves of the releases. Ib.

5. A deed of compromise executed by cestui que trust, with the representatives and creditors of a deceased trustee, guilty of a breach of trust, rescinded, and co-trustees declared responsible. Walker v. Symonds, 3 Swan. 2.

6. Where the trustee (a solicitor) came to a final settlement of the account with his cestuis que trustent, and a general release was executed, the account containing credits for his professional bills of costs, which were perused by an independent solicitor, acting for the cestuis que trustent:—Held, that the defendant was entitled to the benefit of the release; and, in the absence of any fraudulent advantage having been taken over ignorant parties, the plaintiffs were bound by it. Stanes v. Parker, 9 Beav. 385; 10 Jur. 603.

7. A release executed by an infant to the trustee of all demands in respect of the trust:—Held, not to be a bar to a suit by the same cestui que trust against the trustee, although such suit was not brought until seven years after the cestui que trust had attained twenty-one. Overton v. Banister, 3 Hare 503; 9 Jur. 906.

8. The Court looks with considerable jealousy at a release executed by a young lady, at or shortly after attaining twenty-one, upon a settlement of accounts between her and her trustees. Parker v. Blowam, 20 Beav. 295.

A suit for impeachment of such a release must be instituted quickly. Ib.

Observations on the jealousy with which the Court looks at a release executed by a person who has just come of age, and on the effect of the particular circumstances under which the release is given. Ib.

9. A release was executed in 1859 by two ladies in favour of the trustees of will under which the ladies were residuary legatees. The ladies and their husbands applied on summons to have the release set aside on the ground that they had no independent advice, and had acted in ignorance of the fact that they were residuary legatees, instead of, as they had supposed, entitled to legacies only, and had been induced to give an absolute release in consideration of a sum far less than that to which it turned out they were entitled. The evidence in support of their claim was uncontradicted:—Held, that the release could not be set aside on the materials before the Court. Re Garnett, Gandy v. Macaulay, 32 W. R. 474.

10. A sum of money charged upon lands was, by a marriage settlement, assigned to trustees, to pay the interest to A., the husband, for his life, and after his death to pay the wife a jointure of 200l. a year; provided that it should be lawful for A., with the consent of the trustees in writing, to call in the fund, and lay out and dispose of the same in the purchase of an estate of inheritance or freehold, for a term of at least three lives, or of a lease for a term of years, whereof ninety-nine years shall be unexpired, or otherwise advantageously, which purchase or disposal, when so made, should be settled and vested to the several uses, trusts, intents, and purposes thereinbefore mentioned in respect to the said sums. A portion of the fund was paid to the surviving trustee, who lent it to A., on a release being executed by A. and the wife B. and C. their son, and acknowledged by her:—Held, after the death of A., in a suit by B. to replace the trust fund, that the release as to her was inoperative. Smithwick v. Smithwick, 12 Ir. Ch. R. 181.

1. When a breach of trust has been committed, from which a trustee alleges that he has been released, it is incumbent upon him to show that such release was given by the cestui que trust deliberately and advisedly, with full knowledge of all the circumstances, and of his own rights and claims against the trustee. Farrant v. Blanchford, 1 De G. J. & S. 107; 9 Jur., N. S., 423; 32 L. J., Ch., 237; 11 W. R. 294; 7 L. T., N. S., 770. Reversing 11 W. R. 178.

2. Personal estate was by settlement vested in trustees for R., a married woman, for life, without power of anticipation; and in case there should be no issue of the marriage, in case M., her husband, should survive her, as she should by deed or will appoint, and in case she should survive, for her absolutely. W., the acting trustee of the settlement, at the instance of the wife, applied the property in discharge of her husband's liabilities. M. died, and by R.'s request the trustee took no steps to realise his assets. R. married again after the lapse of some years, and in her marriage settlement recited her wish to give credit to W. for all payments made by the trustees at her request:—Held, that R. had lost her right to make the trustee liable for his breaches of trust. Rutherford v. Maziers, 13 Ir. Ch. R. 204.

3. By a marriage settlement of 1832, real and personal estate of H., the intended wife, was conveyed to trustees in trust for R., the intended husband for life, and after the death of the survivor of R. and H. in trust for the children of the marriage, as R. and H. or the survivor should appoint, and in default of appointment for the children equally. The trustees allowed R. to obtain possession of the trust fund, which he mixed with moneys of his own, and in 1861 one of the trustees commenced a suit to compel him to replace the fund. By arrangement of the trustees with R., he and H., by deed of the 25th September 1861, irrevocably appointed the fund equally among the children, four of whom were of age, and one (the plaintiff) a minor. On the following day the four adult children, and two years afterwards the plaintiff, when of age, executed a deed releasing the trustees from the trusts of the settlement. The children executed the release by the direction of their father, without any professional advice or assistance, and in ignorance of its contents or effect, and of their rights under the settlement.

R. from time to time paid sums of money for the plaintiff; he purchased for the plaintiff a commission in the army, paid for his outfit, etc., made him an adequate yearly allowance, and paid a large sum for his promotion. No one of the sums so advanced was equal in amount to the plaintiff's share of the trust fund, nor was there any evidence that it was stated at the time of the advances, or understood between the plaintiff and R., that they were made out of the trust fund in R.'s hands:—Held, first, that the release should be set aside; second, that R.'s position was that of a debtor to his five children for their respective shares of the trust fund; third, that the sums advanced being respectively less in amount, that the plaintiff's share was not a satisfaction of it pro tanto, and that R. was not entitled to credit for them. Reade v. Reade, 9 L. R., Ir., 409.

III. TO ONE OF SEVERAL TRUSTEES.

4. A release to one trustee in respect of a breach of trust committed in the investment of part of the trust funds:—Held, to be a release to the other trustee, the release operating as an acceptance of the securities upon which the funds had been invested. Blackwood v. Borrowes, 2 Con. & L. 459; 4 Dr. & War. 441.

IV. ON TRANSFER OF FUNDS TO CESTUI QUE TRUST OR CO-TRUSTEE.

5. Trustees have a right to some sort of discharge from their cestuis que trustent, not, perhaps, a release, unless the instrument creating the trust was under seal. Re Wright, 3 Kay & J. 419.

6. Trustee of stock, on transferring the stock to his cestui que trust:—Held, under the circumstances of the case, entitled to an acknowledgment by the cestui que trust of the stock being received in full of all demands, though not entitled to a release under seal. And inasmuch as the cestui que trust declined to make the acknowledgment, the Court directed a general administration account to be taken of the real and personal estate of the testator from whose real and personal estate the stock was derived, although no account but a mere transfer of the stock was prayed by the bill, and no open unsettled account suggested by the answer. Chadwick v. Heatley, 2 Colly. 137; 9 Jur. 504.

7. A trustee paying the trust money in strict accordance with the tenor of the trusts is not entitled to a release by deed; secus, if he is called upon to depart from the strictly expressed trusts. King v. Mullins, 1 Drew. 308.

Where a trust was created by parol for A. for life, and to provide for her funeral expenses, remainder to her two children and the tenant for life, and remainderman called for payment:—Held, that the trustee might lawfully insist on a release under seal. Id.

8. Trustees, on receipt from other trustees of trust moneys, are not bound to execute a release; all that can be required from them is a written acknowledgment of the receipt of the money. Re Cater, 25 Beav. 366.

1. In What Cases.

1. A party having a contingent interest in a trust fund may, in a proper case, have it brought into court for his protection, but he must show some sufficient ground for it. Ross v. Ross, 12 Beav. 89.

Motion to pay trust fund into court refused, on the ground that there was no allegation of danger, and that the fund might, if necessary, be sufficiently protected by a distringas. Ib.

2. A residuary sum of stock, standing in the names of trustees, the dividends of which were paid by them to the parties entitled thereto, ordered to be transferred into court to the credit of the cause, on the application of a party entitled to a mere contingent interest in the fund, and notwithstanding that all the parties entitled to vested interests therein were satisfied with the conduct and custody of the trustees, and opposed the application. Bartlett v. Bartlett, 4 Hare 631.

3. Right of a party, entitled contingently in remainder, to have the trust fund brought into court at the hearing, though there be no imputation against the trustees. Governors' Benevolent Institution v. Rushbridger, 18 Beav. 467.

4. When a court of equity traces out trust money in the hands of a person who has not prima facie a right to hold it, that money must be paid into court. Leigh v. Macaulay, 1 Y. & Coll. 260; 4 L. J., N. S., Exch. Eq., 37.

5. Trust fund which, under a power in marriage settlement, had been lent, decreed to be paid into court, the trustees representing it to be in danger. Payne v. Collier, 1 Ves. J. 170.

6. The testatrix, shortly before her death, expressed a wish that H., one of her trustees, should have the loan of the trust fund for a reasonable period. F., the other trustee, accordingly allowed H. to possess himself of the fund, agreeing that it should remain on his personal security for a year. Long after the expiration of that period, on motion, H. was ordered to pay the sum into court within a month, or find sufficient security. Foster v. Hewitt, 1 Jur. 839.

7. Where a trustee of a residue had transferred consols into his own name, and had permitted his cestui que trust to receive the dividends for a series of years under a power of attorney, and had died without further earmarking the fund, and his next-of-kin refused to meddle in the matter:—Held, that there was sufficient evidence to entitle the cestui que trust to have the money paid into court, and to have an order that she should be paid the dividends till further order. Re Thornton, 9 W. R. 475.

8. By settlement, moneys were directed to be laid out on Government or real securities; the trustees having lent the money to the husband on bond, were ordered, on motion, to pay the money into court. Collis v. Collis, 2 Sim. 365.

9. In a suit for the administration of trust property, the Court, on an application by the parties beneficially interested, and where there was no imputation against the trustees, ordered the trust money to be paid into court. Robertson v. Scott, 14 L. T., N. S., 187.

10. Party ordered to pay money into court in which he claimed the sole beneficial interest, he being also a trustee of the fund. Inman v. Whitley, 5 Jur. 287.

11. Testator, having a debt secured on lands, gives the mortgage-money to the mortgagor and desires that he will give a reversionary interest therein to a third person; the mortgagor, selling the estate, shall bring the mortgage-money into court for the use of the devisee, subject to the life estate. Lewis v. King, 2 Bro. C. C. 600.

12. Two trustees were authorised to invest trust money in their names on good security. One trustee improperly invested 1,500*l.* on mortgage of leaseholds in his own name; the other had declined to act any longer. The security realised 21*l.* only. The trustee was on motion ordered to pay the difference into court. Bourne v. Mole, 8 Beav. 177.

13. Court refused to order dividends received before bill filed of stock, purchased by the old Government of Switzerland, to be paid into court by the trustees on application of the present Government without having the attorney-general made a party. Dolder v. England (Bank of), 10 Ves. 352.

14. Purchaser (a trustee, acting on behalf of himself and others, his co-trustees, and of the cestuis que trustent) ordered to pay purchase money into court; the agreement having been entered into in the name of himself alone; upon affidavits, that the plaintiffs (the vendors) had no notice of his acting for others, and of acts of ownership committed since possession given to him under the agreement, in opposition to the answer, alleging notice, and denying any acts of ownership by himself, or by any other person, to his knowledge. Crutchley v. Jerningham, 2 Meriv. 502.

15. A solicitor who had received money for his client in her capacity of administratrix, and who had notice of the rights and claims of other next-of-kin, and who claimed to be in some sort a trustee of the fund, was nevertheless, on the petition of his client, ordered to bring the money into court and to pay the costs of the petition. Re Beoke, 18 Beav. 462.

16. Although the mere existence of a discretionary power in trustees over a fund affords no reason why the Court should not order payment of the fund into court, unless such payment into Court would interfere with the exercise by the trustee of such discretion; yet where it appeared that trustees were about, in the due exercise of a discretionary power, to deal with a fund, the Court refused to order payment into court, although the trustees had not actually parted with the fund. Talbot v. Marshfield, 2 Dr. & Sm. 285.

1. Trustees authorised a firm of solicitors (one of whom, W., was a trustee) to draw the trust fund out of a bank. W. drew it out and misapplied it. The trustees were, on interlocutory application, ordered to pay the amount into court. Ingle v. Partridge, 32 Beav. 661; 32 L. J., Ch., 813.

Three trustees sold out trust funds, and the produce was paid to one alone. The other two were, on motion, ordered to pay the amount into court. Ib.

2. The trustees of a settlement, having invested the settled funds on a mortgage security, which turned out insufficient, and it not appearing that they took due precaution to ascertain whether the security was sufficient, were ordered to pay into court the whole amount of the trust funds, taking upon themselves the security. By the decree in the court below they were declared liable to pay so much only as the mortgaged premises, when sold, should prove insufficient to answer. Lockhart v. Reilly, Reilly v. Lockhart, 3 W. R. 227; 25 L. J., Ch., 697.

2. On Admissions in Answer.

3. A defendant, who admits in his answer the possession of property upon a trust, will be ordered to pay it into court, although he sets up a claim to it, if, upon the facts disclosed in the answer, the Court is satisfied that this claim is not well founded. Del Pont v. De Tastet, 2 L. J., Ch., 140.

4. Where defendant admits by answer that there is trust money in his hands, Court will always, on interlocutory application, order payment into court; so where executor is debtor of testator at latter's death. Rothwell v. Rothwell, 2 Sim. & S. 217.

Defendant, who had covenanted to pay a sum of money to trustees of his marriage settlement, but had omitted so to do, ordered on motion in suit for performance of trusts to pay money into court. Ib.

5. When a plaintiff claims to be entitled in a particular character to a fund in the hands of a trustee, and the trustee by his answer says he does not know whether the plaintiff fills that character or not, the plaintiff cannot have the fund brought into court in the suit. Dubless v. Flint, 4 Myl. & C. 602.

6. The Court refused, upon an interlocutory application by a party claiming as cestui que trust, to order money alleged to be trust money, and admitted to be in the hands of the defendant, to be paid into court, where the defendant, under circumstances stated on the record, claimed a title to the money for his own benefit, and did not, by his answer, admit his liability to pay it. Knight v. Haythorne, 4 Jur. 360.

7. In a suit against trustees for breach of trust, one of them admitted that the funds had been sold out, by means of a power of attorney executed by him for the purpose, as he stated, of investing it on more advantageous securities; but he stated he was not concerned in the receipt of the produce, but he had been informed that it had been received by his co-trustee, or by J. M. by his permission. The settlement contained a power to vary the investments:—Held, that there was not, on the answer, a sufficient admission to justify an interlocutory order on this trustee for payment of the money into court. Meyer v. Montrou, 4 Beav. 343.

8. An order upon motion for payment of money into court proceeds upon the admissions of the defendant, and evidence cannot be resorted to. Three trustees admitted that trust money was standing in their joint names, but one only specified the amount:—Held, that this was insufficient to found an order for its payment into court. Boschetti v. Pomer, 8 Beav. 98; 14 L. J., N. S., Ch., 63; 8 Jur. 1085.

9. The bill stated that some of the plaintiffs were children of another plaintiff, and that they and certain defendants were the only children of the marriage. The answers did not deny the statement, but merely stated that the defendants did not know whether these were all the children, and did not raise any objection for want of parties on this ground. There was no evidence of the relationship between the plaintiffs:—Held, at the hearing, that a case was made for inquiry as to this, and for payment into court of the trust fund. Fowler v. Reynal, 2 De G. & Sm. 749; 13 Jur. 649. And see 3 Macn. & G. 500; 21 L. J., N. S., Ch., 121; 15 Jur. 1019.

10. A trustee, charged with misapplication of trust moneys, admitted by his answer that he had misapplied three sums, and set forth a debtor and creditor account, in which he credited himself with, amongst others, those three sums, and also with a fourth sum, which was equally inadmissible, but which turned the balance of the account in his favour. On a motion for payment of the three sums into court:—Held, that the plaintiff not having in his motion challenged the fourth sum, the motion could only be granted to the extent to which the answer admitted a balance after striking those three items out of the discharge. Nokes v. Seppings, 2 Ph. 19; 1 Coop. C. C. 194; varying the decree below.

11. A trustee admitted he had sold out trust stock, but he stated that he had invested the produce in other securities. A motion was made before decree, that he might re-purchase the stock and transfer it into court:—Held, that the Court could make no such order. Futter v. Jackson, 6 Beav. 424.

12. In order to justify an order for payment into court of a trust fund, it is sufficient that the trustee's answer contains an admission of such a prima facie title in the plaintiff as to afford a reasonable expectation of the plaintiff succeeding at the hearing in making out his title. Whitmore v. Turquand, 1 John. & H. 296.

Therefore where, by the answer of a trustee of a composition deed, it was admitted that the fund had been for five years in his hands, that some creditors had acceded within the time limited by the deed, but that the plaintiff had neither acceded nor refused to accede, an order was made for payment of the fund into court. Ib.

1. Where one of two trustees admits by his answer that a certain fund is in the hands of himself and his co-trustee, but uses such language as is admitted to import that he dealt with it, although the expression is ambiguous the Court will, on motion on the answer, order payment into court of such fund. Pinos v. Beattie, 5 W. R. 616.

2. Testatrix devised her real and bequeathed her personal estate to A. and B. upon certain trusts, and appointed A., B., and C. executors of her will. B. and C. alone proved. On bill filed by C. alone—alleging that A. had not proved, that B. was mentally incapacitated, and that A. declined to act in the trusts, and also alleging that A. and his partner G., who was no party to the suit, were indebted to the estate of the testatrix, and praying for the administration of trusts of the will for the usual accounts, and for the appointment of new trustees in the place of A. and B.—A. put in his answer, stating that he declined to act in the trusts, and substantially admitting that he and his partner were indebted to the estate of the testatrix. Thereupon C. moved that A. and his partner might pay into court the amount admitted to be due by A. and his partner to the estate, and although G., the partner of A., was no party to the record.—Ordered accordingly. White v. Barton, 18 Beav. 192.

3. Under a trust deed for the benefit of the creditors of W., dated in 1849, a dividend had been paid in 1852 of 10s. in the pound, the trustees postponing for that purpose their claims for costs at the time. Afterwards C. filed his bill to have the trusts carried out by the Court. The trustees allowed a balance in their hands, upon which they claimed to have this sum brought into court.—Held, that the Court would not, under the circumstances, deprive the trustees of the possession of this fund. Chaffers v. Headlam, 17 Jur. 754; 22 L. J., Ch., 1038.

4. A trustee admitted the whole of a trust fund, to a considerable amount, to be in his hands. The conduct of the trustee being proper, the Court will not, on an application by one of several cestuis que trustent, order payment into court of more than the aliquot share of the particular cestui que trust making the application. Hamond v. Walker, 3 Jur., N. S., 686.

Semble, the Court has, on such an application by any single cestui que trust, authority to order the whole fund to be brought into court, if the Court shall so think fit. Ib.

5. On a motion by the executor of a legatee for the transfer into court by trustees of sums of stock admitted by their answer to be standing in their names, no fraud or misconduct on the part of the trustees being alleged:—Held, following Bartlett v. Bartlett (4 Hare 631), that the stock should be transferred. Marryatt v. Marryatt, 2 Eq. Rep. 1138; 2 W. R. 576; 23 L. J., Ch., 876.

The Court will not, under the above circumstances, order sums of money in the hands of trustees to be paid into court. Ib.

In an administration suit by the executor of a legatee against the testator's trustees and executors, the other legatees are not necessary parties. Ib.

Where there is no controversy as to facts, trustees will be ordered to transfer stock into court on motion. Ib.

Semble, not necessary to serve the cestuis que trustent. Ib.

6. Unless there is a distinct admission, or circumstances proved which raised the presumption that certain moneys are trust moneys, the Court will not interfere by injunction to order such moneys to be paid into court before the hearing of the cause where there is a doubtful case to be tried at such hearing. Turkey (Bank of) v. Ottoman Co., 14 W. R. 819; 14 L. T., N. S., 884.

7. Trustees, who had a sum of money standing in their names at their bankers', signed an order directing the bankers to honour the cheques of any two of them, or of Messrs. G. & Co., their solicitors. W., who was one of the trustees, and of the firm of G. & Co., drew out the money and applied it to his own use. Upon a bill against the trustees:—Held, on an admission of these facts by the co-trustees, that they must pay the money into court. Ingle v. Partridge, 32 L. J., Ch., 813; 32 Beav. 661.

8. By a marriage settlement in 1856, property was settled to the separate use of the wife for life, without power of anticipation, with remainders over. In 1866 the wife left her husband, and he instituted a suit against her in the Divorce Court for restitution of conjugal rights. Judgment was given against the wife with costs. The wife withdrew from the jurisdiction, and declined to obey the judgment. In 1870 the husband procured from the Divorce Court a writ of sequestration against the separate property of the wife for the costs of the suit. In October 1869 dividends and interests on the settled property fell due, and were received by one of the trustees, who retained them in his hands. In December 1869 a hostile suit was instituted by the wife against the trustee to compel the payment of the dividends and interest, and for the removal of the trustee, but not asking for the general administration of the fund. The trustee admitted that he had in his hands the greater part of the entire fund. A few days after his answer the trustee filed a bill in the Rolls Court for the administration of the trusts of the settlement. On motion by the wife, in the first of the two suits, that the trustee might be ordered to pay into court the entire sum admitted by him to be in his hands:—Held, that regard being had principally to the restraint on anticipation contained in the settlement, the money ought to be paid into court notwithstanding the writ of sequestration, and notwithstanding that the wife's bill had not prayed the general administration of the trust fund. Miller v. Miller, 18 W. R. 750.

9. Motion by infant cestuis que trustent that their trustee might bring a fund into court allowed where, although he had not by his answer admitted their title, he had not denied it. Symonds v. Jenkins, 34 L. T., N. S., 277; 24 W. R. 512.

In a suit against a trustee for breach of trust and consequent loss of trust funds, he stated that he did not know, and could not set forth as to his belief or otherwise, whether the plaintiffs were the only children of S., or whether the eldest was seventeen years or the youngest two years of age, as alleged by the bill, or whether it was a fact that there had been no child who had attained twenty-one:—Held, that the title of the plaintiffs was sufficiently admitted to entitle them to have the fund brought into court. Id.

1. Where the admissions made by the answer show the defendant to be a trustee of money, a mere formal denial of the fact will not prevent him from being ordered upon motion to bring the money into court. Hagell v. Currie, 2 L. R., Ch., 448; 15 W. R. 605; 16 L. T., N. S., 309.

3. On Other Admissions.

2. Trust funds may be ordered to be brought into court by the trustee, an accounting party, upon admissions contained in letters written before action brought that he has received the money, and a recital to that effect contained in the settlement, his execution of which as trustee has been proved, although there is no formal admission in his pleadings or affidavits that he has received and holds the money. Hampden v. Wallis, 27 L. R., Ch. D., 251; 51 L. T. 357; 32 W. R. 977.

4. Practice.

3. The prayer of a bill for the removal of a trustee was, that he might be removed and the trust fund transferred into the names of new trustees, and that the parties beneficially interested for life, and in remainder in the fund, "might, upon being served with a copy of the bill, be bound by all the proceedings in the cause." Upon notice of motion to transfer the fund into court, which had been served upon the trustees only:—Held, that the parties beneficially interested ought to be served with notice of the application before the Court could make the order. Lewellin v. Cobbold, 17 Jur. 1111; 1 Sm. & G. 572.

5. Disobedience to Order.

4. When a trustee is ordered to transfer a fund of consols admitted to be due from him and subsequently default is made, a writ of attachment will issue. Digby v. Turner, 21 W. R. 471; 28 L. T., N. S., 296.

II. VOLUNTARY.

5. Money in the funds belonging to wards of the Court cannot be transferred into the name of the Accountant-General, to the credit of the cause, until the account is taken by a Master and his report made. This does not mean that such a transfer cannot be made, but that it could not operate as an acquittance and discharge of the trustees until they had passed their accounts. Bencroft v. Rich, 1 Bro. C. C. 56.

6. E. became a nun, and went into a convent abroad, and assigned all her property to trusttees for the benefit of a Roman Catholic congregation:—Held, that she was not civiliter mortua, or in such a position as would justify the trustees of a fund to which she was entitled in paying the fund into court, and that the Court on her petition would order payment of the fund to her trustees. Re Metcalfe, 10 Jur., N. S., 287; 33 L. J., Ch., 308; 12 W. R. 538; 10 L. T., N. S., 78.

7. Semble, a trustee is always justified in transferring the trust fund into court. Re Croyden's Trust, 19 L. J., N. S., Ch., 172; 14 Jur. 54.

8. Trustees, between whom and their several cestuis que trustent disputes have arisen as to the amounts actually due to them respectively, are justified in paying into court, to the separate account of each cestui que trust, the sum to which they believe him to be entitled, and may have their costs of making such payment out of the respective funds. Re Wright, 3 Kay & J. 419.

9. Semble, trustees are always justified in not paying money into court; it may turn out that there was no occasion for them to do so. Mountain v. Young, 18 Jur. 769.

III. PAYMENT OUT.

10. Where an estate has been completely administered, the Court will, in general, order the funds to be paid out to the trustees, and will not interfere with their discretion where they are agreed. Butler v. Withers, 1 John. & H. 333.

11. The Court will never order payment out of a fund in court to a sole trustee in the absence of any parties interested in the estate, unless such estate is substantially represented. Re Roberts, 7 Jur., N. S., 818; 9 W. R. 758.

12. In the absence abroad of one of several trustees the Court may order a sum of money under its control to be paid to the other trustees, without requiring the absent trustee to join in giving the receipt by power of attorney. Clark v. Fenwick, 42 L. J., Ch., 320

I. APPOINTMENT. IN GENERAL.

13. The 3 & 4 Vict., c. 105, s. 21, does not authorise the appointment of a receiver in a case of constructive trust; therefore the Court refused to appoint a receiver where the interest of the consor of a judgment in a lease had been evicted for non-payment of rent, and a new lease had been granted to a third party under circumstances which would constitute the new lease a graft. Casidy v. Hopkins, 10 Ir. Eq. R. 208.

1. Receiver ought not to be appointed where there is a trustee with power of entry and distress. Burton v. Monkhouse, Coop. 41.

2. Where the payment of rents, in consequence of disputes among the trustees, had been permitted to fall into arrear, on a bill filed by the plaintiff, who was entitled to the rents and profits for her life, against the trustees, the Court ordered a receiver to be appointed, and the costs of the suit to be paid by the trustees. Wilson v. Wilson, 2 Keen 249.

3. The Court refused to appoint a receiver of a charity estate against a corporation as trustees. Att.-Gen. v. Stafford (Mayor), Barnard. 33.

4. Receiver of a West India estate applied for by one of the parties entitled to a charge thereon against the trustee, refused, notwithstanding the estate was depreciated in value, and incumbrances thereon were increasing, the management of the trustee not appearing to be improper. Barkley v. Reay (Lord), 2 Hare 308.

5. Where an heir had, by decree, been substituted as trustee to execute a devise to charity, upon his laches, an account was decreed, and receiver appointed. Att.-Gen. v. Bowyer, 3 Ves. 714.

6. Executor and trustee becoming bankrupt, a receiver was appointed, though testator knew the commission had issued. Langley v. Hamk, 5 Madd. 46.

7. A receiver will be appointed where an executrix and trustee is bankrupt. Gladdon v. Stoneman, 1 Madd. 143. n.

8. There being some disagreement between three trustees, the majority acted alone and took securities in their own names, omitting the name of the dissentient trustee:—Held, that the plaintiff, who was interested in the trust property, was entitled to a receiver. Swale v. Swale, 22 Beav. 584.

9. In an administration suit, where an order had been made that the trustees of the estate of the testator in the cause should continue to receive the rents and profits and proceeds of the estate, and keep down the annuities bequeathed by his will, and from time to time pass their accounts in chambers, and pay in their balances, an order appointing a receiver was made in chambers, by a Vice-Chancellor personally, upon the application of some of the beneficiaries, upon the ground that the trustees had made default in passing their accounts. The trustees and other parties opposed the application:—Held, that this was a matter connected with the management of property within the 15 & 16 Vict., c. 80, s. 26, and that the judge had jurisdiction to make the order in chambers. Booth v. Coulton, 16 W. R. 683.

II. ON BREACH OF TRUST.

10. A husband contracted for a lease of some premises, and he afterwards induced the trustees of his marriage settlement, who held moneys for the separate use of his wife, without power of anticipation, to act in breach of their trust, and to purchase the property. The property was conveyed to the trustees, and, by a deed executed by the husband and wife, it was declared that it should be held for their indemnity and on the trusts of the settlement. The husband laid out very considerable sums of money in buildings and repairs, and, with the consent of the wife, was permitted to receive the rents. After some years, disputes arose; the trustees insisted on receiving the rents, and proceeded at law to enforce their rights; whereupon the husband filed a bill against the trustees and his wife, claiming a lease under the agreement, and asking for a sale of the property, and for the application of the produce, first, in replacement of the trust funds, and afterwards, in reimbursing the plaintiff his outlay. A motion for a receiver was refused with costs. Wiles v. Cooper, 9 Beav. 294; 15 L. J., N. S., Ch., 129.

11. Where by one deed of settlement a fund and estates of the wife were settled to her for life, remainder in trust for the children of the marriage, and by another deed the husband settled a rent-charge on his estates in trust for the wife for life, she, after her husband's death, obtained, by fraud and concealment of the settlement, the fund to be transferred to her, and assigned her life interest in her estates to a party with notice of the fraud:—Held, that the rents of her estates and the rent-charge were liable to be applied in replacing the fund, and a receiver appointed. Woodyatt v. Gresley, 8 Sim. 180.

12. Where property has been administered and applied without complaint, according to the uniform course of management, for a long series of years, the Court will not, by an interlocutory order, disturb the possession upon the ground that such application is a breach of trust, unless it is perfectly clear that the party in whom the property is vested is a mere naked trustee, and has not, even to a limited extent, any of the rights or interests of an owner. A motion for appointment of a receiver of the estates vested in the Irish Society, at the instance of one of the London company, claiming a beneficial interest in the income of the estates, was therefore refused. Skinner's Co. v. Irish Society, 1 Myl. & C. 162.

13. Receiver refused, though as between parties who stood in the relative situation of cestui que trust and trustee, and though the latter, against whom the receiver was prayed, admitted that he had purchased the trust property, the ground of the decision being, though the case was one of suspicion, that the Court could not interfere till the purchase was actually set aside. George v. Evans, 4 Y. & Coll. 211.

14. Where a portion of a trust fund had been lost, that is primâ facie a breach of trust, and a sufficient ground for the appointment of a receiver on an interlocutory application. Evans v. Coventry, 5 De G. M. & G. 911.

Held, also, that objections to the bill on the ground of misjoinder, multifariousness, or want of parties, were no answer to such an application. Ib.

III. ON DISCLAIMER.

1. Where one of two trustees of real estate declines to act, the Court will appoint a receiver on behalf of infant cestuis que trustent, but with liberty to either of the trustees to offer himself. Tait v. Jenkins, 1 Y. & Coll. C. C. 492.

2. Where there are several trustees, the disclaimer of some of them is not alone a sufficient ground for the appointment of a receiver, without the consent of those who remain. Browell v. Reed, 1 Hare 434; 11 L. J., N. S., Ch., 272; 6 Jur. 530.

3. Receiver appointed before answer in a case of a devise to four trustees, of whom two declined to act, all parties being before the Court, and consenting. Brodie v. Barry, 3 Meriv. 695.

IV. WHERE TRUSTEE ABROAD.

4. Receiver appointed of a Government pension, the trustee being out of the jurisdiction. Noad v. Backhouse, 2 Y. & Coll. C. C. 529; 12 L. J., N. S., Ch., 446; 7 Jur. 808.

5. Receiver appointed, upon an alienage in trust, in possession, who resided abroad, and had not appeared to the bill. Malcolm v. Montgomery, 2 Moll. 500.

• A receiver appointed over lands in Ireland conveyed by a trust deed, the trustee not being before the Court, and although the trustee had an interest in his own right, being one of the creditors to be paid off, and appeared upon the pleadings as in possession. S. C. 1 Hog. 93.

6. A receiver appointed of real and personal estate where the devisee in trust and personal representatives were in Jersey, and therefore out of the jurisdiction. Smith v. Smith, 10 Hare (App.) lxxi.

V. DISCHARGE OF.

7. A receiver, who had been appointed in consequence of the misconduct and incapacity of trustees under a will, discharged upon the appointment of new trustees by the Court. Bainbridge v. Blair 3 Beav. 421.

XXVIII. Of Removal or Appointment of New Trustees. See XV. III. 3 (a) ante—XVI. I. 6 ante.

I. GENERAL PRINCIPLES.

8. As a general rule, trustees have a right to their costs out of the estate; but the application of the rule depends upon the conduct of the trustees under their strict observance of the duties of their trust. Beer v. Tapp, 31 L. J., Ch., 513; 10 W. R. 277; 6 L. T., N. T., 269.

9. Trustee seeking direction and indemnity of Court as to execution of trusts, is always allowed his costs, unless act required to be done leads to no responsibility, and motives of trustee are obviously vexatious. Curtis v. Chandler, 6 Madd. 123.

10. Trustees who file a bill for the administration of a testator's estate, are entitled to their costs, however small the estate may be, and however small the risk in administering the estate. Hodgkinson v. Gilbert, 19 L. J., N. S., Ch., 424.

11. Costs of course, out of the fund to agents, receivers, and trustees, who have accounted fairly, and paid money into court. Costs cannot be given to a college individually, nor as a corporation, unless proved so. Att.-Gen. v. London (City of), 1 Ves. J. 246; 3 Bro. C. C. 171.

12. A trustee is entitled to be reimbursed out of the trust property all the charges and expenses incurred in the execution of the trust, and in this the Court will always deal liberally with a trustee acting bond fide. Courtney v. Rumley, 5 Ir. B., Eq., 99.

II. MISCONDUCT AND BREACH OF TRUST. IN GENERAL.

13. Considering the importance of securing intelligent, competent, and responsible persons to act as trustees, it is not the practice of the Court to visit trustees with costs, except when they act from interested motives, or intentionally and wantonly conduct themselves in a vexatious and oppressive manner. Noble v. Maymott, 14 Beav. 471; 20 L. J., N. S., Ch., 61.

1. Matters of personal or private feeling cannot be considered in a question either of merits or of costs, as between trustee and cestui que trust; and therefore a trustee, who deems himself to be or is assailed, by imputations cast upon him by his cestui que trust, is not justified in refusing to do an act which his trust requires, until he receives an apology from the cestui que trust; and if he refuses, from want of such apology alone, to do an act which his duty as trustee requires, he will be liable to the costs of a suit brought to enforce the performance of such duty. Moore v. France, 9 Hare 299; 20 L. J., N. S., Ch., 468; 15 Jur. 1188.

2. Trustee is entitled to costs, unless he acts from motives of caprice or obstinacy. Taylor v. Glanville, 3 Madd. 176.

3. Costs refused to a trustee, setting up a trust different from what it really was; but general misconduct, etc., is not a sufficient ground. Ball v. Montgomery, 2 Ves. J. 191; 4 Bro. C. C. 339.

4. Trustees neglecting their trust not entitled to their costs. England v. Downs, 6 Beav. 279.

5. Where trustee by neglect occasions the suit, no costs are given him, but against him, of course. O'Callaghan v. Cooper, 5 Ves. 117; Caffrey v. Darby, 6 Ves. 488.

6. The right of a trustee to his costs, like that of a mortgagee, is a matter of contract, and is not in the discretion of the judge, although he may be deprived of them for misconduct. The mere fact that a trustee denies that he is indebted to the estate, and on taking the accounts turns out to be indebted, is no reason for depriving him of the costs. Turner v. Hancock, 20 L. R., Ch. D., 303; 51 L. J., Ch., 517; 46 L. T. 750; 30 W. R. 480.

7. Trustee ordered to pay costs on misconduct. Danson v. Parrot, 3 Bro. C. C. 236.

8. A trustee misbehaving himself ordered to pay costs out of his own pocket, and not out of the trust estate. Lloyd v. Spillet, 3 P. W. 347. S. P. Fell v. Lutwidge, Barnard. 314.

9. If a bill be filed against a trustee for an account to which he submits by an answer, though, on taking the account, he be found in debt, yet he shall not pay costs unless he has misbehaved himself. Secus, if he controverts the account; there, if found in arrear, he shall pay interest and costs. Parrot v. Treby, 1 Eq. Abr. 125; Pre. Ch. 254.

10. Trustee not deprived of costs for slight misconduct, in respect of which he is charged with interest. Sammes v. Rickman, 2 Ves. J. 36.

11. Trustees and executors do not necessarily lose their costs because charged with interest. Woodhead v. Marriott, C. P. C. 62.

12. If a trustee has not misconducted himself, even though the Court punish him, as by making him pay interest on funds in his hands, yet he shall get the costs of the suit; but if his account be greatly reduced in the office, he shall not get the costs of passing it. Foxier v. Andrews, 2 J. & L. 199; 7 Ir. Eq. R. 595.

13. Trustees, who were directed to sell an estate as soon as conveniently might be after their testator's death, refused, by the desire of one of the parties interested, an offer of 6,600*l.* for the estate; but they afterwards sold it for 3,600*l.* The Court charged them with the loss, but gave them their costs, as their conduct had not been wilful nor perverse. Taylor v. Tabrum, 6 Sim. 281; 1 L. J., N. S., Ch., 189.

14. Trustee how far charged with interest and costs and profits of a farm carried on by aid of testator's personal estate. Killick v. Flewney, 4 Bro. C. C. 163.

15. A trustee who has purchased the trust property, and sold it at a profit, and who has been compelled by a suit in equity to refund that profit, will not, except under circumstances affecting him with moral fraud, be charged with the costs of the suit. Baker v. Carter, 1 Y. & Coll. 250; 4 L. J., N. S., Exch. Eq., 12.

16. Relief on a bill charging default against trustee, who had changed the fund, and the trust fund secured, but costs given to the trustee against the plaintiff and the fund; the rule that trustee not having acted regularly shall pay costs being subject to be qualified where, though the conduct was irregular, the motive was not corrupt. Fitzgerald v. O'Flaherty, 1 Moll. 347.

17. Where the misapplication of the funds of a public body had gone on for a great length of time, and no imputation was cast upon the trustees, they, though removed, were allowed their costs out of the fund; this, however, not to be a precedent for cases, which should be defended afterwards, where the same point should arise. Att.-Gen. v. Drummond, 2 Con. & L. 98; 3 Dr. & War. 162.

18. When the costs or expenses claimed have been incurred through the misconduct or negligence of the trustee, he will not be allowed them; but the fact of his having been unsuccessful in litigation, either as plaintiff or defendant, will not, in the absence of misconduct, disentitle him to be reimbursed his costs. Courtney v. Rumley, 6 Ir. Eq. Rep. 99.

19. A trustee, against whom a bill had been filed for breach of trust, after decree declaring him liable and ordering accounts to be taken, paid 4,000*l.* into court. On taking accounts it was found that the sum of 1,200*l.* more was still owing from the trustee.—Held, that he was liable for the costs of taking the accounts as well as for the costs up to decree. Payne v. Parker, 17 W. R. 640.

20. Trustees were directed by a will to place the trust moneys in the public funds, or on some good and approved freehold or leasehold securities, at interest. The trustees, acting bonâ fide, had, in 1828, upon the report of a surveyor (who had valued the property at 3,500*l.*, and the annual rental at 175*l.*), lent 2,600*l.*, part of the trust moneys, upon a mortgage, with powers of sale, of the valued property, and which consisted of four freehold messuages, at the time in an unfinished state, the actual yearly rent of which being only 105*l*. The mortgagor having become insolvent, the trustees sold the property in 1836, which then realised less than the amount lent by 353*l*. 4*s*. 2*d*., and that sum was lost to the estate. In a suit by a cestui que trust, the Court declined to charge the trustees with the loss, and allowed them their costs of suit, and their costs, charges, and expenses. Jones v. Lewis, 3 De G. & Sm. 471; 13 Jur. 877; 18 L. J., Ch., 430.

1. On a decree against several trustees for breach of trust, the costs of suit are decreed against all, without regard to the degrees of culpability, but for the greater security for their payment. Lawrence v. Bowle, 2 Ph. 140; 1 Coop. C. C. 241.

2. Generally, where trustees are guilty of a breach of trust, they must pay the costs of a suit to repair it. Byrne v. Norcott, 13 Beav. 336.

3. On a mortgagee of settled estates requiring to be paid off, or to have the interest increased, the tenant for life proposed a new mortgagee at the same rate. The trustees insisted on being the proper persons to carry the transaction into effect, and procured another mortgagee, but at a higher rate; and in order to raise the expenses thereby incurred, they proceeded to sell the estate under the ordinary powers of sale and exchange in the settlement, whereupon the tenant for life filed a bill to restrain the sale:—Held, that the conduct of the trustees was unjustifiable, and that they ought to pay all the costs of the suit. Marshall v. Sladden, 4 De G. & Sm. 468; 7 Hare 428; 19 L. J., N. S., Ch., 57; 14 Jur. 106.

4. When in an action for administration of trusts the plaintiff makes a special case of breach of trust in relation to the property, not depending upon a mere point of construction, the rule is that, the breach of trust being established, the trustee must bear the costs of the action so far as it relates thereto. Bell v. Turner, 47 L. J., Ch., 76.

5. Costs of administration suit given to an executor, though charged with the consequences of an improper investment. Knott v. Cottes, 16 Beav. 76; 16 Jur. 762.

6. Where a trustee, at the request of the cestui que trust, a married woman, and tenant for life of the fund for her separate use, sold out the trust fund, and invested it on an improper security:—Held, in a suit by such tenant for life against the trustee to have the trust fund replaced in a proper state of investment, that no costs ought to be given, as between the plaintiff and the defendant, on either side:—Held, also, that the costs of the parties entitled in remainder were to be paid by the plaintiff. Mant v. Leith, 16 Jur. 302; 21 L. J., Ch., 719; 15 Beav. 524.

7. Where a trustee commits a breach of trust and dies, and his heir incurs costs in unsuccessfully defending an action of trespass brought in consequence of steps taken by him to obtain possession of freeholds lost by reason of such breach, he was allowed such costs. Melling v. Melling, 6 W. R. 121.

8. Trustees having committed breach of trust by granting longer leases than they had power by deed to do, the fact of cestui que trust receiving rents from the lessees, in ignorance of the invalidity of the leases, does not operate as a new agreement. But account only directed from filing of bill, without costs to plaintiff. Bones v. East London Waterworks, 3 Madd. 373.

9. A trustee in a will which directed money to be lent at such a rate of interest as the trustees should think reasonable, by consent of his co-trustee, keeps it at 4 per cent. Ordered to pay 5, and the executors to pay the costs of taking the accounts as to that interest. Forbes v. Ross, 2 Bro. C. C. 430.

III. WILFUL MISCONDUCT.

10. Interest and costs decreed against a steward upon fraud, wilful concealment, etc., and in such cases generally there is no limitation of time. Hardwicke v. Vernon, 14 Ves. 504.

11. Where trustees for infants persisted in unnecessary litigation, they were ordered to pay the costs personally. Campbell v. Campbell, 2 Myl. & C. 25.

12. If trustee files bill, and brings cestui que trust before the Court for his own private interest, he shall pay whole costs of suit. Henley v. Philips, 2 Atk. 48.

13. Where trustees, throughout transactions in reference to trust estates of a wife, endeavoured to aid the husband in defeating the wife's enjoyment of her separate estate:—Held, that the decree was right in ordering those trustees and W. B. to pay the costs of the suit, the same having been rendered necessary by the unfounded claims of the husband, improperly recognised and supported by those two trustees. Held, also, that the husband and the two trustees hostile to the wife were properly ordered to pay the costs of the parties interested in remainder under the settlement, and who were not necessary parties to the suit, inasmuch as they, on the part of the husband, set up the claim to a tenancy for life in the timber-money, which raised a question (however untenable) in which the other persons entitled in remainder were interested. Bagot v. Bagot, 10 L. J., N. S., Ch., 116.

14. Where a trustee executed a deed of declaration of trust in favour of the wife, falsely reciting that the fund was the wife's separate property, and which was afterwards set aside as in fraud of creditors, the Court refused to give the trustee his costs. Turquand v. Knight, 14 Sim. 643; 9 Jur. 546.

15. By settlement, a trustee was required, immediately after the marriage, to compel payment of a sum of money secured by a covenant in the deed; he neglected to do so even when required to call it in, and allowed the interest to fall into arrear; he was held liable to pay the costs of a suit instituted to compel him to perform the trusts. Kirby v. Mash, 3 Y. & Coll. 295; 8 L. J., N. S., Exch. Eq., 33; 3 Jur. 221.

16. In a suit by the legatee of the vendor, against the devisees in trust of the purchaser, for payment of part of the purchase money not payable by the contract till the death of the vendor, the trustees were decreed to pay the costs out of their own estate, because they had occasioned the suit by unfounded doubts which they had raised as to whether the plaintiff was entitled absolutely or for life only. Burrows v. Greenwood, 4 Y. & Coll. 251; 5 Jur. 384.

1. So, where rents were allowed to fall into arrear in consequence of disputes between the trustees, the Court compelled them to pay the costs of a suit by the tenant for life. Wilson v. Wilson, 2 Keen 249.

2. Where trustees for sale purchased through a trustee at an under-value, though without fraud, and by auction, and the cestui que trust were infants, and therefore incapable of discharging the trustees, the relief as to a re-sale was given with costs against them; but as to the other part of the case, with regard to accounts that must have been taken, they must have their costs, as they would have been entitled to them in the ordinary case. Sanderson v. Walker, 13 Ves. 601. And see Hall v. Hallet, 1 Cox 134, 141.

3. A trustee unreasonably resisting the claims of his cestui que trust ordered to pay the costs of the suit. Price v. Loaden, 21 Beav. 508.

4. If trustees, by wilful neglect of their duty, render a suit for the administration of the estate under their charge necessary, they will be ordered to pay the costs of it. Jefferys v. Marshall, 19 W. R. 94; 23 L. T., N. S., 548.

5. A trustee filing an administration suit against his cestui que trust in order to avoid a bill against himself for an account which he had neglected to render, was not made to pay costs, but the carriage of the decree was given to the cestui que trust. Naylor v. Smith, 15 W. R. 528.

6. Trustees raising a charge of fraud, and taking no steps to satisfy themselves when they might easily do so, will not be allowed their costs of the discussion in court, if upon the evidence the Court considers there was no reasonable ground of suspicion. Cockcroft v. Sutcliffe, 2 Jur., N. S., 323; 25 L. J., Ch., 313; 4 W. R. 339.

Lands being limited to a father for life, with an exclusive power of appointment among his children, remainder over, the two eldest sons, being of full age, and desirous of being established in the world, set up in business as millers in partnership. At their request the father joined the partnership. In order to procure capital for the business, the father appointed the lands to his two sons exclusively, and joined with them in mortgaging the fee for 800*l.*, which was placed to the credit of the partnership generally, other property belonging to the father, of the value of 600*l.*, being included in the security. There were five other children, three of whom were still infants, and two of age. These two had confirmed the transaction. There was no evidence of any bargain or any mala fides on the part of the father, or any advantage except such as he derived from the produce of the mortgage being employed in the trade in which he was a partner:—Held, that it was a good appointment; and it appearing that the trustees had taken no trouble to inquire into any of the circumstances attending the same, but treated it at once as a fraud on the power, no costs, charges, or expenses were allowed to them since filing the bill. Ib.

Unnecessary evidence having been gone into by the trustees as to the bankruptcy of the father seventeen years back, they were ordered to pay so much of the costs of the suit as were occasioned by such evidence. Ib.

7. Trustee disallowed the costs of an improper answer. Eddowes v. Eddowes, 30 Beav. 603.

8. On a marriage, the father of the wife purchased 1,000*l.* consols, and the same was vested in trustees to pay the dividends to the wife for her life; and then trusts were declared for the children of the marriage, under which the Court had decreed, in a former suit, that the only child of the marriage, a daughter, took a vested interest. This daughter married J. M., and died in the lifetime of the mother, leaving J. M. her surviving. J. M. did not take out administration to the effects of his deceased wife, and afterwards died:—Held, that his executors were entitled to the 1,000*l.* consols, and that the representatives of the wife were not entitled. One of J. M.'s executors, who was a defendant, having colluded with the other defendant, the Court gave costs against both of them. Platt v. M'Dougall, Tambl. 390; 9 L. J., Ch., 150.

9. A trustee of a marriage settlement, who allowed a sum of 350*l.* to remain in the hands of a trading firm for a period exceeding fifteen years after the death of the tenant for life, but who eventually, and before the bill was filed, paid the principal, with 5*l.* per cent. interest:—Held, liable to account with annual rests, and also to the costs of the suit. Jones v. Fowall, 21 L. J., Ch., 725.

10. A trustee, with power to invest the trust property in leasehold or chattel personal securities, or upon the personal security of any person, advanced, at the request of his cestui que trust, some of the property to two ladies on the security of mortgages (with the usual covenants) of a leasehold house in which the ladies were living, and of the furniture in it. The trustee was also the lessor of the house. The mortgagors became insolvent, paid no rent, and no part of the principal or interest on the loan. The trustee, as lessor, determined the lease by entry, and then sold all his interest in the leasehold premises and the furniture; but he thereby so mixed up the trust property with his own that it was impossible to distinguish the one from the other, or to pronounce with certainty how much of the proceeds of the sale was his, and how much belonged to the cestui que trust. The advance had been made at 5*l.* per cent. After some delay, the trustee replaced the principal money of the loan, but invested it against the wishes of his cestui que trust in 3*l.* per cent. consols, the dividends on which, however, were paid to them:—Held, that the trustee was bound to make good to the trust estate the whole of the money advanced on the loan, with all interest due thereon at the rate of 5*l.* per cent. per annum, to be computed up to the date of the decree; and that he must pay the costs of the suit. Cook v. Addison, 38 L. J., Ch., 322; 7 L. R., Eq., 466; 17 W. R. 480; 20 L. T., N. S., 212.

IV. MISTAKES.

11. Where a trustee committed a breach of trust from a mistake of his powers, he was made to pay costs. Powlett (Earl) v. Herbert, 1 Ves. 297.

1. Where, under the trusts of a doubtful will, the tenant for life, who was also a trustee, neglected to make proper investments, she was held chargeable with interest at 4 per cent. only, and the decree was made without costs. Mousley v. Carr, 4 Beav. 49; 10 L. J., N. S., Ch., 360.

2. Trustees who had acted bonâ fide, though upon an erroneous construction of a will, not ordered to pay costs. Harper v. Munday, 2 Jur., N. S., 1197.

V. BREACH OF TRUST WITHOUT LOSS.

3. Where improper application of a trust fund was of a small part, and promptly offered to be restored, and no imputation, trustee not disentitled to costs, a suit being necessary for another purpose of the trust. Fitzgerald v. Pringle, 2 Moll. 534.

4. A trustee was declared liable for a breach of trust, and was ordered to pay the costs up to the hearing. He complied with the decree:—Held, that he was entitled to the costs of his subsequent proceedings for clearing and distributing the fund. Hewitt v. Foster, 7 Beav. 348; 8 Jur. 769.

5. Trustees had lent money on a technically insufficient security. In the Master's office, they entered into evidence to prove its sufficiency, but failed; and they afterwards presented a petition for calling in and investing the money. This was done, and no loss occurred:—Held, that the trustees were entitled to their costs of both proceedings. Royds v. Royds, 14 Beav. 45.

6. When trustees in good faith invest on a security not in strictness justified by the instrument creating the trust, but which is practically secure, and from which no loss to the trust fund occurs, they will not be decreed to pay the costs of a suit to compel them to bring in the fund so invested. In this case the Court refused the trustees their costs, and directed the petitioner's costs to be paid out of the fund. Fitzgerald v. Fitzgerald, 6 Ir. Ch. R. 145.

VI. UNSUBSTANTIATED CHARGES OF BREACH OF TRUST OR FRAUD.

7. A bill contained allegations of great fraud against trustees, which all failed. The trustees were removed; but not, however, on the ground of misconduct:—Held, that they were entitled to the costs of the whole suit. Passingham v. Sherborn, 9 Beav. 424.

On a devise to two trustees, with a leasing power, and that they might become lessees, one declined to act, and the other became lessee, and he was afterwards removed by order of the Master of the Rolls, at the instance of the cœtui que trust, on the ground of the inconsistency of the characters of trustees and lessees:—Held, to have been properly dismissed. An action having been brought to try the question of injury to the estate and mismanagement, and on the account taken a balance having been found due to the trustees, and the charges of breaches of covenant having been abandoned at the hearing:—Held, that the trustees were entitled to the costs of the suit. Id.

8. Where fraudulent charges are made against trustees, and inquiries into the truth of them are directed by the Court, if in the result it is proved that such charges were unfounded, the costs consequent upon the investigation will be thrown upon the party making them. Bartlett v. Wood, 30 L. J., Ch., 614; 9 W. R. 817; 4 L. T., N. S., 692.

9. On a bill filed by C. against A. and B., alleging that F. would have made a higher offer if the negotiations had been continued, and charging the trustees with the consequent loss to the estate:—Held, that the trustees could not, under the circumstances, be made liable, and that they ought to be allowed the usual trustees' costs of the suit. Selby v. Bowie, 1 N. R. 420; 11 W. R. 559; 8 L. T., N. S., 18.

10. The trustees of a will agreed to settle disputes with the surviving partner in a firm of which the testator had been a member by selling the testator's share to him at a certain price. They then filed a bill to have this agreement sanctioned; a decree was made accordingly, and the sale carried out. Some years afterwards some of the residuary legatees, who were infants, filed a bill by their next friend to set aside the decree on the ground that the compromise was an improper one, and that it had been entered into, and the decree sanctioning it obtained, by the personal fraud of one of the trustees. This trustee answered separately; and at the hearing Lord Romilly dismissed the bill with costs, being of opinion that the compromise had been beneficial and the decree sanctioning it properly obtained. The next friend could not pay the costs, and the trustee applied by summons in a suit for the administration of the testator's estate to have them taxed as between solicitor and client and paid out of the estate:—Held, that the trustee was entitled to be paid his costs out of the estate, as he had defended the suit for the benefit of the estate, though he had at the same time defended his own character. Walters v. Woodbridge, 7 L. R., Ch. D., 504; 47 L. J., Ch., 516; 26 W. R. 469; 38 L. T., N. S., 83. Reversing 20 W. R. 520.

11. One of two tenants for life under a settlement brought an action, claiming to have the trusts executed by the Court. The statement of claim alleged that the surviving trustee had committed a breach of trust, and asked to have new trustees appointed in the place of him and a deceased trustee. The settlement contained a power to appoint new trustees, exercisable by the tenants for life. The plaintiffs' income had always been regularly paid to him. At the trial the charges against the trustee were abandoned, and it was admitted that there was no ground for his removal:—Held, that the plaintiff was entitled to judgment for the execution of the trusts, but that, the action being unnecessary, he must pay the costs of it up to and including the trial. Fane v. Fane, 13 L. R., Ch. D., 228; 49 L. J., Ch., 200; 41 L. T. 551; 28 W. R. 348.

VII. REFUSING TO GIVE ACCOUNTS OR INFORMATION.

12. Owners of a privateer acting for themselves and the crew, in the sale of the prizes, having neglected to render accounts, and delayed the distribution of the proceeds, charged with interest on the balances, and costs. Pearce v. Green, 1 Jac. & Walk. 135.

The first duty of an agent, receiver, trustee, or executor, is to be constantly ready with his accounts, and neglect in this is a ground for charging him with interest. Ib.

1. Repeated applications were made to a trustee requiring to know in what way certain legacies given by the will of a testator, and in which certain parties had life interests, had been invested. To these applications the trustee gave evasive answers:—Held, that he must individually pay the costs of a suit to secure those legacies. Grierson v. Astle, 3 L. T., N. S., 288.

2. A trustee refused to render sufficient accounts of a legacy bequeathed to a married woman for life, with remainder to her children, on the ground that the legatees wished to deal with the legacy in a manner inconsistent with the terms of the will, and stated her intention of retiring from the trusts by payment of the legacy into court:—Held, in a suit by the legatees, that the trustee was not justified in such refusal, and must pay the costs of the suit. Henry v. Macdonald, 15 W. R. 165.

3. Where trustees for creditors neglected, on the application of a creditor, to furnish an account of the trust estate, and the creditor filed a bill, to which the trustees put in an answer, setting forth an account substantially correct, the Court made the acting trustee pay the plaintiffs costs to the hearing, but gave both trustees their subsequent costs out of the estate. Springett v. Dashwood, 2 Giff. 521; 3 L. T., N. S., 542.

4. When trustees refused information and an account of the property to the plaintiffs, who had an interest in the estate, and other proceedings had subsequently been taken whereby the costs of the suit were greatly increased, the trustees were directed to pay the costs of the suit up to the hearing, as if it had been an ordinary administration suit, and as to the rest of the costs each party to bear his own. Talbot v. Marshfield, 3 L. R., Ch., 622; 19 L. T., N. S., 223.

5. An executor or trustee is bound, in the absence of very strong reasons to the contrary, to render the accounts of his testator's estate to the solicitor of the residuary legatee; and if he pertinaciously refuse to do so, will be ordered to pay the costs up to the hearing of a suit to have the accounts taken, although such suit may embrace other matters. Kemp v. Burn, 1 N. R. 257; 4 Giff. 348; 11 W. R. 278.

6. Trustee, under deed of trust, by a former petition upholding the trust and praying to annul flat, and failing, but consenting to have the account against him taken on that petition by reference, ordered to pay costs of that petition, and to pay balance in his hands, under trust deed, to assignees, with interest at 4 per cent. from date of order of reference, although there was no evidence of interest having been made. Costs of reference to be paid by estate. Exp. Harding, 4 Dea. & Ch. 793.

7. Where, after applications to see trusteeship accounts were refused, a bill was filed for the administration of real and personal estate, and the trustees by their answer denied that there was anything due from, but that a balance was due to, them, and that the prosecution of the suit could lead to no useful result, as there was no estate remaining unapplied, but that they were ready to account on being paid their costs, and the chief clerk certified that a balance was due from the trustees, the Court considered the conduct of the trustees, who had had the management of the estate, unsatisfactory; ordered them to pay the balance due, with interest at 4l. per cent., and directed them to pay all the costs of the suit, excepting the costs of the proceedings in reference to the real estate, the charge in the bill that the testator had real estate not having been proved by the plaintiff. Eglin v. Sanderson, 8 Jur., N. S., 329.

VIII. REFUSING TO CONVEY OR TRANSFER THE TRUST FUND.

8. A trustee, refusing to pay a legacy without the direction of the Court in a case which admitted of no doubt, was refused his costs, but was not made to pay the costs of the suit, because he might have acted from ignorance, and not from any improper motive. Knight v. Martin, 1 Russ. & M. 70; Taml. 237.

9. A bill for a specific performance of an agreement was made necessary by a trustee refusing to join in the conveyance. The Court being of opinion that the trustee ought to pay all the costs of the suit, the decree was, that the plaintiff should pay the costs of all the other defendants (although he had a decree against them), and recover over the whole costs from the defendant, the trustee. Jones v. Lewis, 1 Cox 199.

10. Trustees, who had declined to transfer a fund to an assignee, on the ground of an alleged fraud in the assignment, were held entitled to costs as between solicitor and client, although the assignment was decreed to be carried into execution; there being some circumstances of suspicion attending the assignment, particularly at variance between the consideration expressed in the deed and the actual consideration. Whitmarsh v. Robertson, 1 Y. & Coll. C. C. 715; 11 L. J., N. S., Ch., 404; 6 Jur. 921.

11. The wife of a testator having disposed of a moiety of his real estate by her will, purporting to be in exercise of the power given her by his will, her executor claimed to be entitled to receive a moiety of the proceeds of the testator's real estate from the trustees of his will, which claim they refused, on the ground that the codicil did not revoke the power given by the will, although they were previously advised, by the opinions of two counsel, which they concealed from the executor of the wife, that it did:—Held, that they were liable to pay the costs of a suit instituted by the executor of the wife to recover a moiety of the proceeds of the testator's real estate, so far as it was rendered necessary by their conduct. Ankers v. Sandford, 4 Jur. 817.

12. A man may be a trustee of land in such a sense as that the Court will direct him to convey the legal estate without considering him entitled to trustee's costs and allowances. Carter v. Carter, 4 Jur., N. S., 63.

1. Trustees of a term, the trusts of which had been put an end to by the cestui que trust:—Held, entitled to their costs of a suit to compel an assignment of the term to the purchaser of the property, on the ground that full and accurate information had not been tendered them before bill filed. Holford v. Phipps, 3 Beav. 434; 10 L. J., N. S., Ch., 209.

2. Trustees who have unsuccessfully resisted the claim of the assignees from the cestui que trust to have a term merged:—Held, entitled to trustees' costs. Holford v. Phipps, 4 Beav. 475.

3. A party to whose name a trust fund has been transferred by mistake is entitled to the sanction of the Court before he joins in any transfer, and to his costs. Dunkin v. Ward, 1 Jur. 735.

4. It is the duty of the Court to protect trustees to the utmost in exercising every reasonable caution, and requiring full proof; yet if a trustee, after having received full evidence of the title, perseveringly persist in withholding the fund from the party entitled to it upon grounds which wholly fail, and especially where a part of those grounds is a claim in which that trustee is himself interested, the Court will not allow him so to conduct himself without paying the costs of such a mode of proceeding. Frost v. Hamilton, 6 Jur. 525.

5. Trustees of the separate estate of a married woman decreed to pay the costs of a suit instituted to compel them to transfer the fund into her name. Thorby v. Yeats, 1 Y. & Coll. C. C. 438; 6 Jur. 939.

6. An heir-at-law, claiming as such, was put to prove, and did prove his pedigree, as stated in his bill in detail:—Held, that the Court might and ought to decide without a jury; and it appearing that the evidence of heirship was, previously to the institution of a suit, submitted to the defendants, the trustees, and was such as they ought to have been satisfied with, the Court gave the plaintiff the costs of the suit as against the trustees, including the expenses of the genealogical evidence. Lancashire v. Lancashire, 1 De G. & Sm. 288; 11 Jur. 1024.

7. An unmarried lady transferred a sum of stock to trustees for herself. The letter supposed to contain the terms of the trust was lost, and no evidence was given of its contents. After the marriage of the lady, the husband and wife demanded a transfer of the fund, which the trustees refused to make without the direction of the Court, unless the fund should be settled for the benefit of the wife and her issue:—Held, that the trustees ought to have transferred the fund without suit, and must, therefore, pay the costs. Penfold v. Bouch, 4 Hare 271.

8. By a post-nuptial settlement, property in the funds, belonging to the wife, was settled in trust for the husband and wife for their lives, and then for such of their children in such parts, etc., as the wife should by deed or will appoint. There were four children. The husband died, and the wife appointed the whole fund, and assigned her life interest therein to the eldest (a daughter), who had attained the age of twenty-one, but who, together with the other children, was living with her mother. A trustee, refusing to join in the transfer of the fund, pursuant to the appointment, was not allowed his costs of a suit brought against him by the daughter to compel the transfer, though, under all the circumstances of the case, he was not decreed to pay the costs of the suit. Campbell v. Home, 1 Y. & Coll. C. C. 664; 7 Jur. 365.

9. Where a trustee refused to re-convey trust property until the cestui que trust had apologised for an alleged imputation on the trustee, the costs of a suit for re-conveyance, occasioned by such refusal, were directed to be paid by the trustee. Moore v. Franco, 9 Hare 299; 20 L. J., N. S., Ch., 468; 15 Jur. 1188.

10. A cestui que trust will have to pay his own costs if he institutes proceedings against his trustee for payment of a sum due unless every feasible means have been adopted by him to obtain payment without suit. Aylmer v. Winterbottom, 4 Jur., N. S., 19.

11. An executrix of a deceased and sole trustee having declined to receive and pay the dividends on stock standing in the name of the trustee, the cestui que trust filed a bill against her for the appointment of new trustees, a transfer of the trust fund, and payment of a dividend:—Held, that the executrix was entitled to her costs out of the fund. Legg v. Mackrell, 2 De G. F. & J. 551; 4 L. T., N. S., 568. Reversing 1 Giff. 165; 5 Jur., N. S., 1154.

12. Where a married woman is entitled to a life interest to her separate use, under her marriage settlement, her receipt alone to be a sufficient discharge, that is not a restraint upon anticipation; but where the trustees, upon the clause, as to the separate receipt, consider it so far doubtful that they refuse to pay either to the married woman or her assignee, and a bill is filed, they are still entitled to their costs in priority. Ross v. Sharrod, 11 W. R. 356; 1 N. R. 419.

13. Trustees refusing to recognise an appointment made by their cestui que trust, a tenant for life, in favour of his two sons, on the ground that such appointment is fraudulent from some supposed benefit resulting to the appointor, will not be allowed their costs of a suit to compel a conveyance of the legal estate where all taint of fraud is distinctly disproved by the evidence, and the trustees have contented themselves with taking counsel's opinion without taking any steps to inform themselves as to the circumstances. Cockcroft v. Cockcroft v. Sutcliffe, 4 W. R. 339; 25 L. J., Ch., 313; 2 Jur., N. S., 323.

14. Where, upon the sale of an estate by the equitable owner, the party having the mere legal estate refused to convey unless the cestuis que trustent of the proceeds (declared by a deed of even date) were made parties to the conveyance:—Held, that he could not justify such refusal; but, as he appeared to have acted bonâ fide under advice which misled him, the Court would not charge him with costs of the suit occasioned by his refusal. Angier v. Stannard, 3 Myl. & K. 566; 3 L. J., N. S., Ch., 216.

15. By settlement made on the marriage of Mr. and Mrs. A., a fund was vested in trustees, upon trust, after the death of the survivor, for the child or children, or remoter issue of the marriage, as Mr. and Mrs. A. should jointly appoint, and in default, as the survivor should appoint. The only child of the marriage was a son, born in 1835. Mrs. A. died without having joined in the exercise of the power of appointment. In 1856 Mr. A. appointed that the fund should, after his own death, go to his son; and soon after the execution of that appointment Mr. A. and his son jointly applied to the trustees to transfer the fund into their joint names. About three months before the son attained twenty-one, Mr. A. wrote to the trustees, saying that it was the wish of himself and his son that a portion of the trust fund, amounting to six-sevenths of it, should be transferred into his own name only. The trustees laid a case before counsel for opinion as to the course they ought to adopt; and he advised that if certain requisitions were complied with, they might safely make the transfer to Mr. A. and his son without suit. All the requisitions mentioned by counsel were complied with; but the trustees refused to make the transfer without the direction of the Court. Mr. A. and his son then filed a bill for the purpose of obtaining a transfer of the trust fund into their joint names, and praying that the trustees might be ordered to pay the costs of the suit; and Stuart, V.-Ch., made a decree for such transfer, but directed the costs of the suit to be paid by Mr. A. and his son. Upon an appeal as to costs:—Held (affirming 3 Jur., N. S., 609; 5 W. R. 699), that the trustees were entitled to their costs of the suit; but the appeal was dismissed without costs. King v. King, 4 Jur., N. S., 721; 27 L. J., Ch., 29; 6 W. R. 85; 1 De G. & J. 663.

Where, in transactions between a father and a son who has just attained twenty-one, more especially when such transactions had their inception before the son attained that age, trustees act bonâ fide, and from no improper motive, for the protection of the interests of the son, the Court is bound to give them its support. Semble. Ib.

1. A trustee of two separate funds held not entitled to require from the cestui que trust of both funds a covenant of indemnity in respect of dealings with one of the funds before paying over the other fund, as to which there was no question; and the trustee was made to pay the costs of a suit instituted by the cestui que trust to obtain payment of the latter fund without any such indemnity. Price v. Loaden, 21 Beav. 508.

2. A legatee immediately upon attaining twenty-one required payment of a pecuniary legacy to which she then became entitled. The trustees of the will, who had stock to answer the legacy, were supplied with evidence of the legatee's age and identity, and that she was unmarried, but, acting on representations made by the legatee's brother, they required that they or one of them should have a personal interview with the legatee for the purpose of explaining her rights, and guarding her against the influence of her mother and stepfather with whom she was residing; and they proposed, unless such interview were granted, to pay the legacy into court under the Trustee Relief Act. The legatee having brought an action to recover the legacy:—Held, that the trustees were not justified in withholding or delaying payment of the legacy, and they were ordered to pay the costs of the action. De Burgh v. McClinch, 11 L. R., Ir., 220.

See also XVII. v. ante.

IX. DISCLAIMER OR REFUSAL TO ACT.

3. Trustee who had not acted, putting in a full answer, disallowed the costs of such vexatious answer, and order made at the hearing to tax and allow the costs only of such answer as would have been necessary and proper. Martin v. Perass, 1 Moll. 146.

4. A trustee who was required by the bill to answer certain interrogatories answered them and disclaimed:—Held, that he was only entitled to the costs of the disclaimer. Murphy v. O'Shea, 8 Ir. Eq. R. 329; 2 J. & L. 422.

5. Where the representative of a deceased trustee made a suit necessary by a wanton refusal to act in the trust, and to receive the dividends of the trust fund:—Held, she was entitled to the costs of a bill filed to remove her and appoint other trustees. Legg v. Mackrell, 2 De G. F. & J. 551; 4 L. T., N. S., 568. Reversing 1 Giff. 165; 5 Jur., N. S., 1154.

6. A person named a trustee in a deed, who declines to accept the office, is in the situation of any other defendant against whom a bill is dismissed, and can only have his costs, etc., between party and party. Norway v. Norway, 2 Myl. & K. 278; 4 L. J., N. S., Ch., 111, 163.

7. The Court will not allow costs to a trustee who, after having acted, declines to perform the trusts reposed in him, and thereby renders a suit for the appointment of a new trustee necessary. Howard v. Rhodes, 1 Keen 581; 6 L. J., N. S., Ch., 196.

8. Pending a suit to displace A. B. (a trustee) for misconduct, he under a power appointed C. D. a new trustee. C. D. had notice that the cestui que trust complained of irregularities in the trusts, and that A. B. was about to leave the country for a long while. At the hearing, A. B. and C. D. (he not objecting) were discharged from the trust:—Held, that C. D. was entitled to no costs. Peatfield v. Benn, 17 Beav. 522; 23 L. J., Ch., 497.

On Retirement or Removal of Trustee.] See XV. III. 3 (a) ante.

X. ACTING ON OPINION OF COUNSEL.

9. If counsel undertake to say they consider trustees would not have acted safely without taking the opinion of the Court, semble, the Court will not give costs against them, though in a clear case. Exp. Young, Re Shanks or Goven, Mont. & Ch. 599.

10. It is not necessarily sufficient to entitle trustees to their costs of a suit that they have acted under the advice of counsel. Devey v. Thornton, 9 Hare 232; 22 L. J., N. S., Ch., 163.

11. Semble, where a trustee, on a doubtful point, has taken the opinion of counsel, which is directly opposed to that of counsel taken by the opposite party, but the trustee offers to be guided by the opinion of a third counsel, on a case stated on instructions approved by both parties, he is entitled to his costs of a suit under which a decree is made against him, directing him to do an act which his counsel advised him he was not bound to do, and especially where the trustee was not permitted to inspect the case and opinion of counsel taken by the other party. Pool v. Pass, 1 Beav. 600; 8 L. J., N. S., Ch., 323.

1. On the marriage of K. and T., his wife, funds were assigned to trustees to invest, and during the joint lives of husband and wife to pay the income in manner mentioned; and after the death of either, to pay the income to the survivor for life; and after the death of the survivor, to hold the moneys in trust for all or one of the children or child or remoter issue of K. and T., as they during their joint lives, or as the survivor, should by deed or will appoint. T. died in 1836, leaving K. and one son, who attained the age of twenty-one in May 1856, surviving. K. and T. did not exercise the power of appointment; but K., after the death of T., by deed-poll, after reciting the power, appointed that after his death the trust moneys should be paid to his son, his executors, administrators, and assigns. Soon after the execution of the deed-poll the father and son applied to the trustees to transfer into their joint names the mortgage securities, and to deliver to them the title deeds; but the trustees (after taking the opinion of counsel, who advised them, upon conditions, to transfer the funds) declined to comply with the application otherwise than under the direction of the Court:—Held, that it was the duty of the trustees to protect the son's interests, and that they were not bound to adopt counsel's opinion; but as the son wished the funds to be transferred into the joint names of himself and his father, a decree to that effect was made, and the plaintiffs ordered to pay the costs of the suit. King v. King, 4 Jur., N. S., 609; 5 W. R. 699. Affirmed 27 L. J., Ch., 29; 1 De G. & J. 663; 27 L. J., Ch., 29; 4 Jur., N. S., 721; 6 W. R. 85.

XI. DEFAULTING TRUSTEE. BANKRUPTCY.

2. The official assignee of a defaulting trustee, whose assets had been distributed:—Held, not entitled to costs. Williams v. Nixon, Beav. 472; 9 L. J., N. S., Ch., 269.

3. Upon a bill to establish a lien upon real securities in respect of the trusts of a fund improperly applied by a trustee who afterwards became bankrupt, when it appeared that there was a possibility of an interest in the assignee in bankruptcy after the trust was satisfied, and he did not disclaim until the hearing:—Held, that he is not entitled to his costs. Allan v. Sugden, 10 Jur., N. S., 459; 10 L. T., N. S., 492.

4. In a suit to administer the estate of a testator, an executor had retained balances in his hands, and had subsequently become bankrupt:—Held, that he was entitled to his costs, although he was charged with interest on the balances in his hands from time to time:—Held, also, that he was entitled to have his costs out of the estate, and that they were not to be set off against what should be found due from him in respect of interest on the balances in his hands. Cotton v. Clark, 16 Jur. 879.

5. A suit was instituted against an executor and a trustee under a will for an account. On the hearing, a decree for a reference to take accounts of the real and personal estate was directed. He afterwards became bankrupt, and the suit was continued as against his assignees under the bankruptcy:—Held, that he was entitled to the costs of suit as between solicitor and client from the date of his bankruptcy, and also the costs of his appearance on a petition for a vesting order in new trustees. Turner v. Mollinew, 9 W. R. 252; 3 L. T., N. S., 687.

6. A defaulting trustee is entitled to his costs of a suit for the execution of the trusts incurred after his bankruptcy, or after the registration of a creditors' deed executed by him under the Bankruptcy Act 1861. Bowyer v. Griffin, 9 L. R., Eq., 340; 30 L. J., Ch., 159; 18 W. R. 227.

7. Where the trustee of a settlement became bankrupt shortly after the commencement of an action for the execution of the trusts, and an order was made for payment by him into court of a sum of money certified to be due from him to the estate, he was held entitled to his costs of the action, though he was not to receive them until he had made good his default. Bowyer v. Griffin (9 L. R., Eq., 340) considered. Lewis v. Trask, 21 L. R., Ch. D., 862.

8. In an administration action one defendant was an executor. He was a defaulting trustee under a settlement. After the action was commenced he was adjudicated bankrupt, and a trustee in bankruptcy was appointed and made a defendant:—Held, that the defaulting trustee was entitled to be paid his costs incurred after his bankruptcy. Bowyer v. Griffin (9 L. R., Eq., 340) followed. Clare v. Clare, Re Clare, 21 L. R., Ch. D., 865; 51 L. J., Ch., 553; 46 L. T. 851; 30 W. R. 789.

9. Where, after the commencement of an administration action against a defaulting executor or trustee, he becomes bankrupt, and, under s. 49 of the Bankruptcy Act 1869, his debt remains undischarged by the bankruptcy, he is not entitled to be paid any of his costs of the action, whether incurred before or after the bankruptcy, until he has made good his default. But where the debt of the defaulting executor or trustee has been discharged by his bankruptcy—as where the bankruptcy has taken place prior to the Bankruptcy Act 1869; or where, after the bankruptcy, his debt remaining undischarged, he renders services in the action in his character of executor or trustee, he is entitled to be paid his costs incurred subsequently to his bankruptcy, though his prior costs must be set off against his debt. Lewis v. Trask (21 L. R., Ch. D., 862) followed. Clare v. Clare (21 L. R., Ch. D., 865) not followed. Re Basham, Hannay v. Basham, 23 L. R., Ch. D., 195; 52 L. J., Ch., 408; 48 L. T. 476; 31 W. R. 743.

XII. WHERE SETTLEMENT SET ASIDE.

1. A voluntary settlement, made by an insolvent, being set aside at the suit of the assignee, the Court refused to order the trustee of the settlement to pay the plaintiff his costs, but gave no costs against the plaintiff. Townsend v. Westcott, 4 Beav. 58; 5 Jur. 748.

Costs given against a trustee, under the trust-deed, which was held revoked, where he had also a beneficial interest and insisted on its validity. Id.

2. Where a settlement is set aside the trustee has no right to his costs as a matter of right, there being no contract in existence; and therefore, if costs are given against him, he has no right of appeal. Dutton v. Thompson, 23 L. R., Ch. D., 278; 52 L. J., Ch., 661; 31 W. R. 596; 49 L. T. 109.

XIII. SEPARATE DEFENCES AND SEPARATE SETS OF COSTS.

3. If trustees separate in defence, they are only entitled to divide amongst them altogether the reasonable costs of one answer as against the fund, and the absence of one trustee out of the jurisdiction, it appears, makes no difference. The executor of mortgagor who has proved cannot have costs out of the surplus of the real estate. Whether a person named executor, but not having proved or acted as a necessary party, and by whom his costs are to be paid, quære. Nicholson v. Falkner, 1 Moll. 555.

4. The two co-heiresses of a trustee, who lived at a distance from each other, were made parties to a suit for enforcing the performance of marriage articles. They submitted to act as the Court might direct, and defended separately:—Held, they were entitled to two sets of costs. Aldridge v. Westbrook, 4 Beav. 212; 10 L. J., N. S., Ch., 363.

5. Trustees in same interest will be allowed the costs of separate answers if the Master finds the circumstances justified them in so answering. Dudgeon v. Cornley, 2 Con. & L. 422. S. C. nom. Dudgeon v. Corley, 4 Dr. & War. 158.

6. One of two trustees having declined to transfer the fund to the surviving husband, who was his wife's administrator, and having severed in his defence in a suit to obtain a transfer, was allowed no costs. Allen v. Thorp, 7 Beav. 72; 13 L. J., N. S., Ch., 5.

7. Where trustees put in separate answers, and appeared by different solicitors, on the ground that in that case they filled different characters, the Court gave them all costs as between solicitor and client. Kampf v. Jones, C. P. C. 13.

8. Trustees appeared separately; one lived in a distant part of the country. The Court declined making any special order as to costs. Wiles v. Cooper, 9 Beav. 298; 15 L. J., N. S., Ch., 129.

9. Trustees and their cestuis que trustent and next-of-kin in the same interest, severing in their defences, entitled only to one set of costs, although stated (at the bar, but not by the answers) to reside in parts of the country remote from each other. Farr v. Sheriffs, 4 Hare 528; 15 L. J., N. S., Ch., 89; 10 Jur. 630.

10. Defendants (trustees), who had severally filed similar demurrers, instead of joining in one demurrer, not allowed the costs of the demurrers, although successful. Cooke v. Courtown (Lord), 6 Ir. Eq. R. 279.

11. Two trustees severed in their defence; one was charged with misconduct, but not the other. The Court allowed only one set of costs, and gave the whole of them to the innocent trustee. Webb v. Webb, 16 Sim. 55; 17 L. J., N. S., Ch., 13.

12. Where several persons are made defendants in respect to a joint fiduciary character only, or if any beneficial interest which they may have does not conflict with their duty, they ought not to sever in their defences; otherwise one set of costs only will be allowed them. Gaunt v. Taylor, 2 Beav. 346; 4 Jur. 166.

13. A trustee who refuses to join in the answer of his co-trustee, and does not put in an answer differing from that of his co-trustee, is not entitled to his costs. Young v. Scott, 1 Jones 71.

14. The rule that where a joint fiduciary character exists, a joint defence should be always adopted, is too general. It does not apply where the joint parties are liable to account, and incur responsibility. Read v. Sparkes, 1 Moll. 8.

15. Where the bill was dismissed with costs, the Court referred it to the Master to inquire whether it was necessary for parties, trustees, and cestui que trust, appearing by same solicitor, to file separate answers. Woods v. Woods, 5 Hare 229.

16. A trust fund, consisting of a debt from the estate of a testator, was recovered in a creditors' suit by the cestui que trust, in which suit the two trustees of the fund were defendants. The two trustees (for reasons which were not denied to be sufficient) appeared separately; and one of them dying before the cause was heard on further directions, it was:—Held, that he had acquired no lien for his costs on the trust fund in court; and the petition of his personal representative that his costs might be taxed, and provided for out of the fund, was refused, with costs. Malins v. Greenway, 7 Hare 391; 17 L. J., N. S., Ch., 26, 331; 18 L. J., N. S., Ch., 154; 12 Jur. 66, 319.

17. Trustees severing even as defendants are not allowed more than one set of costs without some very special reason. Hughes v. Key, 20 Beav. 395.

18. A hostile claim was filed for an account and administration against three trustees, only one having ever acted, and the acting trustee resided in a different part of England from the other two. No unreasonable conduct was proved against the acting trustee:—Held, that he was justified in appearing separately from his two co-trustees; and a double set of costs was allowed. Cummins v. Bromfield, 3 Jur., N. S., 657.

19. Two trustees (A. and B.) were ordered to pay a sum of money into court; this was paid by A. alone. They had severed in their defences, and obtained but one set of costs. B.'s share of the costs was ordered to be paid to A. by way of contribution. Prince v. Hine, 27 Beav. 345.

1. Two trustees, who severed in their defences, were allowed one set of costs only. Course v. Humphrey, 26 Beav. 402; 5 Jur., N. S., 615; 28 L. J., Ch., 327.

One of them, by his answer, imputed misconduct to the other, which rendered it necessary for him to sever, and he asked for the whole costs. The Court being unable, on the answers, to determine the question, left the division to the Master. Id.

2. One set of costs being allowed to trustees who had severed in their defences, the division of it was left to the Taxing Master. Att.-Gen. v. Wyville, 28 Beav. 464.

A trustee is not justified in severing in his defence on either of these grounds: 1. That he did not know what the accounts were, or what had been done by his co-trustee; he ought to have inquired, and not severed unless he found something wrong. 2. That he was solicitor for one of the cestui que trustent, and held her power of attorney, that being a position which a trustee ought not to accept. Id.

4. The trustees of a will agreed to settle disputes with the surviving partner in a firm of which the testator had been a member by selling the testator's share to him at a certain price. They then filed a bill to have this agreement sanctioned; a decree was made accordingly, and the sale carried out. Some years afterwards some of the residuary legatees, who were infants, filed a bill by their next friend to set aside the decree on the ground that the compromise was an improper one, and that it had been entered into, and the decree sanctioning it obtained, by the personal fraud of one of the trustees. This trustee answered separately; and at the hearing Lord Romilly dismissed the bill with costs, being of opinion that the compromise had been beneficial and the decree sanctioning it properly obtained. The next friend could not pay the costs, and the trustee applied by summons in a suit for the administration of the testator's estate to have them taxed as between solicitor and client and paid out of the estate:—Held, that the trustee was entitled to be paid his costs out of the estate, as he had defended the suit for the benefit of the estate, though he had at the same time defended his own character. Walters v. Woodbridge, 7 L. R., Ch. D., 504; 47 L. J., Ch., 516; 38 L. T. 83; 26 W. R. 469. Reversing 20 W. R. 520.

XIV. RIGHTS OF CO-TRUSTEES INTER SE.

5. A large balance was found due jointly from a trustee and the representatives of a deceased trustee; but costs were given to both when such balance had been paid. It being admitted that no part of it could be recovered from the estate of the deceased trustee:—Held, that the surviving trustee, on payment by him of the share of the deceased trustee, was entitled to a lien for it on the costs awarded to the representatives. The Court ordered such costs to be carried over to a separate account, with liberty to apply. Birks v. Muoklethwait, 33 Beav. 409.

6. A trustee refused to join his co-trustee in suing to recover trust property, and put in an answer. He was disallowed costs. Gompertz v. Kenseit, 41 L. J., Ch., 382; 13 L. R., Eq., 369; 20 W. R. 313; 26 L. T., N. S., 95.

7. Where two co-executors of a trustee, one of them a solicitor, were jointly liable in respect of a breach of trust committed by their testator, the solicitor having had the sole management of the trust estate, and having resorted to vexatious means to evade legal proceedings, an order was made, as between him and his co-trustee, that the latter was entitled to recover from him the whole costs of the action. Price v. Price, 42 L. T. 626.

8. Where there were two trustees, one of whom was a solicitor, and entrusted by the other with the management of the trust estate, to which, by his negligence, loss accrued, as between the two trustees, the solicitor-trustee:—Held, bound to reimburse his co-trustee all the costs, charges, and expenses properly incurred by the latter in suits and other proceedings rendered necessary by such negligence of the former. Lockhart v. Reilly, 25 L. J., Ch., 697; 3 W. R. 227.

9. Though a solicitor who accidentally (or upon separate retainers) represents two or more parties ought to distinguish the charges incurred for each separate party, yet where there is a joint retainer (or by trustees not severing in their defence) he can enforce the whole bill of costs incurred against either of the parties. Watson v. Row, 43 L. J., Ch., 664; 18 L. R., Eq., 680.

Two trustees gave a joint retainer in a suit to administer the trust estate. One became insolvent, and was indebted to the estate:—Held, that the surviving trustee should have the whole costs of himself and his co-trustee allowed out of the estate without any set-off in respect of the estate. Id.

XV. INDEMNITY FOR, TO TRUSTEE BY CESTUI QUE TRUST.

10. A cestui que trust, using trustee's name as co-defendant, ordered to give latter security for costs. Annesley v. Simson, 4 Madd. 390.

11. A cestui que trust, about to file a bill, should apply to his trustee to become a co-plaintiff, indemnifying him against costs. If he refuses, he must abide his own costs, as a defendant. If he is not applied to, plaintiff must pay his costs. Reade v. Sparkes, 1 Moll. 8.

12. Where, by the terms of a marriage settlement, it was declared that a trustee should stand possessed of a debt, upon trust, in the first instance, to call in or compel payment of such debt, unless the cestuis que trustent consented to its remaining outstanding, and the trustee is requested by the cestuis que trustent to call in the debt, he is not entitled to an indemnity from them previous to his bringing an action, if necessary, for the same; and a trustee, under such circumstances, was made to pay the costs of a suit made necessary by his neglecting to bring the action. Kirby v. Mash, 3 Y. & Coll. 295; 8 L. J., N. S., Exch. Eq., 33; 3 Jur. 221.

1. A receiver appointed to collect in assets, and to bring actions in the name of an executrix, must give security to indemnify the executrix on account of such actions. Taylor v. Allen, 2 Atk. 213.

XVI. OF TRUSTEES ACTING AS SOLICITORS, OR OTHERWISE IN A PROFESSIONAL CHARACTER.

1. Auctioneers and Brokers, 7102.
2. Bankers, 7102.
3. Solicitors, 7102.
4. Surveyors, 7105.

1. Auctioneers and Brokers.

2. A. by deed assigned to B. timber and stock in trade, upon trust to sell and apply the money arising from the sale in paying the expenses of preparing for, making, and completing such sale or sales, "including the usual auctioneer's commission, and otherwise incidental to the aforesaid trusts." B. was auctioneer, and had been employed as such by A.:—Held, that the words appeared to have been inserted to provide for B. being employed in the sale, and that B. was entitled to charge his commission. Douglas v. Archbutt, 2 De G. & J. 148; 4 Jur., N. S., 315; 27 L. J., Ch., 271; 6 W. R. 306.

3. An assignee of a mortgage, being one of a firm of auctioneers, sells under a power contained in the mortgage deed, and charges for personal trouble and commission. On the question whether he was entitled to those charges:—Held, that so far as and when he was mortgagee in possession he was a trustee, and the rule of equity applied, and he was therefore not entitled to charge for personal trouble during that period. Mathison v. Clarke, 3 W. R. 2; 3 Drew. 3; 24 L. J., Ch., 202; 18 Jur. 1020; 3 Eq. Rep. 127.

4. A broker, having taken an assignment of several cargoes in trust to sell them on their arrival, and, out of the proceeds, to repay himself the amount of his advances, took possession of some of the cargoes, and sold them under the power in the deed, while the rest were sold under an order made in a suit instituted by him to enforce his security, by which it was directed, that they should be sold by him in such manner and at such time as he and the receiver in the cause should agree, and in the event of their differing, then as the Master should direct:—Held, that, in the latter sales he was entitled to the usual commission allowed to brokers employed by the Court, but that in the former he was not entitled to any commission, having sold as trustee. Arnold v. Garner, 2 Ph. 231; 16 L. J., N. S., Ch., 329; 11 Jur. 339.

2. Bankers.

5. Where bankers become also trustees, they are not entitled, in the absence of any contract, either express or implied, to make a profit of their fiduciary duties, by employing themselves as bankers, and by advancing, in that character, to their cestuis que trustent, money to be repaid with compound interest. Crosskill v. Bower; Bower v. Turner, 32 L. J., Ch., 540; 8 L. T., N. S., 135.

The trustees were held not to be legally entitled to claim more than simple interest at 5 per cent. per annum on sums advanced by them. Id.

3. Solicitors.

6. A trustee, who is a solicitor, is entitled to be repaid such costs, charges, and expenses only as he has properly paid out of pocket; and it makes no difference in this respect that the instrument creating the trust may have directed that the trust-moneys should be applied (inter alia) in payment of all expenses, disbursements, and charges to be incurred, sustained, or borne by the trustee in professional business, journeys, or otherwise, and that the trustee might retain all reasonable costs, charges, and expenses which he might sustain or be put unto, such costs, charges, and expenses to be reckoned, stated, and paid as between attorney and client. Moore v. Froud, 3 Myl. & C. 45; 6 L. J., N. S., Ch., 372; 1 Jur. 663.

7. A solicitor who is trustee is not entitled to charge for his professional services, which must be assumed to have been rendered in his character of trustee; but under a contract entered into he may be entitled to his professional charges. Re Sherwood, 3 Beav. 338; 10 L. J., N. S., Ch., 10; 4 Jur. 982.

8. Where a trustee acts as solicitor in the trust matters, he is only entitled to costs out of pocket, although the rule is not inflexible, and, under special circumstances, the Court may authorise compensation by a fixed salary, but not by making the usual professional charges. Bainbrigge v. Blair, 8 Beav. 588; 14 L. J., N. S., Ch., 405; 9 Jur. 765.

9. A trustee, who was a solicitor, came to a final settlement of accounts with his cestuis que trustent, and thereupon a general release was executed. In the accounts, the trustee had taken credit for bills of costs for professional services, to which, under the general rule, he was not entitled. The cestuis que trustent were assisted on the occasion by an independent solicitor, who perused the bills, and settled and attested the release:—Held, under the circumstances, that the trustee was entitled to the benefit of the release. Stanes v. Parker, 9 Beav. 385; 10 Jur. 603.

10. Unless there be an agreement for the purpose, a trustee who is a solicitor is not entitled to charge his cestui que trust more than the money out of pocket for his services in carrying on suits in relation to and managing the trusts. Gomley v. Wood, 3 J. & L. 678; 9 Ir. Eq. R. 418.

1. A solicitor, who accepts a trust under a will or settlement, is not entitled to charge for work and labour done by him as a solicitor in executing the trust. New v. Jones, 1 H. & T. 631. n.; 1 Macn. & G. 668. n.

2. The rule that a solicitor, being also a trustee and a party to a cause, is not entitled to charge costs except costs out of pocket, does not extend beyond the case of his acting as solicitor for himself alone. Cradock v. Piper, 17 Sim. 41. Affirmed 1 Macn. & G. 664; 1 H. & T. 617; 19 L. J., N. S., Ch., 107; 14 Jur. 97.

Under an order to tax costs generally, or to tax costs as between solicitor and client, the taxing masters are at liberty to take notice of the fact that the solicitor is also a trustee, and to apply the rule accordingly. Id.

3. The costs of a defendant trustee, notwithstanding he was a solicitor, ordered to be taxed as between solicitor and client. York v. Brown, 1 Colly. 260; 8 Jur. 567.

4. On a settlement of account between a cestui que trust and trustee (a solicitor), the latter charged for professional services in the trust; a release was executed, but the cestui que trust not having had any independent professional assistance on the occasion, the Court relieved him from the professional charges, beyond costs out of pocket. Todd v. Wilson, 9 Beav. 486; 15 L. J., N. S., Ch., 450; 10 Jur. 626.

5. A trustee who acts as solicitor for himself is entitled to his full costs against parties who unsuccessfully endeavour to set aside the trust deed. Pince v. Beattie, 9 Jur., N. S., 1119; 11 W. R. 979; 9 L. T., N. S., 315; 2 N. R. 546.

6. The rule that a solicitor trustee acting in the trust shall not be allowed profit costs is not restricted to cases of express trust, but applies to an executor or trustee, though there be no express trust. Pollard v. Doyle; Kearns v. Doyle, 1 Dr. & Sm. 319; 6 Jur., N. S., 1139; 9 W. R. 28; 3 L. T., N. S., 432.

Profit costs disallowed to an executor who had acted as his own solicitor, upon an objection taken by a creditor who was a party to the suit. Id.

7. The trustee of the separate property of a married woman acted as her attorney in three several suits instituted in relation to the trust property. In the first of these suits he was not a party; in the others he was:—Held, that in the first suit he was entitled to his costs as between solicitor and client, but in the two others only to costs out of pocket. Fraser v. Palmer, 4 Y. & Coll. 515.

8. A decree in a redemption suit directed that solicitors who were mortgagees, and who acted for themselves, should be allowed their principal, interest, and costs, and the Master allowed full costs. A motion for an order to review the taxation, on the ground that the costs out of pocket only ought to have been allowed, was refused, but without costs, there having been no objection to the form of the decree at the hearing. Price v. McBeth, 10 Jur., N. S., 579; 33 L. J., Ch., 460.

9. A cestui que trust agreed that her trustee, if he acted as solicitor in a suit, should receive full costs. A bill was delivered on the 18th February, and on the 8th March the solicitor ceased to act. After discussion as to the amount, and having received other professional advice, the client paid the bill on the 22nd May, a deduction being made therein. On an application being made within twelve months, the Court refused to order a taxation. Re Wyche, 11 Beav. 209.

10. A solicitor, who was one of the executors of a testator, paid himself out of the assets a bill for business done for the testator. Twenty-six years after the death of the testator, and ten years after the death of the solicitor, a decree was made directing the usual accounts of the testator's personal estate. The executor of the solicitor, in bringing in his accounts under the decree, inserted the bill of costs as one of his items of discharge:—Held, that although as between solicitor and client the bill was no longer subject to taxation, yet, as against the executor, the persons beneficially interested were entitled to question its amount as an item of discharge, but that an order referring it for taxation was not proper, the right course being to direct the Taxing Master to state whether any items objected to were fair and proper to be allowed, and to what amount. Allen v. Jarvis, 4 L. R., Ch., 616; 17 W. R. 943; 21 L. T., N. S., 280.

Executors. 11. Whether an executor, being a solicitor and acting as such in the administration of the estate, by bringing or defending suits or otherwise, is entitled to an allowance for costs in respect of his professional labour, beyond costs out of pocket, and if so, whether as between solicitor and client, quære. Carmichael v. Willson, 4 Bli., N. S., 146. See S. C. 2 Dow & Cl. 51.

Where an attorney is an executor, and carries on or defends suits relative to the assets, if he acts fairly in them, he is to be paid like any other attorney. S. C. nom. Carmichael v. Willson, 2 Moll. 537.

12. A solicitor was appointed executor, and was to be at liberty to charge for his professional services:—Held, that he was only entitled to charge for services strictly professional, and not for matters which an executor ought to have done, without the intervention of a solicitor, such as for attendances to pay premiums on policies, attendances at the bank to make transfers, and attendances on proctors, auctioneers, legatees, and creditors. Harbin v. Darby, 28 Beav. 325; 6 Jur., N. S., 906; 29 L. J., Ch., 622; 8 W. R. 512.

13. The solicitor for the plaintiff in a mortgage suit, being also a co-plaintiff, as executor of the mortgagee is only entitled to the costs out of pocket. Macartney v. Dickey, 16 Ir. Ch. R. 409.

14. K., a solicitor, was appointed an executor, and in that capacity filed a bill to satisfy a judgment debt. He afterwards claimed the costs of the suit as between solicitor and client. This was opposed by the judgment creditor, a party to the suit, who contended that K. was only entitled to costs out of pocket, he having acted as his own solicitor in the cause, and standing in the position of a constructive trustee. The Master allowed K. the costs he claimed, but on motion to vary the Master's certificate:—Held, that K. was not entitled to profit costs; that an executor, though there be no express trust, comes within the rule which disentitles a trustee to have profit costs as between solicitor and client. Pollard v. Doyle, 6 Jur., N. S., 1139; 9 W. R. 28; 3 L. T., N. S., 432; 1 Dr. & Sm. 319.

Partners.] 1. Where one of the two partners was a trustee under a will:—Held, that the firm could only charge the testator's estate for costs out of pocket. Collins v. Carey, 2 Beav. 149.

2. Trustees can only be allowed costs out of pocket for professional business transacted by a firm one of whom is a trustee, though the business be done by one of the partners who is not a trustee. Christophers v. White, 10 Beav. 523.

3. The rule that a trustee shall make no profit of his trust does not extend to his partner, and therefore where a trustee, being a solicitor, employed his partner professionally in the matter of the trust, upon the terms of such partner being alone entitled to the profits, the Court allowed the professional charges. Clack v. Carlon, 7 Jur., N. S., 441; 30 L. J., Ch., 639; 9 W. R. 568; 4 L. T., N. S., 361.

4. In a suit by a trustee against his co-trustee, a solicitor, and the parties beneficially interested under a will, some of them being infants, the costs of all parties had been ordered to be taxed and paid. It appeared that the defendant trustee, the solicitor, had conducted his defence by his partner. The Taxing Master allowed the solicitor trustee costs out of pocket only:—Held, that the rule which had allowed to solicitor trustees costs out of pocket only being well established, the Court would not, with reference to the question of costs, inquire whether the conduct of the suit by the partner of the solicitor trustee was beneficial for all parties, though no party objected to such inquiry, but that all costs beyond those out of pocket must be disallowed. Lyon v. Baker, 5 De G. & Sm. 622.

5. A solicitor, who was partner in a firm, was a trustee under a will. The firm was employed by his co-trustee, who was sole cestui que trust, to act in the administration of the estate out of court:—Held, to be entitled only to costs out of pocket. Broughton v. Broughton, 3 W. R. 130; 2 Sm. & Gif. 422; 24 L. J., Ch., 190; 3 Eq. Rep. 131. And on appeal, 3 W. R. 602; 5 De G. M. & G. 160; 1 Jur., N. S., 965; 25 L. J., Ch., 250.

Acting for a body of Trustees of whom he is one.] 6. The rule that a solicitor, being also a trustee and a party to a cause, is not entitled to charge costs, except costs out of pocket, does not extend beyond the case of his acting as solicitor for himself alone. Craddock v. Piper, 17 Sim. 41; 1 Macn. & G. 664; 7 H. & Tw. 617; 19 L. J., N. S., Ch., 107; 14 Jur. 97.

Application of the rule to the case of a solicitor acting for a body of trustees, of whom he himself was one. Ib.

Under an order to tax costs generally, or to tax costs as between solicitor and client, the taxing masters are at liberty to take notice of the fact that the solicitor is also a trustee, and to apply the rule accordingly. Ib.

7. The rule which allows a solicitor, being also a trustee and a party to a cause, to charge full costs where he acts in the suit for a body of trustees, of which he himself is one, does not apply to the case of a solicitor being a trustee and acting as solicitor for himself and his co-trustees in the administration of the trust estate out of court. Lincoln v. Windsor, 9 Hare 158; 20 L. J., N. S., Ch., 531; 15 Jur. 765.

8. Where one of a set of trustees is a solicitor, and by the direction of his co-trustees acts professionally in matters relating to the trust estate (such business being done out of court, and not in a cause in Chancery), he will not be allowed any remuneration for professional services, but only be entitled to costs out of pocket. Broughton v. Broughton, 5 De G. M. & G. 160; 1 Jur., N. S., 965; 25 L. J., Ch., 250; 3 W. R. 602. Affirming 3 Eq. Rep. 131; 2 Sm. & G. 422; 24 L. J., Ch., 190; 3 W. R. 130.

Where one of a set of trustees is one of a firm of solicitors, and the firm act, by the direction of the trustees, professionally in the matters of the trust estate (such business being done out of court, and not in a cause in Chancery), the firm will not be allowed any remuneration for their professional services, but only be entitled to costs out of pocket. Ib.

Craddock v. Piper (1 Macn. & G. 664), remarked upon. Ib.

The principle of the general rule applicable to such cases explained. The case of Craddock v. Piper (1 Macn. & G. 664), and, in connection with it, that of Lincoln v. Windsor (9 Hare 158), remarked upon. Ib.

9. Employing a professional person implies an undertaking to remunerate him, but the inference may be rebutted. Manson v. Baillie, 2 Macq. H. L. Ca. 80.

Six trustees appointed one of their own body, a solicitor, to act, with an allowance "of his necessary charges and expenses, and a reasonable gratification." He had an interest in the estate; those who appointed him had not. He contended, however, that they were responsible for the expenses incurred by him in attempting to realise the property for his own benefit, and that he was himself to be absolved from all participation in that responsibility:—Held, that he was wrong. Ib.

10. A., one of four trustees under a mortgage deed, who was also a solicitor, entered into an agreement with another solicitor, T., that in the event of his not doing the trust business himself, by reason of his being a trustee, T. should do it as his agent, upon the ordinary terms. T. did the business for the trustees accordingly, and paid over to A. his estimated share of the profits. Subsequent incumbancers who were interested in the equity of redemption presented a petition, under the 38th section of the 6 & 7 Vict., c. 73, to have a bill taxed, when the Master taxed as between principal and agent, upon the footing of the agreement between A. and T. Upon petition by T. to amend the taxation:—Held, that the principle upon which the Taxing Master had proceeded was correct, and that A.'s co-trustees were entitled to the benefit of the agreement for their cestui que trustent, namely, the parties interested in the equity of redemption. Re Taylor, 18 Jur. 666; 23 L. J., Ch., 857; 2 W. R. 249.

4. Surveyors.

1. When testator declared that "his trustees should be entitled to receive all costs, charges, and expenses, fees to counsel, and for advice and for professional assistance and loss of time," one of the trustees, who was a land surveyor, was held entitled to compensation for loss of time. Willis v. Kibble, 1 Beav. 559.

2. A testator gave all his residuary real and personal estate to trustees, upon trust for his wife for life; and after her death he directed that a just and true valuation should be made of "all his freehold and leasehold estates, stocks, funds, and securities, and other residuary personal estate," and directed the same to be divided, or considered as divided, into seven equal parts, and then disposed thereof; and the testator directed that A. B., one of his executors, who was a surveyor by profession, "should be entitled to charge, and should be allowed all reasonable charges, as a surveyor, in valuing his said freehold and leasehold estates, and in letting the same, and in collecting the rents, or otherwise in the management of his said estates, whenever requested or instructed so to act by his co-trustees":—Held, that this latter clause applied solely to the valuation and management of the freehold and leasehold estates, and that A. B. was not entitled, under this clause, to make any charges in respect of valuations made by him of the residuary personalty after the death of the testator's widow. Knott v. Cottes, 16 Jur. 752.

XVII. RIGHTS OF TRUSTEE. OTHER CASES.

3. A party becoming a trustee under a deed creating interests adverse to interests already existing may be liable to costs in a suit instituted to enforce such pre-existing interests in the trust property. Heap v. Tonge, 9 Hare 105; 20 L. J., N. S., Ch., 661.

4. An action of covenant was brought against a trustee, who lodged the amount claimed in court, and filed a bill of interpleader, which was dismissed with costs on demurrer:—Held, he was entitled to have the money returned without deducting the costs. Doyle v. Dumoncel, 11 Ir. Eq. R. 517.

5. Trustees having mixed balances of the trust estate with their own moneys, and used them in their own business, although authorised to invest the trust funds in good private securities:—Held, liable to the costs of an unnecessary inquiry as to the state of the testator's family. Westover v. Chapman, 1 Colly. 177.

6. Testator, by his will, gives the rents of his real property to his wife for life, and bequeaths the bulk of his personal property to her absolutely, constituting her sole executrix, and directs that certain trustees shall, as soon as conveniently may be after his decease, convert all the convertible residue of his personal estate into money, and invest it in Government or real securities, and pay the dividends to his wife for life. The ultimate trusts, both of the real and residuary personal property, are in favour of persons who are not in esse or not ascertained. Twenty years elapse, during which the trustees leave the widow in the possession and management of the whole property, and then the surviving trustee files a bill against her for an account. It appears in the suit that she has paid all the testator's debts to an amount exceeding the amount of personalty not specifically bequeathed, but that she has left some of the assets outstanding, and claims to be a purchaser of those assets, in part satisfaction of the moneys which she had overpaid:—Held, that whatever might be her right at law as a purchaser of those assets upon a plea of plene administravit her right as a purchaser in equity is not absolute, but subject to the rules of equitable administration; and, consequently, that, the bill being filed on reasonable grounds, the surviving trustee is entitled to the costs of the suit; but held, under the circumstances of the case, that he is not entitled to costs as between solicitor and client. Haarn v. Wells, 1 Colly. 323.

7. Testatrix, having certain sums of stock standing in the joint names of herself and A., B., and C., bequeaths the same to A., D., and B. on certain trusts, and directs C. within six months after her decease to execute and deliver to the executors of her will a deed declaring that he, C., his executors, administrators, and assigns, would thenceforth stand and be possessed of the sums of stock respectively and the dividends on the trusts in her will mentioned, and she appointed A., D., and B. executors. C., having executed the deed, filed a bill to have the rights declared and the trusts executed. On the question as to costs, whether C. ought not to have transferred the funds into the names of A., D., and B. without suit:—Held, that he was a co-trustee of the funds, and could not safely transfer them to A., D., and B., without the sanction of the Court. Iredell v. Iredell, 18 Beav. 202.

8. Where a suit was not occasioned by the claim of a trustee to the trust property, and the costs had not been increased by that claim, the costs of the trustee were allowed. Ritson v. Stordy, 1 Jur., N. S., 771.

9. Where an infant defendant had married without obtaining the consent of the Court, funds in court in her name were ordered to be paid to her husband with her consent, no settlement having been made. The trustees of the fund, who appeared without having been served, were not allowed their costs. Bennett v. Biddles, 10 Jur. 534.

10. Where plaintiff's bill for specific performance of an agreement for sale was dismissed, plaintiff must pay the costs, though he was only a trustee for sale. Edwards v. Harvey, Coop. 40.

11. It not being clear, whether the legal estate in the realty passed by the codicil of the survivor of the two trustees, or descended to his heir, the costs of making such heir a party to a suit, brought by the executors of such surviving trustee against the cestuis que trustent, were given to the plaintiffs. Greenwood v. Wakeford, 1 Beav. 576; 8 L. J., N. S., Ch., 333.

12. Assignee in insolvency being obliged to obtain a decree in the execution of his trust, costs of persons necessarily brought before the Court were ordered to be paid out of the fund, not personally by the plaintiff. Spinner v. Spinner, 2 Moll. 473.

1. P. invested money in consols in the names of herself and her granddaughter B., and subsequently filed a bill for the purpose of making B. a trustee of the fund, and for a transfer. The bill was after the death of P. dismissed. On petition to have the costs of the defence paid out of the fund, an order was made for that purpose; but a difficulty having occurred in the registrar's office, his honour directed the fund to be brought into court, a sufficient sum to be raised for the payment of costs, and the dividends to be accumulated for the benefit of the infant. Re Pitt, 1 Jur., N. S., 1155. See also Hepworth v. Seale, 1 Jur., N. S., 698.

2. A suggestion by the trustees of a fund that the administrator of one of the cestuis que trustent who, in that character, was entitled to a distributive share of the fund, had unfairly obtained the letters of administration under which he claimed such share, is no defence in this court to the claim of the administrator, nor is it a defence for trustees to suggest that a deed, under which the plaintiff derives his title from the cestuis que trustent, was founded on mistake, or is otherwise subject to be displaced; for it is contrary to the course of the Court to direct an inquiry as to the validity or invalidity of a deed upon a suggestion in the answer of defendants, the trustees of the fund to which it relates, where the ascertainment of the validity or invalidity of the deed is not essential to the safety of the defendants; and the fact of a bill having been filed to set aside the deed under which the claim is made, or exclude the fund in question from its operation, is not a ground upon which the trustees can resist the legal title to receive the fund; for the Court cannot give the plaintiff in such other suit the benefit of an injunction to protect the fund upon the suggestion in the answer of the trustees; but the existence of such other suit entitles the trustees to retain such a portion of the trust fund as may be sufficient to answer their costs of such other suit. Devey v. Thornton, 9 Hare 222; 22 L. J., N. S., 163.

3. By settlement, dated in 1846, executed on the marriage of S., a debt of 1,200*l.*, due to her from the firm of Q., H., & Co., was assigned to N. and H. (H. being a member of the firm of Q., H., & Co.) as trustees, upon trusts for the benefit of S. and her family. It was provided that the money should be left with Q., H., & Co. until S. gave notice to the trustees to withdraw it, when they were within three months to recover it, and invest elsewhere; but so long as it should remain in the hands of Q., H., & Co. with the permission of S., the trustees, nor either of them, were not to be responsible for the sufficiency of the security. There was no power in the deed to change trustees. The husband died soon after. In November 1851, Q., H., & Co. stopped payment. In January 1852, S. gave notice to the trustees to recover the money. N. thereupon demanded the money, but was informed of the stoppage, and offered a compromise. The bill was brought to enable the trustee to act, he having no express power to accept a compromise. The cestuis que trustent refused to accept it, and the money being ordered to be paid into court, it was ultimately paid in:—Held, that H. was not entitled to receive any costs of the suit out of the fund, but under the circumstances, he was not ordered to pay any costs. Norton v. Steinkopf, 18 Jur. 720.

4. Agreement for a lease of a farm, referred to a paper containing the terms, bill for specific performance according to such clauses as had been read to the plaintiff; parol evidence to prove that was refused, and the bill dismissed. Bill being dismissed without costs as a hard case, parties made trustees without their knowledge, and as such being necessary parties to the bill, cannot have costs against plaintiff, but left to their remedy against their principal; otherwise, perhaps, if plaintiff had prevailed, because then those costs might have been given over against other defendants. Brodie v. St. Paul, 1 Ves. J. 326.

5. A filed a bill against B., praying that C. might be declared a trustee for him of a farm, and that an account of the profits of the farm might be taken, A. offering to allow for the sums advanced or expended by C., and to pay to C. what, if anything, should be found due on taking the account. C., by his answer, denied that he was a trustee, and stated that the carrying on of the farm had been attended with considerable loss. At the hearing A.'s counsel waived the account which he had asked for, but Wood, V.-Ch., declared C. to be a trustee for A., and gave to A. costs up to the hearing, and directed the accounts to be taken. A. appealed from so much of the decree as directed the accounts, but the appeal was dismissed without costs, and the decree was varied by giving A. leave to apply for his costs subsequently to the hearing, on his paying C. what should be found due to him on taking the account. Kendall v. Masters, 29 L. J., Ch., 805.

6. The costs of trustees in resisting the enforcement of orders improperly made against them in a suit not warranted by the practice of the Court of Chancery will be ordered to come out of the trust fund. Muskerry v. Sheffington, 3 L. R., H. L., 144.

7. To a bill filed in 1873 to establish the validity of certain appointments made under a power contained in a will, the trustees were made defendants and were interrogated, and put in a long answer, alleging that the appointments were a fraud on the power. When the new procedure under the Judicature Act came into operation, the cause was a pending suit, in which replication had not been filed nor notice of motion given before the 2nd November 1875. A motion by the plaintiff that the evidence might be taken by affidavit, on the ground that, although none of the affidavits were sworn until after the 2nd November, the greater part of the cost of preparing them had been incurred before that time, was successfully resisted by the trustees, but the costs of the motion were reserved. At the hearing the trustees consented to a decree without any evidence being gone into:—Held, that although the trustees were entitled to the usual trustees' costs of the suit, they, under the circumstances, must pay the costs of their own answer. Patterson v. Wooller, 54 L. T., N. S., 415.

Held, also, that the trustees, having unjustly and unreasonably opposed the motion for taking the evidence by affidavit, must pay the costs of that motion. Id.

Held, that the trustees could not be ordered to pay the costs incurred by the plaintiff in bringing the witnesses up to town for the hearing. Ib.

1. Trustees who had recovered judgment for money due to the trust against a defendant were not allowed to set off costs payable by them to the defendant in respect of a petition in the matter of the trust, as the defendant was a trustee for his solicitors in the petition to the extent of their lien. Re Harrauld, Wide v. Walford, 52 L. J., Ch., 435; 48 L. T. 352; 31 W. R. 518. But see S. C. on appeal 53 L. J., Ch., 505; 51 L. T. 441.

XVIII. RIGHTS OF OTHER PERSONS.

2. Person made party to suit only for protection of trustees is entitled to his costs out of trust fund. Hicks v. Wrench, 6 Madd. 93.

3. Where a cestui que trust, having a life interest only, is declared entitled to his costs out of the fund property, the Court will not give him a mere lien on it to be enforced by subsequent proceedings, but will direct an immediate sale for the purpose of defraying them. Burkett v. Spray, 1 Russ. & M. 113.

4. The time for which a receiver was appointed having expired, and the cestui que trust having, in the absence of the trustee, entered into possession of the estates, subject to the payment of an annuity, and having omitted to pay the same:—Held, that the costs of an application to the Court for a direction for payment by the cestui que trust in possession of the annuity were payable out of the estate. Devaynes v. Noble, 8 L. J., N. S., Ch., 256.

5. A married woman was entitled to an estate for life for her separate use, without power of anticipation, with power to consent to varying the investment of the trust fund. She sanctioned the investment on an improper security:—Held, that she was not entitled to the costs of a suit instituted by her against the trustee to repair the breach of trust, and was liable to pay the costs of the other defendants. Mant v. Leith, 16 Jur. 302; 21 L. J., Ch., 719; 15 Beav. 524.

XIX. LIEN FOR AND PRIORITY.

6. Trustees' costs have priority over the claims of a mortgagee claiming under their cestui que trust. Rose v. Sharrook, 1 N. R. 419.

Where a married woman is entitled to a life interest to her separate use under her marriage settlement, her receipt alone to be a sufficient discharge, that is not a restraint upon anticipation; but where the trustees, upon the clause, as to the separate receipt, consider it so far doubtful that they refuse to pay either to the married woman or her assignee, and a bill is filed, they are still entitled to their costs in priority. S. C. nom. Rose v. Sharrod, 11 W. R. 356.

7. Trustees for sale on decease of a tenant for life having a prior legal estate:—Held, not to have any lien upon the property in respect of the costs of an abortive sale attempted by them during the tenancy for life, or of proceedings against them at law and in equity in reference thereto, notwithstanding such sale was attempted upon the solicitation of the tenant for life, and with the consent and approbation, and by the direction of the cestuis que trustent, one of whom was sui juris, the shares of the others, who were married women, being settled to their separate use without power of anticipation. Leedham v. Chawner, 4 Kay & J. 458.

8. Where a trustee is required to make a transfer of a fund to new trustees, and he alleges that he has a lien for charges (though he may have a right, under the Act of Parliament under which he acts, or by agreement, to recover payment), he has no right to interpose any delay in the way of making the transfer in respect of his alleged claim. Wilson v. Parker, 10 Jur. 979.

XX. WHAT FUND LIABLE FOR PAYMENT OF.

9. The trustees of a settlement applied to be discharged from their trust, on the ground of the unexpected responsibility thrown upon them by the repeated charges and annuities to which the tenant for life had subjected his interest, and also stating, which was admitted, that they had applied to the tenant for life to appoint new trustees in their room, which he had failed to do:—Held, that the costs of obtaining the discharge should be paid out of the interest of the tenant for life. Coventry v. Coventry, 1 Keen 758; 6 L. J., N. S., Ch., 275.

10. A trustee, acting bonâ fide, and with the concurrence of the heir-at-law, under a will which was supposed to be valid as to real estate, but which afterwards turns out to be invalid, is entitled to be indemnified out of the personal estate. Edgecumbe v. Carpenter, 1 Beav. 171; 6 L. J., N. S., Ch., 17.

11. If an estate is devised to A. and his heirs on trust to sell, etc., and A. devises it, the costs of getting the legal estate out of his devisee must be borne by A.'s estate. Cooke v. Cramford, 13 Sim. 91; 11 L. J., N. S., Ch., 406; 6 Jur. 723.

12. Under a direction by will to accumulate and lay out a certain sum of money in the purchase of land to be settled to uses thereby declared, the costs of the investment are to be paid out of the particular sum directed to be invested. Gwyther v. Allen, 1 Hare 506.

13. The trustee of a marriage settlement invested the trust moneys, with the consent of the husband, who had a life interest under the settlement, in an unauthorised security. On the trustee's death, his widow, as his administratrix, became trustee, and, on ascertaining that the settlement fund was in great danger of being lost, instituted an action for administration of the trusts of the settlement, under which the greater part of the trust fund was recovered. It was contended, on the authority of Haldenby v. Spofforth (9 Beav. 195), that the plaintiff was entitled to her costs of the action:—Held, that that case must be understood to decide that the representative of a defaulting executor is entitled to costs out of the executor's assets, not out of the assets of the original testator whose estate is being administered. Gurney v. Gurney, 48 L. T. 529.

Held, accordingly, that the plaintiff could not be allowed to retain her costs of the action as against the cestuis que trustent, though she was entitled to her costs, charges, and expenses as trustee other than those of the action. Id.

1. An action to carry into execution the trusts of a fund having been instituted unnecessarily by the beneficial owner of one out of six shares, the other beneficiaries, who had not been served with notice of or attended proceedings in the action, or derived any benefit therefrom, received payment of their shares in full from the trustee pending the action:—Held, that the costs of the action were to be borne by the plaintiff's share alone. Re Chennell, Jones v. Chennell, 47 L. J., Ch., 80. Affirmed 8 L. R., Ch. D., 492; 26 W. R. 595; 38 L. T., N. S., 494.

2. By a will an annuity was given, and a legacy was directed to be accumulated by trustees, for the benefit of an infant. The trustees, being in possession of the whole of the testator's estate, applied all the rents and profits in payment of the annuity. A suit was instituted for the payment of the legacy and for administration of the estate. The estate proved insufficient to pay all the costs of the plaintiff and of the defendants, trustees; therefore only part of the costs of the latter was ordered to be paid out of the estate, and the whole costs of the plaintiff out of the remaining moneys. Beer v. Tapp, 31 L. J., Ch., 513; 10 W. R. 277; 6 L. T., N. S., 269.

3. A. had become indebted to B., and had agreed under a letter of license to pay the amount by monthly instalments. B. assigned the benefit of this debt to C. on the occasion of a loan to him. C. thereupon gave notice to A. of the assignment. B. was obliged to proceed against C. for the repayment of the loan, and required A. to make the payment of the instalments to him (B.), and he filed a bill against C. and A. for an account. One instalment had been paid by C. to A. after notice:—Held, that A. was entitled to retain his costs of suit out of the next instalments as they became due, the amount to be added to the original debt due from B. to C. Aplin v. Cates, 3 L. T., N. S., 288.

4. Devisees of lands in trust for charitable purposes, having sold part of those lands, under the provisions of the London Bridge Acts, were held not entitled to their costs out of the fund arising from the sale, although the will creating the trust directed that the estate should defray the expenses of defending the trust property. Exp. Tongood, Re London Bridge Acts, 1 Y. & Coll. 588. S. C. nom. Exp. Thorogood, 5 L. J., N. S., Exch. Eq., 97.

5. Where question arises on interest in a trust fund, separated from general residue, the costs must come out of the particular fund; and having been given by decree, as specifically prayed by bill, out of the general personal estate, the decree, although affirmed in other respects, was corrected in that particular, being considered as relief prayed, and therefore not within the rule against appeal for costs only. Jenour v. Jenour, 10 Ves. 562.

6. A court of equity will not interfere at the instance of a remainderman in cases of permissive waste, either by injunction or to give satisfaction against an equitable tenant for life in possession. Testator, by his will, directed his trustees, after payment of the expenses of keeping his estates in repair, and all such costs as "my said trustees shall expend or be put unto by means of the trusts hereby reposed in them," to pay out of the overplus rents and profits certain sums, and after payment thereof, to pay the rents to A. and B. successively for life, with remainder to trustee to preserve, with remainder to the first and other sons of B. successively in remainder, and the several heirs male of the bodies of such sons. On a bill filed by the trustees at the instance of one of the remaindermen in tail, against the second tenant for life, for the purpose of making him accountable for permissive waste:—Held, that the costs of the trustees, whose bill was dismissed, ought to be paid out of the corpus, and not out of the rents and profits of the estate. Ponys v. Blagrove, 4 De G. M. & G. 448; 24 L. J., Ch., 142.

7. Executors and trustees having appropriated a legacy, and divided the residue:—Held, that the costs of a suit to secure the particular legacy must be paid thereout. Governesses' Benevolent Institution v. Rushbridger, 18 Beav. 467.

8. By marriage settlement property was vested in trustees for the wife in trust for her sole and separate use, the trustees being authorised to reimburse themselves, out of the moneys which should come to their hands under the trusts, all expenses to be incurred in the execution of the trusts, or by reason of any matter whatsoever relating to or connected therewith. The wife filed a bill to make the trustees liable for a breach of trust and to have new trustees appointed. The bill was dismissed as to the breach of trust, but a receiver was appointed:—Held, that the trustees were entitled to receive their costs of the suit out of the income of the trust funds in the hands of the receiver since the decree. Plaintiff's next friend having become insolvent, the proceedings were stayed. D'Oochner v. Scott, 24 Beav. 239.

- (b) On Disclaimer, 7109.

(a) In General.

9. Where the costs of a trustee are directed to be taxed, that means as between party and party; but where a trustee has expended money by reasonably and properly taking opinions, and procuring directions that are necessary for the due execution of his trust, he is entitled not only to his costs, but also to his charges and expenses, under the head of just allowances. Fearns v. Young, 10 Ves. 184.

Trustees, however, in Chancery, on application, generally obtained costs as between attorney and client. Id.

1. Costs to a defendant, a mere trustee by consignment of goods, as to plaintiff in bills of interpleader, not as between attorney and client; but according to the course of the Court as between party and party. Dunlop v. Hubbard, 19 Ves. 205.

2. Where a bill is dismissed against a trustee, and there is no estate to be administered, he only has costs as between party and party. Saunders v. Saunders, 3 Jur., N. S., 727.

(b) On Disclaimer.

3. A person named a trustee in a deed, who declines to accept the office, is in the situation of any other defendant against whom a bill is dismissed, and can only have his costs as between party and party. Norway v. Norway, 2 Myl. & K. 278; 4 L. J., N. S., Ch., 111, 163.

4. A trustee, who after disclaiming is continued as party to the hearing, is entitled to costs only as between party and party. Bray v. West, 9 Sim. 429.

5. A trustee disclaiming at the bar has his costs only as between party and party. Bulkeley v. Eglington (Earl), 1 Jur., N. S., 994.

6. Where the name of a party appears upon documents as a trustee, and he is therefore made a defendant, but asserts by his answer that he never accepted the trust nor acted, he is entitled to costs as between party and party. Heap v. Jones, 5 W. R. 106.

7. Semble, a disclaiming trustee is entitled only to costs as between party and party. Legg v. Mackrell, 1 Giff. 165; 5 Jur., N. S., 1145. But see S. C. 4 L. T., N. S., 568; 2 De G. F. & J. 551.

2. As Between Solicitor and Client.

8. Costs as between solicitor and client allowed to the archbishop and bishop when made parties to a suit respecting the validity of the election of a vicar. In what case trustees are allowed costs only as between party and party. Edenborough v. Canterbury (Archbishop), 2 Russ. 93.

9. Persons nominated trustees by an instrument which, being void, passes no trust fund, not allowed costs as between solicitor and client. Mohun v. Mohun, 1 Swan. 201.

10. A person named a trustee without his knowledge, and in that character a party to the suit, having never accepted the trust, is entitled to his costs as between solicitor and client. Sherratt v. Bentley, 1 Russ. & M. 655.

11. Trustees who had declined to transfer a fund to an assignee on the ground of an alleged fraud in the assignment were:—Held, entitled to their costs as between solicitor and client, although the assignment was decreed to be carried into execution, there being some circumstances of suspicion attending the assignment, particularly a variance between the consideration expressed in the deed and the actual consideration. Whitmarsh v. Robertson, 1 Y. & Coll. C. C. 715; 11 L. J., N. S., Ch., 404; 6 Jur. 921.

12. A trustee who had committed a breach of trust was held entitled to the general costs of the suit as between solicitor and client, but was directed to pay as between party and party the costs relating to the inquiry arising out of the breach of trust. Pride v. Fooks, 2 Beav. 430; 9 L. J., N. S., Ch., 234; 4 Jur. 213.

13. A suit was instituted against an executor and a trustee under a will for an account. On the hearing, a decree for a reference to take accounts of the real and personal estate was directed. He afterwards became bankrupt, and the suit was continued as against his assignees under the bankruptcy:—Held, that he was entitled to the costs of suit as between solicitor and client from the date of his bankruptcy, and also the costs of his appearance on a petition for a vesting order in new trustees. Turner v. Mollinew, 9 W. R. 252; 3 L. T., N. S., 687.

14. Where a bill is dismissed with costs as against trustees, the Court having no estate under its control, and payment of an alleged claim is asked out of the residue of the testator's estate, there is not such a speciality as to induce the Court to give the trustees of such estate their costs as between solicitor and client. Saunders v. Saunders, 5 W. R. 479.

15. When a defaulting trustee against whom a bill is filed becomes bankrupt, and the suit is prosecuted against him after his bankruptcy, he is entitled to his costs incurred after bankruptcy, and that as between solicitor and client. Bonyer v. Griffin, 18 W. R. 227; 9 L. R., Eq., 340.

16. The costs of a defendant trustee, notwithstanding he was a solicitor, ordered to be taxed as between solicitor and client. York v. Brown, 1 Colly. 260; 8 Jur. 567.

17. Testator, by his will, gives the rents of his real property to his wife for life, and bequeaths the bulk of his personal property to her absolutely, constituting her sole executrix, and directs that certain trustees shall, as soon as conveniently may be after his decease, convert all the convertible residue of his personal estate into money, and invest it in Government or real securities, and pay the dividends to his wife for life. The ultimate trusts, both of the real and residuary personal property, are in favour of persons who are not in esse or not ascertained. Twenty years elapse, during which the trustees leave the widow in the possession and management of the whole property, and then the surviving trustee files a bill against her for an account. It appears in the suit that she has paid all the testator's debts to an amount exceeding the amount of personality not specifically bequeathed, but that she has left some of the assets outstanding, and claims to be a purchaser of those assets, in part satisfaction of the moneys which she had overpaid:—Held, that whatever might be her right at law as a purchaser of those assets upon a plea of plene administravit, her right as a purchaser in equity is not absolute, but subject to the rules of equitable administration; and, consequently, that the bill being filed on reasonable grounds, the surviving trustee is entitled to the costs of the suit; but, held, under the circumstances of the case, that he is not entitled to costs as between solicitor and client. Hearn v. Wells, 1 Colly. 323.

3. Other Cases.

1. A mere trustee is only allowed an answer of one skin and a guinea for previous expense. Parsons v. Potter, 2 Hog. 281.

2. Trustee, or next friend of infant, is entitled to fair expenses beyond taxed costs, under the head of just allowances. Fearn v. Younge, 10 Ves. 184.

3. A trustee shall be allowed his full and necessary costs, and shall not be confined in his account to the costs taxed of course, in obtaining a decree. Amand v. Bradbourne, 2 Ch. Ca. 138.

4. Where, on a motion, affidavits of great length were filed by the plaintiff complaining of the conduct of the trustees, and by the trustees vindicating their conduct, the Court, in acceding to the application of the plaintiff, ordered that none of the parties be allowed their costs of any of the affidavits used on the motion. Horner v. Wheelwright, 2 Jur., N. S., 367.

5. A. B. was entrapped into becoming a trustee; but it was agreed that he should be discharged. He consulted counsel as to the liability he had incurred, and instructed him to prepare proper deeds for his protection. It was discovered that a breach of trust had been committed previously to his becoming trustee, and counsel prepared a bond and release for A. B.'s protection, but which were never executed, in consequence of a suit having been instituted by A. B. to set the matter right:—Held, overruling the decision of the Taxing Master, that, under an order to tax A. B.'s costs, charges, and expenses of and incidental to the trust, A. B. was entitled to the costs of the draft bond and release, though they had never been used. Stephens v. Newborough (Lord), 11 Beav. 403; 17 L. J., N. S., Ch., 332; 12 Jur. 319.

6. When a trust fund is reduced to 500l. before the filing of the bill, the Court will only allow costs according to the county court scale. Ali v. Forrester, 21 L. T., N. S., 819.

XXII. PRACTICE ON ALLOWANCE OF FURTHER CONSIDERATION.

7. If the decree at the hearing make no provision for the costs of a trustee, the Court will not entertain any petition in respect of them at the hearing on further directions. Malins v. Greenway, 7 Hare 391; 18 L. J., N. S., Ch., 154.

8. A trustee not appearing at the hearing, a decree was made against him, with leave to show cause against it. He then set down the cause again, and prayed his costs of the suit, on paying the costs of the day, which were granted, the Master of the Rolls saying, that his having paid the costs of the day placed him rectum in curia. Norris v. Norris, 1 Cox 183.

9. Upon the death of one of three trustees, no provision having been made for his costs, his executors, by consent, without a revivor, appeared for the purpose of claiming his costs. Kampf v. Jones, C. P. C. 13.

10. Where a bill is dismissed without costs so far as it seeks to charge trustees with wilful default, the Court may by its order upon further consideration give the defendants the whole of their costs. Also, a sum advanced by the trustees and disallowed by the chief clerk's certificate may be allowed by the order on further consideration. Massey v. Massey, 17 L. T., N. S., 233.

TURNPIKE.

I. TOLLS, 7110.

II. REPAIR, 7111.

III. INJURY TO, 7112.

IV. SALE OF, 7112.

I. TOLLS.

11. Trustees of a turnpike road were authorised to let the tolls, upon giving certain notice of their intention to do so, and the notice was to state the amount which the tolls produced during the preceding year, clear of the expenses of collecting:—Held, that this direction was sufficiently complied with, where the notice merely stated the amount received by the trustees during the preceding year, although during part of that time, the tolls were let for a greater sum than they had actually produced, and no expenses were allowed for collecting during that part of the year. Newman v. Ring, 15 L. J., N. S., Ch., 365.

12. Where the trustees of a road had advertised tolls to be let by auction, subject to certain special conditions as to the mode of sale, inconsistent with the regulations prescribed by the General Turnpike Act, 3 Geo. 4, c. 126, s. 55, the terms of the sale giving a reserved bidding to the trustees, and there was only one bidder at the sale, when, the minute-glass having been thrice turned, as prescribed by the Act, the trustees declared their intention to make their reserved bidding:—Held, that the bidder was not entitled to specific performance; but his bill was dismissed without costs. Levy v. Pendergrass, 2 Beav. 415.

13. The trustees of a turnpike road acting under a general and special Act, lease the tolls of a particular district, upon which tolls there is a mortgage, it being stated when the tolls are let that a certain gate would be moved and the tolls taken in future under the then new (special) Act. Lists are affixed to the toll gates, and the gate in question is moved. Up to the time of the gate being so moved, the lessee takes the tolls under the general Acts, and since that time according to the scale put up by the trustees, and likewise takes a full toll at two gates, including that which had been moved, where before the gate was moved full toll was not taken, and only half toll could be taken at one gate under the affixed scale. The trustees then give notice of a meeting to consider the propriety of reducing so much of the tolls as were in excess of those previously taken at the gates in question; the lessee attends the meeting, and objects to such proposition; the meeting is adjourned, and the lessee files a bill, and moves for an injunction to restrain the trustees from making any order reducing or altering the tolls, on the ground that the trustees are bound by the lease not to prejudice the plaintiff's rights, and that the mortgagees must have notice under the Acts of Parliament regulating turnpike roads:—Held, first, that trustees of a turnpike road, being public officers, are not debarred from varying the tolls, because they lease them. Next, that what was intended to be done was only to restore the previously existing state of the tolls, and was, although a detriment to the plaintiff, damnum sine injuria. It could not be assumed that the trustees were neglecting their duty, and therefore not giving notice to the mortgagees rather showed that no reduction was intended. Motion refused with costs. North v. Thompson, 5 W. R. 176.

1. If a turnpike keeper levy an extra toll, and upon adjudication by two magistrates (under the Bath Act) it is determined that the toll was not due, the money may be recovered back in an action for money had and received, and notice of action need not be given; for where a power is given to justices to determine, it is final, unless an appeal is expressly given. Parsons v. Blandy, Wightw. 22.

2. A. made a voluntary assignment of turnpike bonds to B. in trust for himself for life, and after his death for his nephew. He delivered the bonds to B., but did not observe the formalities required by 3 Geo. 4, c. 126, s. 81, to make the assignment effectual:—Held, on his death, that no interest in the bonds passed by the assignment, and that B. ought to deliver them to his executors. Searle v. Law, 15 Sim. 95.

3. Money secured on mortgage of turnpike tolls is an interest in land and within the Statute of Mortmain; but there is another sort of toll which gives no right at all in the land, and that is a toll thorough. Knapp v. Williams, 4 Ves. 430. n.

4. A mortgage of turnpike tolls is an interest in land within the Mortmain Act, 9 Geo. 2, c. 36. Ashton v. Langdale (Lord), 4 De G. & Sm. 402; 15 Jur. 868; 20 L. J., Ch., 234.

5. Turnpike tolls are within the Statute of Limitations, 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 27, and consequently more than six years' arrears of interest are recoverable on a mortgage of them. Mellish v. Brooks, 3 Beav. 22; 9 L. J., N. S., Ch., 362; 4 Jur. 739.

6. Trustees of a turnpike-road being desirous of obtaining an Act authorising the making a new road connected with the former, the plaintiff agreed to advance 2,000*l.* for the purpose of making the new road, upon having the payment secured by a mortgage of the tolls of both roads. The trustees obtained an Act which authorised the making of the new road, repealed the Act under which the old was made, and placed both roads under one system of management, treating them for most purposes as one road. By this Act it was provided, that the tolls of the old road should be applied, first, in paying the expenses of obtaining the Act; secondly, in paying the interest on mortgages of the tolls receivable under the old Act; thirdly, in repairing the old road; and, fourthly, in paying the principal of the old mortgages. And that the tolls of the new road should be applied, first, in paying the expenses of obtaining the Act; secondly, in making and repairing the new road; thirdly, in paying the interest of money borrowed on the tolls of the new road; and, fourthly, in paying the principal of moneys borrowed under the repealed Act, or borrowed on the tolls of the new road. The plaintiff advanced 2,000*l.*, and a mortgage was made to him of the tolls, toll-houses, etc., in such a form that it was doubtful whether it extended to the tolls of the new road:—Held (affirming 3 Jur., N. S., 128), on construction of the Act, that it did not take away the power of mortgaging given by the General Turnpike Act (3 Geo. 4), c. 126, s. 81; that the trustees, therefore, had power to mortgage the tolls of the old road as well as the new road, for moneys borrowed for the purposes of the new road, and that the plaintiff, having advanced his money on the faith of having a security on both roads, was entitled in equity, if not at law, to a security on the tolls of the old road as well as of the new. Crewe (Lord) v. Edleston, 1 De G. & J. 93; 3 Jur., N. S., 1061.

A mortgage of turnpike tolls and toll-houses, which are in lease, and are subject also to other mortgages, may apply to have a receiver appointed, instead of taking steps to obtain possession at law. Id.

II. REPAIR.

Liability for. 7. The Highways and Locomotives (Amendment) Act 1878 (41 & 42 Vict., c. 77) by s. 13 enacts that any road which has "between the 31st of December 1870 and the date of this Act ceased to be a turnpike road, and any road which, being at the time of the passing of this Act a turnpike road, may afterwards cease to be such, shall be deemed to be a main road; and one-half of the expenses incurred from and after the 29th of September 1878 by the highway authority in the maintenance of such road shall, as to every part thereof which is within the limits of any highway area, be paid to the highway authority of such area by the county authority of the county in which such road is situate out of the county rate." The corporation of the borough of Rochdale was the highway authority of the Rochdale highway area. Under ss. 47—50 of the Towns Improvement Clauses Act 1847 (10 & 11 Vict., c. 34), the obligation to repair all public highways within the area of the "town" was imposed upon the corporation, and the turnpike trustees were forbidden to collect any toll or lay out any money on any road within that area. By a local Act in 1872 the boundaries of the borough were enlarged and all the provisions of the Acts relating to the "town" were made applicable to the enlarged area of the borough. The effect was that further portions of the turnpike roads were for the first time brought within the area of the borough and within the operation of the Towns Improvement Clauses Act 1847:—Held, that these further portions being only parts of turnpike roads, had not ceased to be "turnpike roads" and were not to be deemed to be "main roads," within s. 13 of the Highways and Locomotives (Amendment) Act 1878; and that the county authority was not liable to pay half the expenses of their maintenance. Lancaster JJ. v. Rochdale (Mayor), 8 L. R., App. Cas., 494; 49 L. T. 368; 32 W. R. 65. Reversing, 8 L. R., Q. B. D., 12; 51 L. J., M. C., 1; 45 L. T. 425; 30 W. R. 130.

1. The Highways and Locomotives (Amendment) Act 1878, s. 13, provides for the maintenance of roads which have since the 31st of December 1870 ceased to be turnpike roads. A provision in Turnpike Acts coming into operation before the 31st of December 1870, that turnpike trustees shall not spend money or levy toll upon certain portions of turnpike roads, does not prevent such portions of the roads from being still turnpike roads on the 31st of December 1870, within the meaning of s. 13 of the Highways and Locomotives (Amendment) Act 1878. An agreement under the Local Government Act 1858 (21 & 22 Vict., c. 98), s. 41, made before the 31st of December 1870, between turnpike trustees and a corporation, under which the turnpikes upon certain portions of turnpike roads were removed, and the repair of such portions was undertaken by the corporation, does not operate to make such portions cease to be part of a turnpike road, and therefore these portions also come under the operation of the Highways and Locomotives (Amendment) Act 1878, s. 13. West Riding Justices v. Reg., 8 L. R., App. Cas., 781; 32 W. R. 253; 49 L. T. 786; 53 L. J., M. C., 41.

Damage caused by. 2. The trustees appointed under a public road Act are not responsible for an injury occasioned by the negligence of the men employed in making or repairing the road. Duncan v. Findlater, 6 Cl. & F. 894; 1 Rob. 911.

The funds raised by such Act cannot be charged with compensation for such an injury, the persons employed on the road being in the situation of servants to the trustees. Ib.

III. INJURY TO.

3. The trustees of a turnpike road which passed over a hill were empowered to lower it when necessary. They applied to restrain an adjoining freeholder from making a tunnel under the road, on the ground that it would obstruct the future improvement of the road. The Court, however, held that it had no authority to interfere, and refused the application. Cunliffe v. Whalley, 13 Beav. 411.

IV. SALE OF.

4. It is no defence to a suit for specific performance against trustees of a turnpike road, that the land they have contracted to sell is liable to pre-emption by the owner of the adjoining land under the General Turnpike Act (3 Geo. 4), c. 126, s. 39, even where the offer required has not, through inadvertence, been made to such owner, and it is in evidence that the owner insists on his right, the purchaser making no objection to the title, and being content to take such estate as the trustees could convey. Barrett v. Ring, 2 Sm. & G. 43.

V. TERMS OF RELIEF, 7120.

I. GENERAL PRINCIPLES.

6. A court of equity will not differ from the courts of law in the exposition of the Statute of Usury, though it often varies in the remedies given, and in their application. A question of usury is a mere question of law, and, therefore, in equity, to be considered in the same light as in the Court of Common Law and as if an action had been brought on the bond. Moore v. M'Kay, Beat. 287; 2 Moll. 137.

Usury is a conclusion of law, resulting from the facts and circumstances attending each transaction. There must be forbearance. Usury is taking more than the law allows upon a loan, or for forbearance of a debt. To make a contract usurious, it must be apparent upon the face of it, or by evidence, that the intent of the parties in the creation of it was, by means of shift or device, to take more than legal interest for the loan or forbearance of money. Equity cannot sift the facts and circumstances of contracts more astutely, to prevent evasion of the Statute of Usury, than courts of law do. Whatever may be the ostensible case, they inquire, whether the dealing was substantially a loan and forbearance of money, with more interest or profit than the law prescribes. Where there was no obligation to pay money advanced, there could be no forbearance; consequently the profit derived from the use of the money was not usurious. S. C. Beat. 288.

1. Distinction between jurisdictions in equity and in bankruptcy in setting aside securities affected by usury. In bankruptcy the party is not, as in the other case, left a creditor for what was actually advanced. Benfield v. Solomons, 9 Ves. 84.

2. Usury is taking more than the law allows upon a loan or for forbearance of a debt. Spurrer v. Mayors, 1 Ves. J. 527; 4 Bro. C. C. 28.

To make a contract usurious, intention of forbearance for exorbitant interest must appear. Ib.

3. The Court does not relieve against an usurious contract, so as to make the principal lost, as well as interest. Pitt v. Cholmondeley, 2 Ves. 567.

4. Assignees of a bankrupt are not compellable to pay what is really due on a transaction attended with usury, under the general jurisdiction in bankruptcy: it is otherwise where they apply to a court of equity by a bill to be relieved. Exp. Skip, 2 Ves. 489.

5. There is no usury where there is a risk. Exp. Wilson, Re Bates, 2 Jur. 98.

6. An agreement may be perfectly equitable, although it is usurious, but if it is usurious, the law determines it, and its bona fides cannot avail it. Brophy v. Holmes, 2 Moll. 1.

7. If usurious interest is not contracted for, the security is not invalidated by subsequently taking usurious interest. Exp. Jennings, 1 Madd. 331.

8. Quare, whether a promise to pay an usurious debt made after certificate, as a consideration for further loan, vitiates a security extending to the old debt and the new loan. Exp. De Grouchy, Re Butler, 3 Mont. & A. 22; 2 Dea. 79; 6 L. J., N. S., Bky., 3.

9. If a bargain was really for an annuity, though bought at ever so low a price, it is no usury; if on the foot of borrowing, and lending money, otherwise. Chesterfield (Earl) v. Janssen, 1 Atk. 340.

Where there is a borrowing of money, a device to have more than the legal rate of interest is within the Statutes of Usury. Ib.

If there be a loan of money with more than legal interest, and a casualty goes to the interest only, it is usury; secus, if it goes to the principal and interest. Ib.

S., a man of intemperate habits, aged thirty, in order to pay tradesmen's bills, and other debts, for 5,000*l.* in hand, bound himself in the penalty of 20,000*l.* to pay 10,000*l.* on the death of M., a lady, aged 78, if he survived her. M. died, aged 84, and S. survived her two years; at M.'s death, a new bond was entered into, with the same penalty for the payment of 10,000*l.* and interest; and S. executed a warrant of attorney to empower judgment to be recorded against him in King's Bench, which was done accordingly; 2,000*l.* were paid by S. in about five months from the death of M. Before his death, S. devised the residue of his personal estate, after paying debts, etc., to his son, a minor. The plaintiffs, his guardians and executors in trust, brought a bill to be relieved against defendant's demands as an unconscionable bargain and usurious contract. The Court relieved plaintiffs against the penalty and judgment, by directing defendant to deliver up the second bond to be cancelled, and to acknowledge satisfaction on the judgment upon being paid by plaintiffs what should be due at law, but would not give him costs, as there was probabilis causa litigandi, and defendant's case far from favourable. Ib. 301.

10. A testator directed that one of his residuary legatees should be answerable for all debts due to him from the father of the legatee. A debt, though usurious, must be deducted from the legatee's share. Stanton v. Knight, 1 Sim. 482.

II. REPEAL OF USURY LAWS. EFFECT.

11. The repeal of the usury laws does not affect the power of a court of equity to review and set aside usurious transactions where they are founded on fraud. Honley v. Cook, 8 Ir. R., Eq. 571.

Accordingly, a series of deeds, charging sums advanced by a money-lender with exorbitant interest, on the borrower's estates, which were ample security, was set aside, save to the extent of securing the actual advances, with moderate interest; the deeds containing unprecedented clauses, such as authorizing a sale without notice, and empowering the lender to pay off existing charges (which bore interest at 6*l.* per cent. only), and to charge 20*l.* per cent. thereon, and other clauses of a similar character; the Court being of opinion that the clauses were introduced by the fraud and device of the money-lender without the knowledge of the borrower, who was unprotected by proper professional advice. Ib.

12. The repeal of the usury laws, and the alteration of the law as to reversionary interests (effected by 31 Vict., c. 4) have not altered the onus imposed upon all who deal with expectant heirs and reversioners of proving that their dealings have been fair and reasonable, and of thus rebutting the presumption of fraud which may arise from the nature of a bargain, and the circumstances and conditions of the contracting parties. Aylesford (Earl) v. Morris, 28 L. T., N. S., 541; 8 L. R., Ch., 484; 42 L. J., Ch., 546; 21 W. R. 424. And see O'Rorke v. Bolingbroke, 2 L. R., App. Cas., 814; 26 W. R. 239. Tyler v. Yates, 6 L. R., Ch., 665; 40 L. J., Ch., 768; 25 L. T. 284; 19 W. R. 909.

1. Annuities.

1. As to averments necessary to support a plea of usury. Wortley v. Pit, 1 Ves. 164.

Plea, 2,000*l.* lent on condition to pay in a year 200*l.* and the principal, or 250*l.* per annum during borrower's life, not an usurious contract. Ib.

2. The owner of a leasehold for fifty years unexpired, in consideration of 300*l.*, granted an annuity of 45*l.* charged on the leasehold, and assigned the latter to secure the annuity, and the annuitant covenanted at any time, on payment of 300*l.*, and on getting six months' notice, to re-convey:—Held, on a re-hearing, that this was an usurious transaction. Kenny v. Lynch, 9 Ir. Eq. R. 530; 2 J. & L. 319; 8 Ir. Eq., R. 207.

3. If A., his necessities requiring an advance of 1,000*l.*, obtain it from B., upon a bargain that, in consideration of it, A., his executors and administrators, shall pay B., etc., an annuity of 80*l.* per annum for a term of seventy years, commencing immediately, the annuity to be secured by the covenant of A., binding himself personally, and after his death his assets generally, the transaction is usurious, and bad on that ground, unless upheld by those provisions of the legislature which have recently, as to certain cases, repealed or relaxed the usury laws. Belcher v. Vardon, 2 Colly. 162; 14 L. J., N. S., Ch., 427; 9 Jur. 546.

4. Where an annuity is granted for a term of years to be paid half-yearly, and at the same time promissory notes are given by the grantee for the payment of each half-year's annuity when it becomes due, and it appears that the several half-yearly payments will repay the purchase-money with interest exceeding the rate of 5 per cent., the transaction is usurious. Fereday v. Wightwick, 1 Russ. & M. 45; Tam. 250.

5. A. applied to B. to lend him 400*l.* on mortgage of certain leasehold houses, but B. refused. It was then agreed that A., in consideration of the 400*l.*, should grant to B. two annuities of 21*l.* each for forty years, to be issuing out of the houses:—Held, that the transaction was usurious. Chillingworth v. Chillingworth, 8 Sim. 404; 6 L. J., N. S., Ch., 223; 1 Jur. 304.

2. Annuities with Insurance.

6. The circumstance of the re-payment of the purchase money of an annuity being secured by an insurance on the life of the grantor, and the grantor having covenanted to pay the premiums, does not bring the case within the Statute of Usury. Manly v. Hawkins, 1 Dr. & Wal. 363.

7. Covenant from the grantor in an annuity-deed, that, at his own expense, he would effect an insurance upon the lives for which the annuity was granted, to the amount of the purchase money, for the grantee's benefit, is not usurious nor a shift to avoid the statute. French v. Morgan, 2 Moll. 493.

8. The grant of an annuity for the grantor's life is not void, though it appear that, by the agreement between the parties, a portion of the annuity was to be employed in maintaining an insurance for the grantor's life, semble. Byrne v. Kinnefack, 1 Hog. 184.

3. Bills with Collateral Security.

9. A loan on bills of three months, on which more than 5 per cent. interest is allowed, is not taken out of 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 98, s. 7, by taking collateral security. Exp. Knight, Re Pownall, 2 Mont. & A. 568; 1 Dea. 459; 5 L. J., N. S., Bky. 20.

10. Where two bills of exchange, upon which, were it not for the provisions of the 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 98, s. 7, an usurious interest was taken, had become due, and the holder declared, that unless a security was handed to him, he would sue the acceptor upon the bills, whereupon a deposit of an annuity-deed, issuing out of lands, was made by the acceptor:—Held, that such deposit was not invalid on the ground of usury. Bell v. Coleman, 9 Jur. 974.

Held, also, that this transaction having taken place prior to the passing of the 2 & 3 Vict., c. 37, it could not be affected by the provisions of that statute. Ib.

11. Where the bankrupt had borrowed 1,600*l.* upon a bill for three months, renewable, at his option, for three other months, till the expiration of eighteen months, the original proposal having been for a loan for that time, and the bankrupt agreed verbally to pay interest at the rate of 10½ per cent. per annum upon each of such bills:—Held, upon proof tendered on one of such bills, that it was a transaction protected by 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 98, s. 7. Exp. Terrewest, Re Poynter, Mont. & Ch. 351; 4 Dea. 144; 9 L. J., N. S., Ch., 6; 3 Jur. 994. Reversing Mont. & Ch. 146; 3 Dea. 590; 8 L. J., N. S., Bky., 46.

12. Advances made upon promissory notes not having more than twelve months to run, although further secured upon leaseholds by a contemporaneous agreement:—Held, to be within the protection of the 2 & 3 Vict., c. 27, s. 1. Exp. Warrington, 3 De G. M. & G. 159; 17 Jur. 430; 22 L. J., Bky., 33.

Held also, that even if this were not so, such of the promissory notes as had not more than three months to run were within the 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 98, which does not mention land, and that this enactment was not repealed or affected by the 2 & 3 Vict., c. 27. Ib.

13. Where money is advanced at usurious interest on the security of bills of exchange, having only three months to run, such advance is protected, and the bills themselves are valid under the 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 98, s. 7, and though a warrant of attorney to confess judgment may be taken at the same moment on which judgment is the next day entered up and registered under the 1 & 2 Vict., c. 110, so as to become a charge on the lands of the debtor, the transaction is not thereby rendered invalid under the proviso of the 1st section of the 2 & 3 Vict., c. 37. Lane v. Horlock, 5 H. L., Ca., 580; 2 Jur., N. S., 289; 25 L. J., Ch., 253; 4 W. R. 408. Reversing 2 W. R. 487; 1 Drew. 587; 17 Jur. 983; 22 L. J., Ch., 985.

The 2 & 3 Vict., c. 37, does not repeal the 3 & 4 Will., c. 98, s. 7. Id.

H. had received from L. money advanced on the security of bills of exchange. In October 1843 he wanted a further advance, which L., after inquiring into the value of his real estate, consented to make, on consideration that three months' bills should be given for the amount (usurious interest included), and that a warrant of attorney to confess judgment, which L. should be at liberty to enter up immediately, should also be executed. All this was done, and judgment was entered up on the following day, and the judgment registered. The bills given in October 1843 were not paid when they became due in January 1844, and others were then substituted for them. These were also dishonoured. A sale of H.'s estate took place, under a mortgage, executed to a prior creditor, who received more than would satisfy his claim:—Held, that L. was entitled to maintain a bill against him, and that he was liable to pay over so much of the surplus in his hands as would satisfy L.'s judgment. Id.

1. J. T., having deposited with his banker the title deeds of freehold and leasehold estates to secure any balance which might be found due to them, became indebted in a large sum, and afterwards executed a mortgage of real and personal estates to secure the sum of 5,500*l.*, and interest thereon at 5*l.* per cent., with a power of sale in default of payment. J. T., on the same day, gave the bankers a warrant of attorney to confess judgment for that sum. The money not having been paid within the time specified, possession of the personal estate, etc., was taken under a writ of fi. fa., and the whole sold by auction. The proceeds under the execution not being sufficient, a sale of the real estate under the power was threatened, but prevented by W. S., a friend of J. T., paying to the bankers the sum alleged to be due. The title deeds of the estates were transferred to W. S., and a memorandum given by the bankers, stating that the accounts upon which the balance arose should be made out, and explanations given if required. The bill filed by J. T. charged the bankers with having overcharged him with interest on the accounts. The Master found that the mortgage had been satisfied, and that the bankers had charged J. T. with discount upon bills at a higher rate than 5*l.* per cent. Upon the construction of stat. 2 & 3 Vict., c. 37, and following the authorities of Lane v. Horlock (1 Drew. 587) and Exp. Warrington (3 De G. M. & G. 159):—Held, that all excess of interest charged above 5*l.* per cent. for discounting bills payable at more than three months from date, or having more than three months to run, must be disallowed. Thomas v. Cooper, 18 Jur. 688; 2 Eq. Rep. 1185.

2. In 1853 money was borrowed at usurious interest, and secured by a bill of exchange at six months, and by a judgment entered up and registered. The bill was continually renewed till 1856, when the lender filed a bill against the subsequent assignee of leaseholds belonging to the borrower, claiming a judgment lien on the leaseholds:—Held, that the judgment was void as against the land under the 2 & 3 Vict., c. 37, but is not void in toto. Bond v. Bell, 4 Drew. 157; 3 Jur., N. S., 1290; 27 L. J., Ch., 233; 2 Eq. Rep. 1185.

4. Bonds.

3. Where an action was brought on bonds, and a cognovit was given in the action, and judgment entered up for the principal and interest then due:—Held, that it was not competent to the representatives of the obligor, at the distance of ten years afterwards, in a suit for the administration of the obligor's assets, to question the validity of the bonds on the ground of usury. Berrington v. Evans, Younge 276.

4. A revolted colony of Spain, not recognised as an independent state by Great Britain, executed bonds at 6 per cent. interest as securities for a loan. P., acting in collusion with B., a holder of the bonds in England, by falsely representing that he had purchased some of them, induced the plaintiff to become a purchaser:—Held, on demurrer, that the bonds were not usurious, as it did not appear by the bill that the contract for the loan was made, or the amount of it to be paid, in this country; that P. & B. would have been answerable to the plaintiff for losses sustained upon his purchase, but that, as the original contract was made with a government not acknowledged by Great Britain, the Court could not relieve him. Thompson v. Powles, 2 Sim. 195.

5. Bottomry not within the Statute of Usury, because a real risk is run. Chesterfield (Earl) v. Janssen, 2 Ves. 143. And see this case more generally as to usury, 1 Atk. 350.

Bottomry bonds may be so constructed as to be an evasion of the statute against usury, as well as any other contract. Id. 341.

6. Bonds given for instalments made up of principal and interest, being the consideration of a purchase or assignment of real and personal estate, though they necessarily carry interest, are not usurious. Tarleton v. Backhouse, Coop. 231.

7. On a loan, upon security of an equitable deposit and bond, which appeared on the face of it to be usurious, an action was brought, and the plaintiff failed at law, but having filed his bill alleging that the bond had been erroneously prepared, the Court, being satisfied of the error, decreed the bond to be rectified, and an account of what was due. Hodgkinson v. Wyatt, 9 Beav. 566. And see S. C. at law, 4 Q. B. Rep. 749.

5. Commission of Agents.

8. Charge by bill broker in the country of $\frac{1}{2}$ per cent. commission in respect of bill payable in London not usurious. Exp. Henson, 1 Madd. 114.

9. A bill broker, in order to get a bill discounted at 4 per cent., takes upon himself the responsibility of indorser, and charges his principal 5 per cent. discount, which is the lowest sum at which he could have done the business, except for his indorsement:—Held, that although he also charged $\frac{1}{2}$ per cent. for his trouble, etc., it was not usury, and that he was entitled to do so for his del credere commission. Exp. Goss, 2 Dea. & Ch. 240.

1. A reasonable commission beyond legal interest for extra incidental charges, as upon agency in the remittance of bills, not usurious. Baynes v. Fry, 15 Ves. 120.

2. The charge of 10 per cent. for commission besides the legal interest, on a loan of money, is not usurious, if it is referrible to trouble and expense bonâ fide incurred by the lender; although he may not be a banker, or a person engaged in trade, or although the money lent is his own, and not that of other persons. Exp. Gwyn, 2 Dea. & Ch. 12; 1 L. J., N. S., Bky., 73.

3. A covenant in a mortgage of property in the West Indies on the part of the mortgagor, to consign the produce of the estate to the mortgagee to be sold on commission for the mortgagor; and to take all such plantation stores as may be wanted for the use of the estate from the mortgagee, is not usurious. A mortgagee is entitled to the benefit of such a covenant, and to charge a commission on the sale of the produce consigned to him. On the assignment by a mortgagee, the cost of supplies and contingencies furnished to the plantation previously to the assignment, but paid for subsequently by the assignee, may be added to the mortgage debt and charged against the estate. Sayers v. Whitfield, 1 Knapp. 133.

4. A. & Co. were general merchants, bankers, and commission agents, at Montreal, and their course of trade consisted principally in procuring and advancing to colonial dealers supplies of goods, cash, and negotiable securities, as required, from time to time, by their customers, to support them in their dealings, returns being made by them, after some interval of time, at their convenience, in the freight of produce, and in the payment of cash and negotiable securities. In the accounts they kept with C. and D. there was kept a column on both sides for interest from the time the payment was made or due; and, at the periodical close of the account, A. & Co. made a charge for their commission, calculated upon the balance due, and afterwards upon the cash advances:—Held, that it did not appear from the accounts that the charge for commission was a cloak for usury, but was to be treated as a bonâ fide compensation for the labour and inconvenience in conducting such business. Pollok v. Bradbury, 8 Moo., P. C., 227.

6. Mortgages.

Interest.] 5. Mortgagor gives second mortgage for what is due for the principal and interest on first mortgage, and also for interest upon interest due on the first mortgage; quare if second mortgage void as founded on usury. Sackett v. Bassett, 4 Madd. 58.

6. Where the interest due upon a mortgage had become in arrear, and in the mortgagee's account of arrears rests were made from time to time, on which interest was calculated, and ultimately a general account of all arrears calculated on the footing of those rests was signed by the mortgagor, and confirmed by a deed executed by him three years afterwards, for securing re-payment of the balance to the mortgagee:—Held, that these transactions were not usurious, and that the mortgagee was liable for the balance. Blackburn v. Warwick, 2 Y. & Coll. 92; 6 L. J., N. S., Exch. Eq., 17.

7. An agreement made upon the occasion of the intended transfer of a mortgage, that the interest of the mortgage money at 5 per cent. (to be reduced to 4 per cent. if paid within a limited time) should run from the date of the proposed transfer, being the date of the deed of transfer, although, owing to the mortgagor being then unprepared to procure the execution of that deed, the mortgage money, which was then ready to be advanced, was not actually advanced until a subsequent time:—Held, not to be usurious, less than 5 per cent. having in fact been taken, the transaction being bonâ fide, and there having been no absolute reservation of more than 5 per cent., but only a reservation from the burthen of which the mortgagor might at his option have discharged himself. Long v. Storie, 9 Hare 542; 21 L. J., N. S., Ch., 521; 16 Jur. 340.

8. mortgaged certain hereditaments to N. for 7,500*l.*, and his equity of redemption to C. for 5,000*l.* L. afterwards agreed to take a transfer of both mortgages, and to advance a sum of 12,500*l.* for that purpose, at interest at 5 per cent., reducible on prompt payment to 4 per cent. The transfer of the first mortgage not being ready to be executed, through the default of S., at the time appointed, L. advanced the 5,000*l.* at once, and took a transfer of the second mortgage; and at the same time S. signed a memorandum, acknowledging that the remainder of the money was ready (which was the case), and agreeing that interest on the first mortgage, when transferred to L., should run as from the date of that agreement, and that the deed of transfer of the first mortgage should bear date on that day. The deed of transfer of the first mortgage was not in fact executed, nor the 7,500*l.* paid over to N., until nearly six weeks afterwards:—Held, that the transaction was nevertheless good under the 12 Ann., c. 16. Ib.

Semble, a transaction not void in the first instance, and from which the borrower has the power to free himself by the payment of the principal and legal interest within a limited time, is not afterwards to be avoided because the borrower cannot, after the limited period, free himself without paying more than 5 per cent. Ib.

8. Covenant, before the Usury Act, reducing the rate of interest, to pay 6 per cent. is not prejudiced by the Act, but interest turned into principal by the course of the Court, was directed to carry interest at 5 per cent. only from the passing of the Act. Interest, by course of the Court, discretionary. Astley v. Powis, 1 Ves. 483.

9. If a mortgage be drawn for 5 per cent., and the mortgagee takes 6, it would be void on the word "take" in the 12 Ann., stat. 2, c. 16, s. 1. Adlington v. Cann, 3 Atk. 154.

10. A customer applied to his bankers to lend him 4,000*l.* at 5 per cent., which the bankers agreed to do. He then asked the bankers what balance he was expected to keep with them; they answered that he must not keep less than 1,000*l.*, upon which the customer said, "Very well, they might leave it to him." The customer paid into and drew out from the banking-house in one year various sums amounting to 108,000*l.*:—Held, that under these circumstances the loan was not usurious. Exp. Geddes, Re Holthouse, 3 Dea. & Ch. 638; 1 Mont. & A. 385.

1. Agreement by A. to purchase houses from B. for 431*l.* 10*s.*; possession to be given, and 200*l.* paid immediately, the rest with interest at Michaelmas; but if not then paid, A. to pay, in lieu of interest upon the same, a clear rent of 42*l.* per annum, out of which was to be deducted interest for the 200*l.* paid, not usurious. Spurrier v. Mayou, 1 Ves. J. 527; 4 Bro. C. C. 28.

2. Where title deeds were originally deposited to secure an advance of money at usurious interest, but without any written memorandum, and afterwards a further advance was made upon the promissory note of the depositor, also at usurious interest, and it was subsequently agreed by parol that a mortgage should be executed of the premises comprised in the deeds for both debts, with interest at 5*l.* per cent. per annum;—Held, upon motion ex parte (the defendant not appearing), to take pro confesso a bill praying a foreclosure or sale of the premises comprised in the deeds, that though the original deposit was void under the usury statutes, and the deeds had thenceforth remained in the possession of the plaintiff, yet the subsequent parol agreement constituted a valid equitable mortgage by deposit to secure both debts, just as if the deeds had been returned to the defendant, and re-delivered by him to the plaintiff upon the occasion of such agreement being entered into. James v. Rice, 18 Jur. 818; 23 L. J., Ch., 819; 5 De G. M. & G. 461; 2 Eq. Rep. 746.

[Redemption.] 3. W. lends to B. 200*l.* on the bond of B. and W., bearing interest at 5 per cent., and at the same time purchases from B. the rent-charges for lives of 50*l.* per annum for 800*l.* with a covenant that B. should be at liberty to re-purchase the rent-charge on giving three months' notice, and paying 350*l.* and all arrears of interest; W. and B. execute their joint and several bonds to W. in the penal sum of 700*l.* conditional for the payment of 350*l.* and for the regular payment of the rent-charge:—Held, to be a security for the loan of 200*l.* and 800*l.*, on the ground that W. was at all events secured by a bond for 700*l.*; but neither the right of re-purchase, nor the additional sum of 50*l.* to be paid thereupon, would have been sufficient to turn the transaction into a loan. Verner v. Winstanley, 2 Sch. & Lef. 393.

4. Bill praying re-assignment of lease, and stating a clause in assignment of power of redemption on paying a sum larger than the legal interest, added to original sum given, and in default thereof a foreclosure, is not demurrable on the ground of usury. Metcalf v. Brown, 5 Price 560.

5. A., a pawnbroker, sold to B. his trade and business, and stock in trade, and all profits, benefits, advantages, and emoluments resulting therefrom, for 600*l.*, which sum was allowed to remain in the purchaser's hands, and for which he was to pay A. 30*l.* a-year, as secured by deed. By a lease of the premises on which the business was carried on, bearing even date with the deed securing the payment of 30*l.* a-year, the rent reserved on the premises was 120*l.* B. became bankrupt; and when A. sought to put his debt on the file, the premises were sworn not to have been worth more than 60*l.* It was held, that the additional 60*l.*, unaccounted for, did not necessarily make the original transaction between the parties usurious, so as to prevent A. from filing his proof against B.'s estate, but that the 60*l.* a-year above the rent might well be put down to the account of certain "facilities" afforded by A. to B., and which were in the nature of "goodwill," although "goodwill" was not expressed in terms to have been sold. Exp. Lynn, Re Torrey, 5 Jur. 1089.

6. In a foreclosure suit the Master was to state incumbrances and their priorities. A claim was carried in in respect of an usurious bargain, which he disallowed altogether. The claimant excepted, and the other incumbrancers, who were co-defendants, then contended that the transaction was void ab initio, though no objection to the security was taken upon the pleadings. The Court allowed the amount actually advanced by the claimant with interest as a debt, and would not permit the other incumbrancers as co-defendants to contest the validity of his security. Mansfield (Earl) v. Ogle, 3 W. R. 299; 24 L. J., Ch., 450; 1 Jur., N. S., 415. But on appeal:—Held, that the Master was right in disallowing the claim, although no objection had been taken to the usurious security on the pleadings. 8. C. 3 W. R. 557; 24 L. J., Ch., 450; 1 Jur., N. S., 603; 3 Eq. Rep. 907.

A person lent money to a remainderman upon the security of his reversion, upon condition that, if the tenant for life died within five years, the money repaid should be double that which was lent, and, if the tenant for life lived beyond five years, the money repaid should be treble that which was lent. Although it was not impossible that the tenant for life might live so long that the lender would receive no more than his principal with lawful interest, yet:—Held, that the transaction was a colourable evasion of the usury laws and void. Id.

7. Semble, that an agreement between A. and B., that A. should sell a leasehold interest in lands to B., and that B. should advance a certain sum of money to A., who should build a house of greater value upon the lands, and that B. should demise the lands and house to A. at a certain rent, calculated at the rate of 9 per cent. on the money to be advanced, with liberty to A. to fine down the rent at 9 per cent., is not usurious. Domling v. Legh, 3 J. & L. 716; 9 Ir. Eq. R. 413.

8. A., a builder, being lessee of lands for terms of seventy years for building purposes, signed an agreement in writing, whereby in consideration of moneys to be advanced to him by B. for building, he agreed to assign the leases to B., subject to the ground rents and to the several conditions therein contained, and to take the under-leases from B. (when the houses should be completed) for the whole of the terms, wanting ten days, at a rent that should amount to 8 per cent. upon the money to be advanced, such rents to commence from the time of the respective advances. By a subsequent document, signed by A., in which he acknowledged certain advances, and stated that he had built two shops; after repeating the above agreement, he added, "It is also agreed that I am to have the privilege of selling the two shops, provided I repay you the amount advanced on the shops, and all interest due thereon, to the day you assign the lease or leases to me or my nominee":—Held, that these agreements were usurious. Belcher v. Vardon, 2 Colly. 162; 14 L. J., N. S., Ch., 427; 9 Jur. 546.

Leases to Mortgagee.] 1. A contract between mortgagor and mortgagee for a lease to be granted by the former, in consideration of forbearance, is usurious. Gubbins v. Creed, 2 Sch. & Lef. 218.

2. A lease for 999 years made by mortgagor to mortgagee, set aside; the policy of the law upon which the Statutes of Usury are founded not permitting such a transaction between persons standing in the relation of the mortgagor and mortgagee. And this, semble, although the lease was made at a fair value. Webb v. Horke, 2 Sch. & Lef. 661.

3. A fee-farm grant or lease of mortgaged premises from mortgagor to mortgagee at a fixed annual rent, is among that description of transaction at which courts of equity look with great jealousy. Hicks v. Cooke, 4 Dow 24.

7. Partnership.

4. Deed by which A., B., and C., partners in trade, in consideration of 4,000*l.* paid to them by D., in augmentation of their capital, agree to admit him into partnership with them for a term: it was agreed that A. should receive in lieu of profits a clear sum of 550*l.* per annum, and all the property of the concern was charged with the payment of this sum quarterly, and of the 4,000*l.* at the determination of the partnership. A., B., and C. were to pay rent, taxes, wages, and the other outgoings out of the trade, which was to be carried on by them and in their names only, and D. was not to be required to attend to it. D. was at liberty to retire on giving twelve months' notice, and on his retiring, or at the end of the term, the 4,000*l.* and the arrears (if any) of the 550*l.* per annum were to be paid to him by A., B., and C. by instalments, to be secured by their bonds, and they were to indemnify him from the debts of the partnership:—Held, that this deed was not usurious. Fereday v. Hordern, Jac. 144.

5. Agreement between two traders, that one shall advance the fund and the other superintend the business; the profit to be equally divided, but the entire loss, if any, to be borne by the latter; not usurious but nudum pactum as to the last clause, and such an agreement ought to be construed as constituting a partnership, the loss to be borne as well as the profits shared equally. An agreement may be perfectly equitable, although it is usurious. But if it is usurious, the law determines it, and its bona fides cannot avail it. Brophy v. Holmes, 2 Moll. 1.

6. A. lends B. money to enable him to commence business at 5 per cent. interest. After the loan B. agrees to pay to A. one-eighth of the annual profits by monthly payments, which offer A. accepts, and B. accordingly makes several monthly payments, for which A. gives B. receipts on account:—Held, that the balance of the principal and interest due from B. to A. was a good petitioning creditor's debt, not arising out of a partnership, nor affected by usury. Exp. Briggs, 3 Dea. & Ch. 367; 1 Mont. & A. 46.

7. The Frugal Investment Association was formed in 1845, and was certified under the 4 & 5 Will. 4, c. 40. Its objects were to advance the society's funds to its members, and to accumulate them, and to divide the profits periodically. The advances were made by putting up a share at one of the meetings for competition among the members, and the member offering the highest premium for it was entitled to that share, and as many more, to the number of twenty, as he chose to take at the same premium. For each share so taken he was to pay the premium agreed upon, and also 8*s.* a month for 100 months (during which time only the society was to exist) as redemption money; and on these conditions he might have an immediate advance of 100*l.*, the full value of his share, on giving security for the repayment of it, together with such premium and redemption money. He was also entitled to participate in the general profits of the society. B. became a member, and obtained an advancement of five shares, at premiums of 71*l.* for three, and 73*l.* for the other two; and he gave security as required, and received an advance of 500*l.* B. died, and on the society pressing for payment of the moneys so secured to them, B.'s executrix filed a bill against them, alleging that the transaction was usurious, and the society illegal, and claiming to redeem the security on repayment of the 500*l.* with legal interest only:—Held, on the authority of Silver v. Barnes (6 Bing. N. C. 180), that the transaction, being between partners, was not usurious. Burbridge v. Cotton, 5 De G. & Sm. 17; 21 L. J., N. S., Ch., 201; 15 Jur. 1070.

8. Stock, Re-transfer of.

8. Contract for re-payment of a debt with legal interest, or, at the option of the creditor, to transfer so much stock as it would have produced on the day it was payable, void as usurious, the principal and interest being secured, with a chance of a rise of the stock: not therefore like a contract to replace stock absolutely which might fall. Barnard v. Young, 17 Ves. 44.

9. One agrees to lend 1,000*l.* at 5 per cent., and for that purpose sells 1,000*l.* South Sea annuities, which, being under par, did not produce 1,000*l.*; he advances the money so produced, and takes mortgage for 1,000*l.*:—Held, a shift within the Statute of Usury; and the difference between the price at which the stock was sold ordered to be repaid, on a bill brought after a decree for foreclosure, and the whole money allowed in the account taken under that decree. Moore v. Battie, Amb. 371.

10. C. being indebted to G. in 1,000*l.* agreed to transfer within a given time 100*l.* per annum, long annuities, at the then price, and in the meantime pay G. the dividends, and that the debt of 1,000*l.* should constitute part of the purchase-money. The stock was not purchased at the time, and there was a rise in the price of stocks. The agreement held not usurious or within the Stock Jobbing Acts. Clark v. Giraud, 1 Madd. 511.

1. A contract of loan which gives the lender the option of claiming either a sum of money or a certain amount of stock for re-payment of the principal is usurious. Johnson v. Williamhurst, 1 L. J., Ch., 112.

2. A executed a bond and mortgage to B., to secure 2,000*l.* lent to him by B., with interest at 5 per cent., B. having sold out a sum of stock to enable him to make the loan, the dividends of which exceeded the interest of 2,000*l.* at 5 per cent. A. afterwards agreed, in consideration of her letting the 2,000*l.* continue secured at interest as aforesaid, to transfer to her, when requested so to do, the amount of the stock sold out; or at her option to pay to her a sum of money sufficient to re-purchase it, in the meantime to pay to her the amount of the dividends of it instead of the interest of the 2,000*l.* :—Held, that the agreement was additional to and not substitutional for the bond and mortgage, and was therefore usurious. Powney v. Blomberg, 14 Sim. 179; 13 L. J., N. S., Ch., 450; 8 Jur. 746.

3. In 1816 A. transferred 10,000*l.* Three per Cent. to B., which he sold, and, after retaining 6,000*l.*, repaid the surplus to A. Concurrently, B. gave to A. a bond conditioned for the repayment of 6,000*l.*, and 5 per cent. interest, and he wrote to A. engaging to replace the 6,000*l.* in the Three per Cent. In 1822, B. admitted his obligation to restore to A. the stock sold out. The Court, in 1852, considering that the contract was for restoring the stock, and that A. had not the option of taking stock or money, held that the contract was not usurious. Godard v. Lethbridge, 16 Beav. 529.

9. Trade Custom.

4. Under an agreement to take off a discount above 5 per cent., for prompt payment, though, according to the custom of the trade, the creditor cannot, upon failure, charge more than 5 per cent. Exp. Aynsworth, 4 Ves. 678.

5. A custom in Liverpool for the banker to strike a balance every quarter, and send the account to the merchant, and then to make that balance carry interest for the next quarter, is not usury. Callet v. Walker, 2 Anstr. 495.

6. Where sums of money advanced, and to be advanced, are secured by deed, and the dealings then contemplated by the parties are tainted with usury, the deed is wholly void as a security, although the legal debt is not impeached. A. employs B. as a calico printer, and before the accounts for printing become due, from time to time advances him various sums of money, charging him, besides interest, with 1½ per cent. as a trade premium, which it was customary for persons in the same trade to take under the like circumstances. A. was also in the habit of paying debts owing by B. to other persons before they became due, when A. deducted the usual discount, but charged B. with the full amount, besides interest and the trade premium above mentioned. Semble, that both these modes of dealing were usurious; they were however at best of so suspicious a nature, that the Court declined to make an order for the sale of the property under the deed, but directed an action of ejectment to be brought by A. against the assignees. A., having succeeded upon the trial, applied for the costs of the petition, which the Court under these circumstances declined to grant, the petition being against the judgment of the commissioners. Exp. Millington, 3 Dea. & Ch. 298; 1 Mont. & A. 114.

7. An agreement between two houses in the habit of dealing with each other, that either party should pay interest to the other on the balance which might be due from it in the course of trade, is an agreement for a loan of money within the usury laws. Exp. Guillebert, Re Trye, 3 Mont. & A. 455; 2 Dea. 509; 7 L. J., N. S., Bky., 25.

IV. DISCOVERY.

8. Bill not suggesting wilful usury, but that defendant had miscomputed interest received by him, and praying discovery as to the fact. Plea thereto overruled. Anon., 2 Eq. Abr. 70. S.P. Bosanquet v. Dashwood, Forrest. 38; id. 534.

9. Where Statute of Limitations had run against recovery of penalty for usury, the usurer cannot protect himself from discovery, by demurrer founded on liability of subjecting himself to forfeiture. Talbot v. Smith, 1 Ridgw. L. & S. 360.

10. On a bill to set aside an usurious contract defendant may demur to a discovery of what interest he agreed to take, for he cannot set forth that without discovering the very interest he has taken. Chauncey v. Tahourden, 2 Atk. 393.

In the case of money lost at gaming, and paid, possibly this Court will refuse relief; the plaintiff in equity being particeps criminis. Ib.

V. TERMS OF RELIEF.

11. Demurrer to a cross bill to have an usurious security delivered up, not offering to pay the sum really due, allowed. Mason v. Gardiner, 4 Bro. C. C. 436.

12. If it be necessary to have the assistance of a court of equity to set aside an usurious contract, it must be on the terms of paying what is fairly due, with legal interest. Scott v. Nesbitt, 2 Cox 183; 2 Bro. C. C. 641.

13. Bill to stay proceedings at law and discover usury, charging an agreement to take, but not the taking, usurious interest, and not offering to pay the amount, which the plaintiff by bill admitted legally due, is demurrable. Whitmore v. Francis, 8 Price 616.

1. In General.

1. The defendant on the 6th June offered in writing to sell his farm for 1,000*l.*, but the plaintiff offered 950*l.*, which the defendant, on the 27th June, after consideration, refused to accept. On the 29th the plaintiff, by letter, agreed to give 1,000*l.*, but there appeared to be no assent on the part of the defendant, though there had been no withdrawal of the first offer:—Held, that there was no binding contract within the Statute of Frauds. Hyde v. Wrenoh, 8 Beav. 334; 4 Jur. 1106.

2. Bill against a remainderman for the specific performance of an agreement by the tenant for life, dismissed, the agreement not having been so finally concluded that either party might have had it specifically executed. Low v. Swift, 2 Ball & B. 529.

3. M., by letter addressed to G., proposed to sell to him premises at the price of 5,000*l.* M. had no legal title to the premises, and, at an interview at the office of F., who was M.'s solicitor, G. refused to give more than 4,800*l.* M. said he would not give any title but that which he would himself get under a family arrangement, and, as to the offer of 4,800*l.*, he said he would not take less than 5,000*l.*, and that there was an end to the matter. Subsequently, at the same interview, G. said he would give 5,000*l.* F., in answer to G., who asked should not some writing be drawn up, said he could not allow M. to enter into a contract at that moment, nor advise G., in the absence of his solicitor, to agree to the conditions which he, F., would think necessary for M.'s protection. The parties separated; G. under the impression that there was, M. under the impression that there was not, an acceptance by G. of M.'s original proposal, and a concluded agreement between them:—Held, that G. could not sustain a bill for specific performance. Gradwell v. Maguire, 6 Ir. R., Eq., 477.

1. Where a letter contains the entire terms of an agreement for purchase of lands, it is not necessary for the plaintiff to prove that he accepted the terms: if it required the plaintiff to supply a term in the agreement, there must be a special acceptance in writing supplying that term, in order to take the case out of the Statute of Frauds. Boys v. Ayerst, 6 Madd. 316.

2. An iron company, owners of a private railway, desirous of connecting their line with other railways by means of a branch line, applied to the landowners, and to O. and his mortgagees, for wayleaves through their lands; and an offer in writing was made to them in March 1843, by O. and his mortgagees, of a wayleave through their lands, by a leave of sixty years, by the payment of triple damages yearly. There was no express acceptance by the company of the offer. The iron company assigned all their interest to a railway company who was to construct the line. In October 1843 the proposed line was staked out over the lands of O., and in July 1844 (all the other landholders being settled with) the works were commenced; and in 1845 the line was open for traffic. In June 1844 the mortgagees of O., under the power of sale, sold and conveyed the property, including the land on which part of the line was formed, to B., who sold to S. From 1844 to 1847 unsuccessful negotiations had been pending between the parties for settling the quantum of the yearly rent; and in 1847 S. brought ejectment against the company. The company then filed a bill to stay proceedings at law, and for specific performance, alleging acceptance of the offer of March 1843, by the acts of the company in staking out and making their line in accordance with the offer, and praying that the Court would determine the quantum of rent to be paid:—Held, that the acts of the company did not amount to an acceptance of the offer so as to make it a contract binding the land, and the bill was dismissed. Meynell v. Shutees, 2 Jur., N. S., 737; 25 L. J., Ch., 257; 3 W. R. 535. Affirming 3 Sm. & G. 101; 1 Jur., N. S., 80.

An offer to sell land, to be binding upon the person making it, must be accepted within a reasonable time. Id.

If the person making the offer die, become bankrupt, or sell, before acceptance of the offer, the land is not bound. Id.

The scope of the bill being for specific performance of an alleged contract:—Held, that the plaintiffs were not entitled to relief on the principle of quieting possession. Id.

3. A., being entitled to certain lands in fee, granted annuities out of them to B., to secure moneys advanced by him. A. subsequently agreed to sell the lands to C., in order to redeem the purchase money and leasehold interest under eviction, representing to him that B. would join in the conveyance. A. executed the conveyance to C., but he refused to allow A. to get the purchase money until B. would discharge the lands of the annuities, which B. refused to do unless he were paid off. A. subsequently sold the lands to B., who had notice of the prior deed. On a bill filed by C., to set aside the sale to B.:—Held, that by C.'s conduct the contract was incomplete, notwithstanding that the deed was executed, and that A. had a full right to sell to another. Leader v. Ahearn, 2 Con. & L. 534; 4 Dr. & War. 495.

4. A. B. was authorised by the defendant to make a proposal of sale of some land to the plaintiff, but to be accepted within a week. The plaintiff wrote to A. B. within that time, accepting the offer, but A. B. did not communicate the acceptance to the defendant until long after:—Held, that there was a valid contract, which was not destroyed by the neglect of A. B. to communicate the acceptance to the defendant. Wright v. Bigg, 15 Beav. 592.

5. Unless a valid acceptance be given, within a reasonable time, to a written offer to sell an estate, it will be treated as abandoned. Williams v. Williams, 17 Beav. 213.

6. An offer for the sale of land was sent by the vendors to the purchaser upon certain terms. No acceptance of such offer came from purchaser, but only a request to be furnished with draft contract. A draft was sent, and nothing further was done in the matter for two months, when the vendors wrote to say that they treated the proposed sale as entirely off:—Held, the vendors had a right to refuse to proceed with the proposed sale. Runnens v. Robbins, 11 Jur., N. S., 631; 13 W. R. 979; 11 L. T., N. S., 717; 3 De G. J. & S. 88.

7. Where the proposed vendor wrote: "I have let this house to you (the proposed purchaser) on the following terms, etc." (stating the terms at length), to which he replied, "At the risk of being thought capricious and irresolute, I have to ask you if you will for a pecuniary consideration allow me to withdraw from my obligation to take your house and farm," etc., and in the subsequent correspondence the proposed purchaser referred to his "engagement," etc.:—Held, that the contract could be inferred from the tenor of this correspondence with certain telegrams taken together, and specific performance decreed accordingly. Coupland v. Arrowsmith, 18 L. T., N. S., 755.

8. A tenant in common of leaseholds in a negotiation for their purchase offered by letter to send an abstract of title, but the terms of the contract were too uncertain to bind his co-tenant; neither such offer, nor his refusal to disclose the lessor's title, will entitle the purchaser to specific performance. Mason v. Tyler, 27 L. T., N. S., 371.

9. An intended vendor of freehold property, who had bought under stringent special conditions, instructed her solicitor, in conformity with his own advice, to sell the property subject to the same or similar conditions as or to those under which she had bought. Acting under this limited authority, the solicitor gave the necessary instructions by letter to a house agent, whom at a personal interview on the same day he expressly forbade to sign anything, saying that any contract would have to be prepared by the solicitor's firm. An intended purchaser, by letter handed to the agent, agreed to give the price which the agent was authorised to accept (not, however, simply accepting the terms of the prior letter), and at the time requested an acceptance of this offer by the agent in writing, a request to which the agent declined to accede, giving as his reason the prohibition under which he was from entering into any contract. The intended vendor at this stage of the proceedings repented of her intention to sell, but was willing to proceed if the solicitor was of opinion that she could not honourably recede. A personal interview having taken place between him and the intended purchaser, who declined to give up the intended purchase, the solicitor wrote to the intended purchaser a letter saying that his firm were instructed to proceed with the sale, and adding that the draft contract was being prepared, and would be forwarded for approval. Disputes having subsequently arisen, and the intended purchaser having filed a bill for specific performance:—Held, first, that at the date of the letter of the intended purchaser to the agent no contract was in existence, and that that letter, coupled with the prior letter of the solicitor to him, did not amount to a sufficient memorandum in writing of the terms of a contract. Clinnook v. Ely (Marchioness), 4 De G. J. & S. 638; 6 N. R. 1; 11 Jur., N. S., 329; 13 W. R. 597; 12 L. T., N. S., 251. Reversing 13 W. R. 176; 11 L. T., N. S., 536.

Held, secondly, that the letter of the solicitor to the intended purchaser was no recognition of the fact that there had been a complete sale, and did not amount to an acceptance of the terms stated by the intended purchaser in his letter to the agent, but merely to either a conditional acceptance of the intended purchaser's terms, subject to a draft contract being agreed to, or an expression of unwillingness to continue the interrupted negotiation, and for that purpose to prepare a form of agreement. Id.

Held, thirdly, that if the letter of the solicitor of the intended purchaser had had the effect which the Court decided that it had not, it would not have been binding on the intended vendor, as being beyond the authority vested by her in her solicitor. Id.

An agreement is the result of the mutual assent of two parties to certain terms: and if it is clear that there is no consensus, what may have been written or said becomes immaterial. S. C. 4 De G. J. & S. 638.

As soon as the fact is established of the final mutual assent of the parties to certain terms, and those terms are evidenced by any writing signed by the party to be charged or his agent lawfully authorised, there exist all the materials which a court of equity requires to make a legally binding contract. Id.

But where to a proposal or an offer an assent was given subject to a provision as to a contract:—Held, that the stipulation as to the contract was a term of the assent, and there was no agreement independent of that stipulation. Id.

1. A bill was filed by a principal against an agent to enforce specific performance of an agreement which was alleged to have been entered into for the purpose of settling certain matters in dispute between them. The principal had, prior to the alleged agreement, charged the agent with having committed various frauds upon him, and all these matters were to have been disposed of by the agreement. In the bill all these charges of fraud were repeated as substantive allegations, and the defendant went into evidence to rebut the charges:—Held, that the evidence did not show that any concluded agreement had been come to between the parties. Forester v. Read, 19 W. R. 114; 6 L. R., Ch., 40; 24 L. T. 79.

2. A plaintiff filed a bill for a specific performance of an agreement into which he had entered with the defendant. The parties disputed the construction of one of the clauses in the agreement, the defendant swearing that his intention at the time of executing the agreement was not according to the construction contended for by the plaintiff. The Court was of opinion that the defendant's construction was plainly the correct one, but independently of that, being satisfied that there had been no concord between the parties, dismissed the bill. Griffin v. Coleman, 28 L. T. 493.

3. Specific performance of an agreement, whereby a railway company agreed to construct and maintain a siding on land, was decreed, although the owner of the land had previously entered into negotiations with the company for compensation in respect of the breach of the agreement. Green v. West Cheshire Railway Co., 13 L. R., Eq., 44; 41 L. J., Ch., 17; 25 L. T. 409; 20 W. R. 54.

4. Two of the plaintiffs were the legal owners of a leasehold interest in a house, and claimed 37l. from the defendant for the use and occupation of it during the three last months of their term. They authorised him to pay this amount to another of the plaintiffs, who was owner of the reversion. She called on the defendant, who expressed his willingness to pay her the money, though he did not make any actual tender of it, but she refused to receive it, and demanded more. The plaintiffs then sued the defendant for the use and occupation, and claimed 238l. The defendant paid 37l. into court:—Held, that as soon as the defendant expressed to the agent his readiness to pay the 37l. there was a concluded agreement between him and the plaintiffs for that amount, and that the plaintiffs could not recover more. Gretton v. Mess, 7 L. R., Ch. D., 839; 38 L. T. 506; 26 W. R. 607.

Held, also, that the defendant was entitled to the costs of the action from the time of the payment into court. Id.

5. Circumstances in the conduct of two parties may establish a binding contract between them, although the agreement, reduced into writing as a draft, has not been formally executed by either. Brogden v. Metropolitan Railway Co., 2 L. R., App. Cns., 666.

6. In such a case the word "approved," written by one of the parties at the end of the draft agreement, must be taken as an approval of the substance of the draft, and not, as in the case of a conveyancer's or solicitor's draft, an approval of the mere form. Id.

7. B. had for some years supplied a railway company with coals. At last it was suggested by B. that a contract should be entered into between them. After their agents had met together the terms of agreement were drawn up by the agent of the company and sent to B. B. filled up certain parts of it which had been left in blank, and introduced the name of the gentleman who was to act as arbitrator in case of differences between the parties, wrote "approved" at the end of the paper, and signed his own name. B.'s agent sent back the paper to the agent of the company, who put it in his desk, and nothing farther was done in the way of a formal execution of it. Both parties for some time acted in accordance with the arrangements mentioned in the paper. Coals were supplied and payments made as therein stated, and when some complaints of inexactness in the supply of coals, according to the terms stated in the paper, were made by the company, there were explanations and excuses given by B., and the contract was mentioned in the correspondence, and matters went on as before. Finally disagreements arose, and B. denied there was any contract which bound him in the matter:—Held, that these facts, and the actual conduct of the parties, established the existence of such a contract, and there having been a clear breach of it, B. must be held liable upon it. Ib.

B. was a chief partner in a partnership of three persons. The word "approved" written by him and signed with his name was treated as an assent binding on all the partners (whose names were mentioned in the paper), although the usual form of signature of the partnership was that of "B. & Sons." Ib.

A mere mental assent to the terms stated in a proposed contract would not be binding, but acting upon those terms, by sending coals in the quantities at the prices mentioned in it, amounted to sufficient to show the adoption of the writing previously altered and sent, and to constitute it a valid contract. Ib.

The onus of showing that both parties had acted on the terms of an agreement which had not been, in due form, executed by either, lies upon the party who rests his case on that circumstance. Ib.

1. Where a court has to find a contract in a correspondence, and not in one particular note or memorandum formally signed, the whole of that which has passed between the parties must be taken into consideration. Hussey v. Horne-Payne, 4 L. R., App. Cas., 311; 48 L. J., Ch., 846; 41 L. T. 1; 27 W. R. 585.

Per Lord Selborne:—The observation stated in Jervis v. Berridge (8 L. R., Ch., 351; 42 L. J., Ch., 518; 21 W. R. 96; 27 L. T., N. S., 436), that "the Statute of Frauds is a weapon of defence, not offence, and does not make any signed instrument a valid contract by reason of the signature, if it is not such according to the good faith and real intention of the parties," affirmed. Ib.

See also LANDLORD AND TENANT, I. i. 1.

2. Withdrawal of Proposal.

2. A. signed a memorandum of agreement, by which he agreed to sell to B. and C. all his interest in a partnership business on a certain valuation, "this purchase being contingent upon B. and C. being able to agree on the purchase with the rest of the retiring partners." The memorandum was not then signed by B. and C., who proceeded to negotiate with the other partners for the purchase of their interests. A fortnight after signing the memorandum A. wrote to B. and C., withdrawing from his offer, on the ground that they had not complied with the condition alleged to have been verbally made by him that they should accept within a week. Letters passed, in which B. and C. did not state that they had accepted the offer, or that they considered A. as irrevocably bound, but that they had not as yet been able to complete the negotiations. They subsequently signed their acceptance upon the memorandum of agreement:—Held, that there had been no such acceptance by B. and C. before A. had withdrawn from his offer, as to constitute a binding agreement against him for the sale of his partnership interest of which specific performance could be enforced, or so as to preclude him from his right to the partnership account. Horsfall v. Garnett, 6 W. R. 387.

3. When an offer in writing is made by the owner to sell an estate on specified terms, and this is unconditionally accepted, there is a binding contract, which neither party can vary, but the owner is entitled at any time before his offer has been definitively accepted to add any new terms to his proposal. If these be refused, the treaty is at an end. Honeyman v. Marryat, 21 Beav. 14; 3 W. R. 502; 1 Jur., N. S., 867. And see S. C. 6 H. L. Ca. 112; 4 Jur., N. S., 17; 26 L. J., Ch., 619.

4. An offer to sell property may be withdrawn before acceptance without any formal notice to the person to whom the offer is made. It is sufficient if that person has actual knowledge that the person who made the offer has done some act inconsistent with the continuance of the offer, such as selling the property to a third person. Dickinson v. Dodds, 2 L. R., Ch. D., 463; 34 L. T., N. S., 607; 24 W. R. 594; 45 L. J., Ch., 777. Reversing 34 L. T., N. S., 191.

Semble, that the sale of the property to a third person would of itself amount to a withdrawal of the offer, even although the person to whom the offer was first made had no knowledge of the sale. Ib.

Semble, that the acceptance of an offer to sell constitutes a contract for sale only as from the time of the acceptance. The contract does not relate back to the time when the offer was made. Ib.

On Wednesday A. signed and delivered to B. a memorandum in these words: "I hereby agree to sell to B. certain freeholds for 800l." Then followed a postscript, also signed by A.: "This offer to be left over until Friday, 9 o'clock a.m." On Thursday A. entered into a contract to sell the freeholds to C. On Friday morning, before 9 o'clock, B., who had become aware that A. had entered into a contract for the sale of the property to C., but had received no notice of such contract from A., handed to him a written acceptance of the offer, which A. refused to receive, saying that the property was already sold. On a bill by B. for specific performance:—Held, that the memorandum signed by A. was a mere offer, which he was entitled to withdraw at any time before acceptance; that it was too late for B. to accept the offer after he had become aware that A. had entered into a contract to sell the property to another person, and that the bill must, therefore, be dismissed with costs. Id.

3. Acceptance whether Simple or Conditional.

1. Contract by letter thus:—I will give 16,000*l.*; answer, I will not take less than 17,000*l.*; answer returned, I will give 17,000*l.*:—Held, not agreement within statute. Popham v. Eyre, Loft. 786.

2. Specific performance of agreement agreed upon an offer by letter, which was forthwith accepted by another letter in reply. Ford v. Compton, 2 Bro. C. C. 32.

3. In order to constitute an agreement by letter, the answer to the written proposals must be a simple acceptance of the terms proposed without the introduction of any new or different terms. Holland v. Ayre, 2 Sim. & S. 194.

4. A proposal by a purchaser to take the remainder of a lease, was answered by letter, which, after acceding to the proposal, added, "We hope to give you possession at half-quarter day":—Held, that the addition did not introduce a new term, but that the acceptance was unconditional. Clive v. Beaumont, 1 De G. & Sm. 397; 13 Jur. 226.

5. Letters will not constitute an agreement which the court will specifically perform, unless the answer is a simple acceptance, without the introduction of a new term. Wright v. St. George, 12 Ir. Ch. R. 226.

6. The defendant, on the 6th June, offered in writing to sell his farm for 1,000*l.*; but the plaintiff offered 950*l.*, which the defendant, on the 27th June, after consideration, refused to accept. On the 29th the plaintiff, by letter, agreed to give 1,000*l.*, but there appeared to be no assent on the part of the defendant, though there had been no withdrawal of the first offer:—Held, that there was no binding contract within the Statute of Frauds. Hyde v. Wrench, 3 Beav. 334; 4 Jur. 1106.

7. Where a letter contains the entire terms of an agreement for purchase of lands, it is not necessary for the plaintiff to prove that he accepted the terms; if it require the plaintiff to supply a term in the agreement, there must be a special acceptance in writing, supplying that term, in order to take the case out of the Statute of Frauds. Boys v. Ayerst, 6 Madd. 316.

8. The Court will not enforce the specific performance of a contract constituted by a proposal on one side, and an acceptance on the other, unless the acceptance is unqualified and unconditional. Oriental Inland Steam Navigation Co. v. Briggs, 10 W. R. 125; 5 L. T., N. S., 477.

Therefore, when B. had written to the directors of a company, applying for an allotment of shares and undertaking to sign the articles of association, and the secretary of the company in reply had informed him by letter that the directors had allotted him the shares, adding that the articles of association must be signed, or, in default, that the shares would be forfeited, and a bill was filed by the company against B., who had declined to sign the articles of association, stating the contract, and praying that B. might be compelled to sign the articles, and such acceptance of the shares as the Court might think necessary—a demurrer to the bill was allowed. Id.

9. A letter allotting shares stated that the allotment money must be paid on the 21st March, and punctual payment was requisite, and that the bankers were instructed not to receive payment after that day without interest at 10 per cent.:—Held, that this addition relative to interest was not an introduction of a new term. Re Imperial Land Company of Marseilles, Harris's case, 7 L. R., Ch., 587; 41 L. J., Ch., 621; 26 L. T. 781; 28 W. R. 690.

10. A, the agent of an intending purchaser of leaseholds, wrote to B., the vendor's agent, that he "could give him 50*l.* for the lease, plant, etc., if accepted at once." B., in reply, asked A. to allow the offer to remain open for twenty-four hours, in order that he might submit it to his employer. On the following day he wrote to A., "I am directed to accept your offer of 50*l.* for the lease, etc. . . . I shall be here at 11 to 11.30 to-morrow morning to sign contract." A. did not reach B.'s office until 12 o'clock. B. had waited for him until 11.45, and then sold the property to a third party:—Held, that the letters continued a binding contract, and specific performance was enforced against the vendor. Branson v. Stammers, 28 W. R. 180.

11. A letter, accepting an offer to purchase an estate on the terms stated in an advertisement, added a sum for deposit, and a day for completing the purchase. No reply was given to this letter:—Held, that there was no complete contract on which to sustain a bill for specific performance. Honeyman v. Marryatt, 6 H. L. Ca. 112; 4 Jur., N. S., 17; 26 L. J., Ch., 619.

A. offered to purchase an estate for 25,000*l.* The vendor accepted the offer, subject to the terms of a contract being arranged between their solicitors, and requiring a deposit of from 1,200*l.* to 1,600*l.* The vendor's solicitor afterwards sent a draft of agreement to A.'s solicitor for perusal, reciting the payment of the 1,500*l.* deposit money on the day of the date of the agreement, which was left blank, and before it was returned wrote a letter stating that unless the agreement was completed and the deposit paid before a particular day named by him, the vendor would consider the treaty at an end. A.'s solicitor wrote in answer that he approved the agreement on his client's behalf save as to the amount of the deposit money, and requesting further time to complete. The vendor's solicitor then enlarged the time for completion, again stating that unless the 1,500*l.* deposit money was paid by the day then specified, the vendor would proceed to the sale of the property. The money not being paid upon that day, the vendor's solicitor immediately wrote that the treaty was at an end. A few days afterwards A. tendered the 1,500*l.*, and offered to agree to the terms of the draft as originally furnished. This offer was refused. Upon demurrer to bill for specific performance:—Held, that there was no concluded contract between the parties; that before the terms originally proposed were accepted the vendor had a right to fix a time for the payment of the deposit money, and make time of the essence of the contract; and the demurrer was allowed. S. C. 1 Jur., N. S., 857; 21 Beav. 14; 3 W. R. 502.

1. A. wrote to B. offering to sell him an estate for 37,500*l.*, or a part of the estate for a less sum, and added a postscript reserving the right to remove the materials of a house. B. replied: "I beg to acknowledge the receipt of your letter stating that you are willing to accept 37,500*l.* for the whole of your freehold land at N. I hereby accept your terms as above, and agree to pay you the said sum of 37,500*l.* for your land":—Held, by Jessel, M. R., that this was an acceptance of the terms in A.'s letter, including the postscript. Hussey v. Horne-Payne, 8 L. R., Ch. D., 670; 47 L. J., Ch., 751; 38 L. T. 543; 6 W. R. 703. And see S. C. 4 L. R., App. Cas., 311; 48 L. J., Ch., 846; 41 L. T. 1; 27 W. R. 585.

2. The owners of land, in answer to a written offer to buy it, wrote saying they had received the offer, and added, "which offer we accept," and now hand you two copies of conditions of sale which we have signed; we will thank you to sign same, and return one of the copies to us":—Held, that this was not an unqualified acceptance, and did not make a contract. Crossley v. Maycock, 11 L. R., Eq., 180; 43 L. J., Ch., 379; 22 W. R. 387.

4. Acceptance subject to Approval of Title.

3. A. made a written offer to B. to sell him property at a certain price, and B. wrote in reply, and accepted the offer, "subject to the title being approved by our solicitors":—Held, that the words "subject to the title being approved by our solicitors" was a new term introduced by B., which, not having been acceded to by A., there was no concluded contract. Hussey v. Horne-Payne, 47 L. J., Ch., 751; 8 L. R., Ch. D., 670; 26 W. R. 703; 38 L. T., N. S., 543. Reversing 47 L. J., Ch., 519; 26 W. R. 532; 38 L. T., N. S., 341. And see S. C. 5 L. R., App. Cas., 311; 48 L. J., Ch., 846; 27 W. R. 585; 47 L. T. 1.

Held, also, that where such a term is assented to, it makes the solicitor the judge whether or not a proper title is deduced, and, if he acts bonâ fide and reasonably, the Court will not interfere, although his objections to the title may not be well founded in law. Id. Per Cotton, L. J.

Per the Lord Chancellor:—Quære, whether the addition, in a written document, of the words "subject to the title being approved by our solicitor," could affect a contract for the sale of land, otherwise complete in itself. S. C. in Dom. Proc.

Quære, whether the proper meaning of such words is more than that the title offered is not to be accepted without investigation, and that objections made on such investigation would be subject to the decision of a legal tribunal. Id.

4. A contract for the purchase of a lease stated that it was made "subject to the approval of the title by the purchaser's solicitor":—Held, that, in the absence of mala fides or unreasonableness on the part of the purchaser or his solicitor, the vendor could not enforce specific performance of the contract if the purchaser's solicitor disapproved of the title. Hudson v. Buck, 7 L. R., Ch. D., 683; 38 L. T., N. S., 56; 47 L. J., Ch., 247; 26 W. R. 190.

A sale of a leasehold house was subject to approval of the purchaser's solicitor. The house and another was included in one lease, at one rent, and subject to restrictive covenants as to the whole:—Held, that (the vendor not having proved that he could obtain an apportionment of the rent and covenants) the purchaser could rescind. Id.

5. Acceptance subject to Consent of Third Parties.

5. A contract for the sale of land provided, that one party was to be consulted on any houses proposed to be built thereon by the other, and in case of difference, that A. and B., or their nominees, should have power to decide any such question. There having been no decision:—Held, that the Court could not specifically perform the contract. Tillett v. Charing Cross Bridge Co., 26 Beav. 419; 5 Jur., N. S., 994; 28 L. J., Ch., 863.

6. Where a contract is made which both parties to it know at the time cannot be carried out without the act or consent of a third party, and that act or consent is done or given by the third party within a reasonable time, and he does nothing inconsistent with such act or consent, want of mutuality at the time of contract is no bar to its performance. Blackburn Union v. Brooks, 26 W. R. 57.

6. Reference to a Further or Formal Agreement.

7. Specific performance of an agreement that appeared to be only a preliminary foundation for a future agreement, refused. Robertson v. Londonderry (Marquis), 2 L. J., N. S., Ch., 137.

8. A's agent wrote to B., "I am directed to offer you for the premises 3,000*l.*," etc. B. replied, "We accept your offer. If you approve of the enclosed, sign the same, and we will, on the receipt of the deposit, sign you a copy." B. filed a bill for specific performance, and A. did not produce the enclosure:—Held, that the two letters constituted a valid contract, intended to be carried into effect by the enclosure; and that, though it did not appear that the inclosure had been approved of, still that this did not affect the prior valid contract. Gibbins v. North-Eastern Metropolitan Asylum District (Board of Management), 11 Beav. 1; 17 L. J., N. S., Ch., 5; 12 Jur. 22.

9. Letters may be sufficient to constitute a binding contract, though they refer to the intended execution of a more formal instrument. Thomas v. Dering, 1 Keen 729; 6 L. J., N. S., Ch., 267; 1 Jur. 211, 427.

10. M. D., a married woman, having separate property, offered by letter to give C. M. 15,000*l.* for the next presentation afterwards to the living of B. C. M. replied by letter, saying that he accepted the proposal: "An article, as is usual in such cases, to be drawn up between us to the above effect, in which I will undertake to make out a good title to the satisfaction of any counsel you may appoint; this preliminary matter, however, cannot be arranged till Mr. C., my solicitor, returns to town." Before the article was executed the living became vacant, upon which C. M. refused to perform the agreement: M. D. died, bill was filed by her heir-at-law against C. M., for a specific execution of the agreement:—Held, that the contract, although in letters, was final and complete, the thing to be bought and the sum to be given, being distinctly stated in the proposal, and explicitly accepted in the answer thereto, and ought to be specifically performed. Dowling v. Maguire, Ll. & G. temp. Plunk. 1.

1. Agreement in writing for sale of estate, binding, though signed only by vendor, and followed by direction to attorney to prepare proper agreement for both parties to sign. Foble v. Freeman, 9 Ves. 351.

2. If there is a signed paper signed by an agent duly authorised thereto, which paper, though agreeing to do something, leaves the subject-matter of the agreement unexplained, but refers to another paper which contains the full particulars of the explanation, the two may be connected together, so as to constitute a contract valid under the Statute of Frauds. Ridgway v. Wharton, 6 H. L. Ca. 238; 27 L. J., Ch., 46; 4 Jur., N. S., 173; 5 W. R. 804; 2 Eq. Rep. 839. And see S. C. 3 De G. M. & G. 677.

The contract so constituted by the act of A.'s duly authorised agent will be binding on A., though the second paper may have been sent by the agent to A.'s solicitor to put it into form, provided that the agent and the person with whom he was dealing agreed that it should be sent for that purpose, but not otherwise. The act of sending such a paper to a solicitor to have the matter reduced into form affords generally cogent evidence that the parties do not intend to bind themselves till it is reduced into form. Id.

W. was owner of G., leased to M., under whom B. occupied it for some years. In 1849 B. applied to W. for a lease to G. to himself from 1852, when the original one to M. would expire. W. referred R. to C., his agent, and between them there were interviews and correspondence, which resulted in the specification of terms, which were sent as instructions by C. to W.'s solicitor to prepare a lease. Both W. and C. denied that the one had given, or the other received, authority to conclude a binding agreement, though some evidence on the part of R. went to show that the terms for the intended lease had been finally settled so as to constitute an agreement:—Held, that there was no concluded binding agreement. Id.

If contracting parties agree on terms of which there is sufficient evidence, but contemplate in addition a more formal document, it becomes a question of intention merely whether they intend it as a memorial of the terms already agreed on, or as the instrument by which alone they meant to be bound. Id.

3. Where a person proposing to sell an estate receives an offer, and his estate agent answers, "he has authorised us to accept the offer, subject to the terms of a contract being arranged between his solicitor and yourself," the answer does not constitute a complete contract, and the vendor is at liberty to add other terms, and on their non-acceptance, to break off the treaty. Honeyman v. Morryat, 6 H. L. Ca. 112; 26 L. J., Ch., 619; 4 Jur., N. S., 17; 21 Beav. 14; 3 W. R. 502; 1 Jur., N. S., 857.

4. A testator gave to each of his sons an option to purchase an estate, and required a formal agreement to be executed within two months from receiving the offer to purchase. A. accepted by letter within the two months, and offered to execute a formal agreement:—Held, that the letter was such a contract as would be enforced in equity even if the formal agreement was not executed in time. Austin v. Tannev, 15 W. R. 1.

5. Plaintiff and defendant being in treaty for the sale of lands of the defendant, the latter made an offer in writing that plaintiff should pay off an incumbrance on the lands, and that therefore the deeds should be lodged with the plaintiff, who should be let into possession on paying balance of purchase-money to defendant. This offer was declined. Soon after (on the 2nd October) the parties met and for the first time agreed on the amount of the purchase-money. Defendant then handed to plaintiff a writing signed by defendant specifying the denominations and quantities of the premises, the price and deposit, but with no mention of the plaintiff's name, or of an expression of intention to sell. No deposit was paid. Defendant shortly afterwards consulted plaintiff by letter as to letting the land, but required references from plaintiff before any agreement of sale should be signed by defendant. The defendant afterwards declined to complete, and pleaded the statute of frauds in answer to plaintiff's bill for specific performance:—Held, that the writing of the 2nd October did not alone, or in connection with the previous and subsequent correspondence, constitute a sufficient memorandum in writing within the statute. Skelton v. Cole, 1 De G. & J. 587.

6. A party directed his agent to buy a lease of a house for 3,200*l.*, and sign an agreement. This agent wrote to the agent of the owner, offering 3,200*l.* The owner wrote across the last-mentioned letter, "I agree to sell my house upon these terms;" and thereupon the agent of the owner wrote to the agent of the other party, "My employer will take your offer;" and added, "Make an appointment to meet to draw the agreements." The day following, the agent of the purchaser said that his employer had closed on another house:—Held, that the letters constituted a contract to buy, and specific performance was decreed, with costs. Conley v. Watts, 17 Jur. 172; 22 L. J., Ch., 591.

A. and his agent attended an auction for the sale of a house, at which certain conditions of sale were exhibited, and with which they became acquainted. A. afterwards, through his agent and the agent of the vendor, purchased the same house:—Held, that the particulars of sale were not incorporated with the purchase, and therefore not binding on the purchaser. Id.

7. A vendor instructed her solicitors to sell a house, subject to stipulations, for a fixed sum; and an intending purchaser agreed to give the sum. After some delay, the solicitors of the vendor wrote to the purchaser to say, that they had "been instructed to proceed with the sale to you of these premises. The draft contract is being prepared, and will be forwarded to you for approval in a few days":—Held, first, that this acceptance was conditional upon the terms of the draft contract being agreed to. Chinnock v. Ely (Marchioness), 11 Jur., N. S., 329; 13 W. R. 597; 12 L. T., N. S., 251; 4 De G. J. & S. 638; 6 N. R. 1. Reversing 13 W. R. 176; 11 L. T., N. S., 536.

Held, secondly, that if such acceptance had been unconditional, it would not have been binding upon the vendor, as it would have been ultra vires the solicitors. Fowle v. Freeman (9 Ves. 351) distinguished. S. C. 6 N. R. 1.

1. B. by letter offered to sell a piece of land to A. at a certain price. The letter concluded, "there will be the usual clauses in a contract, and some limitations as to the length of the title to be shown, and other minor details":—Held, that this offer, with the acceptance of it in writing, did not constitute a contract which the Court could enforce, owing to the uncertainty as to the clauses to be inserted, and as to the length of title to be shown. Rummens v. Robins, 3 De G. J. & S. 88; 14 L. T., N. S., 717; 13 W. R. 979; 11 Jur., N. S., 631.

2. A memorandum that A. had paid to B. 50*l.* as a deposit, in part payment, of 1,000*l.* for the purchase of a house, the terms to be expressed in an agreement to be signed as soon as prepared:—Held, not a sufficient agreement in writing. Wood v. Midgley, 5 De G. M. & G. 41; 23 L. J., Ch., 553; 2 W. R. 301; 2 Eq. Rep. 729. Reversing 2 W. R. 185; 2 Sm. & Giff. 115, 121.

Held, also, that a promise by a contracting party to sign a written agreement, when prepared, does not prevent his insisting on the Statute of Frauds as a defence. Id.

3. Specific performance of an agreement "subject to a contract to be settled," or "subject to a proper contract," will not be enforced. Harvey v. Barnard's Inn (Principal), 50 L. J., Ch., 750; 45 L. T. 280; 29 W. R. 922.

4. Plaintiff was the lessee of vaults in the city of London under a lease granted by the Mayor and Corporation of London and the Mercers' Company. The defendant company entered into a negotiation for the purchase of the lease. The secretary of the company wrote to the house agents acting for the plaintiff a letter in which he said that the directors thereby offered to purchase the vaults for 2,500*l.* cash, and to take over a mortgage for 3,500*l.* on the lease, these terms to include the lease, goodwill, fixtures, etc. The house agents answered as follows: "In reply to your letter of the 7th inst. we are now instructed to accept the offer therein contained, and will forward contract as soon as we obtain it from the solicitor." Differences subsequently arose respecting the time when possession should be given, and eventually the plaintiff brought an action against the defendants claiming damages for breach of contract. Malins, V.-Ch., held that the letters contained a binding contract between the parties:—Held, that no binding contract had been entered into, first, because the name of the vendor had not been disclosed or a sufficient description given so as to satisfy the Statute of Frauds; and, secondly, because the letters mentioned only what was the property to be purchased and the price to be given for it, but left the other necessary terms of the agreement, such as the time when possession was to be given, to be settled by a formal contract to be prepared by a solicitor in the ordinary way. Donnison v. People's Café Co., 45 L. T. 187.

5. Where the vendors of land, in a letter acknowledging the receipt of an offer by intending purchasers, wrote as follows:—"Which offer we accept, and now hand you two copies of conditions of sale," and therewith inclosed a formal agreement with conditions of a special character:—Held, that the acceptance was only conditional, and that there was no final agreement of which specific performance could be enforced as against the purchasers. Crossley v. Maycock, 18 L. R., Eq., 180; 43 L. J., Ch., 379; 22 W. R. 387.

6. A builder sent in the plaintiff's agent a tender to execute certain works for a certain sum. The agent replied by letter accepting the tender, and adding, "The contract will be prepared by," etc.:—Held, that there was a contract binding upon the builder; the additional words merely suggesting a convenient mode of carrying out their intention. Lewis v. Brass, 26 W. R. 152.

7. When the cardinal points of a proposed contract are definitely agreed upon by letters, the mere fact that in the course of the correspondence reference has been made to a more formal agreement, or subsidiary non-essential stipulations, will not deter the Court from considering the agreement arrived at by the letters as concluded. Cayley v. Walpole, 22 L. T., N. S., 900; 18 W. R. 782.

8. A. wrote "to confirm" a previous verbal offer of 6,000*l.* for property. B. accepted the offer in writing, coupled with the words, "I will send draft contract in due course":—Held, there was no contract contained in the writings. Vale of Neath Colliery Co. v. Furness, 45 L. J., Ch., 276; 24 W. R. 631; 34 L. T., N. S., 231.

9. The defendant placed a leasehold property in the hands of a house agent for sale. The plaintiff wrote to the agent, "In reference to J.'s property in Fleet Street, I think 800*l.* for the lease, fixtures, etc., is about what I should be willing to give. Possession to be given me within fourteen days from date. This offer is made subject to the conditions of the lease being modified to my solicitor's satisfaction." Shortly afterwards the agent wrote back, "We are instructed to accept your offer of 800*l.* for these premises, and have asked J.'s solicitor to prepare contract." The required modification in the lease was procured:—Held, that, notwithstanding the reference to a future contract, the two letters constituted a complete contract. Bonnerell v. Jenkins, 8 L. R., Ch. D., 70; 47 L. J., Ch., 758; 26 W. R. 294; 38 L. T., N. S., 81.

When an offer in writing is accepted in writing, the mere reference in the document accepting the offer to the preparation of a more formal contract does not amount to the introduction of a new term. Id.

1. No action lies upon an agreement to buy a lease, and sign a "formal contract" when approved by the purchaser's solicitor, in the event of such solicitor not approving of it, unless the approval is withheld malá fide or unreasonably. Bartlett v. Greene, 30 L. T. 553.

G. on 25th November signed a letter addressed to B.'s agent, whereby G. agreed to buy the lease of a house of B. for a certain price, the purchase to be completed before Christmas then next, and "a formal contract to be signed" by G. "when prepared" by the solicitors of B. and "when approved" by the solicitors of G. A draft agreement prepared on behalf of B. was materially altered by the solicitors of G., and B.'s solicitors declining to accept such alterations, the bargain went off:—Held, that no action was maintainable upon G.'s letter. Id.

2. The plaintiff wishing to sell a medical practice, with the lease of the house where it was carried on, placed it on the books of a medical agent. This led to negotiations with the defendant. The premiums asked for the practice and for the lease were stated in a letter from the agent to the defendant, but no time for completing the purchase was mentioned. The defendant replied in a letter to the agent accepting the terms offered, and adding that he should be ready to pay the deposit money "on receipt of corrected agreement," and at the same time he wrote to the plaintiff personally, also accepting the terms offered, and adding, "I shall trust to you to give me the best introduction you can during three months and afterwards, if necessary." The plaintiff replied, thanking the defendant for acceding to his terms, and saying that "it would be his aim as well as his duty to give him an effectual introduction to his patients." A formal agreement was drawn up, but never signed, and after some further correspondence the defendant refused to complete the purchase:—Held, that inasmuch as the time for the commencement of the purchase was left uncertain, and the stipulation as to the three months' introduction was not agreed to, and as the parties contemplated a formal agreement, there was no binding contract between the parties, and the action was dismissed. May v. Thomson, 20 L. R., Ch. D., 705; 51 L. J., Ch., 917; 47 L. T. 295.

3. A vendor and purchaser had agreed by parol upon the sale of a house at a specified price. The purchaser, by arrangement, wrote a letter to the vendor confirming his offer, repeating the terms, and requesting a reply. The vendor's solicitor replied, stating that he was instructed to carry out the sale of the house according to the purchaser's letter, but adding, "There are some details to be embodied in a contract of sale which I will prepare and forward for your approval and signature":—Held, that the latter words as to details to be embodied, qualified the otherwise unconditional acceptance of the offer in the purchaser's letter, and that there was not a sufficient memorandum in writing within the 4th section of the Statute of Frauds. Ball v. Bridges, 30 L. T. 430; 22 W. R. 552.

4. In reply to a telegram from an intending purchaser, offering 1,200l. as the purchase-money of lands, with respect to which negotiations for a sale had been previously pending, the vendor telegraphed: "Accept your offer of 1,200l., subject to letter, and agreement to be sent to your solicitor." A draft contract of sale was subsequently furnished to the purchaser's solicitor; but, owing to differences as to the details, such as the commencement of the title, registry searches, etc., the treaty was broken off by the vendor:—Held, that the vendor's acceptance by telegram, being expressly made subject to a further agreement to be entered into between the parties, did not amount to a concluded contract, specific performance of which the intending purchaser was entitled to enforce. Brien v. Swainson, 1 L. R., Ir., 135.

5. Where the parties have come to a final agreement, and one of the terms is that such agreement shall be embodied in a formal contract, the agreement may be enforced, even though such formal contract has not been executed. Several persons interested in a particular piece of land, authorised, by agreement among themselves, one of their number, W., to dispose of it. The land was divided into lots, and a plan of the lots made, and certain conditions, on which the land might be let or sold, were printed on the plan. M., an intending purchaser, made inquiries of W. as to the sale of certain lots. W. expressly informed him that he must purchase subject to the conditions stated on the plan. One of these conditions required that a purchaser should execute a contract embodying the conditions. M. offered to purchase these lots at a price which he named. W. promised to lay his offer before "the proprietors" (without naming or describing them), and very shortly afterwards wrote to M. that he had done so, and (stating the conditions) that the proprietors had accepted his offer; adding, that in reducing the price they had taken into consideration his intention of soon building on the land, an intention which of course they wished to encourage. W. added that he had instructed the solicitors to forward to M. the agreement for purchase. There was, in fact, nothing in the conditions which bound a purchaser to build, though there were provisions which assumed that he might do so, and which, in such a case, regulated the mode of proceeding. M. wrote back, in answer, that he could not be bound to build at any given time, or at all; that the subject had better be reconsidered, unless W. was prepared to leave him to do as he might think best. W. replied that the acceptance of the offer was without condition, and that M. was free to do what he might think best. M. afterwards declined to complete the purchase:—Held, that what had taken place by the correspondence constituted a complete contract between the parties; that under such circumstances the execution of a formal deed was not necessary; that the reference to it in W.'s letter did not suspend or any way affect the contract; and that M. was bound specifically to perform his contract of purchase. Rositer v. Miller, 3 L. R., App. Cas., 1124; 48 L. J., Ch., 10; 39 L. T. 173; 26 W. R. 865. Reversing 5 L. R., Ch. D., 648; 37 L. T. 14; 25 W. R. 890; 46 L. J., Ch., 737. Affirming 46 L. J., Ch., 228; 36 L. T., N. S., 304; 25 W. R. 890.

1. By a written agreement the defendant agreed with the plaintiff to take a lease of a house for a certain term at a certain rent, "subject to the preparation and approval of a formal contract." No other contract was ever entered into between the parties:—Held, that there was no final agreement of which specific performance could be enforced against the defendant. Winn v. Bull, 7 L. R., Ch. D., 29; 47 L. J., Ch., 139; 26 W. R. 230.

II. INTERCONNECTED DOCUMENTS.

2. An agreement having been made and reduced into writing, but not signed, and letters having passed between the parties referring to the agreement in which the defendant had said, "his word should be as good as any security he could give," this takes it out of the Statute of Frauds, and he shall be compelled to perform the agreement. Tunney v. Crowther, 3 Bro. C. C. 318. See this case, id. 161.

3. A letter to a solicitor, with directions for preparing the conveyance of a purchase described generally as the land bought of A., not specifying the term, is not sufficient evidence of a contract within the Statute of Frauds. Rose v. Cunningham, 11 Ves. 550.

4. Whether letters referring to other letters which have been suppressed, but not containing in themselves certain terms of agreement, can be made the foundation of a specific performance, quære. Collet v. Butler, 8 Swan. 402.

5. A written notice, signed, referring to a written proposal not signed, and made several years before, may be so connected with it as to render the two documents a contract within the Statute of Frauds sufficiently signed. Lewry v. Dufferin, 1 Ir. Eq. R. 281.

6. A., by public advertisement, offers land to be let for three lives, or thirty-one years; and proposals having been made by bond and accepted, an agreement is executed between B. and the agent of A., authorised to contract for him, for a lease of the lands, in which agreement the term for which the lease is to be made is not mentioned. A. is not bound to perform this contract, there being no evidence in writing of the term to be demised. There being no reference in the agreement to the advertisement, parol evidence cannot be received to connect the one with the other, so as to ascertain the term. Clinan v. Cooke, 1 Sch. & Lef. 22.

If one written instrument refers to another written instrument, parol evidence may be admitted to show what was the thing so referred to. Id. 33.

7. A note or memorandum in writing, made subsequently to, but evidencing a previous parol contract, is sufficient, within s. 4 of the Statute of Frauds, 29 Car. 2, c. 3. Bradford v. Roulston, 8 Ir. Ch. R. 468.

8. When a memorandum in writing, signed by the parties to be charged, refers to another document in writing, it may be proved by parol evidence that a certain document is the one referred to. Morris v. Wilson, 6 Jur., N. S., 168.

When an agent contracts it may be proved by parol evidence who is his principal. Id.

9. A paper was signed by a duly authorised agent; it contained an agreement to do a certain thing, but not any explanation of the necessary details; but it referred to another paper, which did contain them:—Held, that the two might be connected together, by parol evidence, so as to constitute an agreement sufficient within the Statute of Frauds. Ridgway v. Wharton, 6 H. L. Ca. 238; 27 L. J., Ch., 46; 5 W. R. 804; 2 Eq. Rep. 839. And see S. C. 5 De G. M. & G. 677.

10. E. P. W. made a parol agreement to sell her share in certain leasehold property to J. S. at the price of 200l. The only evidence in writing of the terms of the contract consisted of two documents; a receipt as follows, "September 22nd, 1882.—Received of J. S., one pound of my share in the B. property, the sum of 200l.—(Signed) E. P. W.," and a letter dated the 19th March, 1883, the material part being: "Mr. Studds—Sir, If the balance of 199l. on account of the purchase of my share of the property be not paid on or before the 22nd inst., I shall consider the agreement (made September 22nd, 1882) not any longer binding":—Held, first, that the documents being connected constituted a sufficient note or memorandum in writing of the contract; and, secondly, assuming that there was no reference in one document to connect it with the other, the terms contained in the parol contract being the same as the terms contained in the two documents, there was a sufficient note or memorandum in writing to satisfy the Statute of Frauds. Studds v. Watson, 33 W. R. 118.

11. The memorandum or note of an agreement required by the 4th section of the Statute of Frauds must be a memorandum of an agreement complete at the time the memorandum is made. Munday v. Asprey, 13 L. R., Ch. D., 855; 49 L. J., Ch., 216; 28 W. R. 347.

A letter from an alleged purchaser inclosing and referring to a draft conveyance in which it was recited that he had agreed to purchase land:—Held, not to be a memorandum of a completed agreement. Id.

12. A vendor and a purchaser being in treaty for the sale and purchase of an estate, the vendor wrote to his solicitor, stating that the purchaser had agreed to purchase his estate for 60,000l., and requested him to settle an agreement on that basis for them to sign, adding that he had given to the purchaser a copy of this letter, not signed, as a memorandum. The purchaser subsequently wrote to the vendor's solicitor, inquiring when he would forward to him the draft of the agreement relative to the purchase he had concluded with the vendor for his estate in that county. Prior to the execution of the conveyances the purchaser made his will, by which he devised the subject-matter of the treaty to trustees upon certain trusts:—Held, that, at the date of his will, the purchaser had a devisable interest in the estate. Morgan v. Holford, 1 Sm. & G. 101; 17 Jur. 225.

A letter signed by the purchaser, not containing the terms of the contract, but, on a fair view of the evidence, referring (though not in terms) to a memorandum containing them:—Held, sufficient within the Statute of Frauds. Id.

Semble, a purchaser who has made, but not signed, a contract, the terms of which are proved, and which is signed by the vendor, has a devisable interest in the subject-matter. Id.

1. The plaintiff claimed specific performance of a contract to purchase a house and premises sold by auction. After the sale the auctioneer signed the following memorandum at the foot of the conditions: "The property duly sold to A. Shardlow, butcher, Pinxton, and deposit paid at close of sale," and he also signed this receipt: "Pinxton, March 29th, 1880. Received of A. Shardlow, the sum of 21*l.* as deposit on property purchased at 420*l.* at Sun Inn, Pinxton, on the above date. Mr. G. Cotterell, owner." The Statute of Frauds was set up in defence. The conditions contained no description of the property sold, but posters had been put up describing the property to be sold on the 29th March, at the Sun Inn:—Held, that the word "purchased" was enough to connect the receipt with the conditions of sale, though not with the poster. That the description in the receipt and conditions was sufficient to satisfy the Statute of Frauds. Shardlow v. Cotterell, 30 W. R. 143; 20 L. R., Ch. D., 99; 51 L. J., Ch., 353; 45 L. T. 572. Reversing 18 L. R., Ch. D., 280; 50 L. J., Ch., 613 44 L. T. 549; 29 W. R. 737.

2. Where Court has to find a contract in a correspondence, and not in one particular note or memorandum formally signed, the whole of that which has passed between the parties must be taken into consideration. Hussey v. Horne-Payne, 4 L. R., App. Cas., 311; 48 L. J., Ch., 846; 27 W. R. 585; 45 L. T. 1.

III. VAGUENESS AND UNCERTAINTY.

3. Specific performance decreed of an agreement, though an uncertain one. Allen v. Harding, 2 Eq. Abr. 17.

4. A., on the marriage of his daughter to B., covenants that B. shall have his land called C. for 1,500*l.* less than any other, and afterwards devises the premises to his grandson for life, with remainder over, and dies. The Court refused specific performance by reason of uncertainty and want of mutuality of it. Bromley v. Jefferies, 2 Vern. 415; Pre. Ch. 138.

5. Equity will not decree a specific execution upon a contract, the terms of which are uncertain as to its extent, nor will equity decree specific execution against a party not lawfully competent to execute the contract. Harnett v. Yielding, 2 Sch. & Lef. 549.

6. If there be uncertainty as to the terms of an agreement, it cannot be carried into execution, even though reduced to writing. Lindsey v. Lynch, 2 Sch. & Lef. 7.

7. Semble, that where a date has not been specified in the agreement, although intended to be so, as that at which an important obligation is to arise, this would of itself be, on the ground of uncertainty, an adequate reason for not enforcing the contract. Fitzpatrick v. Nolan, 1 Ir. Ch. R. 671.

8. An agreement to give so much of a thing as may be necessary for a specified purpose confers a right of a nature known to the law, and is not open to the objection of uncertainty. Under an agreement to give so much of a specified piece of land as may be necessary for a specified purpose, when the quantity has been determined the right of selecting the position of the piece to be given belongs to the promisee. If the promisor, however, had any objection to the promisee's selection, and made a reasonable offer in lieu thereof, the Court might listen to it. But it is not reasonable to wish to interpose a road between a burial ground and the church to which it is to belong. Rumble v. Heygate, 18 W. R. 749.

9. When part of an agreement is to do certain acts upon certain contingencies, equity will not decree a specific performance. Gervais v. Edwards, 2 Dr. & War. 80; 1 Con. & L. 242; 4 Ir. Eq. R. 555.

Decreeing the parties to bind themselves by covenant to do those acts when the contingencies happened, would be decreeing a specific performance, not of the agreement in specie, but of an agreement to do those acts. Id.

Courts of equity will not act in decreeing specific performance unless they can perform the very thing in the terms specifically agreed upon. Id.

10. Land was sold by the mortgagees to B., consisting of a circular plot, surrounded by a ring called the Park Drive. It was stipulated that, if used for building, villas of a certain size were to be built; that the ground between the villas and the Park Drive should be laid out in lawn or pleasure grounds down to the Park Drive; that a footpath of the width of fifteen feet should be laid out round the whole of the northern, southern, and western boundaries of the said land. The Park Drive round the circular piece belonged to B.; the part outside had originally been his, but, with a small exception, had been sold by him:—Held, that the condition about the footpath was too vague to be enforced, and that the purchaser was not bound to make it, and could not be restrained from using the land in any way inconsistent with making it. Taylor v. Gilbertson, 2 Drew. 391.

11. In a contract for sale, lands were described as partly freehold and partly leasehold. The title-deeds did not clearly define the boundaries and extent of the two properties; but the uncertainty did not arise from an instrument incapable of legal construction in that respect:—Held, that such an uncertainty was not an objection to a decree for specific performance. Monro v. Taylor, 3 Macn. & G. 713; 8 Hare 51; 21 L. J., N. S., Ch., 525.

12. A. agreed to sell to B. a house and land, with a clause that in the event of there being any coals or iron stone under the land, a royalty of so much per ton was to be paid thereon; and that any mines required to be left by a certain railway company were to be paid for the same as if gotten, out of the money received for them from the railway company. The Court refused to enforce specific performance of this agreement. Wilkinson v. Wootton, 3 Drew. 210.

13. An agreement for the sale of lands, which shows on the face of it that the parties are not agreed as to the terms of the contract between them, and as to the commencement of the title, does not express the intention of the parties with such certainty that a court of equity will enforce performance of it. Rummens v. Robins, 11 Jur., N. S., 631; 13 W. R. 979; 3 De G. J. & S. 88.

The plaintiff entered into an oral agreement with the defendants for the purchase of a piece of land, and it was agreed that the latter's solicitors should send him a letter for the purpose of reducing the terms into writing. They accordingly wrote, specifying price and other terms, and added—"There will be the usual clauses in a contract, and some limitations as to the length of title to be shown, and other minor details"—Held, that there was such great uncertainty introduced into the contract by this passage as to render it in effect no agreement at all, and a demurrer to a bill by the purchaser for specific performance was allowed, and leave to amend refused. S. C. 14 L. T., N. S., 717.

Subsequently to this letter the defendants' solicitors sent to the plaintiffs' agent a draft contract, which was not accepted nor in any manner acknowledged by the plaintiff for about ten weeks, when, in answer to the defendant's intimation that they treated the contract as entirely off, the plaintiff replied, that he insisted on the purchase being completed.—Held, that in view of this delay, the defendants were fully entitled to revoke the contract. Id.

1. After negotiations for the purchase of tithes, in which the terms were discussed, but not finally settled, the vendor wrote to his solicitor a letter, which contained the following passage:—"Previously to paying the amount" (then followed the illegible word) "for tithes, glebe, etc., it would be advisable to have information as to title," etc.—Held, that this letter did not amount to a note or memorandum in writing of a contract for the sale of lands, within the Statute of Frauds. Savile v. Kinnaird, 11 Jur., N. S., 195.

2. A. agreed to sell an estate to B. for 3,000*l.*, "and the further sum of 20*l.* per cent. on any sum the property might realise above that sum at the sale by auction advertised to take place" the next day. B. withdrew the estate from the sale.—Held, that the contract was sufficiently certain, and might be enforced. Langstaff v. Nicholson, 25 Beav. 160.

3. An agreement for the purchase of a lease, which does not mention the length of the term granted by the lease, is void for uncertainty and cannot be enforced. Southern v. Harriman, 15 W. R. 487.

4. Where an agreement is in its terms so uncertain as to raise a doubt as to its true effect, whether to be considered as a purchase of premises or a lease, a demurrer will lie to a bill for a specific performance of it. Dolling v. Evans, 15 L. T., N. S., 604.

E., holding a lease of four cottages, agreed to underlease them to D. for the whole term, less a reversion of a few days, and signed the following receipt: "Received of D. the sum of 10*l.* as part purchase-money of 390*l.* of four cottages" (describing them), "the lease and counterpart to be paid for by Mr. D."—Held, that the receipt was not a sufficient memorandum to satisfy the Statute of Frauds. S. C. 36 L. J., Ch., 474.

5. Specific performance of an agreement between four persons, regulating the right to all their future inventions, refused, on the following grounds: first, that it was too vague and uncertain as to its duration; secondly, that it involved a contract for personal services of an uncertain duration; thirdly, the want of mutuality in regard to one of the stipulations; and, fourthly, that the position of the parties had been materially varied by the assignment by one, to a stranger, of all his interest under the agreement. Firth v. Ridley, 33 Beav. 516.

6. S., a corn merchant carrying on business in the immediate vicinity of the defendants' line of railway, signed an agreement, whereby, in consideration of receiving from the defendants yearly, during so long as he should carry on business at his then establishment, a free pass over their line, he promised, so long as the scale of charges of the defendants and of a certain canal company bore the same proportion to each other which they then did, to have his corn carried by the defendants in preference to the said canal company. Subsequently, at the request of the defendants, he made a money payment, by way of nominal consideration, for the said pass, which the defendants after the lapse of some years ultimately refused to renew. Upon his bill for specific performance of the said agreement (which had never been executed by or on behalf of the said railway company)—Held, that the agreement was unilateral in its nature and uncertain in its terms, and could not be specifically enforced. A general demurrer for want of equity accordingly allowed. Sturge v. Midland Railway Co., 6 W. R. 233; 4 Jur., N. S., 273.

7. The plaintiffs alleged that a concession to take telegraph wires across the Azore Islands, which was granted to W. by the Portuguese government in 1857, was sold by him to them in the same year; but that no time for the completion of the agreement was ever fixed, and it was verbally agreed that the consideration for the same should not be paid until the ratification of the concession by the Portuguese government should have been obtained. This the plaintiffs had not succeeded in obtaining. They also alleged that, in July 1860, an intending company obtained a concession from the French government to carry telegraph wires across French territory between Spain, Portugal, and France and America; and that, after negotiation in December 1864, it was agreed between the plaintiff and the company, "that upon the concession being perfected by the Portuguese government," the plaintiff should sell to the intending company all his right and title to the Portuguese concession for 80,000*l.*, to be paid as therein mentioned; and both parties were to use their best endeavours, jointly and severally, to perfect the concession. The plaintiffs alleged that the intending company was attempting to question the validity of their title, and that W., and also the intending company, were entering into an agreement with the Portuguese government for a new concession, and prayed for an injunction to restrain them from proceeding with any application to the Portuguese government, and also that the agreement of 1857 might be performed under the direction of the Court, and for other relief. Demurrer allowed, on the ground of vagueness in the terms of the agreements of 1857 and 1864. European and American Submarine Telegraph Co. v. Elliot, 12 L. T., N. S., 416.

1. Contract for the sale of an estate, vendor reserving "the necessary land for making a railway" through the estate to P. In a suit by the purchaser for specific performance:—Held, that the reservation was void for uncertainty and that the contract could not be enforced. Pearce v. Watts, 20 L. R., Eq., 492; 44 L. J., Ch., 492; 23 W. R. 771.

Held, also, that though the defence was raised by answer and not by demurrer, the bill must be dismissed with costs. Id.

2. Litigation of a complicated character was carried on both in this country and in Peru, between the plaintiff and the defendant, and also two sons of the plaintiff, who had acted as his agents. An agreement was afterwards signed in England between the plaintiff and the defendant, whereby it was agreed that a patent, standing in the name of the plaintiff, but the right to which was claimed by the defendant, should be held for their mutual benefit, the defendant to pay 100% towards the expenses of taking out the patent. The plaintiff agreed to "raise" all proceedings here and in Peru by the plaintiff and his sons, each party paying his own costs, "it being agreed that all claims between the defendant and the plaintiff and his sons are settled up to this date; the eight pianofortes in litigation in Peru to be delivered up by the defendant to the plaintiff, or his representatives." The differences continuing, the defendant was suing the plaintiff at law. The plaintiff filed a bill for specific performance of the agreement. By a letter of the plaintiff's solicitor, it appeared that the plaintiff intended that a release should be executed by the defendant and himself, and also by his sons. The defendant demurred:—Held, that the agreement was such an one as the Court would decree the performance of; and that it was not bad on any of the grounds urged, viz., neither for uncertainty, nor for want of mutuality, nor for that the Court could not enforce some of the stipulations, nor for that adequate remedy and compensation could be had at law. Marsh v. Milligan, 3 Jur., N. S., 979.

3. Specific performance refused from ambiguity of contract. Purchaser, having insisted on one construction of contract, not permitted to compel vendor to convey upon the terms that vendor originally offered. Clowes v. Higginson, 1 Ves. & B. 524.

4. A. contracts with B. to sell a manor described as "The Manor of Stoke Fleming, an extensive parish with the right of free warren, etc., a fine range of sporting over about 3,000 acres, embracing nearly the whole parish of Stoke Fleming, and all the lord's rights in the soil and timber of the wastes, minerals, etc." By one of the conditions of sale, the purchaser was precluded from requiring the vendor to define the boundaries of the manor. At the date of the contract for sale the manor was supposed to be co-extensive with the parish. B., the purchaser, alleging that the purchase only included a few strips of waste land and a disputed right of sporting over other lands, proposed to cancel the sale. A. refused to accede to that course, and thereupon B. pressed for further information respecting A.'s actual rights in the manor. A., in endeavouring to satisfy the queries of B., discovered that the manor extended beyond the limits of the parish and included valuable pieces of land situate without the parish; he then insisted that the conveyance should be confined to the manorial rights within the parish, which proposal B. would not agree to; and upon a bill filed by B. for specific performance of the contract, as including the whole manor:—Held, that it was not a contract for the sale and purchase of a property of uncertain quantity and value, but that the terms of the contract were ambiguous; and both parties at the date of the contract being in error as to what was included therein, the Court would not compel the performance of it in the manner contended for by B. so as to include property not intended to be sold by the vendor. Bazendale v. Seale, 24 L. J., Ch., 385; 1 Jur., N. S., 581.

5. The plaintiff wishing to sell a medical practice, with the lease of the house where it was carried on, placed it on the books of a medical agent. This led to negotiations with the defendant. The premiums asked for the practice and for the lease were stated in a letter from the agent to the defendant, but no time for completing the purchase was mentioned. The defendant replied in a letter to the agent accepting the terms offered, and adding that he should be ready to pay the deposit money on receipt of corrected agreement, and at the same time he wrote to the plaintiff personally, also accepting the terms offered, and adding, "I shall trust to you to give me the best introduction you can during three months and afterwards, if necessary." The plaintiff replied, thanking the defendant for acceding to his terms, and saying that "it would be his aim as well as his duty to give him an effectual introduction to his patients." A formal agreement was drawn up, but never signed, and after some further correspondence the defendant refused to complete the purchase:—Held, that inasmuch as the time for the commencement of the purchase was left uncertain, and the stipulation as to the three months' introduction was not agreed to, and as the parties contemplated a formal agreement, there was no binding contract between the parties, and the action was dismissed. May v. Thomson, 20 L. R., Ch. D., 705; 51 L. J., Ch., 117; 47 L. T. 295.

1. Interests in Land. What are.

1. Agreement for an abatement of rent of lands is within the Statute of Frauds. O'Connor v. Spaight, 1 Sch. & Lef. 306.

2. Advowsons are rents within Statute of Frauds, but an annuity in fee not a personal inheritance. Stafford (Earl) v. Buckley, 2 Ves. 177.

3. The benefit of the vendor's lien for purchase money unpaid may be assigned by parol to a third party, semble. Dryden v. Frost, 3 Myl. & C. 670; 1 L. J., N. S., Ch., 235; 2 Jur. 1030. Reversing on this point S. C. 1 Jur. 580.

4. A partnership agreement between A. and B. that they shall be jointly interested in a speculation for buying, improving for sale, and selling lands, may be proved without being evidenced by any writing signed by, or by the authority of, the party to be charged therewith, within the Statute of Frauds, and such an agreement being proved, A. or B. may establish his interest in land, the subject of the partnership, without such interest being evidenced by any such writing. Dale v. Hamilton, 5 Hare 369; 16 L. J., N. S., Ch., 126; 11 Jur. 163. And see S. C. on appeal, 2 Ph. 266; 16 L. J., N. S., Ch., 397; 11 Jur. 574.

An agreement between B. and C. was communicated by one of the parties to A. after applications in writing from A., for the signature of the other parties to a memorandum expressing his interest as a partner in the transaction relating to the land, the subject of the agreement, and the Court held that the agreement so communicated must be taken, not as an original proposal, but as an acknowledgment of a pre-existing right in A., and that A. might avail himself of the acknowledgment, notwithstanding the agreement between B. and C. was res inter alios acta, and notwithstanding A. objected to some of the terms in that agreement, as not truly expressing his partnership contract. Ib.

5. In the course of the proceeding before an arbitrator, the parties agreed by parol that the arbitrator shall determine as to a lease to be granted. Such an agreement is within the Statute of Frauds, and the award having directed a lease to be made, cannot be enforced. Walters v. Morgan, 2 Cox 369.

6. Bill to carry into execution on a parol agreement between solicitors, that there should be a decree of foreclosure, that the estate should be sold, the mortgagee paid her principal and interest, and the remainder to the mortgagor, dismissed at the Rolls as within the Statute of Frauds. On appeal, evidence of the agreement read de bene esse, but the decree affirmed. Cow v. Peele, 2 Bro. C. C. 334.

7. If two neighbours agree that one should take a lease of houses for the benefit of both, the other shall have the benefit, though the agreement is not in writing; and defendant's plea of the Statute of Frauds was ordered to stand for an answer with liberty to except, and the benefit of it saved to the hearing. Atkins v. Rowe, Mos. 39.

8. An agreement to charge hereditaments with the value of property which has been lost through the wrongful act of a third person must be in writing, as being within the 4th section of the Statute of Frauds; but it may be taken out of the statute by a deposit of title-deeds. Whitmore v. Farley, 43 L. T. 192; 28 W. R. 908.

9. A. and B. being severally in treaty for a purchase of a house and land, agree by parol that A. shall desist, and that B. shall purchase, and let A. have part of the ground which he wanted at a reasonable price. B. purchases, and refuses to perform the agreement. This being a parol agreement, is within the provision of the Statute of Frauds. Lamas v. Bayly, 2 Vern. 627.

10. A customer, in July, borrowed 200*l.* from his bankers upon the terms of a verbal agreement that the loan should be repaid out of the rent of a farm which would become due to him at Michaelmas. The money was advanced by the bankers, and the customer then gave them a letter addressed by him to the tenant of the farm, by which he authorised and requested the tenant, when his Michaelmas rent became due, to pay 200*l.* to the bankers. The letter contained no reference to the loan, and did not show that any consideration had been given for the authority. The bankers sent the letter to the tenant. The customer was adjudicated a bankrupt upon an Act of Bankruptcy committed in August:—Held, that as the rent was an interest in land, the agreement was one of which, by virtue of s. 4 of the Statute of Frauds, could not be proved by parol evidence, and that therefore the letter could alone be looked at. And that the letter amounted only to a revocable authority to pay the rent to the bankers, and that it was revoked by the bankruptcy. Exp. Hall, Re Whitting, 10 L. R., Ch. D., 615; 48 L. J., Bky., 79; 27 W. R. 315; 40 L. T. 179.

11. An agreement to become partners in a colliery which was to be demised upon royalties, and the royalties to be divided in certain proportions, is an interest in land within the Statute of Frauds, 29 Car. 2, c. 3, and must be in writing, signed by the parties. Cuddick v. Skidmore, 3 Jur., N. S., 1185.

Receipts signed by the party sought to be charged, which partly disclosed the nature of the agreement:—Held, not sufficient to take the case out of the statute. Ib.

2. Signature. What is.

12. A. alters the draft with his own hand; this is not a signing to take it out of the Statute of Frauds, though the seller afterwards executes a conveyance, and being in Middlesex it is caused to be registered. Hawkins v. Holmes, 1 P. W. 770.

1. Contract for land within 4th section of Statute of Frauds, by letter signed by vendor combined with his proposal by note to third person specifying price. Western v. Russell, 3 Ves. & B. 187.

2. If the defendant himself writes the agreement for the purchase of a leasehold house, and states his own name in the third person as "Mr. A. B. has agreed," this is a good contract within the Statute of Frauds, though he does not otherwise sign the agreement. Proper v. Parker, 1 Russ. & M. 625.

3. J. R. Bridges, having five freehold houses, but no other property, in Cable Street, Liverpool, agreed to sell them to J. Bleakley for 248*l.*, and thereupon drew up the following memorandum in his own handwriting:—"July 26th, 1839. John Bleakley agreed with J. R. Bridges to take the property in Cable Street for the net sum of 248*l.* 10*s.*."—Held, that the agreement was sufficiently signed by the vendor. Bleakley v. Smith, 18 Sim. 150.

4. Agreement to purchase established upon a correspondence referring to the terms of such agreement. Parol evidence is admissible to explain the subject-matter of an agreement, although not to vary the terms. Provided the name be inserted in an instrument in such a manner as to have the effect of authenticating it, the requisition of the act with respect to signature is complied with, and it does not matter in what part of the instrument the name is found. Ogilvie v. Foljambe, 3 Meriv. 53. And see Child v. Comber, 3 Swan. 423. n.

5. The mere circumstance of the name of the party being written by himself in the body of a memorandum of agreement for a lease will not constitute a signature within the meaning of the Statute of Frauds. Stokes v. Moore, 1 Cox 219.

6. The mere circumstance of the name of a party being written by himself in the body of a memorandum of agreement will not of itself constitute a signature. It must be inserted in such a manner as to govern, or to have the effect of authenticating, the whole instrument. Caton v. Caton, 36 L. J., Ch., 886; 2 L. R., H. L., 127.

Words of reference have not the effect of bringing up a signature, and giving it a signification and effect different from that which the signature has in the original place where it is found. Id.

Where, therefore, the name of the party against whom specific performance was sought to be enforced appeared in different parts of the paper, but only in such a way that, in each case, it merely referred to the particular part where it was found, and that part was in the form of reference or description, and not of promise or undertaking:—Held, that the paper did not constitute a contract signed within the provisions of the Statute of Frauds. Id.

7. Quære, whether the words "approved by me, J. S.," affixed to certain memoranda, by way of approval of an arrangement in which the party is interested, is a signing within the Statute of Frauds. Parker v. Smith, 1 Colly. 608.

8. Whether a note written in the third person, "Mr. T. proposes," etc. (making an offer to purchase), being accepted, amounts to a contract in writing signed within the Statute of Frauds, quære. Morison v. Turnour, 18 Ves. 175.

9. A letter containing proposed terms of a contract between A. B., the sender, and the sendee, written out by the sender, upon paper bearing a printed heading, "Memorandum from A. B.," was held to be a sufficient note in writing to charge A. B. A memorandum of a contract is sufficiently signed within the 4th section of the Statute of Frauds if it contains the terms of the contract and the name of the party charged, and is given by him to the other party under circumstances which show a recognition of the name as it stands for his own. Tourret v. Cripps, 48 L. J., Ch., 567; 27 W. R. 706.

10. An affidavit made in Chancery is a sufficient writing within the statute. Barkworth v. Young, 4 Drew. 1; 2 Jur., N. S., 34; 26 L. J., Ch., 153; 5 W. R. 156.

11. Where there is a complete agreement in writing, and a person who is a party and knows the contents subscribes as a witness only, he is bound by it, for it is a signing within the Statute of Frauds. Welford v. Beasley, 3 Atk. 503.

12. On the treaty for the under-lease of a house, the agent for plaintiff tendered an unconditional agreement to be signed, to which the defendant attached his name and initials in pencil, subject to the condition of there being nothing unusual in the covenants of the original lease. The defendant subsequently discovered that there was a nuisance which would prevent his occupation of the house, but which was unknown to the plaintiff, and he therefore abandoned the treaty:—Held, that under these circumstances the Court would try the case strictly between the parties, and in the absence of actual evidence that the agent had direct or implied authority to accede to the pencil additions, would not bind the plaintiff, and that until the latter had assented to the alterations, the agreement was only a proposal and might be abandoned by the defendant. The bill was dismissed with costs. Lucas v. James, 7 Hare 410; 18 L. J., N. S., Ch., 329; 13 Jur. 912.

13. A letter from a mother to her son beginning "My dear Robert," and concluding "Your affectionate mother," is not signed so as to constitute a binding agreement on the part of the mother within the intent of the Statute of Frauds. It is not enough to identify; there must be a signing, i.e., either an actual signature of the name, or something intended by the writer to be equivalent to a signature, as a mark by a marksman, etc. Selby v. Selby, 3 Meriv. 2.

Illiterate Person making Mark. 14. An agreement annexed to conditions of sale by auction, to which D. (an illiterate person) had put his mark, stating that D. had purchased from S., the vendor, for the sum of 250*l.*, the premises mentioned in the annexed particulars, subject to the conditions of sale, is a good memorandum in writing within the 4th section of the Statute of Frauds. Dyas v. Stafford, 7 L. R., Ir., 690.

By Agents.] See IV. II. post.

By Auctioneers.] See III. IV. post.

3. Signature by One Party only.

1. A. sold houses to B., and a note was made by A. of the agreement, but it was only signed by B. Decreed, that both parties were bound. Hutton v. Gray, 2 Ch. Ca. 164.

2. Agreement in writing for sale of estate, binding, though signed only by vendor, and followed up by direction to attorney to prepare proper agreement for both parties to sign. Fowler v. Freeman, 9 Ves. 351.

3. Semble, the signature of the party to be bound is sufficient to satisfy the Statute of Frauds so as to enable the Court to enforce specific performance. Field v. Boland, 1 Dr. & Wal. 37.

4. Agreements signed by one party only, enforced against the other. Hall v. Butler, 1 Eq. Abr. 20.

5. There is no provision in the Statute of Frauds to prevent the specific execution of an agreement signed only by one of the parties. Ormond v. Anderson, 2 Ball & B. 370.

6. An agreement signed by one party only is sufficient to charge him within Statute of Frauds. Seton v. Slade, 7 Ves. 265.

7. An agreement may be enforced in equity, although not binding on both parties at the time of its being signed; it is sufficient if signed only by one party and accepted and acted on by the other. Dowell v. Den, 1 Y. & Coll. C. C. 344; 12 L. J., N. S., Ch., 158; 7 Jur. 117.

8. Specific performance of a contract, not signed by the party enforcing it. Backhouse v. Mohun, 3 Swan. 434.

9. The written undertaking of one party will be enforced, although the other party is not mutually bound by writing. Palmer v. Scott, 1 Russ. & M. 391; Tam. 488; 8 L. J., Ch., 127.

10. Quære, whether, where a contract signed by one party only, he is not at liberty to recede from it till the other party has done some act to bind himself. Martin v. Mitchell, 2 Jac. & Walk. 428.

Semble, a contract signed by one party only, may be enforced by the other, as the filing a bill makes it binding on that party. Id. 426.

Semble, under contract by husband and wife for sale of wife's estate, Court will not decree him to procure her to join. Id. 425.

11. Contract for the purchase of tithes not signed by the party chargeable:—Held, under the circumstances, to have been taken out of the Statute of Frauds. Blackford v. Kirkpatrick, 6 Beav. 232; 12 L. J., N. S., Ch., 108.

4. Name or Description of Parties. Sufficiency

12. During parol negotiations for the purchase of an estate, the vendor wrote to the purchaser's solicitor, proposing that the solicitor's "client" should advance a sum to pay off a mortgage on the property. After further parol negotiations as to the terms, they were agreed upon by parol, and the vendor signed and handed to the purchaser a written statement of the particulars of the property and of the price. On the following day he signed and addressed to the purchaser a letter containing the following passages: "I am about to relet the land at P. for another year, concluding you will agree to it. . . . The Lady-day rents will be mine, and the Michaelmas yours":—Held, that signed statement of particulars was not a sufficient memorandum in writing, the purchaser's name not being mentioned in it, and that the defect was not supplied by the correspondence. Skelton v. Cole, 1 De G. & J. 587.

13. A receipt given by the auctioneer's clerk to D. three days after the action, and signed by the clerk, acknowledging payment of part of the purchase-money for "Lot 4, Mr. John Stafford's property," is not such a memorandum in writing as would bind the vendor within s. 4 of the statute:—Semble, that the name of the auctioneer printed on the back of the particulars and conditions of sale is sufficient to bind the vendor. Dyas v. Stafford, 7 L. R., Ir., 590.

14. Where a memorandum of agreement did not contain the name of the vendor, but his name was referred to in a subsequent letter written by the purchaser:—Held, that this was a sufficient reference within the Statute of Frauds. Warner v. Willington, 3 Drew. 523; 2 Jur., N. S., 433; 25 L. J., Ch., 662.

15. Conditions of sale stated that the vendors were trustees, but did not name or otherwise describe them. The contract of sale was signed by the purchaser's agent, and confirmed by the auctioneers, as agents for the vendors. An abstract was delivered to the purchaser, entitled with the names of the vendors, and the purchaser's requisitions were headed with the vendor's name. On an objection that the vendors were not named in the particulars or conditions of sale, or in the contract signed on behalf of the purchaser by his agent:—Held, that the abstract might be referred to for the purpose of curing the defect in the contract. Bourdillon v. Collins, 19 W. R. 556; 24 L. T., N. S., 344.

16. In order to satisfy the requirements of the Statute of Frauds, the note or memorandum of an agreement for the sale of real estate must contain either the names of the contracting parties or such a description of them that there cannot be any fair dispute as to their identity. Potter v. Duffield, 18 L. R., Eq., 4; 43 L. J., Ch., 472; 22 W. R. 585.

The term "vendor" is not of itself a sufficient description of one of the contracting parties. Id.

Real estate was put up for sale under particulars and conditions of sale which did not disclose the vendor's name, but stated that B. was the auctioneer. The purchaser of one of the lots signed a memorandum acknowledging his purchase; and B. signed at the foot of this memorandum another in these terms, "Confirmed on behalf of the vendor, B.":—Held, that the memorandum did not sufficiently show who the vendor was. Id.

17. On the sale of real estate by auction the particulars stated that the property was put up for sale by "the proprietor." No further description of the vendor was given in the particulars or conditions. The auctioneer signed a memorandum in his own name, by which he agreed that "the vendor on his part should in all respects fulfil the conditions of sale mentioned in the particulars." On a bill for specific performance by the purchaser:—Held, that on the particulars and memorandum there was a sufficient description of the vendor within the 4th section of the Statute of Frauds. Sale v. Lambert, 43 L. J., Ch., 470; 18 L. R., Eq., 1; 22 W. R. 478.

1. An agreement for the sale of real estate did not disclose the name of the vendors, but it appeared therefrom that the vendors were a company in possession of the property offered for sale, and that they had carried on operations thereon:—Held, that the vendors were sufficiently described to satisfy the Statute of Frauds. Commins v. Scott, 20 L. R., Eq., 11; 44 L. J., Ch., 563; 32 L. T., N. S., 420; 23 W. R. 498.

2. The particulars of sale of a leasehold house stated that it was the property of Admiral F., deceased, and that the sale was by direction of his executors, not naming them. A memorandum of the sale, indorsed on the particular, was signed by the auctioneers as agents "for the vendors." Admiral F. was a domiciled Scotchman, and had, by a testamentary instrument in the Scotch form, named seven persons, and the acceptors of them, as executors. Two only accepted office, and confirmation was granted to them subsequently to the contract of sale:—Held, that the contract was valid, and specific performance of it decreed at the suit of the executors. Hood v. Barrington (Lord), 6 L. R., Eq., 218.

3. A contract for the sale of land in which the vendor is not named, but is stated to be "a trustee selling under a trust for sale," is sufficient within the Statute of Frauds. Catling v. King, 5 L. R., Ch. D., 660; 46 L. J., Ch., 384; 25 W. R. 550; 36 L. T., N. S., 526.

4. In conditions of sale the vendor was described as "legal personal representative of L. D." At the date of the contract the vendor was not L. D.'s legal personal representative; there was no person filling that character. But the vendor was the only person in a position to become "legal personal representative," and he subsequently took out letters of administration to L. D.'s estate. The purchaser objected to the title on this ground:—Held, that the objection failed; that the latent ambiguity being raised by parol evidence could be got rid of by parol evidence, and that there was a valid contract. Towle v. Topham, 37 L. T., N. S., 308.

5. Plaintiff was the lessee of vaults in the city of London under a lease granted by the Mayor and Corporation of London and the Mercers' Company. The defendant company entered into a negotiation for the purchase of the lease. The secretary of the company wrote to the house agents acting for the plaintiff a letter in which he said that the directors thereby offered to purchase the vaults for 2,500*l.* cash, and to take over a mortgage for 3,500*l.* on the lease, these terms to include the lease, goodwill, fixtures, etc. The house agents answered as follows: "In reply to your letter of the 7th inst. we are now instructed to accept the offer therein contained, and will forward contract as soon as we obtain it from the solicitor." Differences subsequently arose respecting the time when possession should be given, and eventually the plaintiff brought an action against the defendants claiming damages for breach of contract. Malins, V.-Ch., held that the letters contained a binding contract between the parties:—Held, that no binding contract had been entered into, first, because the name of the vendor had not been disclosed or a sufficient description given so as to satisfy the Statute of Frauds; and, secondly, because the letters mentioned only what was the property to be purchased and the price to be given for it, but left the other necessary terms of the agreement, such as the time when possession was to be given, to be settled by a formal contract to be prepared by a solicitor in the ordinary way. Donnison v. People's Café Co., 45 L. T. 187.

6. An offer in writing to take a lease of a theatre, signed by the intending lessees and attested by the lessor's agent, but not naming the lessor and only addressed to him as "Sir," followed by an acceptance in writing by the agent, addressed to and received by the intending lessees, but likewise not naming the lessor, which letter was not signed by them nor referred to in any other writing, is not an agreement in writing within the Statute of Frauds so as to entitle the lessor to have the same specifically performed. Williams v. Jordan, 6 L. R., Ch. D., 517; 26 W. R. 230; 46 L. J., Ch., 681.

7. An estate was offered for sale in lots shown upon a plan on which various conditions were printed, one of which was that each purchaser would be required to sign a contract embodying the conditions, and providing for the completion of the purchase at the expiration of a period of not more than two months from the date of the contract. M. made a verbal offer to W., the agent of the owners, to purchase certain lots for 1,000*l.* W. informed him that he must purchase subject to the conditions, and promised to lay his offer before the proprietors. Shortly afterwards W. wrote to M. saying that the "proprietors" accepted his offer to purchase the specified lots for 1,000*l.*, subject to the conditions on the plan, and that he had requested the solicitors to forward to M. the agreement for purchase. M. replied by letter that his offer had better be reconsidered unless he was left at liberty to build or not as he pleased. W. replied by letter that the acceptance by the proprietors was not conditional, and that M. would be at liberty to build or not. The contract was sent to M., but he refused to sign it, or to proceed with the purchase:—Held, that the word "proprietors" was sufficient to identify the vendors within the Statute of Frauds, and that specific performance must be decreed. Rosnier v. Miller, 5 L. R., Ch. D., 648; 46 L. J., Ch., 228; 36 L. T., N. S., 304; 25 W. R. 890. Affirmed on this point, 5 L. R., Ch. D., 648; 46 L. J., Ch., 737; 25 W. R. 890; 37 L. T., N. S., 14; 39 L. T., N. S., 173; 3 L. R., App. Cas., 1124; 26 W. R. 865; 48 L. J., Ch., 10.

5. Identification or Description of Subject-Matter. Sufficiency.

In General. 8. An agreement in writing for sale of a house, did not by description ascertain the particular house, but it referred to the deeds as being in the possession of a person named in the agreement. The Court held the agreement sufficiently certain; it could be ascertained by an inquiry before the Master that the deeds in the possession of the person named referred to the house in question. Owen v. Thomas, 3 Myl. & K. 353; 3 L. J., N. S., Ch., 205.

1. A house and premises were put up for sale by auction under conditions of sale which did not contain any description of what was sold, but were so expressed that it could be inferred from them that the subject of sale was real estate. A. Shardlow became the purchaser. After the sale the auctioneer signed and gave to him the following memorandum at the foot of the conditions: "The property duly sold to A. Shardlow, butcher, Pinxton, and deposit paid at close of sale," and at the same time signed and gave to him the following receipt: "Pinxton, March 29th, 1880. Received of Mr. A. Shardlow the sum of 21l. as deposit on property purchased at 420l., at 'Sun Inn,' Pinxton, on the above date. Mr. G. Cotterell, owner":—Held, that the receipt, memorandum, and conditions contained a sufficiently definite description of the property sold to enable the Court to receive parol evidence of what the property consisted, and that the Statute of Frauds was no defence to an action by the purchaser for specific performance. Shardlow v. Cotterell, 20 L. R., Ch. D., 90; 51 L. J., Ch., 353; 45 L. T. 572; 30 W. R. 143. Reversing 18 L. R., Ch. D., 280; 50 L. J., Ch., 613; 44 L. T. 549; 29 W. R. 737.

Held, by Jessel, M. R., and Bagge, L. J., that the receipt alone without the memorandum and conditions was a memorandum sufficient to satisfy the requirements of the statute. Id.

2. A decree for specific performance of a contract to purchase land made against a public company, the contract being made out by reference to proceedings taken under the compulsory powers of the company's act. Inge v. Birmingham, Wolverhampton, & Stour Valley Railway Co., 2 W. R. 22; 2 Eq. Rep. 80; 3 De G. M. & G. 658.

3. Held, under the circumstances of the case, that a party having agreed to purchase premises stated to be partly freehold and partly leasehold could not, in the absence of fraud, concealment, or misrepresentation, on the part of the vendor, resist a specific performance of his contract merely on the ground that the exact position of the boundary line between the freehold and leasehold portions could not be ascertained; and that this would be so even assuming, for the purpose of argument, that a vendor who contracts to sell property partly freehold and partly leasehold is, in the absence of specific stipulations, to be considered as bound to show what part is freehold and what leasehold. Monro v. Taylor, 3 Macn. & G. 713; 21 L. J., Ch., 525.

Specific performance of a contract for the sale of property, partly freehold and partly leasehold, will not be refused on the ground that the boundaries of the two portions are not distinctly defined. Semble. Id.

4. One of three trustees, acting as if absolute owner, entered into a contract to sell the entirety of a freehold property (in one-fifth part of which he had a beneficial interest), describing the property as "The Jolly Sailor, offices, etc." The other trustees, afterwards, refused to concur in the sale. The vendee having brought an action for specific performance of the contract:—Held, that the subject-matter of the contract was sufficiently defined, as the vagueness (if any) about the meaning of the words "Jolly Sailor, offices, etc.," might be removed by an inquiry at chambers. Naylor v. Goodall, 47 L. J., Ch., 53; 26 W. R. 162; 37 L. T., N. S., 422.

5. Held, also, that the contract for the sale of the entirety could not be enforced, and the property being trust property, it could not be enforced against the defendant as to his one-fifth share only. Id.

6. The words "the property," in reference to a colliery, are not sufficient description of the colliery plant and stock on which to found an action for specific performance. Valle of Neath Colliery Co. v. Furness, 34 L. T., N. S., 231; 45 L. J., Ch., 276; 24 W. R. 631.

7. The words "the mill property, including two cottages in E. village," are a sufficient description of the subject-matter of a contract to take the case out of the Statute of Frauds, though part of the property is not in the parish of E. Murray v. Spicer, 15 W. R. 332; 5 L. R., Eq., 527; 37 L. J., Ch., 505.

8. A vendor of leasehold premises wrote a letter to her solicitor stating: "I have closed with Mr. W. for this place":—Held, a sufficient memorandum in writing within the Statute of Frauds, and that parol evidence was admissible to show what "this place" was. Waldron v. Jacob, 5 Ir. R., Eq., 131.

By Reference to Plan. 9. Where an agreement expressly refers to a plan, as an existing document forming a term in the contract, evidence is admissible for the purpose of identifying the plan; but unless the evidence of identity is clear and satisfactory, specific performance of such an agreement will be refused. Hodges v. Horsfall, 1 Russ. & M. 116.

10. A testator by his will, dated in 1832, devised certain estates, including M. In 1835 he entered into a written agreement (unstamped) with A. and B. for the sale of M. The purchasers paid a deposit, entered into possession, and received the rents and profits until 1838, when the survivor (who was the heir-at-law of the other) became bankrupt. The assignees abandoned all interest under the agreement, and the testator became the purchaser of M., being treated as having an equitable lien for the purchase-money. The agreement referred for the parcels to an accompanying map or plan, and to a schedule which showed their extent. The testator died in 1843, and this was a suit to establish the will. The Master found that the map or plan was lost:—Held, that the agreement for sale was a valid contract, notwithstanding the loss of the map or plan, and that it was never stamped. Held, also, that it was a revocation of the will; but the heir-at-law must exhaust all means of information as to the lost map or plan before the Court will deal with the contract without reference to the plan of which it forms a part. Andrew v. Andrew, 3 W. R. 337.

11. A. agrees by letter and verbally to take land on a building lease, and a rough draft is prepared, and fair copy and plan made, after which a new clause is inserted at A.'s request, and agreed to by the defendant's (the land-owner's) solicitor, all along acting for him; after which, A. having called for completion of the agreement, the solicitor declines to complete. On bill filed for specific performance, and demurrer for want of equity:—Held, that as no copy of the agreement was signed, and as it clearly appeared that the plans had still to be settled, and therefore the premises were not defined, the demurrer must be allowed. Adams v. Wheatley, 3 W. R. 96.

1. A memorandum of an agreement for sale signed by the vendor referred to the property as "The Jolly Sailor, offices, etc., with all the rights and privileges as per plan," and on the back was indorsed "Mr. Moseley," (the vendor's solicitor)—"Please put on the number in the plan." There were two plans, and the lot comprising the Jolly Sailor in one plan was not identical in number or contents with that containing the Jolly Sailor in the other plan.—Held, that the memorandum was sufficient within the Statute of Frauds, the plan intended having been identified by the vendor in cross-examination. Naylor v. Goodall, 26 W. R. 162; 37 L. T., N. S., 422; 47 L. J., Ch., 53.

2. By a contract B. agreed to sell, and C. to purchase, 200 acres of land or thereabouts, more or less, parts of the lands delineated in a plan thereunto annexed, and thereon coloured brown. It turned out that the marked land contained much less than the 200 acres, and the measurement was extended beyond the lands delineated. C. filed a bill for specific performance of the agreement with the extended measurement. B. demurred for want of equity:—Held, that the demurrer must be allowed, as the additional lands were not comprised in the agreement. Bellaney v. Knight, 10 W. R. 289; 5 L. T., N. S., 785.

3. Drainage commissioners agreed to sell a property to D. The contract did not refer to any plan, but the agents who signed it for the parties signed at the same time the following memorandum written upon a plan of the property:—"Plan of Property sold to and purchased by D. 23rd Oct., 1874. N.B.—The property included in the purchase is edged with red colour":—Held, that the plan was sufficiently incorporated, and that the description in the contract was controlled by it. Nene Valley Drainage Commissioners v. Dunkley, 4 L. R., Ch. D., 1.

4. On a purchase by reference to a ground plan an infringement of the rule cujus est solum ejus est usque ad cælum is sufficient to avoid the contract between vendor and purchaser. Pope v. Garland, 4 Y. & Coll. 394; 10 L. J., N. S., Exch. Eq. 13.

6. Description of Interests contracted to be Sold.

5. An agreement to sell land, not expressing what interest in it, construed to mean the whole of the interest of the vendor. Bower v. Cooper, 2 Hare 408; 11 L. J., N. S., Ch., 287; 6 Jur. 681.

6. Construction of contract for sale of leasehold, whether for vendor's interest therein, or a good title to the leasehold. Anderson v. Higgins, 1 J. & L. 718.

7. The Court will not assume that a purchaser has agreed to purchase the vendor's interest, whatever it may be, unless the language of the agreement is clear. Southern v. Harriman, 14 W. R. 487.

An agreement for the purchase of a lease, which does not mention the length of the term granted by the lease, is void for uncertainty, and cannot be enforced. Id.

8. An agreement by a vendor to sell "all his estate and interest" in certain premises, is prima facie good; and does not necessarily mean an agreement to sell an estate in fee simple, but may mean an equity of redemption only. Priddle v. Wood, 4 N. R. 320.

9. The lessee of a house put it up for auction subject to certain conditions of sale, one of which was that the purchaser should not require the lessor's title, but the property was bought in. Afterwards the defendant authorised his agent to offer a price for the lease of the house. The agent wrote a letter to the agent of the vendor, offering the price fixed; the vendor's agent replied, accepting the price for the house, and asking that a time might be appointed to draw the agreements. In neither of these letters was the nature of the vendor's interest mentioned:—Held, in a suit by the vendor for specific performance, first, that the letters formed a valid contract for the purchase of the lease; and, secondly, that the contract was general, and not subject to the conditions of sale under which the property had been put up to auction. Cowley v. Watts, 1 W. R. 218, 484; 22 L. J., Ch., 591; 17 Jur. 172; 20 L. T. 75.

10. An agreement was in the following words: "A. agrees to pay 625*l.* for the cottage and stable, B. paying the expenses of the lease held by Mr. C.—signed, A." :—Held, that such an agreement was not sufficient within the Statute of Frauds. Cox v. Middleton, 2 Drew. 209; 23 L. J., Ch., 618.

11. A., to whom the owner of a quarry had agreed to grant a lease, agreed on behalf of himself and all persons interested to sell the quarry to B., and "that the lease agreed to be granted by the lessor should be granted as B. might direct." B. having refused to complete the purchase, A. brought an action for specific performance, and in his statement of claim stated his agreement with the owner of the quarry as well as the memorandum of agreement with B., and alleged that B. was aware of the nature of A.'s interest in the quarry, and had accepted the title. B. demurred, on the ground that the memorandum was not sufficient within the Statute of Frauds:—Held, that it was sufficient, but that a defence founded on the Statute of Frauds could not since the Judicature Acts be raised by demurrer. Morgan v. Worthington, 38 L. T., N. S., 443.

7. Completeness of Terms of Contract.

12. Specific performance may be decreed of agreement founded on letters and notes, if fully and completely settled in all points. Popham v. Eyre, Lofft. 801.

13. Where from letters a contract can be specifically and explicitly defined, Court will decree performance, but not otherwise. Gordon v. Trevelyan, 1 Price 64.

1. Agreement not enforced on a letter unless it contain the full terms of the agreement. Clerk v. Wright, 1 Atk. 12.

2. In order to form a contract by letter, of which the Court will decree a specific performance, nothing more is necessary than that the amount and nature of the consideration to be paid on one side and received on the other should be ascertained, together with a reasonable description of the subject-matter of the contract. It is the clearly established doctrine that the Court will carry into execution an agreement so constituted. It is not necessary to be satisfied that the parties actually meant the same thing, provided a clear assent be given to a certain proposition arising de facto out of the terms of the correspondence. Kennedy v. Lee, 3 Meriv. 441.

3. No specific performance of an agreement by letters unless, upon a fair interpretation, concluded; if doubtful whether more than treaty, to be left to law. Huddleston v. Briscoe, 11 Ves. 591.

Agreement for the sale of an estate, the result of a correspondence by letters, good within the Statute of Frauds. Id. 588.

4. Contract for land by letters, sufficient within the Statute of Frauds; not specifically executed, unless upon a fair interpretation importing a concluded agreement, and not doubtful whether only treaty. Stratford v. Bosworth, 2 Ves. & B. 341.

5. An offer by letter to sell or buy a business cannot be carried into effect unless from the whole letter taken together an inference can be drawn from which the material terms of the contract can be ascertained. In the absence of that it amounts but to an offer to treat, as nothing can be supplied by conjecture. Cooper v. Hood, 28 L. J., Ch., 212.

6. Equity has jurisdiction to compel the specific performance of a complete contract, but cannot supply any term not agreed on. Ormond v. Andersen, 2 Ball & B. 369.

7. The Court cannot, when called on to decree specific performance of an agreement, direct any act to be done whereby the agreement itself, if not already legally binding, can be made so. Leominster Canal Co. v. Shrewsbury & Hereford Railway Co., 3 Jur., N. S., 930.

8. The contract on which an immediate decree for specific performance is sought, must have been complete in all its essential parts before the filing of the bill. Adams v. Broke, 1 Y. & Coll. C. C. 627.

9. The memorandum or note of an agreement required by the 4th section of the Statute of Frauds must be a memorandum of an agreement complete at the time the memorandum is made. Munday v. Asprey, 13 L. R., Ch. D., 855; 49 L. J., Ch., 216; 28 W. R. 347.

A letter from an alleged purchaser inclosing and referring to a draft conveyance in which it was recited that he had agreed to purchase land:—Held, not to be a memorandum of a completed agreement. Id.

10. At a sale by auction on the 10th August, 1880 (an announcement of which, endorsed on the particulars and conditions, had the auctioneer's name printed at foot), D. signed a memorandum appended to the particulars and conditions, acknowledging that he had "this day purchased from Mr. Stafford, the vendor, by public auction, subject to his approval, the premises mentioned in the annexed particulars, for the sum of 250*l.*, subject to the conditions of sale also annexed hereto"; but there was no signature by the vendor, nor any subsequent adoption of the contract under his hand. At the time of sale D. paid a portion of the purchase-money in cash, and for the balance of the stipulated deposit he gave his I O U. Three days afterwards D. paid a further sum on account of the deposit, and was handed a receipt, dated the 13th August 1880, signed by the auctioneer's clerk, on behalf of "Michael Crooke" (the auctioneer), and acknowledging that he had "received from Mr. Dyas (the purchaser) 30*l.* sterling, which, with 20*l.* paid 10th August, makes 50*l.* deposit on his purchase, 84*l.*, Mr. John Stafford's property." The vendor's solicitor subsequently wrote to D. recognising the sale, furnished him with copies of the title-deeds, and approved of the draft conveyance to him, which, however, the vendor refused to execute; whereupon D. having brought an action for specific performance:—Held, that there was no agreement enforceable against the defendant, as the contract of the 10th August having been made expressly "subject to his approval," the memorandum of that date only amounted to a proposal, and did not constitute a note in writing, within the Statute of Frauds; there not being then in fact any contract in existence that subsequent parol approval by the defendant or his agents could not have the effect of altering the character in which his name appeared in the memorandum, so as to convert it into an authentication of a contract; and that the auctioneer's name at foot of the endorsement on the particulars and conditions merely authenticated the announcement of the sale. Dyas v. Stafford, 9 L. R., Ir., 520. Reversing 7 L. R., Ir., 590.

Held, also, that the receipt of the 13th August did not satisfy the statute. Id. Affirming 7 L. R., Ir., 590.

11. Where a court has to find a contract in a correspondence, and not in one particular note or memorandum formally signed, the whole of that which has passed between the parties must be taken into consideration. Hussey v. Horne-Payne, 4 L. R., App. Cas., 311; 48 L. J., Ch., 846; 27 W. R. 585; 41 L. T. 1.

Per Lord Selborne:—The observation stated in Jervis v. Berridge (8 L. R., Ch., 360), that "the Statute of Frauds is a weapon of defence, not offence, and does not make any signed instrument a valid contract by reason of the signature, if it is not such according to the good faith and real intention of the parties," affirmed. Id.

8. Communications Addressed to Third Parties.

12. Agreement by letter to third person to sell sufficient to take case out of the Statute of Frauds. Seagood v. Meale, Pre. Ch. 561; 1 Stra. 426. And see Child v. Comber, 3 Swan. 423. n.

13. There have been cases where a letter written to a man's own agent, and setting forth the terms of an agreement as concluded by him, has been deemed to be a signing within the Statute of Frauds, and agreeable to the provisions of it. Welford v. Beazley, 3 Atk. 503.

1. After certain negotiations for a purchase between the agents of the vendor and purchaser, a letter was written to the vendor by his agent, stating that the purchaser had agreed by his agent to purchase the property (which was sufficiently identified) at a certain price. The vendor frequently wrote to his agent in reference to the transaction, such letters being communicated to the purchaser's agent. Drafts were prepared and signed by the vendor's agent in approval, but the vendor died before the sale was completed.—Held, that there was a binding contract within the Statute of Frauds, of which the Court would decree specific performance. Carpenter v. Churchill, 2 W. R. 364.

2. B. files a bill stating that on his marriage with his late wife no portion was given to her, but that her father Y. had promised and contracted with B. that he would, at his death, leave to his daughter an equal share of his property with his other children; that the marriage took place on the faith of such promise; that there were four children, one of whom died an infant and unmarried; that B.'s wife died leaving two children, who were infants and still living, and had lived with and been brought up by their aunt at Y.'s house; that B., wishing to take his children under his own protection, Y. applied for a commission of lunacy against him, and in answer to an affidavit filed by B., filed an affidavit stating the words he used upon B.'s marriage to be, that his daughter should, at his death, share with the rest of his children; and that Y. died, leaving considerable personal property. B., under the circumstances, claimed to have the promise made on his marriage specifically performed, and prayed an account and payment of an equal third of Y.'s residuary estate. On demurrer for want of equity and parties to this bill: the demurrer for want of equity, overruled; but that for want of parties, for that the personal representative of the wife was a necessary party, allowed, with leave to amend. Barkworth v. Young, 5 W. R. 156; 26 L. J., Ch., 153; 3 Jur., N. S., 34; 4 Drew. 1.

3. A., being entitled to certain lands, proposed to his solicitors, who were also the solicitors of certain trustees, to sell to such trustees the lands in question. The proposal was made by a series of letters written by A. to his solicitors, and such letters were replied to by the solicitors. The proposal having been agreed to on behalf of the trustees, a petition was presented to the Court praying for a reference as to the title, and an order was made in the terms of the prayer. A. died before anything further took place.—Held, that there was no binding contract for the purchase of the lands in question. Shrewsbury (Earl) v. Shrewsbury (Countess), 18 Jur. 397.

4. On bill for specific performance of parol agreement to let lands, evidence that defendant had suffered his wife to receive money from the plaintiff in consideration of fines (he being incapable of receiving them), and had written a letter to a third person acknowledging the demise, and stating that he was ready to make leases:—Held, sufficient to take case out of statute. Hartley v. Wilkinson, 1 Ridgw. L. & S. 357.

5. A. and B. having entered into a verbal treaty for the purchase of certain premises belonging to A., and not being able to agree as to the amount of the purchase-money, A. addressed a letter to C., a third person, stating that he would take a certain sum from B. for the premises, reserving a small portion of the same for his sister, if C. approved of it. B. subsequently lodged the sum named by A. with C., of which lodgment C. made a memorandum on A.'s letter, with a remark that it was "a great price":—Held, that C. must be considered the agent of A., and that as he had signed the contract acknowledging the receipt of the purchase-money, A. was bound to perform the agreement. Field v. Boland, 1 Dr. & Wal. 37.

6. The executrix of a lessee agreed to sell to A. the residue of her term (except a day) and the fixtures on the premises for 400*l*. This agreement was entered into by the executrix without advice, and there was no written memorandum of it except by a letter written by the executrix to her own solicitor a few hours afterwards. Subsequently the landlord, knowing that there had been a negotiation, if not an agreement, between the executrix and A., agreed with her for the purchase of the residue of the term for 550*l*. A., on hearing of this, offered the executrix, if she would complete her contract with him, 1,000*l*. as purchase-money, and indemnity against any proceedings on the part of the landlord. She accepted the offer, and demised the premises to A. for the whole term, wanting a day:—Holding that the landlord was entitled to a specific performance of his agreement, not only against the executrix, but against A., quære, whether the letter to the solicitor was a sufficient memorandum in writing within the meaning of the Statute of Frauds, etc. Goodwin v. Fielding, 4 De G. M. & G. 90.

9. Admission of Contract by Answer.

7. A court of equity will decree a specific execution of a parol agreement, if it be set forth in the bill, and confessed by answer. Symondson v. Tweed, Pre. Ch. 374.

8. If on a bill brought to have execution of a parol agreement, the defendant, by answer, confesses the agreement without insisting on the Statute of Frauds, etc., the Court will decree an execution, because no danger of perjury. Croyston v. Banes, Pre. Ch. 208.

9. Equity will decree performance of parol agreement, if it is admitted in the answer, or if material and unequivocal acts have been done in part performance. Gunter v. Halsey, Amb. 586.

10. Defendant, by answer admitting agreement, may, if he insist on the Statute of Frauds, have benefit of it at hearing. Cooth v. Jackson, 6 Ves. 17, 37.

11. Whether an agreement by parol, but confessed in the answer, shall be executed though not in writing. Hosier v. Read, 9 Mod. 86.

12. In a bill for the specific execution of an agreement, the plaintiff may abandon the agreement, and may, by amended bill, seek to have the benefit of an agreement admitted in the answer, and by charging that the allegations in the original are equally applicable to the agreement in the amended bill, may refer to them without repeating them, and thereby obtain all the benefit of the evidence stated as applicable to the first agreement. Willis v. Evans, 2 Ball & B. 228.

10. Other Cases.

1. When a person has contracted for the purchase of land by an agreement, the terms of which are partly written and partly verbal, and has obtained possession upon performance of the written terms, to attempt to retain possession and refuse to perform the verbal terms amounts to a fraud. Jervis v. Berridge, 27 L. T., N. S., 436; 42 L. J., Ch., 518; 8 L. R., Ch., 351; 21 W. R. 96.

A. signed a contract for the purchase of land from B., and on the same day transferred the benefit of the contract to C. by a memorandum in which some of the terms of the transfer were not expressed. C. entered into possession under the memorandum, but refused to perform the terms which were not expressed therein. A. filed a bill for cancellation of the memorandum, alleging that C.'s conduct amounted to fraud; and C. on demurrer contended that he was not guilty of fraud, inasmuch as under the Statute of Frauds the unwritten terms of the transfer were not binding upon him:—Held, that C.'s contention could not be sustained. Id.

2. Semble per Lord Selborne:—The observation stated in Jervis v. Berridge (8 L. R., Ch., App., 360), that "the Statute of Frauds is a weapon of defence, not offence, and does not make any signed instrument a valid contract by reason of the signature, if it is not such according to the good faith and real intention of the parties," affirmed. Hussey v. Horne-Payne, 4 L. R., App. Cas., 311; 48 L. J., Ch., 846; 27 W. R. 585; 41 L. T. 1.

V. OTHER CASES.

3. A particular writing for the purchase of an estate, no writing within the Statute of Frauds, unless the party purchased by it, or that it was not shown him at the time of purchase, so that if that contains more than the words of the conveyance will in strictness carry, the purchaser cannot compel specific execution of the residue on the particular. Cass v. Waterhouse, Pre. Ch. 29.

4. Filing a bill, held to be sufficient evidence of plaintiff's assent to an agreement of which the bill seeks to enforce specific performance. Agar v. Biden, 2 L. J., N. S., Ch., 3.

5. Effect of an agreement to sell land not then the property of the vendor, but which afterwards became his. Morse v. Faulkner, 3 Swan. 429.

6. It is no objection to a mutual contract between A. and B., for the one to buy or sell from or to the other of them his interest in certain property, that at the time of that contract there existed a conditional agreement by one of them with a third party to sell the whole property to him. Cartwright v. Insole, 16 L. T., N. S., 445.

7. Evidence on which the Court might decree the specific performance of an alleged agreement, according to one construction of a writing, which was of doubtful meaning, where a conveyance, according to a different construction, had been executed by the vendor, and accepted by the purchaser. Humphries v. Horne, 3 Hare 277.

8. Suggestions made by a vendor or purchaser as to the course which might be adopted for the purpose of obviating difficulties in the completion of a contract, are not to be taken as an abandonment of the original contract, and the substitution of a new one. Monro v. Taylor, 8 Hare 61. Affirmed 3 Macn. & G. 713; 21 L. J., N. S., Ch., 525.

II. Assignment of Contract to Purchase.

9. A parol agreement for a purchase and possession delivered, decreed to be performed against a subsequent purchaser with notice, who had a conveyance and had paid this money. Butcher v. Stapely, Butcher v. Butcher, 1 Vern. 363.

10. Notice to a vendor of an assignment by the purchaser of an uncompleted contract does not constitute the vendor a trustee for the assignee of the contract. McCreight v. Foster, 39 L. J., Ch., 792; 5 L. R., Ch., 604; 18 W. R. 905; 23 L. T., N. S., 224.

A vendor of land may receive the balance of the purchase-money, and convey the estate to the purchaser, without regard to the receipt of a notice that the purchaser had agreed to assign the contract. Id.

A vendor agreed to sell leaseholds which were under a heavy rent, and received part of the purchase-money. The purchaser afterwards agreed to assign to a bank, if required, the contract for the purchase by way of security for money advanced, and the bank gave notice of this agreement to the vendor. The bank afterwards refused to advance to the purchaser the money required to complete, but this was not known to the vendor. The purchaser, after the time fixed for the completion, paid the balance of the purchase-money, the vendor executed an assignment, and the purchaser assigned to an assignee without notice of the security to the bank:—Held, that the vendor was entitled to complete without giving notice to the bank, and that the bank had no remedy against him. Id.

11. Trustees under restrictions for sale agreed to sell land for B. for a purpose understood between the parties, though not embodied in the agreement. Pending the negotiation, B., with knowledge of the restrictions, entered into a sub-contract to sell the land for a purpose at variance with the trusts. This arrangement was concealed from the vendors until after the signing of the original contract, and they then refused to complete:—Held, that the agreement could not be enforced. Trappes v. Cobb, 17 L. T., N. S., 236.

1. Notice to a person under contract to sell an estate that his vendee has agreed to make a valid assignment of the contract, if so requested, does not put the vendor upon inquiry whether his vendee has been requested to make, or has made, such valid assignment, nor will it compel the vendor to refuse to execute conveyance to the vendee, who, upon the payment of the purchase-money, demands the conveyance, nor even excuse the vendor for making such a refusal. Shaw v. Foster, 42 L. J., Ch., 49; 20 W. R. 907; 27 L. T., N. S., 281; 5 L. R., H. L., 321.

The persons who claim to have the benefit of the assignment must give distinct notice to the vendor of their claim, and of their readiness to put themselves in the vendee's position for the completion of the contract. Id.

F. contracted to sell to P. leasehold property. P. having paid to F. part of the purchase-money, deposited with a bank the contract in order to secure a debt due by him to the bank, thereby creating an equitable charge on his interest under the contract, and F. received and accepted a formal notice of this charge. Subsequently F. assigned the legal estate in the premises to P. in such a manner as to enable P. to defeat the bank's charge, which he did by assigning the premises to a purchaser without notice:—Held, that the rule of equity that a vendor of an estate is, after the making of the contract of sale, a trustee for the purchaser, did not to apply to this case, and that J. was not liable to make good the loss occasioned to the bank by such assignment. Id.

2. P., in 1867, agreed to sell to M. a plot of land, the purchase to be completed in five years or earlier at M.'s option. P. had previously agreed to sell an adjoining plot to M. The plaintiff was employed by M. to build on the first plot, and M. became indebted to him on that account. M. then agreed to sell the first plot to the plaintiff. P. then told the plaintiff that both contracts must be completed together, and no offer having been made by the plaintiff to complete both contracts, P. and M. sold and conveyed both plots to H.:—Held, that the plaintiff had no equity to have his sub-contract performed. Croftree v. Poole, 12 L. R., Eq., 13; 40 L. J., Ch., 468; 24 L. T. 895.

3. An equitable interest under a contract of purchase may be the subject of sale; the sub-contract converts the original vendee into a trustee of his equitable interest for his vendee, who acquires the same rights which he had to the benefits to be derived under the primary contract. Such sub-contracts are not within the doctrine of champerty and maintenance. Wood v. Griffith, 1 Swan. 56.

4. Bill for specific performance of an agreement to purchase, against the original vendee and an assignee of his contract, dismissed as against the former, the plaintiff being held, by delivery of abstract and offer to execute a conveyance, to have accepted the latter as purchaser. Quare, if the bill had been filed against the original purchaser only. Holden v. Hayn, 1 Meriv. 47.

I. AUTHORITY OF AUCTIONEER.

5. Where a vendor made a bond fide mistake as to the authority which he had given to the auctioneer, and the property was knocked down to a purchaser for a less sum than the vendor considered that he had instructed the auctioneer to sell at, the Court refused to decree specific performance of the contract at the instance of the purchaser. Day v. Wells, 7 Jur., N. S., 1004; 9 W. R. 857.

Semble, that a vendor cannot, after real estate has been knocked down at an auction, and before the signature of the written contract, revoke the authority of the auctioneer. S. C. 30 Beav. 220.

6. W. having casually mentioned to S., an auctioneer and land agent, that he had three properties, one being at B., all of which he would be willing to sell, S. replied, that from the description B. would be worth 600*l.*, and that he had other property in the same neighbourhood to sell by auction at the end of the month, which would be a good opportunity. On a subsequent occasion, S., having viewed the property, informed W. that he thought it would not fetch more than 300*l.*; and accordingly, W. not being willing to attend to the business, his brother and partner fixed the reserve price at 250*l.* W. then withdrew one of the other lots from the sale. The printed particulars and conditions of sale were sent to W.'s office a day or two before the sale. The B. estate was knocked down at 330*l.* W. then refused to complete, alleging that he had never authorised S. to sell at that price, and that his price was 700*l.*:—Held, that W. had by his acts bound himself to the sale. Pike v. Wilson, 1 Jur., N. S., 59.

As to the authority of an auctioneer to draw up conditions of sale, quare. Id.

7. Though the auctioneer at a sale by auction is the agent of the purchaser, yet he is not his agent for all purposes, and there is no reason why he may not sell property of which he is himself the owner. Phint v. Woodin, 9 Hare 618; 16 Jur. 719.

1. A trader in prison employed an auctioneer to sell goods, who sent him the proceeds by the defendant. The trader became bankrupt by lying two months in prison:—Held, that the assignees could not recover from the defendant, who was a mere money bearer, the money he had received and paid over. Coles v. Wright, 2 Rose 110; 4 Taunt. 198.

Receipt of Purchase-money by on Sales by the Court.] See XXIV. v. 1 post.

II. VERBAL DECLARATIONS BY AUCTIONEER.

2. Verbal declarations of an auctioneer at the time of sale, not to be received in contradiction to the printed particulars; but quære, as to the effect of personal information of a mistake in the particular. Ogilvie v. Poljambe, 3 Meriv. 53.

3. Parol evidence of declarations of auctioneers at sale, warranting quantity, received as defence to bill for specific performance on ground of fraud, though not for purpose of enforcing specific performance. Winch v. Winchester, 1 Ves. & B. 375.

4. Parol evidence in aid of a specific performance upon the sale of the estate by auction; to explain, by declarations of the auctioneer, an ambiguity on the face of the particular, by a general claim for a separate valuation of the timber, and also special provisions as to the timber upon certain lots, the agreement, signed on the back of the particular, binding the purchaser, defendant, "to a strict fulfilment of this article, and to abide by the condition and declarations made at the sale," rejected: distinction, where evidence is to resist a specific performance. Higginson v. Clowes, 15 Ves. 616.

Though a paper, as the particular upon a sale by auction, may by reference be engrafted into a contract within the Statute of Frauds, that will not authorise the introduction of parol evidence to show what part was read. Id. 522.

5. In August 1878 the defendant Berridge offered for sale by public auction a lease of the public-house before mentioned. By the conditions of sale it was provided that "the lease to be granted shall contain the covenants, clauses, and provisions, and be in the form or to the effect set forth in the draft lease which will be produced on the sale and may be seen at the office of the auctioneers for seven days previous to the day of sale," and that "the property is presumed to be correctly described; but, as the premises may be viewed and the draft lease inspected at the office of the auctioneers, the purchaser shall be deemed to have bought with full knowledge of the contents thereof; and no error, misdescription, or omission in the particulars shall annul the sale, and no compensation shall be required for any such error, misdescription, or omission." There was no reference either in the conditions of sale or in the draft lease to the existence of any right of way from the garden of the public-house to Hampstead Heath; but, at the time of the sale, the auctioneer bond fide, but without any authority from Berridge, and acting entirely upon an inference drawn by himself from the appearance of the premises, and believing that there was a right of way through the same and over the private road and so to Hampstead Heath, stated publicly that there was such a way, and spoke of it as enhancing the value of the premises:—Held, that the evidence of what passed at the time of the sale was admissible as against the vendor; but that no action could after the completion of the purchase be maintained against him to recover compensation for this innocent misrepresentation by the auctioneer. Brett v. Clowser, 5 L. R., C. P. D., 376.

III. BIDDINGS.

1. In General, 7149.
2. Agreements not to Bid, 7149.
3. Puffer and Reserved Biddings, 7150.
4. Under Sales by the Court. See XXIV. post.

1. In General.

6. Where the trustees of a road had advertised tolls to be let by auction, subject to certain special conditions as to the mode of sale, inconsistent with the regulations prescribed by the General Turnpike Act, 3 Geo. 4, c. 126, s. 55, the terms of sale giving a reserved bidding to the trustees, and there was only one bidder at the sale, when, the minute-glass having been thrice turned, as prescribed by the Act, the trustees declared their intention to make their reserved bidding:—Held, that the bidder was not entitled to specific performance; but his bill was dismissed without costs. Levy v. Pendergrass, 2 Beav. 415.

7. At a sale by auction of an undivided moiety of some building ground, the biddings were made at so much per square yard:—Held, that the amount offered per square yard, multiplied by the whole number of square yards, was to be paid for the moiety; and that the biddings were not to be considered as made for the entirety of the property, and half the amount only to be paid for the moiety. Chamberlain v. Lee, 8 L. J., N. S., Ch., 266.

8. One of the conditions of sale was, that if, at the time of sale, the purchaser did not comply with the conditions, the vendor might declare his purchase void, and might thereupon put up the property again at the bidding immediately before the bidding of the defaulting purchaser; the premises were knocked down at the price of 16,800*l.* to a purchaser who made default; his purchase was declared void, and they were again put up at 16,750*l.*, the bidding next to his; but that bidder and others having refused to abide by their former offers, the property was put up at 13,200*l.* and sold for 15,400*l.* to the same person who had before offered 16,750*l.* Semble, that the vendors, after declaring the first purchase void, could not at that sale put up the premises at less than 16,750*l.* Roberts v. Bozon, 3 L. J., Ch., 113.

2. Agreements not to Bid.

9. An agreement between two intending purchasers of property sold by auction under the order of the Court, that one should bid for and purchase the property, and that, if purchased, they should divide the lot, is not inequitable, and is not of itself a ground for setting aside the purchase. Re Carey, 4 Jur., N. S., 1290; 26 Beav. 187; 28 L. J., Ch., 218.

A piece of land was advertised for sale. Two adjoining landowners were desirous of purchasing it; they agreed that one alone should attend the sale, and purchase, if it should be sold, for a sum not exceeding a sum named. If the land was purchased, terms were arranged, and it was to be divided between them. Upon a summons, by the vendors, to set aside the sale:—Held, that the agreement between the purchasers was not contrary to equity; that it did not vitiate the contract, and that the application could not be supported. Id.

1. A. paid B. a sum of money not to bid at a public auction. B. attended the sale and did not bid. A. bought the property:—Held, that A. was entitled to a decree for specific performance against the vendors. Heffer v. Martyn, 36 L. J., Ch., 372; 15 W. R. 390.

3. Puffer and Reserved Biddings.

2. Post obit bond of a young man put up to sale by him without reserve, relieved against. Fos v. Wright, 6 Madd. 111.

3. Sale by auction on behalf of an infant; without a reserved bidding, strongly condemned. Cutts v. Salmon, 16 Jur. 623; 21 L. J., Ch., 750.

4. Where particulars of sale by auction state it to be "without reserve," and puffers are employed by vendor, specific performance will not be decreed. Meadows v. Tanner, 5 Madd. 34.

5. The circumstance that a person bid at an auction under the private direction of the vendors, for the purpose of preventing a sale under a sum specified as the value, is no objection to a specific performance; especially in a case where the vendors were assignees under a commission of bankruptcy, and the purchaser was not present but purchased by an agent. Smith v. Clarke, 12 Ves. 477.

6. At an auction, one person only bid for the vendor to 75*l.* an acre, upon a private notice to the auctioneer; then, after a contest with the real bidders, the estate was bought at 101*l.* 17*s.* an acre, and the purchaser some days afterwards paid the duty; he was decreed to perform the contract with costs. Bramley v. Atk., 3 Ves. 620.

Where all the bidders at an auction, except the buyer, are bidding for the seller, without notice, and the buyer is thereby induced to give more than the value, neither courts of law nor equity will support it. Id.

No objection to a sale by auction, that persons were employed by the vendor to bid for him without public notice. Id.

7. At a public auction, the seller's known agent bade for the plaintiff, the vendee; and under the circumstances the sale was damped thereby, a specific performance refused on that account. Twining v. Morrice, 2 Bro. C. C. 326.

8. Equity will never countenance demands for attending at auctions to enhance the price of goods, etc. Walker v. Gascoigne, 13 Vin. 543. pl. 12.

9. A. brought his bill for an allowance of a certain sum of money as a commission upon the sale of goods by auction, where he attended as a puffer to enhance the price of the goods. Bill dismissed with costs; the demand being of such a nature as ought not to have any countenance in a court of equity. Walker v. Nightingale, 4 Bro. P. C. 193.

10. Objections by a purchaser by auction; first, that a way round and across a meadow was not specified; secondly, on account of a bidding for the plaintiff: a specific performance was decreed with costs. Bowles v. Round, 5 Ves. 508.

11. Though a puffer ought not to be employed to screw up the price or take advantage of the ignorance of other bidders, yet a progressive bidding to be fixed, or reserved bidding, by a person employed by the vendor without the knowledge of the other bidders, will not necessarily be deemed to be taking an advantage of their ignorance. A party to a contract becoming aware of an objection to the validity of the contract, must forthwith state it as an objection on which he means to resist performance of the contract, or, if after such knowledge he treats the contract as subsisting, he will be considered to have waived the objection. Flint v. Woodin, 9 Hare 618; 22 L. J., N. S., Ch., 92; 16 Jur. 719.

12. A sale by a mortgagee, at which the purchaser employed a clerk of the mortgagee's solicitor to bid, set aside. Parnell v. Tyler, 2 L. J., N. S., Ch., 195.

13. A., being requested to attend an auction to bid for the vendors, declined, saying he intended to bid for himself. The estate was put up in lots, and three in-bidders were appointed, without notice to the company. A. purchased two lots, but it did not appear whether or not his biddings were upon those of the respective in-bidders. Assuming that they were severally appointed to bid for respective lots, and that some one of them bid upon each of the lots purchased by A.:—Held, that it could not be inferred that A.'s biddings were upon those of a puffer, and that he, at any rate, could not claim relief for want of notice, because he knew that biddings would be made for the vendors. Specific performance therefore decreed. Birch v. Hanson, 1 L. J., N. S., Ch., 42.

Semble, that there being one bidder for the vendors upon each lot, without public notice, is not in itself sufficient to vitiate the sale; at least, if the final bidding is not upon that of a puffer. Id.

14. Where the property is advertised to be sold "without reserve," any interference direct or indirect, by the vendor, which may affect the rights of the highest bidder, will preclude the vendor from the aid of the Court to enforce the sale. Where a life interest was so advertised for sale, and the vendor privately agreed with another that he should bid a certain sum, and be declared the purchaser at that sum, unless a higher sum were bid, bill to enforce performance by a purchaser at a higher price, dismissed. Robinson v. Wall, 2 Ph. 372; 16 L. J., N. S., Ch., 401; 11 Jur. 577. Affirming 10 Beav. 73; 16 L. J., N. S., Ch., 17; 11 Jur. 1.

15. At the sale of an estate by public auction, one of the conditions being that the highest bidder should be the purchaser, a person attended who had no intention of being a purchaser, but was employed by the vendor to bid, in order to prevent the property from being sold at an under-value; and this person made several biddings, till he reached the sum of 650*l.*, when he ceased to bid. The property was afterwards purchased for 690*l.* Upon the purchaser objecting to perform his contract, on the ground that puffers had been employed at the sale, the Court decreed special performance, the purchaser declining to have the validity of the contract tried in a court of law. Woodward v. Miller, 2 Colly. 279; 15 L. J., N. S., Ch., 6; 9 Jur. 1003.

Quere, whether the declarations of an auctioneer at a sale, to the effect that there are no puffers, are receivable in evidence, unless the expressions used are put in issue by the pleadings. Id.

1. Under a sheriff's order the interest (if any) of F. N., a partner in a late firm, in certain leasehold premises which were the property of the firm, were put up for sale. The purchaser at the auction discovered after payment of his purchase-money that F. N. was insolvent, and that his interest purported to be sold was of no value; and that a creditor of the firm, who was the assignee in bankruptcy of one of the partners, and was then carrying on the business, had given instructions for the sale, knowing the interest to be worthless, in order to establish his title to the separate property of F. N., who was of weak mind, and against whom he had obtained a judgment in an action at law, and discovered further that he had employed his clerk to run up the biddings to a high price:—Held, that the sale was void as against the purchaser, and that the person who so gave instructions for the sale was liable to repay the purchase-money and interest. Smith v. Harrison, 5 W. R. 408; 26 L. J., Ch., 412; 3 Jur., N. S., 287; 29 L. T. 11.

2. Property was put up for sale by auction, the conditions stating that the highest bidder was to be the purchaser, and not saying anything as to bidding on behalf of the vendors. An agent of the vendors bid 2,500*l.*; the auctioneer then bid 2,600*l.*; and the agent and the auctioneer continued bidding against each other till the biddings reached 3,600*l.* The defendant then bid 3,650*l.*, and the property was knocked down to him:—Held, that the vendors could not enforce the contract. Mortimer v. Bell, 1 L. R., Ch., 10; 35 L. J., Ch., 25; 11 Jur., N. S., 897; 14 W. R. 68; 13 L. T., N. S., 348.

Puffing does not invalidate a sale, if the puffer does not bid beyond a fixed reserved price; but the sale is bad, if the puffer is employed for the purpose of running up the purchaser, and not solely to prevent a sale below the reserved price. S. C. 5 N. R. 501.

3. Property was put up for sale by auction, under the order of the Court. The auctioneer at the sale stated that the sale would be without reserve, and that all parties interested in the property had liberty to bid. The mortgagee of the property, who had the conduct of the sale, bid against the purchaser, to whom the property was eventually knocked down. The purchaser sought to be discharged from the purchase, upon the ground of puffing; but the Court refused to discharge him, although the purchaser swore that he heard only the statement that the sale was to be without reserve, and did not hear that all persons interested were at liberty to bid. Dimmock v. Hallett, 12 Jur., N. S., 953; 15 W. R. 93; 15 L. T., N. S., 374; 2 L. R., Ch., 21; 36 L. J., Ch., 146.

4. A puffer is a person who bids at a sale, but does not intend, and is not bound, to complete the purchase. Shimmin v. Belton, 1 Ir. R., Eq., 289.

Property was set up for sale by auction in pursuance of a decree for sale in a mortgage suit, under a condition that the highest bidder should be the purchaser, subject to the approval of the master. There was no condition that the sale should be subject to a reserved bidding. After the biddings had reached 300*l.*, the only person who bid against the purchaser was the clerk of the solicitor for the mortgagees, who was employed to buy in the property unless it produced a certain price put upon it by the mortgagees, and who bid without the leave of the Court. The property was sold for 500*l.* The Court refused to set aside the sale. Id.

Held, that the clerk was not a puffer. Id.

Held, also, that his bidding without the leave of the Court was an irregularity which the purchaser could not avail himself of to set aside the sale. Id.

5. Land was offered for sale by auction, since 30 & 31 Vict., c. 41, subject to a reserved price, but a right to bid was not reserved:—Held, that the employment of a person to bid on the seller's behalf was illegal, and vitiated the sale. Gilliat v. Gilliat, 18 W. R. 203; 21 L. T., N. S., 522; 9 L. R., Eq., 60; 33 L. J., Ch., 142.

6. Landed property was sold by public auction under conditions which stated that the highest bidder should be the purchaser, and which reserved to the vendor the right to bid once by himself or his agent. The auctioneer bid three times with the sanction of the vendor, and then the vendor stated what the reserve price was, when a person bid beyond that sum, and was thereupon declared the purchaser:—Held, that by reason of the biddings of the auctioneer the vendor had exceeded the limited right reserved to him by the condition of bidding once by himself or agent, and that therefore the sale was void at the option of the purchaser, both at law and under 30 & 31 Vict., c. 48. Parfitt v. Jepson, 46 L. J., C. P. D., 529; 36 L. T., N. S., 251.

IV. SIGNATURE OF CONTRACT.

7. Sales of land by auction are within the Statute of Frauds, except sales under decree. Auctioneer's receipt for the deposit, and containing expressly, or by reference, the terms, viz., the price, cannot have the effect of an agreement, binding the vendor within the Statute of Frauds. Blagden v. Bradbear, 12 Ves. 466.

8. Specific performance decreed against the purchaser of an estate by an agent, upon the signature of the agent's name by the auctioneer, who is an agent lawfully authorised for that purpose within the Statute of Frauds. Komeys v. Proctor, 1 Jac. & Walk. 350; 3 Ves. & B. 57.

1. A bill for specific performance stated the terms of the agreement for sale of real estate by private contract reduced into writing, but not signed by the defendant himself, who had, however, paid his deposit to the person employed as auctioneer, who signed a receipt referring to the fair copy to be prepared for signature from the rough unsigned memorandum:—Held, that the signature by the auctioneer of this receipt, which thus referred to a document which showed what the agreement was, took the case out of the operation of the Statute of Frauds. Wood v. Midgley, 2 Sm. & G. 115. Reversed 23 L. J., Ch., 553.

The auctioneer employed to sell on behalf of the vendor, who signs a receipt for the deposit to the purchaser who pays it, acts as agent of both parties; and if the receipt refers to a writing containing the terms of the agreement, the purchaser cannot avail himself of the Statute of Frauds. Id.

2. At a sale by auction on the 10th August 1880 (an announcement of which, endorsed on the particulars and conditions, had the auctioneer's name printed at foot), D. signed a memorandum appended to the particulars and conditions, acknowledging that he had "this day purchased from Mr. Stafford, the vendor, by public auction, subject to his approval, the premises mentioned in the annexed particulars, for the sum of 250*l.*, subject to the conditions of sale also annexed hereto;" but there was no signature by the vendor, nor any subsequent adoption of the contract under his hand. At the time of sale D. paid a portion of the purchase-money in cash, and for the balance of the stipulated deposit he gave his I O U. Three days afterwards D. paid a further sum on account of the deposit, and was handed a receipt, dated the 13th August 1880, signed by the auctioneer's clerk, on behalf of "Michael Crooke" (the auctioneer), and acknowledging that he had "received from Mr. Dyas (the purchaser) 30*l.* sterling, which, with 20*l.* paid 10th August, makes 50*l.* deposit on his purchase, 84*l.*, Mr. John Stafford's property." The vendor's solicitor subsequently wrote to D. recognising the sale, furnished him with copies of the title-deeds, and approved of the draft conveyance to him, which, however, the vendor refused to execute; whereupon D. having brought an action for specific performance:—Held, that there was no agreement enforceable against the defendant, as the contract of the 10th August having been made expressly "subject to his approval," the memorandum of that date only amounted to a proposal, and did not constitute a note in writing, within the Statute of Frauds; there not being then in fact any contract in existence that subsequent parol approval by the defendant or his agents could not have the effect of altering the character in which his name appeared in the memorandum, so as to convert it into an authentication of a contract: and that the auctioneer's name at foot of the endorsement on the particulars and conditions merely authenticated the announcement of the sale. Dyas v. Stafford, 9 L. R., Ir., 520. Reversing 7 L. R., Ir., 590.

Held, also, that the receipt of the 13th August did not satisfy the statute. Id. Affirming 7 L. R., Ir., 590.

3. At a sale by auction subject to conditions, the auctioneer entered in his sale book the names of the vendor and purchaser, the subject-matter of the sale, and the amount of the purchase money, but omitted, in the entry, to embody or make any reference to the conditions of sale. There was no other memorandum or contract in writing:—Held, that there was no sufficient contract in writing within s. 4 of the Statute of Frauds, and specific performance refused as against the purchaser. Rishton v. Whatmore, 8 L. R., Ch. D., 467; 47 L. J., Ch., 629; 26 W. R. 827.

4. Seem, that a contract signed by an auctioneer on behalf of an undisclosed proprietor is a valid contract under the Statute of Frauds. Beer v. London & Paris Hotel Co., 20 L. R., Eq., 412; 42 L. T., N. S., 715.

V. AUCTIONEER AS PARTY TO SUIT.

5. Although it is the law that an auctioneer holding the deposit on a purchase may be made a defendant in an action for specific performance, yet, as a general rule, the proper practice is not to make him a defendant when the deposit is of small amount, unless he refuses to pay it into court when required; but where the deposit is of large amount, he may be properly made a defendant, unless he has paid into court before action brought. Egmont (Earl) v. Smith, Smith v. Egmont (Earl), 6 L. R., Ch. D., 469; 46 L. J., Ch., 356.

6. The plaintiff, who had bought property at an auction and paid a deposit to the auctioneers, brought an action against the vendors and the auctioneers to have the contract rescinded, the deposit repaid with interest, the costs of the action paid, and for damages. The statement of claim alleged that all, or nearly all, of the biddings previous to that of the plaintiff were fictitious, and were either biddings by the vendors or their agents, or were announced by the auctioneer without any bidding having in fact been made. The auctioneers applied for liberty to pay the deposit into court, and to have the action dismissed against them on such payment being made. The Master of the Rolls made an order that, the vendors undertaking to pay the auctioneers their costs of the action without prejudice to how they should ultimately be borne, and to pay any interest and damages to which the plaintiff might be held entitled, and the auctioneers undertaking, in the event of the vendors not carrying out their undertaking, to pay to the plaintiff interest on the deposit up to the time of payment into court, and the costs of the action up to and including that application in the event of the Court holding the plaintiff entitled to interest and costs, the auctioneers should be at liberty to pay the deposit into court, and that all further proceedings against them should be stayed. But held, on appeal, that the order must be discharged, the auctioneers not having submitted to give the plaintiff all the relief which he could in any event be entitled to against them; for that if the allegations in the statement of claim were established, the plaintiff would be entitled to have judgment against them for the deposit with interest, and to have an order for costs of the action against all the defendants. Heatley v. Newton, 19 L. R., Ch. D., 326; 51 L. J., Ch., 225; 45 L. T. 455; 30 W. R. 72.

Semble, that it would not have been open to him to make them parties for the mere purpose of discovery. Dickson v. Harrison (9 L. R., Ch. D., 243) explained. S. O. 45 L. T. 455; 30 W. R. 72.

IV. Sales by Agents.

- I. Authority, 7153.
- II. Signature, 7156.
- III. Personal Liability of Agents, 7156.
- IV. Other Cases, 7156.

I. AUTHORITY.

1. Sufficiency and Proof of, 7153.
2. Parol Authority, 7155.
3. Of Estate Agents, 7155.
4. How Pledged, 7155.

1. Sufficiency and Proof of.

1. Purchaser, under particulars giving a false description, not bound at law or in equity, or by any act of his agent, without a fresh authority. Devereil v. Bolton (Lord), 18 Ves. 509.

2. A. and B. having entered into a verbal treaty for the purchase of certain premises belonging to A., and not being able to agree as to the amount of the purchase-money, A. addressed a letter to C., a third person, stating that he would take a certain sum from B. for the premises, reserving a small portion of the same for his sister, if C. approved of it. B. subsequently lodged the sum named by A. with C., of which lodgment C. made a memorandum on A.'s letter, with the remark that it was "a great price":—Held, that C. must be considered the agent of A., and that, as he had signed the contract acknowledging the receipt of the purchase-money, A. was bound to perform the agreement. Field v. Boland, 1 Dr. & Wal. 37.

3. Baron and feme having joint power to sell an estate of the wife's, give authority to an agent to sell by auction; he sells by private contract for more than the price they required; the buyer cannot compel specific performance. Husband delivering his wife's compliments in a letter to the agent, is no proof of her joining in giving authority to agent. Daniel v. Adams, Amb. 495.

4. E., in February 1857, entered into an agreement, for himself and brothers and sisters, to sell to the plaintiff eight fields, forming part of an estate, for 1,000*l.*, and the plaintiff was to have possession on the 25th March. The agreement was signed by A. and B. only; but the bill alleged that E., and his four brothers and sisters, who were tenants in common of the equity of redemption, agreed to sell the property to the plaintiff, and that A. and B., or at least one of them, signed the agreement as agents or agent of their brothers and sister. The plaintiff, with the privy of the five tenants in common, paid the purchase-money to the mortgagee in part satisfaction of the mortgage, and he was let into possession, and expended moneys in draining. An abstract of title was furnished, and accepted; but before the conveyance was prepared, the plaintiff and his solicitor received notice not to prepare it, as the five vendors would not execute it, on the ground that one of them did not concur in the sale, and the others declined to complete. E. and A. and B. admitted that they agreed to sell the fields to the plaintiff, and that they believed their brothers and sister would concur in the agreement, but that they had no authority from them to sell, of which the plaintiff was aware. A. and B. denied that they signed on behalf of any one. C. and D. denied that they had ratified the agreement, and submitted that they were not bound; but, in fact, D. was with E. and A. and B. present when the purchase-money of 1,000*l.* was paid to the mortgagee. E. and A. and B. submitted to a decree for specific performance:—Held, first, that there was not enough to show that C. was bound by the agreement; but that D., the other tenant in common, was bound, having been present when the 1,000*l.* was paid to the mortgagee, and perfectly cognisant of what took place. Davies v. Davies, 6 Jur., N. S., 1320.

Held, secondly, that as to C.'s one-sixth share in the equity of redemption, the plaintiff was entitled to a decree that he should redeem or be foreclosed; and in case of redemption, that there should be a petition. Id.

5. The owner of an estate, in answer to an inquiry from an intending lessee, said, "A. B. manages all my affairs, and you are to treat with him." This does not imply that A. B. had authority to enter into a binding agreement. Semble. Ridgway v. Wharton, 8 De G. M. & G. 677. And see S. C. 6 H. L. Ca. 238; 27 L. J., Ch., 46; 5 W. R. 804; 2 Eq. Rep. 839.

6. Where the authority of the agent of the vendor was not sufficiently shown, a specific performance at the suit of the purchaser was refused, but, under the circumstances, without costs. Wilkinson v. Stringer, 16 Jur. 1033.

7. If an agent for a purchaser, having a general authority, contracts to purchase such title as the vendor has, the Court will compel specific performance of the contract. St. John v. Stirling, 7 L. J., Ch., 189.

8. Where the same solicitor, acting for both parties in a matter of sale and purchase, submitted conditions which he represented to be "usual conditions," and the purchaser afterwards refused to complete, on the ground that some of them were unusual:—Held, that the purchaser must be considered to have acted under the advice of his own solicitor, and that specific performance must be decreed. Minton v. Kirwood, 12 Jur., N. S., 86; 14 W. R. 274; 13 L. T., N. S., 743. Affirmed 12 Jur., N. S., 970; 15 W. R. 116.

9. A purchaser alleged, by his answer to a suit for specific performance, that he acted as a puffer in bidding for one lot, and also as puffer in bidding for another lot, which was knocked down to him; and that he therefore purchased the lot, and signed the agreement for the purchase, as the agent of the vendor; but the statement in his depositions of the circumstances attending the signature was somewhat different from that in his answer, and he had signed an order on his attorney for payment of the deposit money:—Held, that there was not sufficient evidence of agency, and the defendant was held to have purchased on his own account. Bennett v. Smith, 16 Jur. 421.

1. B. became the purchaser of premises at an auction, declaring himself the agent of C. in C.'s presence; but the vendor's solicitor required B. to sign the agreement, and declined to substitute the name of C. Communications afterwards took place between the vendor's solicitor and C., with reference to the title. The vendors afterwards brought their bill against B. and C. for specific performance of the contract:—Held, that, supposing B. to be the agent of C., yet the signature of B. to the contract made him personally liable to perform it. That the communication between the vendor's solicitors and the solicitor of C. with reference to the title, was not an adoption of C. as the purchaser in the place of B., but should be assumed to be made in furtherance of the original contract, in which, according to B.'s representation, he was (as between himself and C.) only a formal party. That the bill of the vendors having been dismissed against C. at his instance, C. would not be allowed to set up, in a suit by B. against himself, that the decree against B. in the suit of the vendors had been improperly obtained in his absence. That the acceptance of the title by C. in such communications would not be binding upon B., for such acceptance would be regarded as having been made in C.'s own right, as claiming through B., and not as agent for B. Chadwick v. Maden, 9 Hare 188; 21 L. J., Ch., 876.

2. B., in writing, authorised his solicitor, M., to sell all the property mentioned, and to sign an agreement for such sale on his behalf. M. shortly afterwards offered the property to H., who was another client of his, and he, after some consideration, entered into a contract for the purchase of the property. The contract was signed by M. for B., and by H. as acting on his own behalf. B. at first approved of the contract, but he subsequently refused to complete the same, on the grounds of concealment, and that M. was in a situation of confidential relation to both parties:—Held, that the circumstances showed no concealment or unfair conduct; that the authority given to M. was sufficient to enable him to enter into the contract; that it was properly used, and that the contract must be specifically performed by B. Hesse v. Briant, 2 Jur., N. S., 922.

Held, also, that the rule which will not permit a person in a confidential relation to act on behalf of both vendor and purchaser did not apply. Ib.

3. A. B. was authorised by the defendant to make a proposal of sale of some land to the plaintiff, but to be accepted within a week. The plaintiff wrote to A. B. within that time, accepting the offer, but A. B. did not communicate the acceptance to the defendant until long after:—Held, that there was a valid contract, which was not destroyed by the neglect of A. B. to communicate the acceptance to the defendant. Wright v. Bigg, 15 Beav 592.

4. An agreement to sell property was signed for a company by the secretary, who was alleged to be its authorised agent. The agreement was made subject to conditions of sale, and it was alleged that the vendors therein described referred to the company. The conveyance was prepared for execution when the company was ordered to be wound up, and the liquidator repudiated the contract on the ground that the secretary was not an authorised agent for the purpose of sale:—Held, that the allegations in the bill were sufficient to show that the secretary was the authorised agent for the purpose of executing the contract, both within the Statute of Frauds and the Companies Act 1867. Beer v. London & Paris Hotel Co., 20 L. R., Eq., 412; 32 L. T., N. S., 715.

5. An agent, commissioned by a vendor to find a purchaser, has authority to describe the property, and to state any fact or circumstance which may affect the value, so as to bind the vendor; and if an agent so commissioned makes a false statement as to the description or value (though not instructed so to do), which the purchaser is led to believe, and upon which he relies, the vendor cannot recover in an action for specific performance. A surveyor was employed by the owner of a leasehold house to find a purchaser. He represented to the defendant that another person, H., was ready to buy the property for 700*l.*, and that if the defendant were to give 50*l.* more, he would make a clear profit of 7 per cent.; that H. had further offered to rent the property at 300*l.*, or the ground floor only at 200*l.* The defendant, relying on the above representations and others, which were unauthorised by the vendor, and untrue, contracted to purchase for 750*l.*; but afterwards, finding out the falsehood, refused to complete. The vendor himself also made a misleading statement to the purchaser:—Held (independently of the statement made by the vendor himself), that the false statements made by the agent, being within his authority, were sufficient to vitiate the contract; and specific performance refused. Mullens v. Miller, 22 L. R., Ch. D., 194; 52 L. J., Ch., 380; 48 L. T. 103; 31 W. R. 559.

6. W. entered into a verbal agreement with S. to sell him an inn called the Lion Inn for 950*l.* On the following day W.'s solicitor wrote to S.'s solicitor:—"W. has been with us to-day, and stated that he had arranged with your client S. for the sale to the latter of the Lion Inn for 950*l.* We therefore send herewith draft contract for your perusal and approval":—Held, that this letter was not such a note or memorandum of an agreement as is required by the Statute of Frauds. Smith v. Webster, 3 L. R., Ch. D., 49; 45 L. J., Ch., 528; 35 L. T., N. S., 44; 24 W. R. 894. Reversing 45 L. J., Ch., 430; 34 L. T., N. S., 479.

7. Several persons interested in a particular piece of land, authorised, by agreement among themselves, one of their number, W., to dispose of it. The land was divided into lots, and a plan of the lots made, and certain conditions, on which the land might be let or sold, were printed on the plan. M., an intending purchaser, made inquiries of W. as to the sale of certain lots. W. expressly informed him that he must purchase subject to the conditions stated on the plan. One of these conditions required that a purchaser should execute a contract embodying the conditions. M. offered to purchase these lots at a price which he named. W. promised to lay his offer before "the proprietors" (without naming or describing them), and very shortly afterwards wrote to M. that he had done so, and (stating the conditions) that the proprietors had accepted his offer; adding, that in reducing the price they had taken into consideration his intention of soon building on the land, an intention which of course they wished to encourage. W. added that he had instructed the solicitors to forward to M. the agreement for purchase. There was, in fact, nothing in the conditions which bound a purchaser to build, though there were provisions which assumed that he might do so, and which, in such a case, regulated the mode of proceeding. M. wrote back, in answer, that he could not be bound to build at any given time, or at all; that the subject had better be reconsidered, unless W. was prepared to leave him to do as he might think best. W. replied that the acceptance of the offer was without condition, and that M. was free to do what he might think best. M. afterwards declined to complete the purchase:—Held, that the dealings between the parties sufficiently showed the authority of W. to enter into the contract; and, farther, that the description of "the proprietors" for whom he acted was sufficient. Rossiter v. Miller, 3 L. R., App. Cas., 1124; 39 L. T., N. S., 173; 26 W. R. 865; 48 L. J., Ch., 10. Reversing 5 L. R., Ch. D., 648; 37 L. T., N. S., 14; 25 W. R. 890; 46 L. J., Ch., 727; which reversed 46 L. J., Ch., 228; 36 L. T., N. S., 304; 25 W. R. 890.

2. Parol Authority.

1. Authority of agent may be by parol; the agreement must be by writing. Mortlock v. Buller, 10 Ves. 311.

2. A contract for the purchase of land made by an agent will be enforced, although the agent was appointed merely by parol. Heard v. Pilley, 4 L. R., Ch., 548; 38 L. J., Ch., 718; 17 W. R. 750; 21 L. T., N. S., 68.

In a bill filed by a purchaser for specific performance of a contract for sale, it was alleged that the contract was made by one of the defendants as agent for the plaintiff, but that the agent claimed the benefit of the contract for himself. It appeared by the statements in the bill, that the agent was appointed merely by parol. Demurrer by the two defendants, the agent and the vendor, was overruled. Id.

3. An agent to contract for the sale, etc., of land, under the second section of the Statute of Frauds (Irish Statute), need not to be authorised by writing. Clinan v. Cooke, 1 Sch. & Lef. 22.

4. A contract for the purchase of land made by an agent in his own name, vests the equitable estate in the principal, and may be established by him against the agent and persons claiming under him, although the agent is appointed merely by parol. Cave v. Mackenzie, 46 L. J., Ch., 564; 37 L. T., N. S., 218.

The plaintiffs appointed by parol W. F. M. as their agent to purchase land on their behalf. W. F. M. entered into a contract for the purchase of the land in his own name, and then assigned the benefit of the contract to J. T. M. for valuable consideration. In an action by the plaintiffs against W. F. M. and J. T. M. to establish the agency, the vendor not being a party:—Held, that the appointment of W. F. M. was an agency within s. 4 of the Statute of Frauds, and not a trust or confidence within s. 7, and therefore was not required to be evidenced by writing. Id.

Held, also, that the plea of purchase for value without notice raised by J. T. M. was of no avail, inasmuch as the prior equitable title vested in the plaintiffs by force of the contract. Id.

3. Of Estate Agents.

5. Upon a written request by an owner of freehold property to an estate agent to procure a purchaser for it and to advertise it at a certain price:—Held, that the estate agent had no authority to enter into an open contract for sale; and, semble, that he had no authority to enter into any contract for sale. Hamor v. Sharp, 19 L. R., Eq., 108; 44 L. J., Ch., 53; 23 W. R. 158; 31 L. T., N. S., 648.

6. When an owner of property employs an estate agent to procure a purchaser or tenant at a specified price, the agent has no implied authority to conclude a contract for sale; his duty is simply to find a purchaser or tenant, and to communicate his offer to the owner. Wilde v. Watson, 1 L. R., Ir., 402.

4. How Pleaded.

7. In an action for specific performance of an agreement made by an agent, the statement of defence, after alleging unsoundness of mind of the principal, denied that any agreement had been entered into by a person lawfully authorised, and claimed the benefit of the Statute of Frauds:—Held, that the defendant had not put in issue the question of authority of the agent, and was only entitled to adduce evidence with respect to the unsoundness of mind. Byrd v. Nunn, 47 L. J., Ch., 1; 7 L. R., Ch. D., 284.

8. The former practice, which, in a suit for specific performance, required the authority of an agent to enter into a binding contract on behalf of his principal to be specially pleaded, still prevails. Vale of Neath Colliery Co. v. Furness, 34 L. T., N. S., 231; 45 L. J., Ch., 276; 24 W. R. 631.

When, therefore, a plaintiff in his statement of claim alleged that the defendant "duly authorised J. to act as his agent in and about the purchase" of a colliery, that J. acting as such agent wrote a letter to B., "who was then duly authorised to act in the matter of the sale of the colliery as agent for the plaintiff," offering 6,000*l.* for the colliery, and that

B. by the plaintiff's direction by letter accepted the offer, adding, "I will send you draft contract in due course":—Held, that there was no sufficient allegation that J. and B. were duly authorised to sign a binding contract on behalf of their principals. Id.

II. SIGNATURE.

1. Vendor is bound by signature of agent's clerk, thus: "Witness E. P. for Mr. S. agent for the seller," upon evidence of assent; but clerks in general have no authority to bind the principal. Coles v. Trecothick, 9 Ves. 234; 1 Smith 233.

2. An agent not being able to write, held the top of the pen while another person wrote his name to an agreement:—Held, a sufficient signature. Helshaw v. Langley, 11 L. J., N. S., Ch., 17.

3. Specific performance of a contract concerning land, not decreed on the signature of an agent without authority. Howard v. Braithwaite, 1 Ves. & B. 202.

4. Quære, whether the signature of an attorney to a statement at the foot of a draft agreement, signifying his approval of the draft on behalf of his client, is a signature within the Statute of Frauds. Thornbury v. Bevil, 1 Y. & Coll. C. C. 554; 6 Jur. 407.

By Auctioneer.] See III. IV. ante.

III. PERSONAL LIABILITY OF AGENTS.

5. Attorney, as agent, on sale of an estate, not disclosing to the buyer an incumbrance, and leading him to suppose the title good:—Held, liable to make satisfaction in default of the vendor. Arnot v. Bischoe, 1 Ves. 95.

6. When a person assumes, without authority, to act as agent for the sale of real estate, and the contract is merely verbal, the person injured by relying on his representations has no remedy in equity against him for damages on the ground of part performance; and there is nothing in the Judicature Acts to alter this rule. Warr v. Jones, 24 W. R. 695.

7. A. B., an attorney representing himself to be authorised by the owners, entered into an agreement on their behalf to sell a house to the plaintiff, and he received a deposit. The plaintiff filed a bill against the owners and A. B. praying a specific performance, and in the alternative that if the agreement could not be enforced against the owners, then that A. B. might repay the deposit and the costs incurred by the plaintiff and of the suit. It appeared at the hearing that A. B. had not authority to sell:—Held, that the remedy of the plaintiff against A. B. being altogether at law, could not be had in this suit, and the bill was dismissed with costs. Sainsbury v. Jones, 5 Myl. & C. 1; 4 Jur. 499. Affirming 2 Beav. 462.

8. B. became the purchaser of premises at an auction, declaring himself the agent of C. in C.'s presence, but the vendors' solicitor required B. to sign the agreement, and declined to substitute the name of C. Communications afterwards took place between the vendors' solicitor and C. with reference to the title. The vendors afterwards brought their bill against B. and C., for specific performance of the contract:—Held, that supposing B. to be the agent of C., yet the signature of B. to the contract made him personally liable to perform it; that the communication between the vendors' solicitor and the solicitor of C., with reference to the title, was not an adoption of C. as the purchaser in the place of B., but should be assumed to be made in furtherance of the original contract, in which, according to B.'s representation, he was (as between himself and C.) only a formal party; that, the bill of the vendors having been dismissed against C. at his instance, C. would not be allowed to set up, in a suit by B. against himself, that a decree against B., in a suit of the vendors, had been improperly obtained in his absence; that the acceptance of his title by C., in such communications, would not be binding upon B., for such acceptance would be regarded as having been made in C.'s own right as claiming through B., and not as agent for B. Chadwick v. Maden, 9 Hare 188; 21 L. J., N. S., Ch., 876.

9. If a party executes a deed as principal, he at once takes the property and makes himself liable for the purchase-money, and he will not be heard to say that no contract existed with the vendor, or that his execution was obtained upon the representation of a third party that the purchase-money was paid, and that he took the property in the character of trustee only. Wilson v. Keating, 5 Jur., N. S., 815; 28 L. J., Ch., 895.

IV. OTHER CASES.

10. Where an agent contracts it may be proved by parol evidence who is his principal. Morris v. Wilson, 5 Jur., N. S., 168.

11. The owner of a colliery placed it in the hands of an agent to sell at a minimum price of 12,000*l.*, on the understanding that he should be entitled to the difference between 12,000*l.* and any greater sum which the colliery might fetch. The agent treated with R. & Co., who agreed (in the event which happened) to purchase the colliery for 12,000*l.*, and pay the agent 2,000*l.* for his expenses and commission in the matter. R. & Co. afterwards declined to purchase the colliery, and the agent filed a bill against them and the owner of the property for specific performance of the agreement:—Held, that the bill was not maintainable. Glasbrook v. Richardson, 23 W. R. 51.

12. To a claim for specific performance of an agreement to sell lands, the defendant pleaded, first, that the agreement was entered into by a house agent, who was not authorised by the defendant to sell; secondly, that since the contract the defendant had notice that the purchasers were trustees of a marriage settlement, and that the property, which was an underlease, might be an improper investment of the trust funds. Interrogatories by the defendant, directed to establish the case that the investment was a breach of trust, were ordered to be struck out as irrelevant. Mansfield v. Childerhouse, 46 L. J., Ch., 30; 2 L. R., Ch. D., 82.

V. Sales at a Valuation.

1. Where there is a contract to sell at a valuation by A., B., and C., the Court will compel the vendor to permit the valuation. Morse v. Merest, 6 Madd. 26.

The time of valuation is of the essence of the contract; but the defendant cannot take advantage of it, if he has improperly occasioned the delay. Id.

2. Though a person may agree to sell at a price to be fixed by arbitration, and the award can be impeached only upon the grounds affecting all awards, as fraud or gross mistake; yet upon such an agreement, where some of the persons to be bound were married women, of whom also one had not executed, the Court refused a specific performance, and dismissed the bill, leaving the plaintiff to law. Emery v. Wase, 5 Ves. 846.

3. Agreement for sale, according to the valuation of two persons, one chosen by each party, or of an umpire, to be appointed by those two, in case of disagreement. Bill for a specific performance that the Court will appoint a person to make the valuation, or otherwise ascertain it, dismissed. Milnes v. Gery, 14 Ves. 400.

A contract that does not settle the price is valid and complete only when and if the party to whom it is referred shall fix it, and is otherwise totally inoperative. Id. 408.

Agreement to sell at a fair valuation, may be executed. Id. 407.

4. Specific performance cannot be decreed to an agreement to sell at a price to be fixed by arbitrators (already appointed to settle other matters in dispute between the parties), where the defendant (the vendor) had refused to execute the arbitration bond, and it was therefore uncertain that any award would ever be made. Wilks v. Davis, 3 Meriv. 507.

5. Specific performance will not be decreed of an agreement to sell certain property at a price to be settled by two persons who are named, if the Court sees reason to believe that the price subsequently fixed by these persons is considerably below the real value of the property. Parken v. Whitby, T. & R. 366.

If in the course of proceedings in a suit for specific performance, there comes out a fact not put in issue in the cause by either party which affects the legality of the contract, or tends to show that the contract is not fully stated in the bill, the Court will direct an inquiry into the fact so disclosed. Id.

6. A specific performance cannot be decreed of an agreement to sell at a price to be settled by arbitrators named by the parties, if no award has been made; but if the parties agree to pay the amount of a valuation, but have not appointed any persons to make it, the Court will interfere so as to ascertain the value, and direct a specific performance of the agreement. Daly v. Duggan, 1 Ir. Eq. R. 312.

7. Under a contract for sale at a price to be fixed by an award within a limited time during the lives of the parties, the death of one is not an accident against which the Court will relieve. Blundell v. Brettaroh, 17 Ves. 241. And see Puteney v. Warren, 6 Ves. 88.

Specific performance refused, under a contract for sale, at a price to be fixed by arbitrators within a certain time, or if they should not agree to make their award within the time, by an umpire, also within a limited time; the construction of the contract (requiring the delivery of the award in writing to each party) being, that though the consequential acts, executing the conveyances, etc., might be done by representatives, it was, with reference to the terms to be fixed by the award, personal to the parties, one of whom died before it. Id. 232.

8. The price is of the essence of a contract of sale; if therefore to be fixed by arbitrators, and they do not fix it, there is no contract, but the Court determining that an agreement ought to be executed, does not require foreign aid to carry the details into execution. Gourlay v. Somerset, 19 Ves. 431.

9. Specific performance of contract by competent party, and its nature and circumstances unobjectionable, are as much of course in equity as damages at law. Hall v. Warren, 9 Ves. 608.

Upon bill for specific performance of contract, overreached by commissions of lunacy, the plaintiffs not having traversed the inquiry, an issue was directed whether the defendant was lunatic at the execution; if so, whether he had lucid intervals, and whether the contract was executed during a lucid interval; the difficulties in executing the contract which was for sale of estate vested in lunatic, viz., that the price was to be fixed by persons to be nominated, not appearing strong enough to preclude the previous inquiry with a view to performance, the plaintiff being willing to take the title. Id. 605.

10. Agreement between vendor and purchaser of a copyhold estate, in which they covenant for themselves and their representatives to fulfil the contract, and to refer the question of value. One of the parties dying, the representatives cannot annul the decision of the referee, by showing an error in his estimate, or compel the acceptance of the penalty, under which the agreement was secured, in satisfaction of their breach of contract. Belchier v. Reynolds, 2 Ken. Ch. 87.

11. Option to purchase at a valuation; valuation must not only be made according to the letter of the will, but must be fair and adequate. Option must be declared before valuation. Goodwill an element in the value of a reversionary interest in a public house. Edwards v. Edwards, 1 Jur. 654.

12. Upon a reference to surveyors or other persons of skill, to fix the value of property to be bought or let, they are not necessarily to examine witnesses, but may judge from their own experience and observation; their not having examined witnesses is, therefore, not an objection to their award, provided they bonâ fide mean to say that they know enough of the subject to decide properly without doing so. Semble, it is not a good ground of objection to an award relating to the value of a mine, that one of the referees did not himself go down the mine but left it to another person to report to him. Semble, it would not be a good ground of objection to an award, that the referees consulted with the umpire simply. But where a referee consulted with the umpire, and then concurred in an award fixing the value of the matter in question at the amount mentioned to him by the umpire, although he himself did not think it worth half of that amount, but because he thought it of no use differing:—Held, that the award was bad. Semble, referees must sign the award together. An award signed by the referees and by the umpire was treated merely as the award of the referees. An award was made on the 13th April; it was invalid if properly objected to; it was objected to on the 8th August by a party who knew of it on or a day or two after the 18th June. Semble, that the objection was made in due time. Specific performance refused on ground of delay. Eads v. Williams, 4 De G. M. & C. 674; 3 W. R. 98; 1 Jur., N. S., 193; 3 Eq. Rep. 244. Reversing 2 W. R. 506.

1. By the terms of the agreement the land was to be valued, and the purchase-money was not to be less than 400*l*. Quere, whether this agreement could be enforced, no valuation having been made. Potts v. Thames Haven Dock & Railway Co., 15 Jur. 1004.

2. A purchaser having agreed to buy certain land and bleach works for 7,700*l*., and to take the plant and machinery at a valuation:—Held, that the necessity of a valuation was no reason for refusing specific performance at the suit of the vendor. Jackson v. Jackson, 1 Sm. & G. 184; 22 L. J., Ch., 873.

A. agrees to purchase a house at a certain price, and to take the machinery and fixtures at a valuation to be ascertained by valuers appointed on each side, who were to appoint a third party as umpire in case they should not agree upon the amount. The valuers were appointed by the vendor and purchaser, but they had not come to any agreement as to the amount, nor had they appointed an umpire. The purchaser refused to join in reappointing valuers, and declined to complete his contract. Upon a claim by the vendor, specific performance of the whole agreement decreed with costs, the question of valuation to be settled by the chief clerk in chambers. S. C. 1 W. R. 264; 17 Jur. 293.

3. Lands were settled to such uses as Sir C. M. and his son should by deed jointly direct, and subject thereto to Sir C. M. and his son successively for life, with remainders over to the sons of the son in tail. A railway company having under their Act power to take the lands thus settled, Sir C. M. and his son contracted for the sale to them of a certain part of the lands, and the company were let into possession on an agreement that the amount of compensation should be settled either by arbitration or a jury as Sir C. M. should choose: the company also paid a sum of money to Sir C. M. expressly on account of the compensation money to be ultimately fixed; Sir C. M., however, died before anything further was done:—Held, under these circumstances, that there was no contract, the specific performance of which the Court could enforce or aid in carrying into effect as a defective execution of the joint power of appointment, at the instance of the son and against the parties entitled in remainder under the settlement. Morgan v. Milman, 3 De G. M. & G. 24; 17 Jur. 193; 22 L. J., Ch., 897; 1 W. R. 143. Affirming 16 Jur. 756.

Where on a sale of property the parties have stipulated that the price shall be ascertained in a particular way, and it is not so ascertained, the Court cannot, in the absence of special circumstances, interfere to aid the carrying out of the contract by having the price ascertained in some different mode. Id.

4. Where a railway company agreed for the purchase of lands from persons under disability, and the certificate of two surveyors, as to the adequacy of price, had not been obtained, the Court refused to decree specific performance at the instance of the company. Wycombe Railway Co. v. Donnington Hospital, 1 L. R., Ch., 268; 12 Jur., N. S., 347; 14 W. R. 359; 14 L. T., N. S., 179.

5. In a suit for specific performance, where possession and expenditure are fairly referable to an express agreement with the landowner, to give an adequate consideration, to be calculated on a principle sufficiently defined in the agreement, the Court will, in favour of the possession and expenditure, endeavour to decree a specific performance; but not where the plaintiff after filing his bill, but before the hearing, has obtained by an Act of Parliament the means of securing and keeping his possession without the aid of the Court. Meynell v. Surtees, 3 Sm. & G. 101; 1 Jur., N. S., 80. Affirmed 2 Jur., N. S., 737; 25 L. J., Ch., 257; 3 W. R. 535.

6. The defendant agreed to purchase a property at a valuation to be made by A. The Court, though it considered A.'s valuation very high, "and perhaps exorbitant," decreed specific performance, there appearing neither "fraud, mistake, nor miscarriage." Collier v. Mason, 25 Beav. 200.

7. A. entered into a contract with B. for the sale of property to him at a price to be fixed by two valuers, named in the contract, who afterwards valued the property at an inadequate price:—Held, nevertheless, that B. was entitled to a decree for specific performance, there being no proof of fraud or collusion on the part of the valuers. Weekes v. Gallard, 21 L. T., N. S., 655; 18 W. R. 331.

8. Difference between a contract to sell at a price, to be determined by arbitration, and a contract which is only to be valid provided the price fixed be not less than the value determined by arbitration. Baker v. Metropolitan Railway Co., 1 N. R. 8; 32 L. J., Ch., 7; 11 W. R. 18; 7 L. T., N. S., 494; 31 Beav. 504; 9 Jur., N. S., 61.

9. An agreement for the sale of leasehold premises and the goodwill of a trade and fixtures, to be taken at a valuation to be made by two gaugers, to be named, or their umpire:—Held, that a court of equity could not decree a specific performance of an agreement, one part of which was left to be determined by arbitration. Darby v. Whitaker, 4 Drew. 134.

D. agrees with W. and another in writing to sell to them a lease, trade, and goodwill, subject to the rent and ordinary covenants, but free from all other incumbrances; also, to sell the tenant's fixtures, furniture, and effects, at such sum as the same should be valued at by two persons named, or their umpire, and all the stock of beer not exceeding a specified quantity at the valuation of two licensed gaugers or their umpire. And for the consideration aforesaid the purchasers agreed to accept an assignment without requiring evidence of title prior to the lease, and if either party neglected to perform the agreement he should pay to the other 150*l.* as liquidated damages. The defendants, alleging misrepresentation, refused to produce the lease under which the plaintiff held, and the forfeiture of the lease by change of a policy, refused to complete:—Held, that all these objections were untenable; but specific performance refused, on the ground that the clause as to fixtures and stock could not be enforced. S. C. 5 W. R. 772.

Semble, the Court will not decree payment of a valuation to be made, but will enforce a contract for purchase of a goodwill where it is annexed to the premises. Id.

1. A contract for the sale of land provided that one party was to be consulted on any houses proposed to be built thereon by the other, and in case of difference, that A. and B., or their nominees, should have power to decide any such question. There having been no decision:—Held, that the Court could not specifically perform the contract. Tillett v. Charing Cross Bridge Co., 26 Beav. 419.

2. A. and B., being in partnership as distillers, came to an agreement whereby B. was to buy out A., and it was agreed that if B. should, during A.'s life, be desirous of retiring, he should give notice, and A. should then have an option of repurchase, on the terms that within six months after notice by A. the premises, goodwill, stock in trade, and all such of the subsisting contracts as A. should be willing to take, should be valued in the "usual way" by two valuers, one to be named by A., the other by B., or by the umpire of the two valuers. B. gave notice of his intention to retire, whereupon A. gave notice of his intention to repurchase, and two valuers were appointed; but after the appointment B. refused to allow his valuer to proceed with the valuation:—Held, on the authority of Milnes v. Gery (14 Ves. 400), and Wilks v. Davis (3 Meriv. 507), that there was no contract between the parties which the Court could specifically enforce. Vickers v. Vickers, 4 L. R., Eq., 529; 36 L. J., Ch., 946.

3. When an agreement has been entered into for the sale of a house at a fixed price, and of the fixtures and furniture therein, at a valuation by a person named by both parties, and he undertakes the valuation, but is refused permission by the vendor to enter the premises for that purpose, the Court will make a mandatory order to compel the vendor to allow the entry to enable the valuation to proceed. Smith v. Peters, 20 L. R., Eq., 511; 44 L. J., Ch., 613; 23 W. R. 783.

4. When two partners made an agreement, containing a provision that on the determination of the partnership, one partner should purchase the share of the other at a valuation to be made by two persons, one to be appointed by each partner, and the partnership was carried on for some time under the agreement:—Held, that though the valuation could not be so made, because no umpire was provided, a court of equity would carry the partnership agreement into effect by ascertaining the value of the share. Dinham v. Bradford, 5 L. R., Ch., 519.

Where the fixing a value by arbitrators is not of the essence of an agreement, the Court will carry the agreement into effect, and will itself, if necessary, ascertain the value. Id.

5. By the contract for the sale of an estate it was agreed that the price should be 24,000*l.*, and that certain furniture and other articles on the estate, the value of which was about 2,000*l.*, should be valued by valuers mutually agreed upon, and that the purchaser would take a part of the furniture and articles at that valuation. The vendor refused to appoint a valuer, and refused to complete. A decree made at the suit of the purchaser for specific performance of the contract, except so far as it related to the furniture and articles. Richardson v. Smith, 5 L. R., Ch., 648; 39 L. J., Ch., 877; 19 W. R. 81.

6. A landowner, through whose land a railway company proposed to pass, agreed in May 1864 to withdraw his opposition to their bill on the terms that the company would vary the course of their line and make certain bridges, works, and approaches. The company gave a notice to treat, and on the 20th March 1867 they went into possession. On the 27th May a further agreement was come to that the company should pay 2,250*l.* for purchase-money and compensation, and should construct the bridges askew according to an agreed plan. The company constructed the line as agreed upon, but did not complete the works, nor pay the purchase-money, nor the interest, though the completion of the works was demanded in July 1868, and payment of interest in December 1868. On the 6th February 1869 a substituted agreement was made between the landowner and the company, whereby it was agreed that an estimate should be made by the company's engineer of the costs of completing the road, and submitted to A., the landowner's agent, "for approval; in case of difference the amount to be determined by B.," the amount, when agreed or determined, to be paid to the landowner, in discharge of all obligations as to the road; and the purchase to be completed forthwith. In December 1871 A. died; and in May 1872 the company, for the first time, sent in an estimate for the cost of completing the road. The purchase had not been completed, and neither the purchase-money nor any interest had been paid. B. was living:—Held, that the submission of the estimate to A. for approval was of the essence of the agreement of the 6th February 1869; and that, inasmuch as by his death the agreement was incapable of being performed in the manner and form therein specified, the Court could not enforce performance of it. Firth v. Midland Railway Co., 20 L. R., Eq., 100; 44 L. J., Ch., 313; 32 L. T. 219; 23 W. R. 509.

Umpire, Appointment of, by Court. 7. A vendor and purchaser entered into an agreement for the sale of some property, at a price to be fixed by two valuers mentioned in the agreement, and as to matters in difference between the valuers, by an umpire to be appointed by such valuers before entering upon the valuation. The valuers could not agree upon an umpire:—Held, that the 12th section of the 17 & 18 Vict., c. 125, did not empower the Court to appoint an umpire, there being no "case of arbitration" within that section. Collins v. Collins, 26 Beav. 306; 5 Jur., N. S., 30; 28 L. J., Ch., 184; 7 W. R. 115; 32 L. T. 233.

I. PARTICULARS. IN GENERAL.

1. A particular writing for the purchase of an estate, no writing within the Statute of Frauds, unless the party purchased by it, or that it was shown him at the time of purchase, so that, if that contains more than the words of the conveyance will in strictness carry, the purchaser cannot compel specific execution of the residue on the particular. Cass v. Waterhouse, Pre. Ch. 29.

2. Observations upon the duty of a vendor in preparing particulars of the estate to be sold. Martin v. Cotter, 3 J. & L. 496; 9 Ir. Eq. R. 351. And see 9 Ir. Eq. R. 44.

3. Property put up for sale at public auctions should be most accurately described; and not merely so described as that a purchaser may, by drawing the proper deductions from the particulars and conditions of sale, ascertain what is intended to be sold. Swainsland v. Dearsley, 7 Jur., N. S., 984; 30 L. J., Ch., 1; 9 W. R. 526; 4 L. T., N. S., 432; 29 Beav. 430.

4. Agreements for sale of an estate, especially if by auction, depend on the bona fides of the transaction; therefore trifling errors in the description are not material. Calcraft v. Roebuck, 1 Ves. 221.

5. Purchaser under particular giving a false description, not bound at law or in equity, nor by any act of his agent without a fresh authority. Deverell v. Bolton (Lord), 18 Ves. 509.

6. Specific performance decreed against a purchaser at a public auction, where the representation in the particulars of sale (complained of as calculated to mislead), was so vague and indefinite, that it ought to have put the purchaser on making previous inquiry. Trower v. Newcome, 3 Meriv. 704.

7. When property is sold by auction it is the office of particulars to give an accurate description of the property. Torrance v. Bolton, 14 L. R., Eq., 124; 41 L. J., Ch., 643; 20 W. R. 718; 27 L. T., N. S., 19. Affirmed 21 W. R. 134; 42 L. J., Ch., 177; 8 L. R., Ch., 118; 27 L. T., N. S., 738.

8. The defendant, an auctioneer, being owner of a sum of 500*l.* stock standing in the names of directors, which had been made an indemnity to provide against costs in a pending chancery suit, put the fund up for sale, under a particular, which stated the above fact, and further, that there was a considerable sum applicable for payment of costs, and that such costs would be paid thereout; also, that the fund of 500*l.* might be looked upon as a secure and sound investment. The plaintiff purchased the fund for 230*l.*, and found afterwards that it was all required to answer the indemnity. The plaintiff alleged that the defendant knew at the time that the fund was liable to be wholly swallowed up in costs. The Court, being of opinion that the defendant had knowledge of this fact:—Held, that he could not be heard to say it was not present to his mind when he put the property up for sale, and decreed rescission of the contract. As against a co-defendant, a solicitor, who had taken no part in the misrepresentation, the action was dismissed. Mathias v. Yettis, 46 L. T. 497.

9. A purchaser, being in possession of adjoining property, purchases a lot under which there is a coal-mine, and on which eighty-eight cottages stand, stated in the particulars to be "in the occupation of the owners" of an adjoining colliery; and there is a condition that "the mines under the lots were reserved to the owners with such powers and privileges as belonged to them." It turning out that the cottages paid no rent, the purchaser claimed compensation. It appeared that they were held under an old deed, giving power to the owners of the mines to build cottages, and compensate the tenants of the land:—Held, that the vendor must state all the truth on the particulars, and inform himself of it when he sells, and the purchaser must be held to have notice of all contained in the particulars and conditions. But those particulars in this case did not lead to the fact of the existence of the deed under which the cottages were held, and therefore there must be inquiries as to the tenure of the cottages. Branding v. Plummer, 2 W. R. 662; 2 Drew. 427; 23 L. J., Ch., 960; 2 Eq. Rep. 1260.

10. Where the vendor of lands in lots for the purpose of buildings, accompanies his description, particulars, and conditions of sale with a map delineating the intended divisions of the property by new roads, he must be understood to hold out expectations that the lots will be so divided, and it would not be competent to him to divide the land in a different manner, so as to attract an occupancy and population entirely different from that which would have been produced by acting on the plan proposed and held out at the sale. Peacock v. Penson, 11 Beav. 355; 18 L. J., N. S., Ch., 57; 12 Jur. 954; 14 id. 518.

11. The actual designation in the particulars of the property offered for sale of the number of acres contained in a lot:—Held, to negative the presumption of any intention, on the part of the vendor, to sell the estate in a lump. Leslie v. Thompson, 9 Hare 273; 20 L. J., N. S., Ch., 561; 15 Jur. 717.

12. Where leasehold property which is sold in separate lots is held under one lease, it is incumbent on the vendor to state that fact in plain and distinct terms. Sheard v. Vemables, 36 L. J., Ch., 922; 15 W. R. 1166; 17 L. T., N. S., 10.

13. A. and his agent attended an auction for the sale of a house, at which certain conditions of sale were exhibited, and with which they became acquainted. A. afterwards, through his agent and the agent of the vendor, purchased the same house:—Held, that the particulars of sale were not incorporated with the purchase, and therefore not binding on the purchaser. Cowley v. Watts, 17 Jur. 172; 22 L. J., Ch., 591.

1. When a purchaser buys a house, and has it conveyed to him without any reservation, he takes the house not "such as it is," but such as it is described in the particulars of sale, and conveyed by the deed. Suffield v. Brown, 10 Jur., N. S., 111; 33 L. J., Ch., 249; 12 W. R. 356; 9 L. T., N. S., 627.

2. Premises were advertised to be sold according to certain printed particulars and conditions of sale. Before the sale took place several of the printed copies were altered by the vendor's solicitor, who introduced in writing a reservation of a right of way to other premises belonging to the vendor. Several of the altered copies of the particulars were laid on the table in the auction-room without any remark with regard to the alteration; and an altered copy was delivered to the auctioneer, who read the same aloud before the biddings commenced; but the party who became the purchaser did not hear or notice the alteration. The contract was signed by the auctioneer (inadvertently) and by the purchaser on a copy of the particulars of sale not containing the reservation. After the purchase money was paid and possession given, the purchaser filed his bill for a specific performance of the contract by a conveyance from the vendor without a reservation of the right of way; and the bill was dismissed without costs. Manser v. Back, 6 Hare 443.

3. Particulars of sale described lot 5 as consisting of a leasehold house, No. 20, of a certain description, with a yard, at the end of which were a coach-house and stable, and small yard beyond, with extra stable; and stated that the house was occupied by W., the yard, coachhouse, etc., by H. Lot 6 was described as a leasehold house, "No. 21, adjoining lot 5, and of similar design and accommodation, is now, and has been for years, in the occupation of T." The two houses were built on adjoining strips of land, each held under a separate lease. The small yard and extra stable lay behind No. 21, and were comprised in the lease of lot 6. The occupation was as stated in the particulars. The plaintiff purchased lot 5, H. lot 6. The plaintiff took an assignment from the vendor of the property in the lease of lot 5, and no more. H., on the following day, took an assignment of all the property comprised in the lease of lot 6, thus obtaining the legal estate in the small yard and extra stable:—Held, that the plaintiff was entitled to an assignment from H. of the small yard and extra stable, for that, according to the true construction of the particulars, H. had not contracted to purchase them, but the plaintiff had. Leuty v. Hillas, 2 De G. & J. 110; 27 L. J., Ch., 534. S. C. before the Vice-Chancellor, 4 Jur., N. S., 1166.

4. When property is sold in lots, described in particulars of sale, a vendee is only affected with notice of what concerns the lots which he purchases, and is not to be taken as having read all the particulars of all the lots. Curtis v. Thomas, 33 L. T., N. S., 664.

II. CONDITIONS. IN GENERAL.

5. Purchaser discharged from purchase against catching conditions of sale. Adams v. Lambert, 2 Jur. 1078.

6. Vendors, having put forth ambiguous conditions of sale:—Held, to be bound strictly by those conditions. Seaton v. Mapp, 2 Colly. 556.

7. Facts stated in the conditions of sale as the grounds of such conditions, must be proved, though it appeared to be the object of the conditions, but not very clearly stated, to exclude inquiry into those facts. Symons v. James, 1 Y. & Coll. C. C. 487; 6 Jur. 452.

8. Where conditions of sale are so obscurely worded, that, when taken in connection with the particulars of sale, they are likely to mislead an ordinary purchaser as to the nature of the property offered for sale, semble, that the Court will discharge the purchaser from his bargain on the argument of exceptions to the title, without putting him to the necessity of moving to be discharged from the purchase. Taylor v. Martindale, 1 Y. & Coll. C. C. 658; 10 L. J., N. S., Ch., 339; 5 Jur. 648.

9. An annuity was granted for the lives of four persons, and the lives and life of the survivors and survivor of them, secured by a term in a reversion of a freehold estate, and the reversion was offered for sale. One of the conditions of sale was, that certain evidence that "a life annuity granted to" A. B. had not been paid or claimed for twenty years, should be conclusive evidence that the annuity and term had determined:—Held (affirming 2 W. R. 280), that the condition was not binding, as the condition was one so worded as to lead a purchaser to a definite conclusion contrary to the real facts of the case. Drysdale v. Maos, 23 L. J., Ch., 518; 2 W. R. 341; 2 Eq. Rep. 386; 5 De G. M. & G. 103.

10. Where conditions of sale are not drawn bonâ fide, but are intended to cover difficulties arising from facts uncommunicated, they will not preclude the purchaser from taking the objection. Jackson v. Whitehead, 28 Beav. 154.

A. having a leasehold bequeathed his residue to his widow for life, and afterwards to two trustees for sale; he appointed his widow, and the two trustees, his executors. The widow remained in possession twenty-three years, and after her death, the executrix of the surviving trustee sold the property, subject to a condition of sale, that the purchaser should admit the assent of the executors to the bequest of the leaseholds to the trustees:—Held, that such a condition was valid, although the vendor did not state that the administratrix, de bonis non, claimed to have the power of selling. Id.

11. Observations on the effect of stringent conditions of sale on the value of property. Hoy v. Smythies, 2 Jur., N. S., 1011.

12. Conditions of sale must be construed strictly against the person who forms them. Greaves v. Wilson, 25 Beav. 290; 4 Jur., N. S., 271; 27 L. J., Ch., 546; 5 W. R. 482.

13. Property was sold by auction on the 15th June. The principal conditions of sale, which were read aloud before the sale, were—(3) that the abstract of title was to be delivered to the purchaser within ten days from the day of sale; (4) that no objection or requisition was to be made in respect of the title prior to a lease of the 10th April 1809; (6) that all requisitions and objections in respect of the title or matters appearing on the abstract should be sent in writing within ten days after the delivery of the abstract to the purchaser or his solicitor, otherwise it shall be considered that all such requisitions or objections were waived by the purchaser, and that he had accepted the title, and for that purpose time should be deemed of the essence of the contract; (8) that the purchaser shall not object to the title in connection with the sale of the premises to R., to whom the assignment of them, dated the 29th January 1870, was made, but should assume that R. acquired under and by virtue of the deed a valid title to the premises by the deed expressed to be assigned to him; (9) that the purchaser should not object to the title because L., in 1858, as a trustee for B., purchased from the trustees of the then owners, B. being one of the last-mentioned trustees. The purchaser's solicitor had not been furnished with any copy of the conditions before the day of sale, though he had asked for them, and had only hastily perused them in the vendor's solicitor's office on the morning of that day, and had no knowledge of the title or its defects. The abstract of title, which was very long and complicated, was delivered to the purchaser's solicitor on the 25th June, and he sent the abstract and a case to counsel on the 26th. The purchaser's solicitor received the opinion of counsel that the title was bad on the 8th July. The title was bad on the ground that R., the assignee of the deed of 1870, had purchased the premises sold for X. and others, X. being one of the trustees for sale of the property so bought, and also on the ground that L., the assignee in the deed of 1858, had purchased for B., who was also a trustee for sale:—Held, in a suit for specific performance by the vendor, first, that whatever opinion might be entertained as to the ninth condition, the eighth condition was so framed as to deceive the purchaser, and entirely throw him off his guard by unwarrantably suppressing and masking a fatal defect in the title. Boyd v. Dickson, 10 Ir. R., Eq., 239.

Held, secondly, that, having regard to the object and frame of the eighth and ninth conditions, and the length and complication of the title, the vendor could not avail himself of the sixth condition, as he could not be heard to say that an objection should be sent in within the limited time, which his other conditions showed could never have been made. Ib.

1. When property is sold by auction it is the office of the particulars to give an accurate description of the property, and of the conditions to state the terms on which the sale is made. Torrance v. Bolton, 14 L. R., Eq., 124; 41 L. J., Ch., 643; 20 W. R. 718; 27 L. T., N. S., 19. Affirmed 21 W. R. 134; 42 L. J., Ch., 177; 8 L. R., Ch., 118; 27 L. T., N. S., 73.

Therefore, when property was put up for sale, and in the particulars, which were advertised, was described as being an absolute reversion in a freehold estate, falling into possession on the death of a lady in her seventieth year; and by the conditions of sale, which were read for the first time at the auction just previously to the commencement of the biddings, the property was stated to be sold subject to two mortgages, on a bill by the purchaser at the auction, who stated that he was deaf, and did not understand that by the conditions he was buying only an equity of redemption in the property:—Held, that although his solicitor paid the deposit on his behalf after having read the conditions, he was entitled to a decree for the rescission of the contract and for a return of the deposit with interest, and a declaration of lien. Ib.

Held, also, that though in an ordinary case, inasmuch as the purchaser's carelessness had contributed to the mistake, he would not have been entitled to the costs of the suit, he might have them on account of having, previously to the commencement of the suit, offered, on condition of having the contract rescinded and the deposit returned, to pay the costs of the sale. Ib.

The Court looks with disfavour on the practice of not producing the conditions of sale till the actual time of the auction. Ib.

2. A condition of sale is bad as misleading, (1) if it requires the purchaser to assume what the vendor knows to be false; (2) if it states that the state of the title is not accurately known when in fact it is known to the vendor. Re Banister, Broad v. Munton, 12 L. R., Ch. D., 131; 48 L. J., Ch., 837; 27 W. R. 826; 40 L. T. 828.

3. An estate was put up to sale by auction. The conditions of sale were drawn out in manuscript, but were not printed or circulated. They were shown in this state to B., a solicitor for a person who was likely to be a purchaser. He objected at once to one of the conditions of sale, as one which the contemplated purchaser could not be advised to assent to. The auction took place, and the objection to this condition was publicly noticed by an indifferent attendant at the sale. The property was bought in. On the following day the proprietor of the estate called upon the contemplated purchaser, and persuaded him to sign an agreement for the purchase of the estate, as it was alleged, at a most exorbitant price, and containing a reference to the objected condition of sale:—Held, that, under such a state of circumstances, specific performance of the agreement could not be enforced. Lee v. Dawson, 4 L. T., N. S., 464.

Auctioneer, Power of. 4. Quere, whether on a sale by auction the auctioneer has authority to frame conditions of sale and to do all things necessary to carry the sale into effect. Pike v. Wilson, 1 Jur., N. S., 59.

III. AS TO OCCUPANCY AND OUTSTANDING LEASES.

5. A statement in the rental that the tenants had taken renewals from the receiver, and the landlord would have a power of distress for renewal fines:—Held, not to amount to a misrepresentation importing that the legal estate in reversion would be assigned to the purchaser. Vaughan v. Magill, 12 Ir. Eq. R. 207. Affirming Id. 200.

1. A vendor, who was an auctioneer, sold an estate, but did not disclose that he was owner; the purchaser had before the sale intimated he would bid a certain price. The property was knocked down at that sum. The particulars of sale stated the property to be let on lease, containing a covenant to keep in repair. The vendor could not show in whom this lease was vested. The purchaser refused to complete, on the ground of no person being shown who could be proceeded against for breach of the covenant to repair, that the vendor had an unfair advantage over him, and that the sale was not conducted bonâ fide; but the Court decreed a specific performance, with costs. Flint v. Woodin, 9 Hare 618; 22 L. J., N. S., Ch., 92; 16 Jur. 719.

2. A purchaser of lands, sold under the decree, and described in the rental as held under a lease that would expire on the 1st June then next, discharged from his purchase, it subsequently appearing that the tenant of part of the lands was entitled, under an equitable article, to a reversionary lease for four lives. Linahan v. Cotter, 7 Ir. Eq. R. 176.

3. The rental described lands as held by lease for three lives and thirty-one years, the lease being for three lives and the survivor, and, in case all the lives should die before the expiration of thirty-one years, for so much of such term of thirty-one years from that period as should be to come upon the decease of the survivor:—Held, that the rental being substantially correct, there was no misrepresentation which would entitle the purchaser to be discharged from the purchase. Vignolles v. Bowen, 12 Ir. Eq. R. 184.

4. In a sale by the direction of the Court, the particulars of sale stated, that lot 12 comprised a house "at present in the occupation of C., at a rental of per annum 42l." The purchaser of this lot paid the deposit, and his purchase was confirmed by order absolute, and he then obtained an order for payment of the remainder of the purchase money into Court. The purchaser afterwards discovered that C. was not tenant to the vendors, but to some person who claimed by an adverse title:—Held, that the description in the particulars of sale must mean that C. was tenant to the vendors for a limited period at a given rent, and that this was a representation so different from the fact that it amounted to such bad faith on the vendor's part as would induce the Court to discharge the purchaser from his contract. Lachlan v. Reynolds, 1 Kay 52; 2 W. R. 49; 23 L. J., Ch., 8.

5. A house was stated in particulars of sale "in the occupation of the Catholic Law and General Insurance Company, under a lease." The company was in occupation by virtue of a lease, which, however, had not been granted to the company, but to A., B., and C., who were their trustees. The vendor's solicitor, immediately before the sale, told the purchaser that he did not remember the names of the lessees, but believed that A. and B. were two of them. The purchaser objected to the title, on the ground that the statement in the particulars amounted to a representation that the company were the lessees:—Held, that, assuming the statement to be such that if the case had stood on the particulars only, the contract ought to have been rescinded, the purchaser, having bought with the above information, must be held to his bargain. Farebrother v. Gibson, 1 De G. & J. 602.

6. T. agreed to sell to C. certain freehold houses, and to make a good marketable title. On investigation of the title it appeared that the houses were part of a property which had been sold by a building society in lots, subject to stringent restrictive covenants which were admitted to make the title not a marketable one. T. having declined to procure a release of the covenants, C. brought an action to recover back his deposit. T. adduced evidence that C. knew of the restrictions at the time of the contract, and the jury found that he did:—Held, that this evidence could not be admitted to modify the terms of the express contract, and that the plaintiff was entitled to recover. Farebrother v. Gibson (1 De G. & J. 602) and Leyland v. Illingworth (2 De G. F. & J. 248) distinguished. Cato v. Thompson, 9 L. R., Q. B. D., 616; 47 L. T., 491.

7. Where particulars and conditions of sale purport to offer an estate in fee simple or possession, the existence of leases for lives over a part of the estate will entitle a purchaser either to rescind the contract or to compensation, according to circumstances. Hughes v. Jones, 10 W. R. 139; 5 L. T., N. S., 408.

A statement in conditions of sale that a purchaser is to be let into the receipt of the rents and profits for a certain day, must be construed to mean ordinary rents and profits, and not rents reserved on leases for lives. Id.

It is the duty of a vendor to qualify, upon the face of particulars, the interest which he intends to sell, if he does not intend to sell an unqualified estate in fee. Id.

8. A vendor, in his particulars of sale, described certain cottages as part of lot 6, and as in the occupation of the owners of the Sedghill Collieries, or their under-tenants or workmen. By a further particular he stated, that "the mines and minerals within and under such of the collieries as were situate within certain townships were reserved to the owners thereof, with such powers and privileges as belonged to them." It turned out that the mine under lot 6 was not the Sedghill Colliery, but the Hazebrigg Colliery, and the owners of the Hazebrigg Colliery had in some way obtained or long used a right to build and use cottages on lot 6 without paying rent, except a trifling compensation for surface damage, and they had transferred their right to the owners of the Sedghill Colliery:—Held, that the particulars did not, on the face of them, convey such information as the vendor ought to have given; but inquiries were directed as to the circumstances under which the cottages were occupied, and whether the owners of the Sedghill Colliery had any right against the vendor. Brandling v. Plummer, 2 Drew. 427; 23 L. J., Ch., 960; 2 W. R. 662; 2 Eq. Rep. 1260.

9. Vendors in September issued particulars of sale, headed "particulars and conditions of sale, first edition." The document contained no conditions, and stated that the property would be sold on October 18th. Lot 8 was therein described as a corner public-house and cottages, without mention of any mortgage. Shortly before the time fixed for the sale the vendors found that a mortgage for 800*l.* upon lot 8 could not be paid off for some years, and thereupon issued a second edition of particulars which postponed the sale till the 16th November, and stated that lot 8 would be sold subject to the mortgage for 800*l.* The sale took place on the 16th November; the defendant, who had the day before received a copy of the first edition of the particulars from a friend of his own, attended with that copy in his hand, and bought lot 8. The contract was signed upon a copy of the second edition, from which the auctioneer read the particulars of lot 8. It was also proved that he stated, in answer to special questions, in the defendant's hearing, that lot 8 would be sold subject to the mortgage. Both editions of the particulars stated the rents of lot 8 at a sum not then actually received, but which would, as notice had been given to the tenants, be payable upon the completion of repairs then contracted to be finished before the day fixed for completion. The particulars described the public-house as let to a responsible tenant for a term of which seventeen years were unexpired. It appeared that only fifteen years of the term were unexpired, and it was determinable in 1881 or 1888, at the option of the tenant:—Held, that neither of these statements was such misrepresentation as to entitle the purchaser to resist specific performance of his contract. Goddard v. Jeffreys, 51 L. J., Ch., 57; 45 L. T. 674; 30 W. R. 269.

1. An undivided moiety of a property was sold by auction, the rent of which was described as 16*l.*; but that was the rental of the whole, and not of a moiety. The purchaser might have discovered this from the rest of the particulars; but having sworn that he had purchased, under a mistake that the sum of 16*l.* was the rental of a moiety, the Court refused to decree a specific performance against him. Smaistland v. Dearsley, 29 Beav. 430; 7 Jur., N. S., 984; 30 L. J., Ch., 1; 19 W. R. 526; 4 L. T., N. S., 432.

It is the duty of a vendor, in his particulars of sale, to describe the property with perfect accuracy, and not leave it to inference. Ib.

2. The particulars of sale stated, that a certain farm, comprising about one-third of the whole of the property, was lately in the occupation of A., at the yearly rent of 290*l.* 15*s.* The facts were, that A. had held a farm for three months previously for a rent of 1*l.*, and that the vendor had afterwards agreed to let the farm at 225*l.* per annum, but the agreement had been rescinded before taking possession, and the evidence showed that the farm would not let for nearly so much as 290*l.*:—Held, that this was a misrepresentation of fact, amounting to fraud, and did not come within the ordinary condition providing for compensation in the event of a mistake, or an error in the particulars; held, that there was such substantial misrepresentation as entitled the purchaser to be discharged. Dimmock v. Hallett, 12 Jur., N. S., 953; 15 W. R. 92; 15 L. T., N. S., 374; 2 L. R., Ch., 21; 36 L. J., Ch., 146.

Other misstatements in the particulars held to be merely over-colouring, and not to amount to misrepresentation. Ib.

3. The Court will not decree specific performance of a contract entered into with a tenant for life for sale of parts of a settled estate in a suit against a tenant for life in remainder alone. A tenant for life contracted to sell parts of a settled estate to a railway company, and to give immediate possession. It appeared that the land was subject to a mining lease, of which there were then thirteen years to run, to a surface lease with four years to run, and to tenancies from year to year, which had been overlooked by the vendor, and for which the company had to pay compensation:—Held, that "possession" meant actual occupation; but the leases having expired before the death of the first tenant for life, and the remaindermen not being bound by the tenancies from year to year, the company had no equity after the death of the first tenant for life, as against a tenant for life in remainder, to deduct the compensation paid by them from the purchase money of the land. North Staffordshire Railway Co. v. Lantton, 3 N. R. 31.

4. The plaintiffs advertised for sale by auction an hotel, stated in the particulars to be held by a "most desirable tenant." The defendants sent their secretary down to inspect the property and report thereon. The secretary reported very unfavourably, stating that the tenant could scarcely pay the rent (400*l.*), rates, and taxes. The defendants, relying on the statements in the particulars, authorised the secretary to attend the sale and to bid up to 5,000*l.* The property was bought in at the sale, and the secretary purchased it by private contract for 4,700*l.* It appeared subsequently that the quarter's rent previous to the sale had not been paid; the previous quarter had been paid by instalments, and six weeks after the sale the tenant filed his petition. It appeared, however, that the hotel business was as good during the last year as previously, and that the month of the tenant's failure was the best he had had. The plaintiffs brought an action for specific performance, relying (in answer to the defence and counter-claim for rescission on the ground of misrepresentation) on the fact that the defendants had made their own inquiries:—Held, that the statement that the property was held by a "most desirable tenant" could not be treated as "simplex commendatio," and that the defendants, having relied thereon, were entitled to rescission of the contract, on the authority of Redgrave v. Hurd (20 L. R., Ch. D., 1). Smith v. Land & House Property Corporation, 49 L. T. 532.

5. A public-house and premises put up for sale by auction were described in the particulars as in the occupation of certain persons at certain rents. The conditions stated that the property was sold "subject to existing tenancies." Certain brewers by their agent became the purchasers of the property at the auction. Shortly afterwards they discovered that the property was in lease to another brewer for a term of years, of which about nine remained unexpired. Thereupon they refused to complete their contract. In a suit against them by the vendor for specific performance:—Held, that there was a misdescription of the property, which precluded the vendor from enforcing the agreement, and that the purchasers had not constructive notice of the lease. Caballero v. Henty, 43 L. J., Ch., 635; 9 L. R., Ch., 447; 22 W. R. 446; 30 L. T., N. S., 314.

Notice by Tenancy.] See NOTICE, IV.

IV. AS TO LOCALITY AND IDENTITY OF THE PROPERTY.

1. At the auction mart in London the defendant purchased a house at Brighton, simply described as "Lot 1, No. 39, Regency Square." He afterwards discovered that the house was not actually in the square, but in a side street communicating with the square, but it was always named 39, Regency Square:—Held, that there was no misdescription; and specific performance was decreed against the purchaser. White v. Bradshaw, 16 Jur. 738.

2. A. bought at an auction a freehold house, described in the particulars of sale as "No. 58, Pall Mall, opposite Marlborough House." The house was not actually in Pall Mall, but at the rear of the houses in that street, approached by a covered passage seventy feet long, of which no mention had been made in the particulars of sale. The vendors were only able to give a right of way over this passage, which passed over a basement not in their possession. Evidence was adduced, showing that the passage was insecurely supported from beneath, and not capable of sustaining heavy weights:—Held, that the purchaser was entitled to have the contract rescinded; the right of access not being such as he was entitled to on the purchase of a freehold property, the particulars of sale having been silent as to the peculiarities of the approach; a man making a contract being entitled to have property which will answer the description. Stanton v. Tattersall, 1 W. R. 602; 1 Eq. Rep. 643; 17 Jur. 967; 1 Sm. & G. 529.

3. Specific performance of a contract for the sale of property, partly freehold and partly leasehold, will not be refused on the ground that the boundaries of the two portions are not distinctly defined, semble. Monro v. Taylor, 3 Macn. & G. 713; 8 Hare 51; 21 L. J., Ch., 525.

V. AS TO QUANTITY AND ACREAGE.

4. A contract for the purchase of a farm described it as containing "349 acres, or thereabout, be the same more or less;" and stipulated that the premises should be taken at the quantity above stated, whether more or less. In fact, the farm consisted of only 349 customary acres, which was less than the same number of statute acres by about 100 acres or upwards. On a bill being filed for specific performance, the purchaser, admitting that he had been for several months in possession of the property, and had exercised acts of ownership over it, on the faith that a good title to 349 acres would be shown, insisted that in the contract "acres" meant "statute acres," and that he was not bound to perform the contract, unless 349 statute acres were conveyed to him:—Held, that in such case a reference of title would not be directed on motion. Semble, the stipulation that the premises should be taken at the quantity before stated, be the same more or less, would not cover so large a deficiency as existed here. Portman v. Mill, 2 Russ. 570.

5. After a sale by auction of a messuage and lands, one of the conditions of which was that any mistake or error in the description of the property, or any other error in the particulars, should not annul the sale, but (except where otherwise provided for by the conditions) a compensation should be given or taken, to be settled by two referees or an umpire, it was found that one of the lots contained about twenty acres more, and another about ten acres less than the quantity of land described in the particulars:—Held, that, upon the construction of the condition, the mistake or error thereby contemplated was such a mistake or error as would annul the contract: that the excess of the quantity of land in one of the lots, and the deficiency in the other, were both subjects of compensation within the condition; and that the Court would, if necessary, refer it to the Master to settle the amount of such compensation, notwithstanding that from the variety in the nature of the different portions of the land in which the variations occurred there was no uniform standard for computing such amount: that whether a vendor could or could not in equity be relieved, on the ground of mistake, from a contract for the sale of lands inaccurately described as to quantity, and which description had been prepared by his solicitor from former particulars and conditions relating to the same property, drawn up by another solicitor on the report of a surveyor, equity would not, in such circumstances, enforce the contract against the vendor, unless the case should be one for compensation, and the purchaser should submit to make such compensation. Leslie v. Thompson, 9 Hare 268; 15 Jur. 717; 20 L. J., Ch., 561.

6. Misdescription of the quantity of land in regard to the acres being statute acres or customary, is not matter of compensation, but a ground for setting aside the sale. Price v. North, 2 Y. & Coll. 620; 7 L. J., N. S., Exch. Eq., 9.

7. The owner of an estate agreed to sell it for 250,000*l.*, representing it to contain 1,530 acres. The purchaser agreed to sell it to a company for 350,000*l.*, of which the sum of 150,000*l.* was paid to him, 75,000*l.* in cash, and bonds for 75,000*l.*, and he paid the vendor of the estate 50,000*l.* as a deposit. The estate contained less than 1,100 acres, and the company, having at the time only 1,536*l.* in hand, complained to the purchaser of the deficiency, and he then wrote to the vendor declining to complete. The company afterwards rescinded the contract, and the purchaser brought an action against the vendor for the deposit, which was compromised by the vendor repaying the deposit and rescinding the contract. The company filed a bill against the purchaser and some other defendants who had agreed to share with him for a return of the 75,000*l.* and of the bonds:—Held, that, although the financial position of company might render it convenient to them to rescind the contract, and though they might otherwise have been ready to take the smaller quantity of land, they were entitled to rescind the contract as the purchaser was unable to complete with them. Aberaman Iron Works v. Wickens, 4 L. R., Ch., 101; 20 L. T., N. S., 89; 17 W. R. 211; 18 L. T., N. S., 305; 5 L. R., Eq., 485.

Held, that the company was entitled to rescind on the ground of misrepresentation though they might have been able to ascertain the extent of the estate. Ib.

Held, that the company was entitled to re-payment of what they had paid, and to a return of the bonds, and that they had a lien on a portion of the 50,000*l.* re-paid to the purchaser, which had been paid into court. Ib.

One of the articles of the contract provided that the estate as to extent of acreage should be taken to be conclusively shown by certain deeds:—Held, that this was merely a conveyancing condition as to identity, and that, coupled with the representation as to the acreage, it did not estop the company from rescinding on the ground of deficiency in acreage. Ib.

The same relief was asked against the other defendants as against the purchaser. One of these defendants, by his answer, said that the suit was unnecessary and improper; another, that he was improperly made a party to the suit:—Held, that they, whether necessary or not, were proper parties to the suit, but that no relief in the shape of re-payment could be given against them, and that if they had merely submitted to any order which the Court might make they would have been entitled to their costs, but as they had answered in this manner they would not have their costs. Ib.

1. Copyhold for Freehold.

1. A. articles with B. for the purchase of an estate of 180*l.* per annum, for which he was to give thirty-five years' purchase upon granting and conveying it to him, and pays 50*l.* in part; but discovering that 30*l.* per annum of the lands were copyhold, refused to go on. On a bill by B., equity will not decree a specific execution of this agreement, being inequitable, but will order the 50*l.* to be paid back. Hick v. Phillips, Pre. Ch. 575.

2. Land was advertised to be sold in lots as freehold, subject to conditions, one of which was, that all objections to the title, not made within a prescribed time, should be considered as waived; and another provided that any misstatement of the quality, tenure, outgoing, or other particulars, should be the subject of compensation. An objection to the title of one lot was taken after the prescribed time, that it was of copyhold tenure. It, however, appeared that, under a composition with the lord, the rights of the copyhold were such as to render the tenure hardly different from that of freehold:—Held, that the misdescription did not form a ground for resisting a specific performance, although the decision might have been otherwise had the misdescription been wilful. Price v. Macaulay, 2 De G. M. & G. 339.

3. Property sold as copyhold, turned out to be partly freehold:—Held, that the vendor could not compel a specific performance, and that special conditions, providing that errors in the description should not invalidate the sale, and for a compensation, did not alter the case. Ayles v. Cox, 16 Beav. 23.

4. When a vendor, having reason to believe that part at least of his property was copyhold, sold and conveyed the same to a purchaser as freehold, there being nothing on the abstract to show that any part was copyhold, and the property turned out to be all copyhold:—Held, that the purchaser was entitled to have the sale set aside and the purchase money re-paid, with interest after the rate of 4*l.* per cent. per annum, with the costs attending his purchase, but was not entitled to damages in respect of expenses to which he had gone with the view of selling the property again. Hart v. Swaine, 26 W. R. 30; 37 L. T., N. S., 376; 7 L. R., Ch. D., 42; 47 L. J., Ch., 5.

5. The mere fact that land for a lease of which an agreement has been made is copyhold is not a bar to specific performance. Paston v. Newton, 2 Sm. & Gif. 437.

6. Conditions of sale had described the property to be sold as freehold. Subsequently, after the purchaser had paid his consideration money, but before the final completion of the conveyance, it turned out to be copyhold:—Held, that the purchaser was entitled to have his contract for purchase rescinded, and money re-paid with interest. Turner v. West Bromwich Union (Guardians), 9 W. R. 155; 3 L. T., N. S., 662.

The lords of the manor had forborne for nearly 100 years to receive certain small money payments in lieu of fines, heriots, etc., which had been commuted and payable so long as the premises should be retained as a workhouse:—Held, that, in the absence of evidence adverse to the lord of the manor's rights, the Court would not presume that the land had been enfranchised. Ib.

7. An estate was described in particulars of sale as containing 227 acres, and as being freehold with the exception of fifty acres copyhold of a forest. The tenure being doubtful, a clause was inserted in the contract for sale to the effect that the estate was sold as being about fifty acres copyhold, but no abatement or compensation was to be made in favour of the purchaser in case the quantity of pure copyhold should exceed fifty acres, and the rest of the estate was sold as being partly of freehold and partly of copyhold tenure. The vendor was not to be required to distinguish which portions were of one tenure and which of the other, nor was any compensation to be allowed. The purchaser sent in requisitions by which he claimed to have the freeholds and copyholds distinguished, with a view to compensation. The purchaser afterwards discovered that the 227 acres consisted of about 178 acres of copyhold and forty-nine of freehold, and that all minerals except stone were reserved to the Crown:—Held, that there had been a misdescription of the property to which the purchaser had properly objected, and specific performance was refused. Turquand v. Rhodes, 37 L. J., Ch., 830; 18 L. T., N. S., 844; 16 W. R. 1074.

2. Leasehold for Freehold.

1. Purchaser will not be compelled to take, under contract for freehold, a long leasehold, though for a very long term, upon principle of compensation. Drene v. Corp, 9 Ves. 368.

2. If a person possessed of a term, contracts to sell the fee, he cannot compel the purchaser to take, but the purchaser can compel him to convey the term, and this Court will arrange the equities between the parties. Wood v. Griffith, 1 Swan. 54; 1 Wils. 34. See also Mortlock v. Buller, 10 Ves. 316.

3. Specific performance of agreement to buy fee-simple of lands and right, etc., refused, where part of subjects of contract only leasehold, and the right is qualified; object being to work commercial speculation, which could only be done by enjoyment of unqualified right; and twelve years had elapsed since agreement entered into. Wright v. Howard, 1 Sim. & S. 190; 1 L. J., Ch., 94.

4. L., having a term of ninety-nine years, with a covenant that he may, within twenty years, purchase the fee, demised to F., for ninety-nine years and a half, at a ground-rent, and then acquired the fee. The ground-rent was put up for sale described as "a freehold ground-rent issuing out of lands on lease, which will expire in December 1922," being the expiration of the ninety-nine years and a half term:—Held, that the title was too doubtful, in reference to the remedies which the purchaser would have for enforcing the rent, to be forced on an unwilling purchaser. Langford v. Selmes, 3 Kay & J. 220; 3 Jur., N. S., 859.

Under such a description the purchaser has a right to expect a power of entry and distress in case of non-payment. Id.

5. Injunction granted to stay action against the auctioneer for the deposit, although the estate sold was represented as freehold with leasehold adjoining, and turned out to be almost all leasehold, and although there had been great delay in making out the plaintiff's title. Fordyce v. Ford, 4 Bro. C. C. 494.

6. Effect of an indefinite representation by a vendor; as that a leasehold estate was nearly equal to freehold, being renewable upon a small fine; putting the purchaser upon inquiry; though, connected with certain circumstances, such representation may be fraudulent, and form a ground for rescinding the contract. Fenton v. Browne, 14 Ves. 144.

7. A vendor, being a lessee of a house with a right of purchase, agreed to sell the fee-simple and inheritance for 2,500*l.*, and assigned his lease and contract to purchase to the purchaser, who by mistake covenanted to perform the covenants in the lease. One-fourth of the property was leasehold, and the vendor having brought an action for the purchase money, on a bill by the purchaser, the Court set aside the contract. Price v. Ley, 4 Giff. 235.

8. Premises were put up for sale by auction. Lot 1 was described as all freehold, and in the occupation of R. Lot 2 was described as leasehold. In fact, part of the premises in the occupation of R. was leasehold, and held under the same lease as those comprised in lot 2. A., with a knowledge of this fact, became the purchaser of lot 2, in the belief that it comprised all the leaseholds. He filed a bill, claiming to have the whole of the leaseholds included in his assignment; and the bill was dismissed with costs. Fairhead v. Southes, 9 Jur., N. S., 764; 11 W. R. 739.

9. Held, under the circumstances of the case, that a party, having agreed to purchase premises stated to be partly freehold and partly leasehold, could not, in the absence of concealment or misrepresentation on the part of the vendor, resist a specific performance of his contract, merely on the ground that the exact position of the boundary line between the freehold and leasehold portions could not be ascertained; and that this would be so, even assuming, for the purpose of argument, that a vendor who contracts to sell property partly freehold and partly leasehold is, in the absence of specific stipulations, to be considered as bound to show what part is freehold and what leasehold. Monro v. Taylor, 3 Macn. & G. 713; 8 Hare 51; 21 L. J., N. S., Ch., 525.

10. A party purchasing an estate under the impression that it is an estate in fee-simple, said to be subject to a perpetual rent-charge, without requiring the production of the last receipt of the rent, from which the nature of the tenure would appear, must take the consequences of his own laches, if it turn out that the estate is not a fee-simple, but only a tenancy from year to year; and he will not be allowed to set up as a defence that he had no notice of such tenancy. Att.-Gen. v. Stephens, 3 Eq. Rep. 1072; 1 Kay & J. 724; 1 Jur., N. S., 1039; 24 L. J., Ch., 694.

3. Under-lease for Lease.

11. Messuages described in a particular of sale as held for the residue of a term of ninety-nine years from the 24th June 1838, but not as being held by an original lease, were sold subject to conditions that the purchaser should not be entitled to call for the lessor's title, and that any error or misstatement of the term of years should not vitiate the sale, but should be the subject of compensation, under a provision for arbitration, authorising the arbitrator of either party to proceed in certain events ex parte. The title proved to be an under-lease, for a term less by three days than the term of ninety-nine years granted by the original lease. The vendor filed a bill to enforce specific performance, with compensation to an amount which had been assessed in conformity with the conditions, by one arbitrator, nominated by the vendor, the purchaser having taken no part in the arbitration. The Court dismissed the bill with costs. Madeley v. Booth, 2 De G. & Sm. 718.

1. Bill filed by a purchaser to rescind a contract, the plaintiff alleging that he had been induced to enter into it by fraud and misrepresentation. It appeared that the advertisement out of which the contract arose was of the sale of six houses; total rental 131*l.* 6*s.* per annum; lease about seventy-five years, at a moderate ground-rent of 50*l.* a year; but what the plaintiff, who agreed to give 420*l.* for the property, found himself liable to take was an underlease of the houses at a rent of 50*l.* Cranworth, C., reversing the order appealed from, dismissed the bill without costs, being satisfied that though there was a misdescription of the property, there was no such substantial misrepresentation as called upon the Court to exercise its jurisdiction. Bartlett v. Salmon, 6 De G. M. & G. 33; 1 Jur. N. S., 277.

2. B., by memorandum of agreement dated 6th December 1856, agreed, on or before the 5th January 1857, to assign to D., messuages, called "The Cider Cellars," for the residue of two several terms of sixty years and twenty-one years, for which B. held the same under leases, of which terms thirty-eight years and eight years, or thereabouts, were unexpired, subject to the yearly rents of 154*l.* and 50*l.*, "and to the covenants in such lease contained, and free from all incumbrances." The agreement contained the following stipulation: "D., the purchaser, agrees to accept such assignment without requiring evidence of any title prior to the above-mentioned leases, nor make any objection thereto, notwithstanding any recital, statement, or covenant therein contained, or by reason of the leases being derivative or under-leases." The statement in the memorandum of B.'s interest was incorrect; what he possessed was, an interest under an under-lease in the residue of two terms of sixty years and twenty-one years, less seven days. The rent subject to which B. held the property comprised in the former lease, also, was 150*l.* and not 154*l.*:—Held, that there not being on the face of the agreement a distinct description that the property was subject to the risk of eviction by no default of the purchaser, he was entitled to take advantage of the omission. Brumfit v. Morton, 3 Jur. N. S., 1198.

3. A. writes a letter to her solicitor, saying that she has agreed to give B. the lease of certain premises in consideration of 400*l.* A. subsequently agrees to surrender the same premises to C., the owner of the fee, in consideration of 550*l.*, and afterwards grants an underlease for all the rest of her term, less one day, to B., in consideration of 1,000*l.* and a bond of indemnity:—Held, that the underlease is no execution of the agreement to assign, the consideration and the subject matter being different; and specific performance of the agreement with C. decreed, and the deed granting the underlease set aside. Goodwin v. Fielding, 1 W. R. 255, 343.

4. If a lessee for a term of years underlet for a less term, and the underlessee sell by auction the lesser term, describing it as a lease, and one of the conditions of sale is that the lessor's title shall not be inquired into, the vendor's title being good, quære, whether the purchaser can refuse to complete, because there is a term imposed between the vendor's interest and the freehold. Darlington v. Hamilton, 1 Kay 550; 23 L. J., Ch., 1000; 2 Eq. Rep. 906.

5. An underlease, described in the conditions of a sale by auction as a lease, is a fatal misdescription. Henderson v. Hudson, 15 W. R. 860.

The purchaser was aware that a short time before the sale the vendor only had the underlease:—Held, that the knowledge prevented his setting up the misdescription as an objection to the title. Id.

6. A purchaser of a lease, who knows at the date of the contract that the vendor's interest is only an underlease, is bound, although the interest is described in the contract as a lease. Flood v. Pritchard, 40 L. T. 873.

7. Although, according to the decided cases, a vendor who contracts for the sale of leasehold property described as held under a lease, cannot, if nothing further is said, make a good title unless it is held under an original lease, yet in a case where the particulars and conditions of sale of property so described contained enough to give notice to a purchaser that the property was held under a derivative lease:—Held, that the purchaser could not on that account refuse to complete, or claim compensation on the ground of misdescription. Madeley v. Booth (2 De G. & Sm. 718) commented on. Cambernell & South London Building Society v. Holloway, 13 L. R., Ch. D., 754; 49 L. J., Ch., 361; 41 L. T., 752; 28 W. R. 222.

4. Other Cases.

8. Particular describing a lease as subject to notice to quit, not inconsistent with a covenant that the tenant shall hold over for a certain time "after the end of the term," that being upon the context distinguished from the "other sooner determination," and time generally not being of the essence of the contract. Hall v. Smith, 14 Ves. 426.

9. In 1805 premises, consisting of two pieces of land in W., were demised to A. for seventy-nine years. A. built several houses, and in 1811 demised the premises for seventy years to R., reserving a rent of 43*l.* In 1815 A., reciting the indentures of 1805 and 1811, and that C. had contracted for the purchase of the ground-rent issuing out of the two pieces of land, houses, etc., conveyed "the two pieces of land and houses, and also the yearly rent of 43*l.*, and all powers and remedies for receiving the same, and all the estate," etc., to C., to hold the same "for all the residue then to come of the term of seventy years granted by the indenture of 1811." In 1855 the representatives of C. contracted to sell "a leasehold ground-rent of 43*l.*, payable during the remainder of a term of years created by way of underlease, which will expire in 1881, issuing out of two pieces of land in W., with the reversion":—Held, as between a purchaser and the vendors seeking to enforce the contract, that this was no misdescription of their interest, and that the purchaser was bound to complete. Lecoy v. Mogford, 2 Jur. N. S., 1084; 4 W. R. 805.

The indenture of 1815 operated as a good conveyance to C. of the reversion of A. in the premises, for a term of years commensurate in duration with the residue of the term of seventy years which he had before created in favour of B. in 1811. Id.

1. A testator devised his freehold estates to trustees in trust to permit his wife to receive the rents for her life, and after her decease upon trust to permit his nephew, his heirs and assigns, to hold and enjoy the said estates, and receive the rents and profits, subject to the payment of 20*l.* yearly and every year for ever to his niece, her executors, administrators, and assigns, and the testator made chargeable his said freehold estates with the payment of the said sum. The annuitant died, and her devisees contracted to sell the rent-charge, which was stated to have been given to the testator's niece, her executors, administrators, and assigns:—Held, that the rent-charge might be legally distrained for, and that the thing contracted to be sold was within the words of the contract, and a decree was made for specific performance. Ramsay v. Thorgate, 18 L. J., N. S., Ch., 238; 16 Sim. 575.

2. Particulars of sale described the subject of the sale as the interest, if any, of F. N. The vendor knew at the time that the interest sold was of no value, and he made no representation as to the value. A purchaser bought, with notice that the subject of sale might be of no value, but without any means of ascertaining whether it was of any or no value. Upon a bill filed by him, the Court ordered the sale to be set aside, and the purchase money refunded, with interest and costs. Smith v. Harrison, 3 Jur., N. S., 287; 26 L. J., Ch., 412; 5 W. R. 408.

3. By an agreement for the sale of a reversionary estate in fee, it was stipulated, that a statement in a deed of 1836, to the effect that a life annuity granted to A. B. had not been paid or claimed for eight years (supported by a declaration of the vendor that no claim had been made upon him since 1841, and that he believed that the annuity had not been claimed for the last twenty years), should be conclusive evidence that the annuity had determined. It appeared that the annuity was granted by a person entitled in reversion, and was granted for the life of the survivor of four persons, two at least of whom were living:—Held, that the omission to state these circumstances disentitled the vendor to enforce the stipulation in a specific performance suit instituted by him. Drysdale v. Mace, 5 De G. M. & G. 103; 23 L. J., Ch., 518; 2 W. R. 341; 2 Eq. Rep. 386. Affirming 2 W. R. 280.

4. Where conditions of sale incorrectly state the effect of the trusts of a reversionary interest, the purchaser of that interest is not bound to accept the title. Hadley v. Robins, 14 W. R. 387; 14 L. T., N. S., 100.

5. A slight and immaterial misdescription of the term in the agreement for the sale of a lease will not relieve a purchaser from the obligation of completing his purchase. Jennings v. Brunt, 19 L. T., N. S., 705.

6. The Court may not decree specific performance of a contract for the sale of a reversion if the vendor had misled the purchaser by stating that it was subject to a lease containing all the usual covenants for repairs, etc., the vendor knowing at the same time that there was no person against whom the covenant could be enforced; but where property is sold subject to a lease so described, and tenants are in possession of the property, and pay their rent according to the terms of the lease, and the vendor is not aware at the time of the contract of any difficulty in enforcing the covenants, the Court will not refuse to decree specific performance on the ground that the vendor cannot show upon whom the liability of the covenants in the lease has devolved, and the vendor is not bound to find out and acquaint the purchaser with the name of the party who may be liable to such covenants. Flint v. Woodin, 9 Hare 618; 22 L. J., N. S., Ch., 92; 16 Jur. 719.

7. A vendor put up for sale by auction a certain sum or redeemed land tax, which he described in the particulars as charged on three houses. On investigating the title, it was discovered that the amount was made up of three sums, each of which was charged on a particular house, and not the whole upon each of the houses. The particulars referred to the contract with the commissioners for the redemption of the tax as part of the vendor's title, but did not further state, as appeared from the schedule to the contract, that the gross sum was charged in separate sums upon each of the houses. The purchaser had no notice of the real facts beyond what appeared upon the face of the particulars. Upon a bill by the vendor to enforce specific performance of a contract for purchase:—Held, that 42 Geo. 3, c. 116, did not operate to consolidate the several charges into one assessment, and to make the whole amount leviable on each part of the property redeemed. Cox v. Coventon, 8 Jur., N. S., 1142; 10 W. R. 829; 7 L. T., N. S., 78.

Held, also, that the reference to the contract for redemption did not give the purchaser notice of the contents of the schedule, so as to affect him with the consequences. Id.

Held, also, that there was a material misdescription of the property sold; that the difference in value between what was offered for sale and what was bought was not a subject for compensation; and that specific performance of the contract could not be enforced against the purchaser. Id.

8. W., by agreement endorsed on printed particulars of sale, sold to B. a house, in front of which a piece of common ground was railed in, but divided from the house by a road, to which common W. had a possessory title only. A., alleging that on the plan he considered the common land part of the purchase, refused to complete. On claim filed by W.:—Held, that inasmuch as the plan might have misled B., no decree for specific performance could be made; but as there was enough doubt to induce investigation, the claim must be dismissed without costs. Weston v. Bird, 2 W. R. 145.

9. A purchaser was discharged from his purchase on the ground of misrepresentation, lands having been set up to be sold as held under written agreements for leases from 1827, which appeared upon inquiry subsequent to the sale to be mere parol agreements. Bessonnet v. Robins, Sau. & Sc. 142.

A purchaser seeking to be discharged from his purchase under the Court upon the ground of misrepresentation, must swear distinctly to his having been deceived by the representations made to him; but the case not being perfectly clear, and some time having been suffered to elapse before the application, the purchaser was refused his costs. Id.

1. A person purchased at a sale by auction for 2,500*l.* property which was described in the particulars of sale as "an immediate reversion in fee-simple." Shortly after signing the contract he discovered that by the conditions of sale, which were produced for the first time and read aloud by the vendor's agent at the commencement of the sale, the purchaser was to take the property subject to the obligation of paying off mortgages for 2,500*l.*, the gross value of the reversion being under 5,000*l.*:—Held, that the description in the particulars of sale was an improper description, and the reading of the conditions of sale in the auction-room was not sufficient to convey to the purchaser a knowledge of the real facts; and that he was therefore entitled to have the contract rescinded. Torrance v. Bolton, 42 L. J., Ch., 177; 8 L. R., Ch., 118; 27 L. T., N. S., 738; 21 W. R. 134. Affirming 14 L. R., Eq., 124; 41 L. J., Ch., 643; 20 W. R. 718; 27 L. T., N. S., 19.

2. Leaseholds in Liverpool were put up for sale under the direction of the Court in four lots, under a condition that the purchasers should enter into the usual covenant for paying and observing the rents and covenants of the leases, and indemnifying the vendors therefrom. There was no condition as to the leases being produced, nor that the purchasers should be deemed to have notice of their contents. As to one of the lots, the particulars stated the rents at which the different parts of it were underlet, and the amount of a mortgage on it; but, owing to a slip, did not mention that it was subject to any ground-rent. It was, in fact, subject to a ground-rent of 43*l.* The other lots were leaseholds held under the corporation of Liverpool, which usually reserves only a nominal rent on its leases. A purchaser bought this lot for 1,400*l.*, and applied to be discharged from his purchase, both he and his solicitor deposing that they were led by the particulars to believe, and did believe, that the property was not subject to any ground-rent:—Held, that the purchaser was entitled to be discharged. Jones v. Rimmer, 14 L. R., Ch. D., 588; 49 L. J., Ch., 775; 43 L. T. 111; 29 W. R. 165.

VII. AS TO MATTERS MATERIAL TO THE ENJOYMENT OF THE PROPERTY.

3. A contract was entered into for the sale of a piece of land described as arable land, not stating anything as to the existence of a right of way to it. It turned out that it was extremely doubtful whether there was any right of cartway to it:—Held, that specific performance ought not be decreed at the suit of the vendor, in the absence of any conduct on the part of the purchaser precluding his taking the objection. Denne v. Light, 3 Jur., N. S., 627; 26 L. J., Ch., 459.

4. A certain lot was described in the particulars as being sold with a certain reservoir and waterworks, yielding a yearly rental of 60*l.*, exclusively of the land and buildings. An objection was taken after the prescribed time, and was supported by the fact that this rent arose from supplying with water certain houses separated from the reservoir by the property of strangers, over which the vendor had no right to carry it, beyond a permissive right from year to year by payment of a rent:—Held, that the description contained such a misrepresentation as to preclude the vendor from enforcing a specific performance; and that the objection was not one as to title, and therefore was not obviated by the stipulation as to time. Price v. Macaulay, 2 De G. M. & G. 339.

5. A property situate in a town, and comprising a warehouse with a small steam-engine, was described in particulars of sale under a decree as "well supplied with water." The property was well supplied with water, but only from the waterworks of the borough, and by payment of water rates, there being no natural supply. The manufactories in the town were generally supplied with water from wells upon the properties themselves, though small steam-engines in warehouses frequently were not:—Held, that there was a misdescription, and that a purchaser who purchased on the faith of the description in the particulars, without knowing the real state of the case, could not be compelled to complete his purchase without compensation. Leayland v. Illingworth, 2 De G. F. & J. 248.

6. Objections by a purchaser by auction, first, that a way round and across a meadow was not specified; secondly, on account of a bidding for a plaintiff; a specific performance was decreed with costs. Bowles v. Round, 5 Ves. 608.

7. If land, generally reputed to be water-meadow, is sold by the assignees of a bankrupt by the description of uncommonly rich water-meadow, whereas, in fact, it is very imperfectly watered; this is not such a misrepresentation as will avoid the sale. Scott v. Hanson, 1 Russ. & M. 128. Affirming 1 Sim. 13; 5 L. J., Ch., 67.

8. Particulars of a sale of a messuage and land sold by public auction, described the former as being "a substantial and convenient dwelling-house," and as having "five bedrooms." The defendant, who became the purchaser, and paid a deposit on the purchase money, resisted the completion of the contract on the ground of misdescription, and alleged that the house was neither conveniently nor substantially built, and also that two of the so-called bedrooms were too small to be fit for that purpose:—Held, that the two rooms were not improperly described as bedrooms; that there had been no misrepresentation in stating that the house was substantial and convenient; and that, therefore, the contract must be specifically performed. Johnson v. Smart, 6 Jur., N. S., 815; 2 Giff. 151.

9. Upon a sale by auction of a large parcel of land, in sixty lots, the particulars and conditions of sale referred to a plan on which several roads were marked out, so as to provide frontages for all the lots; but there was no indication that any lot was to have rights of way beyond the road adjoining it and directly leading into the public highway. In a suit by a purchaser of two lots for specific performance, the question arose as to what rights of way he was entitled to have conveyed to him:—Held, that the Court could only act on the footing of the contract, and that the purchaser could only claim a right of way over the road adjoining the lots, and directly thence into the public highway. Randall v. Hall, 4 De G. & Sm. 343.

1. Upon delivery of the abstract by a vendor who had contracted to deduce a good title in fee-simple, it appeared that one of his predecessors had covenanted in his purchase deed not to use the property (which was a semi-detached villa standing on an eighth of an acre in a residential neighbourhood), or any part of it, for the purpose of gasworks or a public-house:—Held, that this was such a restriction upon the user and enjoyment of the property as to constitute a fatal objection to the title. Re Higgins & Hitchman's Contract, 21 L. R., Ch. D., 25; 51 L. J., Ch., 772; 30 W. R. 700.

2. Leaseholds in Liverpool were put up for sale under the direction of the Court in four lots, under a condition that the purchasers should enter into the usual covenant for paying and observing the rents and covenants of the leases, and indemnifying the vendors therefrom. There was no condition as to the leases being produced, nor that the purchasers should be deemed to have notice of their contents. As to one of the lots, the particulars stated the rents at which the different parts of it were underlet, and the amount of a mortgage on it; but, owing to a slip, did not mention that it was subject to any ground-rent. It was, in fact, subject to a ground-rent of 43*l*. The other lots were leaseholds held under the corporation of Liverpool, which usually reserves only a nominal rent on its leases. A purchaser bought this lot for 1,400*l*., and applied to be discharged from his purchase, both he and his solicitor deposing that they were led by the particulars to believe, and did believe, that the property was not subject to any ground-rent:—Held, that the purchaser was entitled to be discharged. Jones v. Rimmer, 14 L. R., Ch. D., 588; 49 L. J., Ch., 775; 43 L. T. 111; 29 W. R. 165.

3. M. was owner of two adjacent houses in Dublin, held respectively under renewed leases of December 1879 and January 1880, which provided that the lessee should be at liberty to carry on the business of a grocer and wine and spirit dealer, but not for consumption on the premises; and that he should not exercise (among other trades) that of a publican or vintner, without the landlord's consent, under pain of an additional rent of 100*l*. per month. The original leases, dated in 1844 and 1852, and made to M.'s father, contained exactly similar provisions, notwithstanding which one of the houses had, since 1860, been continuously used as an ordinary public-house, without any objection on the part of the landlord, or demand of the penal rent. M. having put the entire premises up for sale in March 1880, the plaintiff, an intending purchaser, accompanied by K. (who was a local commission agent for the sale of public-houses, and aware of the restrictive clauses in the leases), went to M.'s solicitor, and saw the particulars and conditions of the sale, the sixth of which latter was as follows:—"Each of the said leases contained expressly permission to the lessee, his executors, administrators and assigns to exercise and carry on the business of a grocer and wine and spirit dealer upon the premises; and the purchaser shall not object by reason of any covenants, conditions, or penal rents, expressed or reserved, in restriction of the carrying on of certain other trades or businesses; not by reason of any restriction as to consumption on the premises, but shall be satisfied with the notorious fact that the late (defendant's father) continued without hindrance to carry on his trade and business as it was carried on up to the time of his death, on the 21st May 1879, and the present proprietor has done so since; and such fact can be verified, if required, by statutable declaration." The plaintiff, who was himself also a publican, having hurriedly read this document, thereupon signed an agreement to purchase for 3,800*l*., and paid a deposit of 500*l*., without any independent professional advice. The abstract of title having been shortly afterwards furnished, the plaintiff objected to the prohibiting clauses in the leases, alleging that he had not been previously aware of them; that K. had not informed him of them; and that he (the plaintiff) had been misled by the terms of the sixth condition of sale; and on his refusing to complete M. re-sold the premises for 3,000*l*. The plaintiff having then brought an action against M., to set aside his agreement and recover his deposit, and M. having filed a counterclaim in respect of his loss of 300*l*. on the sale:—Held, by the Vice-Chancellor, that K. was not agent for the vendor, but acted in the transaction rather as agent for the purchaser; that the sixth clause of the conditions of sale was not a suppression of the existence of the restrictive covenant, but was rather suggestive of inquiry as to the restriction to which it pointed; that upon the evidence there were no grounds for holding that the plaintiff had been surprised or hurried into the contract, and that, therefore, the plaintiff's action failed; that the deposit forfeited; and that the defendant M. was entitled to an inquiry as to damages for the plaintiff's failure to carry out his contract:—But held, on appeal (reversing the decision of Chatterton, V.-Ch.), dissentiente Deasy, L. J., that the sixth condition was misleading and (on the facts) designedly so, and had misled the plaintiff; that K. was not the plaintiff's agent in the transaction, and that, therefore, his knowledge could not be imputed to the plaintiff, and, accordingly, that the claim should be allowed and the counterclaim dismissed. Stanley v. McGauran, 11 L. R., Ir., 314.

Per Law, C.:—Whether misrepresentation be of a fact, or of the contents or effect of a written document, the person to whom such misrepresentation is made is entitled to rely on it, and look no further. Ib.

Per FitzGibbon, L. J.:—Where a material misrepresentation exists, the allegation of deceit must be met by proof of knowledge, as contrasted with notice, and contributory negligence has no place amongst the pleas to an action founded upon such misrepresentation. Ib.

VIII. AS TO RE-SALE.

1. A contract for sale contained a clause giving the vendor the right, on failure by the purchasers to complete, to re-sell the property and have any deficiency made good by the purchasers:—Held, that this clause was intended to provide for the case of failure of the contract, and could not be enforced in a suit for specific performance. Dickinson v. London, Chatham, & Dover Railway Co., 15 W. R. 141; 15 L. T., N. S., 262.

I. RESCISSION OF CONTRACT FOR.

2. Misrepresentation, though in a slight degree, is an objection to specific performance. Distinction upon a bill to rescind the contract. Cadman v. Horner, 18 Ves. 10.

3. In a case where some delay arose in completing a purchase of mines from difficulties connected with the title it was agreed, that, if the vendor could verify certain statements he had made as to the capabilities and value of the property, the purchasers would complete the contract. The purchasers, after inquiries instituted by themselves, being satisfied of the correctness of those statements, completed the contract; but after six months' possession, having discovered that they were not in fact correct, filed a bill to rescind the contract for fraud:—Held, that the contract could not be rescinded, because the purchasers did not rely on the vendor's statements but tested their accuracy, and, after having knowledge or the means of knowledge, declared that they were satisfied of their correctness. Attwood v. Small, 6 Cl. & F. 232; 2 Jur. 200. Reversing S. C. sub. nom. Small v. Attwood, Younge 407; 2 L. J., N. S., Exch. Eq., 16.

If, on the treaty for the sale of property, the vendor makes representations which he knows to be false, the falsehood of which the purchaser had no means of knowing, but he relies on them, a court of equity will rescind a contract so entered into, although it may not contain the representations; but it will not rescind without the clearest proof of fraudulent misrepresentations, and that they were made under such circumstances as show that the contract was based on them. Ib.

If a purchaser, choosing to judge for himself, does not avail himself of the knowledge or means of knowledge open to him or to his agents, he cannot be heard to say he was deceived by the vendor's representations, the rule being caveat emptor; and the knowledge of his agents being as binding on him as his own knowledge. Ib.

Where representations are made of the nature and character of property offered for sale affecting its value, and those representations turn out to be false to the knowledge of the party making them, a foundation is laid for an action at law for damages for the deceit, and for a suit in equity to set aside the contract. S. C. 6 Cl. & F. 395.

4. Effect of an indefinite representation by a vendor; as that a leasehold estate was nearly equal to freehold, being renewable upon a small fine; putting the purchaser upon inquiry; though, connected with certain circumstances, such representation may be fraudulent, and form a ground for rescinding the contract. Fenton v. Bromne, 14 Ves. 144.

5. Misrepresentations, to constitute sufficient grounds for setting aside a purchase, must be material, as being of such a nature as, if true, to add to the value, must not be evidently merely conjectural statements, and must be made without a belief in their truth or without reasonable grounds for such a belief. Jennings v. Broughton, 5 De G. M. & G. 126; 23 L. J., Ch., 999.

Where advertisements for the sale of shares in a mine had been issued containing unfounded statements, but the purchaser had not relied upon them, and had had opportunities of judging of their accuracy:—Held, that he was not entitled by reason of them to have the contract rescinded. Ib.

In suits to rescind contracts for fraud, particularly where the subject is of variable value, it is the duty of the plaintiff to put forward his complaint at the earliest possible period. Ib.

6. A vendor and his solicitor fraudulently, and in the absence of the purchasers' solicitor, obtained from a purchaser (who was desirous of completing the purchase, and had entered into possession) the purchase-money and covenants for the production of title-deeds, while the title as to part of the purchased premises was still under investigation. On a bill filed by the purchaser against the vendor and his solicitor, it was held that the plaintiff was entitled to have the contract rescinded, and his purchase-money together with all costs, charges, and expenses (including auction duty) repaid to him, and to have the deeds of covenant executed by him delivered up to be cancelled. Berry v. Armistead, 2 Keen 221.

7. Purchase of a reversionary interest by the solicitors for sale, set aside on the ground of concealment. Re Bloye's Trust, 1 Macn. & G. 488; 2 H. & Tw. 140; 19 L. J., N. S., Ch., 89; 14 Jur. 49.

8. Where a purchaser seeks to be relieved against the purchase on the ground of personal fraud by the vendor, and the alleged fraud is not proved, he is not entitled to relief on any other ground. Wilde v. Gibson, 1 H. L. Ca. 606; 12 Jur. 527. Reversing S. C. nom. Gibson v. D'Eate, 2 Y. & Coll. C. C. 542; 8 Jur. 94.

A bill filed by a purchaser to set aside a purchase and conveyance of an estate, on the ground of fraudulent concealment of a right of way, dismissed with costs, there being no proof of concealment by the vendor, although the dealings were inconsistent with any right of way. Ib.

To set aside a purchase, perfected by conveyance and payment of the purchase-money, for fraudulent concealment by the vendor of a defect in the title, where there was no warranty or statement that there was no defect, proof of concealment by the vendor's agent is not sufficient; there must be proof of direct personal knowledge and concealment by the principal. Id.

1. On a bill to set aside a sale, the parties having contradicted each other, the evidence of the one was to be taken as neutralising that of the other, and the Court decided according as the case set up by either was more consistent with and was corroborated by admitted facts and documents connected with the transaction. Wentworth v. Lloyd, 10 H. L. Ca. 589; 10 Jur., N. S., 961; 33 L. J., Ch., 688; 10 L. T., N. S., 767.

2. Where misrepresentations had been made in a contract for sale, and the vendor accepted an I. O. U. for the greater part of the purchase-money, and the purchaser filed a bill to set aside the contract, and the vendor brought an action on the I. O. U.—The Court granted an ex parte injunction, and subsequently continued an injunction to restrain such action and ordered the contract to be cancelled. Bartlett v. Salmon, 1 Jur., N. S., 277.

3. A firm had become insolvent. One of the members was separately insolvent and non compos; another was separately adjudicated bankrupt. In order to procure a title to the separate interest of the non compos partner (whose separate creditors would not enter into an arrangement for releasing it), one of the creditors, who was also a separate creditor of the bankrupt partner, obtained an execution against the non compos partner, and sold by the sheriff at auction, expecting and intending to purchase himself, and sent a clerk to bid up to 150*l.* A. purchased at 151*l.*, the property being quite worthless:—Held, such a concealment of circumstances as to justify the sale being set aside, with costs on A.'s application. Smith v. Harrison, 3 Jur., N. S., 287; 26 L. J., Ch., 412; 5 W. R. 508.

4. When a vendor, ignorant of the real value of an estate, sells it at a loss, on the faith of what the purchaser represents to him that it is worth, the sale will be set aside, and that irrespective of any fiduciary relation, fraud, or other concealment in the transaction between the parties. Haygarth v. Wearing, 24 L. T., N. S., 825; 40 L. J., Ch., 577.

5. There is no general rule that actual fraud is necessary to induce a court of equity to rescind a contract for sale. The Court acts on the same principle in rescinding contracts for sale as in setting aside other contracts and dealings which it considers unconscionable. Torrance v. Bolton, 8 L. R., Ch., 118; 42 L. J., Ch., 177; 27 L. T., N. S., 738.

6. A. having two parcels and B. one parcel of land, supposed to contain petroleum, it was agreed between them and C. that C. should pay them 10,000 dollars for the land if he succeeded in forming a company for the purpose of working the oil springs, and in inducing such company to pay him 13,750 dollars as the price of the land, out of which he was to keep for himself 3,750 dollars. B. accordingly, assuming the character of owner, gave to C. a conditional promise to sell all the land to him for 13,750 dollars, provided the offer was accepted within a certain time. A. wrote a letter, meant to be shown to, and which was shown to, persons intending to become members of the new company, and was proved to have influenced them, in which letter he recommended the purchase, not disclosing that he had any interest therein. A. and B. actively co-operated with C. throughout the whole transaction. The company, in ignorance of the combination, accepted the proposal, but having discovered the fraud, sued for a rescission of the contract:—Held, that the contract must be wholly rescinded, the price repaid, and the land reconveyed. There being a doubt (owing to the expiration of the term for which the company had been constituted) whether the company was competent to receive the money and to execute a reconveyance, the order provided that the repayment should be made to the company, or to such other persons as were entitled in their right, on the reconveyance of the lands being made to the satisfaction of the colonial court. Lindsay v. Petroleum Co. v. Hurd, 5 L. R., P. C., 221; 22 W. R. 492.

7. W. agreed to purchase from B. a mineral estate for 250,000*l.*, payable by instalments, and subsequently agreed to sell the property to a company which he had promoted, the price to be 350,000*l.*, payable by instalments, and as to 75,000*l.* of it payable in the company's bonds. Both agreements provided that the estate, as to extent of acreage, should be taken as conclusively shown by the title deeds, and neither agreement specified the acreage, but B. told W., and W. told the company, that it contained 1,530 acres, both B. and W. believing the statement to be true. The company, before they made the agreement, had the estate inspected and valued by a mining surveyor, but there was no evidence as to whether or not he measured it. After W. had paid B. 50,000*l.*, and the company had paid W. 75,000*l.*, and given him their bonds for 75,000*l.*, the company refused to complete their purchase, alleging that the estate contained less than 1,100 acres. W. thereupon refused to complete his purchase on the same ground, and brought an action against B. to recover the 50,000*l.* and also for damages. B. offered to W. to reduce his purchase-money by 50,000*l.*, and W. made a like offer to the company, but both offers were refused. The action was compromised, B. repaying to W. the 50,000*l.*, and the agreement between them being cancelled by mutual consent. The company was wound up, and the official liquidator, six months after the company's repudiation of the purchase, instituted a suit against W. for the cancellation of their contract, for the repayment and return by W. of the 75,000*l.* and bonds, and for an injunction to restrain W. from negotiating or parting with the bonds. The bill did not allege that the deficiency of acreage in fact existed, and there was no evidence on the subject:—Held, that the company was not entitled to have the contract rescinded on the ground of misrepresentation; that they could not sustain a suit in equity to recover the instalments of purchase-money; that they had no lien on the 50,000*l.* repaid by B. to W., and that as to the bonds the suit was unnecessary, because they could only be assigned by W. subject to the equities between him and the company, and also because the company could not be sued upon them without the leave of the Court; and the bill was dismissed without prejudice to any rights at law. Aberaman Ironworks v. Wickens, 5 L. R., Eq., 485; 4 L. R., Ch., 101; 20 L. T., N. S., 89; 18 L. T., N. S., 306; 17 W. R. 211.

After his agreement with B., W. agreed with C., D., and E., to share with them in certain proportions the profit to be made by the resale of the estate; W., C., D., and E. together got up the company, and part of the money received by W. from the company was disposed of by them jointly. C., D., and E. were made parties to the suit, and the bill sought to make them liable to the company for the money and bonds received by W.:—Held, that they were not so liable, and were improperly made parties to the suit. Ib.

1. A piece of land, imperfectly watered, was described in the particular as uncommonly rich water meadow:—Held, that this was not such a misrepresentation as would avoid the sale. Scott v. Hanson, 1 Russ. & M. 128. Affirming 1 Sim. 13; 5 L. J., Ch., 67.

2. The plaintiffs advertised for sale by auction an hotel, stated in the particulars to be held by a "most desirable tenant." The defendants sent their secretary down to inspect the property and report thereon. The secretary reported very unfavourably, stating that the tenant could scarcely pay the rent (400l.), rates and taxes. The defendants, relying on the statements in the particulars, authorised the secretary to attend the sale and to bid up to 5,000l. The property was bought in at the sale, and the secretary purchased it by private contract for 4,700l. It appeared subsequently that the quarter's rent previous to the sale had not been paid; the previous quarter had been paid by instalments, and six weeks after the sale the tenant filed his petition. It appeared, however, that the hotel business was as good during the last year as previously, and that the month of the tenant's failure was the best he had had. The plaintiffs brought an action for specific performance, relying (in answer to the defence and counter-claim for rescission on the ground of misrepresentation) on the fact that the defendants had made their own inquiries:—Held, that the statement that the property was held by a "most desirable tenant" could not be treated as "simplex commendatio," and that the defendants, having relied thereon, were entitled to rescission of the contract, on the authority of Redgrave v. Hurd (20 L. R., Ch. D., 1). Smith v. Land & House Property Corporation, 49 L. T. 532.

I. RESCISSION OF CONTRACT FOR.

3. A man purchasing an estate by a particular, but in the conveyance itself part of the land is left out, equity will not set aside. Clavell v. Littleton, Pre. Ch. 307.

4. Purchaser not entitled to a conveyance of part, though answering the general description in the advertisement of sale, as it was not in the contemplation of either party at the time of the purchase or conveyance; purchaser being referred to a more particular description which did not include that part, and the surrender having been made according to that, and from his own instructions. If one party thought he had purchased bonâ fide part of an estate which the other thought he had not sold, it is a ground to set aside the contract. If both understood the whole was to be conveyed, it must; otherwise, if neither understood so. Calverley v. Williams, 1 Ves. J. 210.

Small variation in general description of land not material. Id. 212.

5. Though, generally, a purchaser cannot be called upon for purchase-money until title made, yet where he is let into possession upon mutual confidence of speedy title, and the difficulty is a mutual surprise, he cannot, without express contract, retain possession, withholding purchase-money. Gibson v. Clarke, 1 Ves. & B. 500.

6. Where a contract is entered into for the sale of an estate, and, under the general words, property passes, which the vendor insists he did not mean to sell, but the purchaser by his answer denies, or does not admit that it was not in his contemplation at the time of the purchase. Semble, that the vendor cannot sustain a bill against the purchaser to have the contract rectified, on the ground of mistake, and carried into execution. Quære, whether, consistently with the Statute of Frauds, the Court can entertain a bill for rectifying an executory contract for the sale of lands, and carrying it, when rectified, into execution, even where the mistake is admitted by the answer. Att. Gen. v. Sitwell, 1 Y. & Coll. 559; 5 L. J., N. S., Exch. Eq., 86.

7. Where, by the mutual mistake of vendor and purchaser as to the duration of a leasehold interest, it had been sold at a price considerably below its value, and the conveyance had been executed, and the purchaser let into possession:—Held, upon a bill filed some years afterwards by the vendor against the representatives of the purchaser, that the vendor was not entitled to be relieved against the mistake. Okill v. Whittaker, 1 De G. & Sm. 83. Affirmed 2 Ph. 338; 16 L. J., N. S., Ch., 454; 11 Jur. 681.

8. A contract for the sale of a plantation of larches was entered into by a vendor in ignorance of the number of trees contained in it. The purchaser knew the exact number, but was not aware of the mistake made by the vendor. He was, however, prior to signing the contract, told by the vendor's woodman that his master must have made some mistake in reference to the matter:—Held, that the contract ought to be set aside. Hamilton v. Board, 2 N. R. 13.

9. Where vendor in ignorance and mistake agrees to sell that in which he has no interest at time of sale, equity will rescind the contract, and will order bond given for purchase money to be cancelled, and interest paid on it to be refunded without costs on either side. Hitchcock v. Giddings, 4 Price 135.

10. The purchaser may escape from his bargain on the ground of mistake, if it was a mistake which the vendors contributed to—that is, in other words, if he was misled by any act of the vendors. If the mistake was entirely his own, then the Court ought not to let him off his bargain on the ground of a mistake made by himself solely, unless the case is one of considerable harshness and hardship. Goddard v. Jeffreys, 51 L. J., Ch., 59; 45 L. T. 675; 30 W. R. 270.

1. P., in August 1861, agreed to purchase a house and premises of L., supposing that he was seized in fee, but he subsequently discovered that L. possessed only an agreement from B. for a lease for a short term, of which five years and a half were unexpired, with an option of purchase. P. agreed to purchase, for 2,500*l.*, "the benefit of L.'s agreement with his lessor," and he covenanted to perform all L.'s covenants in the agreement for a lease. L. admitted that this contract was erroneous. It was subsequently discovered that B. had not a freehold title to more than three-fourths of the property, and P. consequently refused to complete his purchase. L. brought an action to recover 600*l.*, the declaration stating that the plaintiff in the action sought to recover 500*l.* only under the first count, 2,500*l.* having been inserted in the agreement by mistake for 500*l.* P. instituted a suit in equity to have the agreement set aside, and to have the action stayed:—Held, that the mistake in the agreement rendered it null and void, and the Court ordered it to be delivered up to be cancelled, and the defendant to pay the costs of the suit and of the action. Price v. Ley, 9 Jur., N. S., 295; 11 W. R. 399. Affirmed 11 W. R. 475; 32 L. J., Ch., 530; 7 L. T., N. S., 845.

2. Where purchaser has given full value for estate, mistake of some party to conveyance of their claim thereto, under a marriage settlement, shall not turn to the prejudice of the purchaser without notice. Malden v. Menill, 2 Atk. 8.

3. Premises were put up for sale by auction. Lot 1 was described as all freehold, and in the occupation of R. Lot 2 was described as leasehold. In fact, part of the premises in the occupation of R. was leasehold, and held under the same lease as those comprised in lot 2. A., with a knowledge of this fact, became the purchaser of lot 2, in the belief that it comprised all the leaseholds. He filed a bill, claiming to have the whole of the leaseholds included in his assignment; and the bill was dismissed, with costs. Fairhead v. Southee, 9 Jur., N. S., 764; 11 W. R. 769.

4. B. being entitled to a sum of 2,916*l.* stock in reversion expectant on the death of an old lady aged eighty-two, obtained through the defendant E., who acted as solicitor for both parties, a loan of 1,650*l.* upon mortgage. The mortgage contained a power of sale upon three months' notice, or on interest being one month in arrear. The interest being in arrear, the stock was sold, under the power, for 1,950*l.*, as subject to succession duty at 3 per cent. The tenant for life was then in a precarious state of health, and died within three months. It was afterwards found that only 7*l.* was payable for succession duty. None of the purchase money was paid except the deposit, the rest being left upon mortgage of the stock. There was evidence that having regard to the age and health of the tenant for life, from 100*l.* to 200*l.* might have been obtained for the reversion:—Held, that the sale could not be set aside, either on the ground of under-value, as there was no fraud; nor the leaving of the purchase money on mortgage; nor the mistake as to succession duty, that being merely a matter for compensation. Bettys v. Maynard, 49 L. T. 389; 31 W. R. 461. Reversing 46 L. T. 766; 30 W. R. 793.

5. In a sale under a decree, the will of the testator in the cause devising the property the subject matter of the suit had been incorrectly abstracted in the abstract furnished to the purchaser, although the document next appearing upon the abstract recited the will correctly. The conveyancer acting on behalf of the purchaser had not called attention to this discrepancy, although he had directed an examination of the probate for other purposes. The will had been admitted to probate in facsimile, but neither the will nor the probate copy had been examined. The purchaser, who had accepted the title and paid the money into court, where it still remained, had subsequently discovered the mistake:—Held, that as the conveyancer had been clearly misled by the abstract, the purchaser was entitled to be relieved from his purchase, but on the terms of paying the costs of the application, as he had been negligent in the matter. No costs were given to the person having the conduct of the sale. McCulloch v. Gregory, 3 W. R. 231; 1 Kay & J. 286; 24 L. J., Ch., 246; 3 Eq. Rep. 495.

6. The conveyance on a sale of land contained a reservation of the minerals lying thereunder to the vendor, which the evidence showed was not intended by either the vendor or the purchaser. Five years afterwards the purchaser discovered the mistake, and filed a bill to have the conveyance rectified. The vendor, after putting in an answer, by which he denied that there had been any mistake on his part, died before he could be cross-examined, and the suit was revived against his legal representative:—Held, having regard to the lapse of time and other circumstances, that if the defendant did not consent to have the conveyance rectified, the whole transaction must be set aside, in which event the plaintiff would be fixed with an occupation rent, while the defendant would have to repay the purchase money, with interest, and also all sums expended by the plaintiff in permanent improvements. Bloomer v. Spittle, 13 L. R., Eq., 427; 41 L. J., Ch., 369; 26 L. T. 272; 20 W. R. 435.

7. A. being jointly interested with M. and G. in a foreign mine, agreed to sell his share to them upon certain terms not to be fulfilled immediately. Under an arrangement negotiated between M. and B. the whole property was conveyed to B. upon trust to secure him an annuity. A. concurred in this conveyance under an impression that B. was at the same time to execute a mortgage securing the fulfilment of the terms upon which A. sold. B. in fact executed this mortgage, but without knowing what it was, and without having been informed by A. of the terms upon which he had sold:—Held, that A. ought to have communicated directly with B., and that the Court was justified in setting aside the second instrument alone, in a suit to which M. and G. were not parties. Leader v. McEwen, 1 N. R. 251.

8. A person purchased at a sale by auction, for 2,500*l.*, property which was described in the particulars of sale as an "immediate reversion in fee simple." Shortly after signing the contract he discovered that by the conditions of sale, which were produced for the first time and read aloud by the vendor's agent at the commencement of the sale, but which the purchaser was prevented by deafness from hearing distinctly, the purchaser was to take the property, subject to the obligation of paying off mortgages for 2,500*l.*, in addition to his purchase money, the real value of the reversion being considerably under 5,000*l.*:—Held, that the purchaser was entitled to have the contract rescinded, on the ground of common mistake, and of misdescription in the particulars; and that he was also entitled to have the deposit which he had paid returned, with interest at 4 per cent., and until payment, to a lien for the amount on the vendor's interest in the property. Torrance v. Bolton, 41 L. J., Ch., 643; 14 L. R., Eq., 124; 20 W. R. 718; 27 L. T., N. S., 19. Affirmed 21 W. R. 134; 42 L. J., Ch., 177; 27 L. T. 738; 8 L. R., Ch., 112.

1. Where personal considerations enter into a contract, error as to the person with whom the contract is made annuls the contract; not so where the person sought to be bound would have been equally willing to make the same contract with any other person. Smith v. Wheatcroft, 9 L. R., Ch. D., 223; 39 L. T., N. S., 103; 27 W. R. 42; 47 L. J., Ch., 745.

I. GENERAL PRINCIPLES.

2. If an agreement be in part unperformed, the principle of a court of equity is in compensation, not forfeiture. Page v. Broom, 4 Russ. 6. Affirmed 2 Russ. & M. 214.

3. Where a bill for specific performance is dismissed on the ground of inadequacy of consideration, the Court will not aid a party in recovering his deposit, or giving him compensation for his loss, by decreeing an account. Kendall v. Beckett, 9 L. J., Ch., 24.

4. If a purchaser cannot have what was his strong inducement to the contract, a specific performance, with compensation, not to be enforced. Stapylton v. Scott, 13 Ves. 426.

5. Specific performance upon the principle of compensation and indemnity: not if the effect is the substantial deviation from the contract. Halsey v. Grant, 13 Ves. 73. S. P. Hornblow v. Shirley, id. 81.

6. Where two purchasers in equal moieties between them, and one has abatement in price, etc., made to him, he shall account to other as to it. Carter v. Horne, 1 Eq. Abr. 7.

7. General rule of specific performance that the purchaser shall have what the vendor can give, with an abatement out of the purchase money, for so much as the quantity falls short of the representation, enforced against trustees for infants, upon the mere mistake of their agent without fraud, etc., but the relief adapted to the justice of the case, viz., the purchase being of wood upon a gross valuation, without regard to the quantity of land; an abatement for a deficiency of quantity from erroneously inserting the hedges and fences not included in the purchase, was directed with reference to land. Hill v. Buckley, 17 Ves. 394.

8. The principle of equity with respect to specific performance is, that if substantially the purchaser can have the thing contracted for, a slight variation in the qualifications of it will not disable the vendor from having a decree for specific performance, when the difference is such as can be compensated in money. Magennis v. Fallon, 2 Moll. 588.

9. The jurisdiction of equity is never exercised to decree compensation singly without other relief. As to the jurisdiction in cases of compensation generally. Newham v. May, 13 Price 749; McClel. 511.

10. Semble, that in a case of misdescription, a court of equity would not enforce against trustees specific performance with compensation, as being prejudicial to the cæteri quo trust, and incapable of being ascertained. White v. Cuddon, 8 Cl. & J. 766; 6 Jur. 47. Reversing sub. nom. Cuddon v. Cartwright, 4 Y. & Coll. 25.

11. Purchaser not bound to take with compensation in a case of great intentional misrepresentation, although so provided by the conditions of sale in case of "any error or misstatement" in the particulars. Stewart v. Alliston, 1 Meriv. 26.

12. Though generally so, it is not universally true that a purchaser may take what he can get, with compensation for what he cannot have. Whether that is ever done without express undertaking on his part to do what Court shall order, quære. Paton v. Rogers, 1 Ves. & B. 351.

13. One of the terms of an agreement was, that the contract should be void if the purchaser's counsel should be of opinion that the marketable title could not be made by a certain time. The counsel being of that opinion, a bill by the purchaser for specific performance with a compensation was dismissed with costs; and an application afterwards made by the plaintiff that his deposit might be set off against the defendant's costs, and the surplus

(if any) paid to him, was refused with costs. Williams v. Edwards, 2 Sim. 71.

1. The doctrine of compensation ought not to be extended. Jurisdiction has been exercised in giving compensation founded on the minuteness of the object, compared with the estate sold, and not upon any jurisdiction to find and adjust pecuniary equivalents, where essential parts of the contract cannot be performed. The Master's certificate of the sale and the printed rental are analogous to the minute of a contract on a private sale. The purchaser of several denominations in one lot will be discharged on motion if the Master reports that a good title cannot be made to one of the denominations. Pendergast v. Eyre, 2 Hog. 81.

2. At the hearing, a decree, as drawn up, was simply for specific performance, although the Court had directed it to be without prejudice to the question of compensation:—Held, that the plaintiff was not thereby precluded, as having elected to take the decree in that form, from compensation. Wilson v. Williams, 3 Jur., N. S., 810.

The want of mutuality is not a sufficient argument against granting specific performance, with compensation, at the prayer of a purchaser, although a vendor could not compel a purchaser to accept such a compensation. Id.

3. Where a bill by a vendor for specific performance does not set up a right to enforce a title with compensation, but avers that the vendor was and is able to make a good title, and that everything has been shown that was necessary, the Court will not, upon the failure of the latter averment, entertain the question of compensation. Ashton v. Wood, 3 Jur., N. S., 1164; 3 Sm. & G. 436.

4. Though the conduct of a purchaser, after the discovery of circumstances entitling him to rescind a contract, may be such as to preclude him from so doing, it does not necessarily follow that he is entitled to compensation. Hughes v. Jones, 10 W. R. 139; 5 L. T., N. S., 408; 8 Jur., N. S., 399; 31 L. J., Ch., 83; 3 De G. F. & J. 307.

5. Quere, per Turner, L. J., whether the principle of compensation is applicable where there is no estimable loss to a purchaser unless he happen to sell. Edwards-Wood v. Marjoribanks, 5 Jur., N. S., 181; 23 L. J., Ch., 298; 1 Giff. 384; 3 De G. & J. 329. And see 8 C. 6 Jur., N. S., 1167; 7 H. L. Ca. 306; 30 L. J., Ch., 176. S. C. nom. Woods v. Marjoribanks, 4 Jur., N. S., 27.

6. Upon a reference to the Master to inquire as to the title to compensation for damage done to lands, the Master ought regularly to inquire whether the damage was temporary or permanent. Cator v. Croydon Canal Co., 4 Y. & Coll. 405; 13 L. J., N. S., Ch., 89.

II. AFTER CONVEYANCE EXECUTED.

7. After conveyance the omission of certain parcels, of which omission the purchaser had notice by the abstract:—Held, not a ground for rescinding the contract. The purchaser having by his mistake allowed the vendor to convey the omitted parcels to another purchaser:—Held, not entitled to have the conveyance rectified:—Held, also, that a decree for compensation cannot be made after conveyance. At a sale of land in lots by auction, A. purchases lot 5 and B. lot 6. By mistake part of 5 is included in the conveyance to B., and omitted in that to A. Bill that B. should convey such part to A., and in alternative that A.'s contract with the vendor might be rescinded, or that A. might have compensation from him, dismissed as against the vendor; but, overruling decision of Master of the Rolls, relief allowed as against B. Lentz v. Hillas, 6 W. R. 217; 27 L. J., Ch., 534; 2 De G. & J. 110; 4 Jur., N. S., 1166.

8. A man purchasing an estate by a particular, but in the conveyance itself part of the land is left out, equity will set it aside. Clavell v. Littleton, Pre. Ch., 307.

9. An estate sold under a decree was described as of a certain annual value, and, by the conditions, compensation was to be made for any error in the particular. The purchaser paid his money into court, was let into possession, and took a conveyance. After he got into possession he discovered that the rent was over-stated in the particular:—Held, that he was entitled to a compensation out of his purchase money. Cann v. Cann, 3 Sim. 447.

10. A purchaser cannot, in the absence of fraud, obtain compensation after conveyance for a misrepresentation, even though such misrepresentation related to the subject matter of the conveyance. Manson v. Thacker, 7 L. R., Ch. D., 620; 47 L. J., Ch., 312; 26 W. R. 604; 38 L. T., N. S., 209.

A freehold waterside property on the Thames was put up for sale by auction under a decree made in a partition suit. By one of the conditions of sale it was provided that if any error or misstatement should appear in the particulars compensation should be made to or by the purchaser as the case might be. The property was sold, the title accepted by the purchaser, who paid his purchase money into court, and the conveyance was executed and the purchaser let into possession. A year after the completion of the purchase, the purchaser discovered that there was an underground culvert under the property to certain mills at some distance from the river, the existence of which was unknown to the vendors, and which was injurious to the property, and for which the purchaser claimed compensation:—Held, that the purchase having been completed and there being no allegation of fraud or wilful misrepresentation on the part of the vendors, the purchaser was not under the condition entitled to any compensation. Id.

11. Where, in an agreement for the sale of land, the conditions provided that if any error or misstatement should be found it should not annul the sale, but that compensation should be made in respect thereof, and an error in the quantity of the land was discovered after the conveyance had been executed:—Held, that the purchaser was entitled to compensation. Re Turner and Shelton, 13 L. R., Ch. D., 130; 49 L. J., Ch., 114; 41 L. T. 668; 23 W. R. 312.

12. Plaintiff sold by auction a term of fifty years in a public-house at a rent of 105*l.*, and subject to a covenant against Sunday trading. It was stated at the sale that the freeholder had offered to release the covenant on having 25*l.* additional rent. Defendant was the purchaser, and after the sale received an abstract which showed that the vendor was an underlessee. After this the plaintiff procured from the freeholder a release of the covenant, and the defendant accepted a lease at a rent of 130*l.* and paid the purchase money partly by an order on his brewers. On the day after completion he became aware that the release from the freeholder was not effectual without a release from the original lessee, and stopped payment of the order on the brewers until this should be obtained. The required release could not be obtained, and the defendant claimed to retain his bargain with compensation:—Held, that compensation could not be given for an error discovered after completion. Re Turner and Shelton (13 L. R., Ch. D., 130) dissented from. Allen v. Richardson, 13 L. R., Ch. D., 524; 49 L. J., Ch., 137; 41 L. T. 614; 28 W. R. 313.

Held, also, that plaintiff was entitled to specific performance of the original contract at the rent of 105*l.*, and without a release of the covenant. Id.

1. The contract for sale of an estate provided, inter alia, that any material error in the rental furnished to the purchaser, and referred to in the agreement, should not annul the sale, but that compensation should be made in respect thereof. The rental so furnished, and on the faith of which the purchaser entered into the contract, represented in substance that by a fee-farm grant of part of the estate the timber thereon (which was of the value of 800*l.* or thereabouts) was reserved to the vendor. The value of the timber formed a material element in the purchaser's calculation of the price. The timber, though reserved in the original lease in perpetuity, which had been converted into the fee-farm grant, had been afterwards granted by a subsequent owner of the estate to the lessee, and was not reserved by the fee-farm grant, and the vendor had, consequently, no title to the timber. In the abstract of title delivered to the purchaser the conveyance of the timber was set out, and the material portions of the fee-farm grant were correctly abstracted, and copies of the deeds were furnished along with the abstract; but the attention of the purchaser not being specially called to the error in the rental, the existence of the error escaped the notice of the solicitor and counsel for the purchaser, and was not in fact known to the purchaser or his solicitor until after the purchase was completed, the purchase money paid, the conveyance executed, and possession taken by the purchaser:—Held, that the purchaser was entitled to compensation for the value of the timber. Phelps v. White, 7 L. R., Ir., 160.

Per Palles, C. B.:—The purchaser was so entitled to compensation—first, on the ground of the antecedent misrepresentation, independently of the clause in the contract for sale providing for the allowing of compensation; secondly, the statement in the rental relating to the timber having been made a substantive part of the contract, on the ground of the collateral contract or warranty that the timber was so reserved. It is not necessary that the plaintiff should frame such an action either as one for damages for breach of contract or for fraudulent misrepresentation; but it is sufficient to set out in the statement of claim facts which entitle him to relief, and to pray for any relief which the facts may warrant. Manson v. Thacker (7 L. R., Ch. D., 620) and Allen v. Richardson (13 L. R., Ch. D., 524) considered, and Bos v. Helsham (2 L. R., Exch., 72), and Re Turner and Shelton, (13 L. R., Ch. D., 130) approved of. Id.

2. After the purchaser of real estate has taken a conveyance, and the purchase money has been paid, no action can be maintained for damages or compensation on account of errors as to the quantity or quality of the subject matter of the sale, unless such errors amount to breach of some contract or warranty contained in the conveyance itself, or unless some fraud or deceit has been practised upon the purchaser. Jolliffe v. Baker, 11 L. R., Q. B. D., 255; 52 L. J., Q. B., 609; 48 L. T. 966; 32 W. R. 59.

III. FOR CHARGES AND INCUMBRANCES.

3. A small incumbrance which may be the subject of compensation, no objection to a specific performance. Guest v. Homfray, 5 Ves. 818.

4. A contracted with B. and C., trustees, for the purchase of an advowson and rectory, and parish church. By the articles of agreement, B. and C. agreed to sell, and D. to purchase, such advowson, subject to certain stipulations, and that if any objections and requisitions should be made which the vendors would be unable or unwilling to comply with, they might annul the contract without payment of any costs. After the title had been accepted, and the draft conveyance sent by the purchaser's solicitors to the vendor's solicitors, it was discovered, on inquiry at the office of Queen Anne's Bounty, that the rector had, with the consent of the patron, borrowed a sum of money of Queen Anne's Bounty on the usual terms, for the purpose of re-building the parsonage house, and that only a small portion of such sum had been paid off. This loan by the governors of Queen Anne's Bounty was not disclosed by the abstract. A. refused to annul the contract, and filed a bill against B. and D. for specific performance, with compensation. Specific performance was decreed, but:—Held, that as there had been no misrepresentation or concealment of value, A. was not entitled to compensation. Edwards-Woods v. Marjoribanks, 6 Jur., N. S., 1167; 7 H. L. Ca. 806; 30 L. J., Ch., 176. Affirming 1 Giff. 384; 3 De G. & J. 329; 5 Jur., N. S., 181; 28 L. J., Ch., 298, which affirmed S. C. nom. Woods v. Marjoribanks, 4 Jur., N. S., 827.

5. Mode of determination of amount of compensation to purchaser in respect of an annuity charged upon the land purchased together with other land of the vendor, and of exonerating the purchased land therefrom. Powell v. South Wales Co., 1 Jur., N. S., 773.

6. A tenant for life of a real estate, the trustees of which were empowered to sell it at his request and by his direction, entered into a contract to sell it. The estate was subject, with others, to a charge for younger children. The tenant for life died without issue, and the fee of the estate passed under his will:—Held, that the purchaser, on waiving the objection as to the charge, was entitled to a specific performance against the representatives of the vendor, but he was not entitled either to an indemnity against the charge or to compensation. Bainbridge v. Kinnaird, 32 Beav. 346; 9 Jur., N. S., 862; 11 W. R. 608; 8 L. T., N. S., 447; 2 N. R. 5.

IV. DOWER AND OTHER LIFE INTERESTS.

1. A. contracted to sell to B. the fee simple, clear of incumbrances. B., aware that on a former occasion an attempted sale had gone off in consequence of A.'s wife refusing to bar her dower, asked as to this, and was informed that she would join. Afterwards she refused to join:—Held, that B. was entitled to compel a specific performance, with a compensation and an indemnity against the right to dower. Wilson v. Williams, 3 Jur., N. S., 810.

Semble, a proper indemnity would be to retain in court a third part of the purchase money, the dividends to be paid to A. and his assigns during the joint lives of himself and wife; and if she survived A., to B. during her life; and upon her decease, the capital so retained in court to be paid to the husband. Id.

2. A vendor contracted to sell an estate in fee, with a stipulation that if any dispute should arise as to the title, the same should be submitted to some eminent conveyancer, and that, in case he should be of opinion that a good title could not be made, the contract should be rescinded. Upon the delivery of the abstract, it appeared that the vendor's mother had a life interest in the premises, and that her interest was known to the vendor at the time of the contract. Upon her refusing to join in the conveyance to the purchaser:—Held, that the vendor was not entitled to rely on the before-mentioned stipulation as a ground for rescinding the contract, but that the contract must be specifically performed, with compensation in respect of the life interest. Nelthorpe v. Holgate, 1 Colly. 203; 8 Jur. 551. And see 1 Colly. 223. n.

3. By a marriage settlement real estate was limited to such uses as A. and B. (husband and wife) should appoint, and in default of appointment to the use of trustees during the life of B., in trust for her separate use, with remainder to A. in fee. A. entered into a contract to sell the property to C., who had notice of the provisions of the settlement; and in the contract it was stated that A. would procure a proper assurance of the premises to the purchaser to be executed by all necessary parties. The purchase money was paid by C. to the trustees of the settlement, and by them invested pursuant to the contract; and a draft conveyance in the form of a joint appointment by A. and B. to C. was approved, but before executing it A. died suddenly. B. having after A.'s death refused to convey her life interest:—Held, that C. was entitled to specific performance to the extent of A.'s reversion in fee, with compensation in respect of B.'s life interest, and a lien on the invested purchase money in the hands of the trustees of the settlement. Barker v. Cow, 4 L. R., Ch. D., 464; 35 L. T., N. S., 662; 46 L. J., Ch., 62; 25 W. R. 138.

V. LEASES OUTSTANDING.

4. The purchaser, under his contract, is entitled to actual possession where the contrary is not stipulated for, and an outstanding lease is not the subject of compensation. Linehan v. Cotter, 7 Ir. Eq. R. 176.

5. The defendant contracted to sell an inn to the plaintiff, and in the treaty represented to him that the agreement under which the tenant in possession held it was a void agreement, and that he would give the plaintiff possession at Michaelmas following. He had, in fact, given the tenant notice to quit at that time; the tenant did not quit. These representations were proved by witnesses:—Held, that the plaintiff was entitled to be released from the agreement, or that he might at his election perform it and have compensation. He elected to have performance, and it was decreed to him, with compensation and costs. Desant v. Richards, Taml. 509.

6. A. contracted to purchase a leasehold estate subject to an underlease, of which seven years were unexpired, to B.'s father. A. agreed with B., on having a surrender of this underlease, to grant him a new lease, and B. agreed to procure a surrender of the underlease from his father, and to accept such new lease. B.'s father refused to surrender his underlease:—Held, upon demurrer, that A. could not obtain specific performance of this agreement, there being no allegation that B. had professed himself legally competent to enforce a surrender; and the question as to compensation to A. being determinable by action at law for damages:—Held, also, that B. could not be compelled to accept a lease in the terms proposed at the expiration of the underlease. Beeston v. Stutely, 6 W. R. 206; 27 L. J., Ch., 156; 3 L. T., N. S., 112.

7. An estate was put up for sale by a particular, describing it as "now or late in the several occupations of H. R. and others," and by one of the conditions, it was provided that, on completion, the purchaser should be "let into the receipt of the rents and profits." Some parts of the property were subject to leases for lives at a low rent:—Held, that a purchaser who entered into the contract without knowing of the existence of such leases could not be compelled to take the title without compensation. Hughes v. Jones, 3 De G. F. & J. 307; 10 W. R. 139; 5 L. T., N. S., 408; 8 Jur., N. S., 399; 31 L. J., Ch., 83.

8. A purchaser buying with notice of tenants in possession is bound to inquire into the nature of their interest, and is not entitled to an abatement of the purchase money because their interest proves to be larger than he supposed when he entered into the contract. James v. Lichfield, 39 L. J., Ch., 248; 9 L. R., Eq., 51.

VI. LIMITED INTERESTS AND TITLE DEFECTIVE AS TO PART OF PROPERTY.

9. Specific performance decreed upon the bill of the purchaser, with compensation for a defect of a title, if to be ascertained, by reduction of the purchase money; if not, or the plaintiff would so take it, with an indemnity, the defendant, the vendor, proposing an option to take it as it was, or relinquish the contract; the defect consisting in the representation by the particular of a church lease for twenty-one years, the lease being actually for lives, and the covenant limited and contingent. Milligan v. Cooke, 16 Ves. 1.

1. Principles upon which the Court proceeds in determining whether the purchaser is entitled to a partial performance of the contract, with compensation for the deficiency, where the vendor has only a limited interest in the estate contracted to be sold, and is, therefore, incapable of performing the whole contract. Thomas v. Dering, 1 Keen 729; 6 L. J., N. S., Ch., 267; 1 Jur. 211, 427.

2. A. contracted with B. for the purchase in fee of property in ignorance that B. was only entitled to an estate pur autre vie, and that C. (B.'s wife) was entitled to the remainder in fee on the determination of the particular life. D., with full knowledge of A.'s contract, took a conveyance from B. and C. of the property, acknowledged by C. so as to pass her interest.—Held, that A. was entitled, by way of specific performance, to a conveyance from D. of B.'s interest, with compensation in respect of C.'s interest, which B. was unable to bind or convey without her consent. Barnes v. Wood, 8 L. R., Eq., 424; 38 L. J., Ch., 683; 17 W. R. 1080.

3. When a husband and wife agreed to sell her estate in fee simple, the purchaser being aware that the estate belonged to the wife, and she afterwards refused to convey.—Held, that the purchaser could not compel the husband to convey his interest and accept an abated price. Castle v. Wilkinson, 5 L. R., Ch., 534; 39 L. J., Ch., 843; 18 W. R. 586.

4. A purchaser of real estate at a sale in the Court of Bankruptcy, will not be discharged from his purchase on objections to title, where the abstract of title posted in the court contains express notice of the defects objected to.—Held, also, that where title cannot be made out to small portions of the estate, the purchaser will not be discharged, but will be entitled to compensation pro tanto only, unless he can show that the deficient portion was essential to the proper enjoyment of the whole, or that it constituted his main object in entering into the contract. Difference in practice between sales of real property in bankruptcy and in courts of equity. Exp. Gettin, Re Smith, L. L. & G. temp. Plunk. 429.

5. Where the particulars of sale of certain leasehold property contained a misstatement, thereby causing the reversion to the full rack rental value of the premises to appear as if it would fall in eight years earlier than actually was the case, of which misstatement the vendors asserted that the purchaser had knowledge at the time of the sale, although the evidence on this point was conflicting; and where the conditions of sale provided that any error or misstatement in the particulars should not annul the sale, but compensation should be made to or by the purchaser, as the case might be.—Held, that, even if the purchaser were aware of the misstatement in the particulars, the vendors were not thereby relieved from the liability to make him compensation, in accordance with the terms of the conditions of sale. Lett v. Randall, 49 L. T. 71.

6. The objection by a purchaser applying only to a small part of the estate, a specific performance decreed with compensation. M'Queen v. Farquhar, 11 Ves. 467.

7. A., being entitled to nine-sixteenths only of an estate, agrees, by mistake, to sell the entirety to B. Semble, that a specific performance will not be decreed as to the nine-sixteenths, with an abatement out of the purchase money, especially where C. has a lien on the estate for a debt which would exhaust nearly the whole of the purchase money. Wheatley v. Slade, 4 Sim. 126.

8. An agreement was entered into with two vendors for the sale of two-sixths of certain leasehold property, together with other the estates and interest of the vendors therein. It turned out that the vendors were only entitled to two twenty-one parts of the estate:—Held, that the purchaser was entitled to specific performance of the contract to the extent of the vendors' interests with a proportionate abatement. Jones v. Evans, 17 L. J., N. S., Ch., 469; 12 Jur. 664.

9. In the case of a sale under the order of the Court, it being clear that a certain portion of the property was not intended by the vendor to be included in the contract of sale; the Court, in the absence of any proof of misconduct in the purchaser or his agent, refused to compel a specific performance by the purchaser, excluding the portion in question. The purchaser, however, electing to take exclusive of the portion of property in dispute, the Court ordered accordingly, and without compensation. Alvanley v. Kinnaird, 2 Macn. & G. 1; 14 Jur. 837, varying the order below.

Cases in which the Court will or will not, and how far, interfere, considered. Id.

10. A residence, with four acres, was sold. It turned out that there was no title to a slip of ground, of about a quarter of an acre, between the house and the highroad.—Held, that it was not a proper subject for compensation, and that a good title could not be made. Perkins v. Ede, 16 Beav. 193.

11. Where a vendor can make a title to three-fourths only of the property sold, the purchaser is not entitled to take the three-fourths with an abatement, but he may take the three-fourths at the price agreed on for the whole. Maw v. Topman, 19 Beav. 576.

12. Vendors who by the contract bind themselves to make out a good title to all the lands included in the contract, but are unable to show a title to $\frac{1}{11}$ part, not necessary to the enjoyment of the other parts included in the contract, which provided no compensation for errors in dimensions in the land, the bill averring that they could make title to all the lands sold, seeking specific performance as to all.—Held, that it was not competent to the vendors at the hearing to seek performance with compensation. Ashton v. Wood, 3 Sm. & G. 436; 3 Jur., N. S., 1164.

Quere, whether the Court will in no case decree specific performance with compensation for defects of title in small particulars, the question of compensation being raised by the bill. Id.

1. Where a plaintiff filed a bill for specific performance of an agreement to purchase lands, and failed to show a good title to a small portion of the lands, which was not material to the beneficial enjoyment of the remainder of the lands, the Court decreed specific performance of the agreement, with compensation, and directed the costs to follow the event. Carver v. Richards, 6 Jur., N. S., 667.

2. Vendors agreed to sell the entirety of certain freehold property for 6,000*l.*, and to make out a good marketable title. The purchaser, in consequence of delays on the part of the vendors, filed a bill for specific performance of the agreement. It was subsequently discovered that the vendors were entitled to only a moiety of the property:—Held, that the purchaser was entitled to a decree for specific performance of the agreement by the vendors of their moiety, with an abatement of one-half of the purchase money. Hooper v. Smart, Bailey v. Piper, 18 L. R., Eq., 683; 43 L. J., Ch., 704; 22 W. R. 943; 31 L. T., N. S., 86.

3. In an agreement for the sale of seventeen undivided shares of a coal mine there was an article stating two conveyances by which six undivided shares of the land, beneath which the coal lay, had been conveyed to the vendors' predecessor in title, but stating that there was no express mention in the conveyances of the minerals under the land, and requiring that the purchasers should assume that six undivided shares of the minerals passed by the conveyances of the land, and thereby became absolutely vested in the vendor's predecessor in title. In the abstract of the vendor's title sent to the purchasers, mention was made of a certain indenture, but nothing further was said about it. The purchasers' solicitor inquired of the vendors' solicitor what this deed was, and was told that it could not be found, and no abstract of it or information about it could be furnished, but that it was believed not to affect the property sold. The vendors' solicitor also said, as he really believed to be the case, that though the title to the six undivided shares could not be strictly proved, yet the vendors had a good holding title to them. After these transactions the purchasers entered into the agreement, and paid the deposit money. Subsequently, the deed which was supposed to have been lost was found, when it was discovered that by virtue of it the six undivided shares of the mine belonged to some person quite different from the vendors, and that neither they, nor their predecessor in title, had ever had any title to those shares. The purchasers refused to proceed with the agreement, whereupon the vendors brought this action for specific performance of it. The purchasers contended that without these six shares the mines would be useless to them, and claimed to be entitled to be released from the agreement:—Held, that, as there had been no fraud in the matter, but the vendors had acted under a bona fide mistake, and the purchasers had had the fact that there was a doubt as to title brought to their notice before entering into the agreement, and had thought fit to run the risk of taking the property without having the matter cleared up, specific performance of the agreement ought to be decreed, but that a deduction must be made from the purchase money as compensation to the purchasers for the loss of the six shares. English v. Murray, 49 L. T. 35; 32 W. R. 84.

4. When two persons agreed to sell property, of whom one was entitled to a moiety subject to a mortgage for its full value, and the other had no interest:—Held, that a judgment for specific performance with abatement might be made against the former. Horrocks v. Rigby, 9 L. R., Ch. D., 180; 47 L. J., Ch., 800; 38 L. T., N. S., 782; 26 W. R. 714.

VII. MINES AND OTHER RESERVATIONS.

5. A contract was made for the purchase of land, and the purchaser afterwards discovered that another person had a right to dig coal on the land:—Held, that the purchaser was entitled to take the land with compensation for the defect. Ramsden v. Hirst, 4 Jur., N. S., 200; 27 L. J., Ch., 428; 6 W. R. 349.

A vendor of an estate had granted to A. the right to work coals under the property, with a proviso, that when the workings of the coal had finally ceased, the pits should be filled up, and the land restored to a proper state of cultivation. A. ceased to work the mines, and filled in the pits. Upon the sale of the estate, A. claimed to be entitled to re-work the coal, and the purchaser therefore claimed compensation. The Court considered that there had only been a temporary cessation to work the coals, and that the purchaser was entitled to compensation, to be ascertained by an expert appointed by the judge. Id.

6. Reservation of salt works, mines, etc., in 1704, with a right of entry, though no instance of any claim, and the title had been transferred in 1761, without such reservation upon the usual covenants:—Held, an objection, giving a right to compensation, the purchaser not insisting upon it further. Seaman v. Vandrey, 16 Ves. 390.

7. R. agreed to sell to W. lands in New South Wales free from incumbrances, and the greater part of the purchase money was paid. On an investigation of the title it appeared that these lands were held, with other lands, under a Crown grant, containing various reservations and conditions, with a proviso for re-entry on breach of condition. W. filed a bill for specific performance, with compensation on account of these reservations, offering to complete without compensation, if the Court was of opinion that he was not entitled to it. An order was made on appeal, declaring him entitled to compensation, and directing a reference as to the amount. In answer to this inquiry, it was found that the amount of compensation could not be ascertained. W. then filed a supplemental bill, asking that if the compensation could not be ascertained R. might be decreed to repay, with interest, the part of the purchase money which he had paid, and that W. might be declared entitled to a lien on the land for it:—Held, that W. was bound to take the property without compensation, and as the compensation could not be ascertained he was entitled to the return of his purchase money, with the interest at 4*l.* per a defect of a title, if to be ascertained, by reduction of the purchase money; if not, or the plaintiff would so take it, with an indemnity, the defendant, the vendor, proposing an option to take it as it was, or relinquish the contract; the defect consisting in the representation by the particular of a church lease for twenty-one years, the lease being actually for lives, and the covenant limited and contingent. Milligan v. Cooke, 16 Ves. 1.

1. Principles upon which the Court proceeds in determining whether the purchaser is entitled to a partial performance of the contract, with compensation for the deficiency, where the vendor has only a limited interest in the estate contracted to be sold, and is, therefore, incapable of performing the whole contract. Thomas v. Dering, 1 Keen 729; 6 L. J., N. S., Ch., 267; 1 Jur. 211, 427.

2. A. contracted with B. for the purchase in fee of property in ignorance that B. was only entitled to an estate pur autre vie, and that C. (B.'s wife) was entitled to the remainder in fee on the determination of the particular life. D., with full knowledge of A.'s contract, took a conveyance from B. and C. of the property, acknowledged by C. so as to pass her interest.—Held, that A. was entitled, by way of specific performance, to a conveyance from D. of B.'s interest, with compensation in respect of C.'s interest, which B. was unable to bind or convey without her consent. Barnes v. Wood, 8 L. R., Eq., 424; 38 L. J., Ch., 683; 17 W. R. 1080.

3. When a husband and wife agreed to sell her estate in fee simple, the purchaser being aware that the estate belonged to the wife, and she afterwards refused to convey.—Held, that the purchaser could not compel the husband to convey his interest and accept an abated price. Castle v. Wilkinson, 5 L. R., Ch., 534; 39 L. J., Ch., 843; 18 W. R. 586.

4. A purchaser of real estate at a sale in the Court of Bankruptcy, will not be discharged from his purchase on objections to title, where the abstract of title posted in the court contains express notice of the defects objected to.—Held, also, that where title cannot be made out to small portions of the estate, the purchaser will not be discharged, but will be entitled to compensation pro tanto only, unless he can show that the deficient portion was essential to the proper enjoyment of the whole, or that it constituted his main object in entering into the contract. Difference in practice between sales of real property in bankruptcy and in courts of equity. Exp. Gethin, Re Smith, L. & G. temp. Plunk. 429.

5. Where the particulars of sale of certain leasehold property contained a misstatement, thereby causing the reversion to the full rack rental value of the premises to appear as if it would fall in eight years earlier than actually was the case, of which misstatement the vendors asserted that the purchaser had knowledge at the time of the sale, although the evidence on this point was conflicting; and where the conditions of sale provided that any error or misstatement in the particulars should not annul the sale, but compensation should be made to or by the purchaser, as the case might be.—Held, that, even if the purchaser were aware of the misstatement in the particulars, the vendors were not thereby relieved from the liability to make him compensation, in accordance with the terms of the conditions of sale. Lett v. Randall, 49 L. T. 71.

6. The objection by a purchaser applying only to a small part of the estate, a specific performance decreed with compensation. M'Queen v. Farquhar, 11 Ves. 467.

7. A., being entitled to nine-sixteenths only of an estate, agrees, by mistake, to sell the entirety to B. Semble, that a specific performance will not be decreed as to the nine-sixteenths, with an abatement out of the purchase money, especially where C. has a lien on the estate for a debt which would exhaust nearly the whole of the purchase money. Wheatley v. Slade, 4 Sim. 126.

8. An agreement was entered into with two vendors for the sale of two-sixths of certain leasehold property, together with other the estates and interest of the vendors therein. It turned out that the vendors were only entitled to two twenty-one parts of the estate:—Held, that the purchaser was entitled to specific performance of the contract to the extent of the vendors' interests with a proportionate abatement. Jones v. Evans, 17 L. J., N. S., Ch., 469; 12 Jur. 664.

9. In the case of a sale under the order of the Court, it being clear that a certain portion of the property was not intended by the vendor to be included in the contract of sale; the Court, in the absence of any proof of misconduct in the purchaser or his agent, refused to compel a specific performance by the purchaser, excluding the portion in question. The purchaser, however, electing to take exclusive of the portion of property in dispute, the Court ordered accordingly, and without compensation. Alvanley v. Kinnaird, 2 Macn. & G. 1; 14 Jur. 837, varying the order below.

Cases in which the Court will or will not, and how far, interfere, considered. Id.

10. A residence, with four acres, was sold. It turned out that there was no title to a slip of ground, of about a quarter of an acre, between the house and the highroad.—Held, that it was not a proper subject for compensation, and that a good title could not be made. Perkins v. Ede, 16 Beav. 193.

11. Where a vendor can make a title to three-fourths only of the property sold, the purchaser is not entitled to take the three-fourths with an abatement, but he may take the three-fourths at the price agreed on for the whole. Maw v. Topman, 19 Beav. 576.

12. Vendors who by the contract bind themselves to make out a good title to all the lands included in the contract, but are unable to show a title to $\frac{1}{11}$ part, not necessary to the enjoyment of the other parts included in the contract, which provided no compensation for errors in dimensions in the land, the bill averring that they could make title to all the lands sold, seeking specific performance as to all.—Held, that it was not competent to the vendors at the hearing to seek performance with compensation. Ashton v. Wood, 3 Sm. & G. 436; 3 Jur., N. S., 1164.

Quære, whether the Court will in no case decree specific performance with compensation for defects of title in small particulars, the question of compensation being raised by the bill. Ib.

1. Where a plaintiff filed a bill for specific performance of an agreement to purchase lands, and failed to show a good title to a small portion of the lands, which was not material to the beneficial enjoyment of the remainder of the lands, the Court decreed specific performance of the agreement, with compensation, and directed the costs to follow the event. Carver v. Richards, 6 Jur., N. S., 667.

2. Vendors agreed to sell the entirety of certain freehold property for 6,000*l.*, and to make out a good marketable title. The purchaser, in consequence of delays on the part of the vendors, filed a bill for specific performance of the agreement. It was subsequently discovered that the vendors were entitled to only a moiety of the property:—Held, that the purchaser was entitled to a decree for specific performance of the agreement by the vendors of their moiety, with an abatement of one-half of the purchase money. Hooper v. Smart, Bailey v. Piper, 18 L. R., Eq., 683; 43 L. J., Ch., 704; 22 W. R. 943; 31 L. T., N. S., 86.

3. In an agreement for the sale of seventeen undivided shares of a coal mine there was an article stating two conveyances by which six undivided shares of the land, beneath which the coal lay, had been conveyed to the vendors' predecessor in title, but stating that there was no express mention in the conveyances of the minerals under the land, and requiring that the purchasers should assume that six undivided shares of the minerals passed by the conveyances of the land, and thereby became absolutely vested in the vendor's predecessor in title. In the abstract of the vendor's title sent to the purchasers, mention was made of a certain indenture, but nothing further was said about it. The purchasers' solicitor inquired of the vendors' solicitor what this deed was, and was told that it could not be found, and no abstract of it or information about it could be furnished, but that it was believed not to affect the property sold. The vendors' solicitor also said, as he really believed to be the case, that though the title to the six undivided shares could not be strictly proved, yet the vendors had a good holding title to them. After these transactions the purchasers entered into the agreement, and paid the deposit money. Subsequently, the deed which was supposed to have been lost was found, when it was discovered that by virtue of it the six undivided shares of the mine belonged to some person quite different from the vendors, and that neither they, nor their predecessor in title, had ever had any title to those shares. The purchasers refused to proceed with the agreement, whereupon the vendors brought this action for specific performance of it. The purchasers contended that without these six shares the mines would be useless to them, and claimed to be entitled to be released from the agreement:—Held, that, as there had been no fraud in the matter, but the vendors had acted under a bonâ fide mistake, and the purchasers had had the fact that there was a doubt as to title brought to their notice before entering into the agreement, and had thought fit to run the risk of taking the property without having the matter cleared up, specific performance of the agreement ought to be decreed, but that a deduction must be made from the purchase money as compensation to the purchasers for the loss of the six shares. English v. Murray, 49 L. T. 35; 32 W. R. 84.

4. When two persons agreed to sell property, of whom one was entitled to a moiety subject to a mortgage for its full value, and the other had no interest:—Held, that a judgment for specific performance with abatement might be made against the former. Horrocks v. Rigby, 9 L. R., Ch. D., 180; 47 L. J., Ch., 800; 38 L. T., N. S., 782; 26 W. R. 714.

VII. MINES AND OTHER RESERVATIONS.

5. A contract was made for the purchase of land, and the purchaser afterwards discovered that another person had a right to dig coal on the land:—Held, that the purchaser was entitled to take the land with compensation for the defect. Ramsden v. Hirst, 4 Jur., N. S., 200; 27 L. J., Ch., 428; 6 W. R. 349.

A vendor of an estate had granted to A. the right to work coals under the property, with a proviso, that when the workings of the coal had finally ceased, the pits should be filled up, and the land restored to a proper state of cultivation. A. ceased to work the mines, and filled in the pits. Upon the sale of the estate, A. claimed to be entitled to re-work the coal, and the purchaser therefore claimed compensation. The Court considered that there had only been a temporary cessation to work the coals, and that the purchaser was entitled to compensation, to be ascertained by an expert appointed by the judge. Ib.

6. Reservation of salt works, mines, etc., in 1704, with a right of entry, though no instance of any claim, and the title had been transferred in 1761, without such reservation upon the usual covenants:—Held, an objection, giving a right to compensation, the purchaser not insisting upon it further. Seaman v. Vandrey, 16 Ves. 390.

7. R. agreed to sell to W. lands in New South Wales free from incumbrances, and the greater part of the purchase money was paid. On an investigation of the title it appeared that these lands were held, with other lands, under a Crown grant, containing various reservations and conditions, with a proviso for re-entry on breach of condition. W. filed a bill for specific performance, with compensation on account of these reservations, offering to complete without compensation, if the Court was of opinion that he was not entitled to it. An order was made on appeal, declaring him entitled to compensation, and directing a reference as to the amount. In answer to this inquiry, it was found that the amount of compensation could not be ascertained. W. then filed a supplemental bill, asking that if the compensation could not be ascertained R. might be decreed to repay, with interest, the part of the purchase money which he had paid, and that W. might be declared entitled to a lien on the land for it:—Held, that W. was bound to take the property without compensation, and as the compensation could not be ascertained he was entitled to the return of his purchase money, with the interest at 4*l.* per cent., and to a lien on the estate for the amount. Westmacott v. Robins, 4 De G. F. & J. 390.

1. In a contract for sale of land containing valuable quarries, was a clause reserving to the vendor power to rescind in case any objection or requisition should be persisted in; in another clause provision was made for compensation in case any error or mistake should appear to have been made in the description of the property, or the vendor's interest therein. A requisition was made by the purchaser, founded on an exception in favour of a lord of the manor, of mines and minerals in one of the title deeds relating to part of the land. The purchaser alleged, therefore, that the quarries were not as to this part of the land included, and he claimed compensation. The vendor raised a contention that by custom or prescription he had a right to the quarries, but the objection being persisted in, he rescinded the contract:—Held, upon a bill by the purchaser claiming specific performance with compensation, that the requisition was one of title, giving the vendor the right to rescind. Marrison v. Fletcher, 40 L. J., Ch., 131; 6 L. R., Ch., 91.

VIII. QUANTITY. DEFECTIVE.

2. General rule of specific performance that the purchaser shall have what the vendor can give, with an abatement out of the purchase money for so much as the quantity falls short of the representation, enforced against trustees for infants upon the mere mistake of their agent without fraud, etc.; but the relief adapted to the justice of the case, viz., the purchase being of wood upon a gross valuation, without regard to the quantity of land, an abatement for deficiency of quantity from erroneously inserting the hedges and fences, not included in the purchase, was directed with reference to land. Hill v. Buckley, 17 Ves. 394.

3. Purchaser is not entitled to abatement for deficiency of quantity, the particulars of sale describing lot as containing "more or less." Winch v. Winchester, 1 Ves. & B. 375.

4. Where it was stated by one of the conditions of sale, that the quantity of a particular lot of the estates sold under a decree was stated from estimation, and that the purchaser should not object to complete this purchase if the quantity should turn out less than that stated:—Held, that the purchaser was not by such condition precluded from his right to compensation in the event of the quantity having turned out deficient. Frost v. Brewer, 3 Jur. 165.

5. Where lands sold under a decree contain a less quantity than stated in the rental, the plaintiff cannot, he not having made any objection, set aside the sale, or insist that the purchaser shall not have compensation if he choose to hold his bargain. Magamley v. Brady, 7 Ir. Eq. R. 557.

6. Misdescription of the quantity of land in regard to the acres being statute acres or customary, is not matter of compensation, but a ground for setting aside the sale. Price v. North, 2 Y. & Coll. 620; 7 L. J., N. S., Exch. Eq., 9.

7. A tenant in possession purchased the property, which was represented to be forty-six feet in depth; it turned out to be thirty-three only:—Held, that he was entitled to an abatement. King v. Wilson, 6 Beav. 124.

8. After a sale by auction of a messuage and lands, one of the conditions of which was, that any mistake or error in the description of the property, or any other error in the particulars, should not annul the sale, but (except where otherwise provided for by the condition) a compensation should be given or taken to be settled by two referees or an umpire, it was found that one of the lots contained about twenty acres more, and another about ten acres less, than the quantity of land described in the particulars:—Held, that upon the construction of the condition, the mistake or error thereby contemplated was such a mistake or error as would annul the contract; that the excess of the quantity of land in one of the lots, and the deficiency in the other, were both subjects of compensation within the condition, and that the Court would, if necessary, refer it to the Master to settle the amount of such compensation, notwithstanding that from the variety in the nature of the different portions of the land in which the variations occurred, there was no uniform standard for computing such amount; and that whether a vendor could or could not in equity be relieved, on the ground of mistake, from a contract for the sale of lands inaccurately described as to quantity, and which description had been prepared by his solicitor from former particulars and conditions, relating to the same property, drawn up by another solicitor on the report of a surveyor. Equity would not in such circumstances enforce the contract against the vendor, unless the case should be one for compensation, and the purchaser should submit to make such compensation. Leslie v. Thompson, 9 Hare 268; 20 L. J., N. S., Ch., 561; 15 Jur. 717.

9. Although as a general rule there is a deficiency in the quantity of land contracted to be sold, the purchaser is entitled to specific performance of the contract, with compensation for the deficiency. This rule applies only within certain limits. The plaintiff agreed to purchase an estate which, on the written contract, was, by mistake, stated to contain 21,750 acres; it turned out that it contained only 11,814 acres:—Held, that the purchaser was not entitled to specific performance with a proportionate abatement for the deficiency of acreage, but that he could only enforce the contract on payment of the full price or rescind the contract. Durham (Earl) v. D'Legard or Legard, 34 Beav. 611; 11 Jur., N. S., 706; 34 L. J., Ch., 589; 13 W. R. 959; 13 L. T., N. S., 82.

10. Upon the sale of real estate one of the conditions was as follows:—"The admeasurements are presumed to be correct, but if any error be discovered therein, no allowance shall be made or required either way." It was stated in the particulars that the property sold contained an area of 7,683 square yards or thereabouts; but upon admeasurements, the area was found to be 4,350 only. Upon a bill by the purchaser against the vendor for specific performance with compensation for the deficiency in quantity:—Held, that the purchaser was not entitled to compensation in respect of the mistake as to quantity, and a decree was made for specific performance on payment by the purchaser to the vendor of the full amount of the purchase money, with costs. Cordingley v. Cheesbrough, 3 Giff. 496; 8 Jur., N. S., 585, 755; 31 L. J., Ch., 617; 6 L. T., N. S., 15, 642; 4 De G. F. & J. 379.

1. At a sale by auction under a decree the property sold was stated in the particulars to contain 753 square yards or thereabouts, and one of the conditions provided that if any error, misstatement, or omission in the particulars should be discovered, it should not annul the sale, nor should any compensation be allowed by the vendor or purchaser in respect thereof. The property was found to contain 573 square yards only:—Held, that the condition only applied to small errors, and did not cover so large a deficiency, and that the purchaser was entitled to compensation. Whittemore v. Whittemore, 8 L. R., Eq., 603.

2. An estate was described in particulars of sale as containing 227 acres, and as being freehold with the exception of 50 acres copyhold of a forest. The tenure being doubtful, a clause was inserted in the contract for sale to the effect that the estate was sold as being about 50 acres copyhold, but no abatement or compensation was to be made in favour of the purchaser in case the quantity of pure copyhold should exceed 50 acres, and the rest of the estate was sold as being partly of freehold and partly of copyhold tenure. The vendor was not to be required to distinguish which portions were of one tenure and which of the other, nor was any compensation to be allowed. The purchaser sent in requisitions by which he claimed to have the freeholds and copyholds distinguished, with a view to compensation. The purchaser afterwards discovered that the 227 acres consisted of about 178 acres of copyhold and 49 of freehold, and that all minerals except stone were reserved to the Crown:—Held, that there had been a misdescription of the property to which the purchaser had properly objected, and specific performance was refused. Turquand v. Rhodes, 37 L. J., Ch., 830; 18 L. T., N. S., 844; 16 W. R. 1074.

Compensation to Vendor. 3. By the particulars of a sale by auction, at which the defendant was declared the purchaser of lots 1, 2, 3, and 4, lot 1 was described as comprising 70 acres, 24 perches, more or less, and lots 2, 3, and 4, as comprising together 321 acres, 2 roods, 30 perches, more or less; and by the conditions of sale it was provided, amongst other things, that any mistake or error in the description of the property should not annul the sale, but should be the subject of compensation, to be given or taken, as the case might require. A map or plan of the property was annexed to the particulars, in which the different lots were distinguished by different colours. After the sale it was found that lot 1 comprised 89 acres, 29 perches; and lots 2, 3, and 4 only 310 acres, 3 roods, and 18 perches:—Held, upon special case, stating that the error in the particulars had arisen from the adoption therein of the description furnished by a surveyor's report made on a former occasion, which was erroneous, and submitting the question of the vendor's title to compensation to the Court, that the purchaser was bound to make compensation to the vendors in respect of the extra quantity of land comprised in lot 1, and entitled to receive compensation from the vendors in respect of the deficiency in lots 2, 3, and 4. Leslie v. Thompson, 9 Hare 268; 20 L. J., N. S., Ch., 561; 15 Jur. 717.

The addition of a statement of the acreage, more or less, to the previous description of property offered for sale:—Held, to negative any presumption arising out of such prior description, of an intention to sell the property in the lump. Id.

4. On the purchase at a specified price per acre, of land, described in the particulars as grass land, bounded by a public drain, and "containing by estimation twenty-three acres or thereabouts, but to be surveyed," the land when measured usque ad medium flum aqua contained 23a. Or. 26p., of which 1a. Or. 33p. was comprised within the drain:—Held, that, if the land comprised within the drain was included in the conveyance, the purchaser was bound to pay for it at the specified rate. Re Popple, 25 W. R. 248.

IX. RENTS, TITHES, AND OTHER OUTGOINGS.

5. A contract having been made for sale of an estate, it afterwards appeared that there were some outgoing from the estate which were not disclosed at the time of the contract, yet, these being matters which are in compensation, the contract shall be carried into execution, with an allowance only to the purchaser for those particulars which diminish the value; the agreement not being completed within the time specified, the purchaser shall be allowed interest for such time as the purchase money shall appear to have been kept dead for the special purpose of completing the contract. Homland v. Norris, 1 Cox 59.

Quit-Rent and Tithe-Rent Charge. 6. Quit rents, being incidents of tenure, are subjects of compensation. Esdaile v. Stephenson, 1 Sim. & S. 122.

Quare, if rent charges are. The Court, when small, has allowed them so. Id.

7. Part of the lands sold under the decree was liable to quit-rent and tithe rent-charge, though not so stated in the rental. Another part was stated in the rental to be held from year to year by C. at a rent payable 1st May and 1st November; but the purchaser found, after he lodged his one-fourth of the purchase money, that it was held for a term, with power to the tenant to surrender on any 25th March or 29th September, giving six months' previous notice, and it was surrendered on the 25th March then next. The tenure by which other parts were held was not stated in the rental, but the purchaser on going into possession found they were held for lives still subsisting:—Held, first, the purchaser was entitled to compensation for the quit-rent but not for the tithe rent-charge. Martin v. Cotter, 8 Ir. Eq. R. 147.

8. A. agreed to sell an estate, tithe-free, to B. Afterwards C., the vicar of L. (in which parish part of the estate was situated), filed a bill for tithes against the occupiers of another part of the estate, as also being situate in L. A. agreed that part of the purchase money should be set apart as an indemnity to B. against the claim made by C., which was accordingly done, and B. paid the remainder of his purchase money, and took a conveyance of the estate. C. died, and his suit was dismissed for want of prosecution, but the indemnity fund was not transferred to A. One of C.'s successors instituted a fresh suit for the tithes of the same lands. Pending these proceedings, it was discovered that the lands were situate in the parish of S., and were tithable to the rector of S., and, on proof of those facts, the latter suit was dismissed at the hearing:—Held, that B. was entitled to a compensation out of the land for the tithes of the land situate in S. Crompton v. Melbourne, 5 Sim. 353.

1. In enforcing contracts upon principle of compensation for variance from description, the Court has gone so far, to the extent even of totally defeating the object of the purchaser, that where the principal subject of the contract was all the corn and hay tithes of a parish, and of hay tithe half was allotted to vicar, or half commuted for customary payment, the nature of that payment, the extent of meadow, and the possible conversion of arable, not distinctly appearing, the injunction against recovering the deposit was continued after answer. Drew v. Hanson, 6 Ves. 675.

2. As a general rule, where land is agreed to be sold tithe free, the right to the tithes is to be considered so material to the enjoyment of the lands, that a purchaser is not compelled to complete his contract, with a compensation, if a good title cannot be made to the tithe; but this rule admits of exception where the circumstances manifest that the right to the tithe did not form any inducement to the purchaser to enter into the contract. Smith v. Tolcher, 4 Russ. 302.

3. The purchaser of an estate, sold as tithe-free, cannot be compelled to take it subject to tithe on terms of compensation; but an estate of 140 acres being sold under a decree, the particulars stating about thirty-two acres to be tithe free, and no evidence of exemption having been produced on the reference of the title, the Master was directed to certify the proper amount of compensation. A purchaser under a decree for sale, having accepted, and (on a report of an objection to the title for which compensation was ordered) retained possession, must pay interest on the purchase money from the time at which he might have safely taken possession, and is entitled to an allowance for prior, not for subsequent, deterioration of the estate. Binks v. Rokeby (Lord), 2 Swan. 222.

4. Plaintiff, in a bill for specific performance of a contract, is not entitled generally to satisfaction, by way of damage for the non-performance, to be ascertained by an issue, or a reference to the Master. Distinction as to case of compensation, as for a part subject to tithes, though represented as tithe-free, giving the purchaser, if he chooses to take the purchase, a right to compensation, but not to compel the vendor to purchase the tithes. Todd v. Gee, 17 Ves. 273.

Taxes. 5. An estate consisting of fen land, and so described in particulars of sale, was charged by a local but public Act with draining and embanking taxes, of which purchaser had no express notice:—Held, he was not entitled to compensation. Barraud v. Archer, 2 Sim. 433; 9 L. J., Ch., 173.

6. An estate sold, and at the auction, eau brink tax stated at a certain amount. It was afterwards discovered that the eau brink tax was less than the amount stated, and the corporation tax more; and on a bill filed by the vendors for a specific performance, the defendant claimed compensation for the excess in amount of the corporation tax, after deducting the difference in the amount of the eau brink tax. The Court allowed the compensation. Townshend v. Granger, 9 L. J., Ch., 176.

Fines. 7. Trustees for sale of a manor described it in advertisements, and particulars, and conditions of sale, as a manor in which the fines were arbitrary, adding that the clear profits on an average of the last eight years had been 150*l.* a year. And it was one of the conditions of sale that if there should be any error or misstatement in the particulars, the vendors or purchaser, as the case might happen, should pay or allow a proportionate value, according to the average of the whole purchase money, as a compensation either way. After the sale it was found that by the custom of the manor arbitrary fines were payable only on alienation; and that on the death of the tenant his customary heir paid upon admittance a small fixed sum, and the widow was admitted to her free-bench without any payment. It was also found that the clear profits exceeded 200*l.* a year:—Held, reversing a decree made on a bill which was filed by the purchaser for specific performance, with compensation in respect of the misstatement as to the fines, that there was no such misdescription of the property as would entitle the purchaser to compensation, inasmuch as the annual profits which constituted the substantial value far exceeded the amount stated. White v. Cudden, 8 Cl. & F. 766. Reversing S. C. sub nom. Cudden v. Cartwright, 4 Y. & Coll. 25.

X. REPAIRS.

8. Compensation for the dry rot in house and premises decreed, upon representation of the vendor to the purchaser as to the state of repairs; he relying upon such representations, and stating to the plaintiff that he did not employ a surveyor for that reason. Grant v. Mum, Coop. 173.

9. Specific performance of an agreement for sale of estate decreed, notwithstanding a variance from the description, with compensation for the deficiency in value; though a minute examination might have discovered the defects, as in the state of the house, etc.; but not for a variance from the description, as lying within a ring fence: the premises consisting of leasehold farm, and three years having expired pending the suit, interest was given to the vendor, and a rent set upon it in respect of his possession. Dyer v. Hargrave, 10 Ves. 505.

XI. ON SALE OF TIMBER ESTATES.

1. There is no instance of a court of equity compelling a purchaser who contracted for the purchase of a demesne with ornamental timber, where ornamental timber has been cut down between the contract and possession given, or title shown, to complete the purchase. Ornamental timber is essentially different from ordinary timber. Magennis v. Fallon, 2 Moll. 590.

The principle of equity with respect to specific performance is, that if substantially the purchaser can have the thing contracted for, a slight variation in the qualifications of it will not disable the vendor from having a decree for specific performance, when the difference is such as can be compensated in money. Id. 588.

2. Lands of copyhold and freehold tenure, lying intermixed and undistinguishable, were sold with the timber standing on them. The conditions of sale stipulated that the vendor was not to be bound to distinguish the freeholds from the copyholds, and that the timber was to be taken at a valuation made for the purposes of that sale, the value of the timber on each lot being specified. The deposit was paid of 10 per cent. on the whole price of the land and timber. It was also stipulated, that in case of delay in the completion of the purchase, interest of 5 per cent. should be payable on the whole price of the land and timber:—Held, first, that the contract was an entire contract for the sale of land with timber on it; not two contracts, one for the sale of land and another for timber; secondly, that the purchaser was not entitled to any abatement, though he could not cut a single tree, not being able to distinguish any one tree as standing on freehold ground; thirdly, that in the case of one lot sold under the same conditions and particulars of sale, and which consisted entirely of copyholds, the purchaser was equally bound to pay the stipulated price for the timber, although he could not cut any of it. Crosse v. Lawrence, 9 Hare 462; 21 L. J., N. S., Ch., 889; 16 Jur. 142.

3. Bill by the vendor for the specific performance of a contract to purchase a timber estate, where the particulars of sale described it as comprising a certain wood with upwards of sixty-five acres of fine oak timber trees, the average size of which approached fifty feet, and the particulars of the lot described it only as sixty-five acres, two roods; and twelve perches of growing timber. It appeared on the evidence for the plaintiff that the average size of the trees was about thirty-five feet, but on that for the defendant that it was only about twenty-two feet; and the defendant moreover alleged that it was sold at a time when he had no means of seeing the wood, and that he relied on the particulars of sale:—Held, that as the representation on the particulars of sale had proved to be incorrect, and as it was not shown that the defendant knew it to be incorrect at the time of making the contract, the Court would not, at all events, enforce the specific performance of the contract without compensation, and that (inasmuch as the particulars of the sale did not express what number of trees or quantity of timber the wood contained) it was not a case in which the Court could measure the extent of the deficiency or ascertain the amount of compensation, and that the bill must therefore be dismissed. Brooke (Lord) v. Rounthwaite, 5 Hare 298; 5 L. J., N. S., Ch., 332; 10 Jur. 656.

4. General rule of specific performance, that the purchaser shall have what the vendor can give, with an abatement out of the purchase money for so much as the quantity falls short of the representation, enforced against trustees for infants, upon the mere mistake of their agent, without fraud, etc.; but the relief adapted to the justice of the case, viz., the purchase being of wood upon a gross valuation, without regard to the quantity of land, an abatement for a deficiency of quantity from erroneously inserting the hedges and fences, not included in the purchase, was directed with reference to land merely, not wood-land. Hill v. Brookley, 17 Ves. 394.

XII. MISREPRESENTATION AS TO VALUE.

5. In suits as to the specific performance of a contract to purchase large colliery works, the purchasers alleged as a defence misrepresentation by the vendors as to the value. As to several allegations the purchasers were held to have failed, and specific performance was decreed, but with compensation to the purchasers in respect of an alleged misrepresentation as to the amount of stores consumed in the collieries, and a consequent excess in the statement of income. An inquiry was directed as to such compensation, and it was found that there was a large excess in the statement of income beyond its true amount:—Held, that the purchasers were entitled to a deduction from their purchase money bearing the same proportion to the whole purchase money as the excess bore to the income stated. Powell v. Elliot, 10 L. R., Ch., 424; 33 L. T., N. S., 110; 23 W. R. 777.

Held, also, that as no direction as to costs was given by the original decree in the suits, and that as the purchasers were held to be entitled to a considerable abatement, the vendors must pay the costs of the suits, and could not on the hearing on further consideration be relieved from payment of any part of the costs on account of the failure of the purchasers as to parts of their case on the original hearing. Id.

6. Purchaser, under a decree, having paid in his entire purchase money, was not entitled to compensation out of the fund, for the difference between the amount of rent received by the receiver in the interim before possession given, and the amount which ought to have been received according to the rental, which was erroneous, it appearing that he was aware, when he purchased, of the discrepancy between the rental and the true rent payable; otherwise if rents had been lost, and the claim had been for compensation for loss accrued after he paid his purchase money, and before he could get possession. Campbell v. Hay, 2 Moll. 102.

7. An estate sold under a decree was described as of a certain annual value; and, by the conditions, compensation was to be made for any error in the particular. The purchaser paid his money into court, was let into possession, and took a conveyance. After he got into possession, he discovered that the rent was overstated in the particular:—Held, that he was entitled to a compensation out of his purchase money. Cann v. Cann, 3 Sim. 447.

XIII. WATER SUPPLY.

1. An estate was set up to sale in lots. In the particulars, the lots were described respectively, as "All that, etc.—comprising lot—in the sale-plan." The sale-plan circulated at the auction represented a well on Lot 4, with a drain and pipe conveying the water from the well through Lot 2 to Lot 1. The plaintiff, the purchaser of Lot 1, filed his bill for specific performance, with compensation for the loss of the water, the vendor having conveyed away the other two lots, without any reservations to the plaintiff of a right to a flow of water from the well:—Held, that the sale-plan, accurately describing the existing state of the property, would not carry the case higher than a view of the property by the purchaser. Decree for specific performance, without compensation. Fenster v. Turner, 11 L. J., N. S., Ch., 161; 6 Jur. 144.

2. Property was described in particulars of sale as being well supplied with water. It was supplied with water from a neighbouring waterworks at considerable expense; but the evidence showed that other property near to it, and at a higher level, was supplied with water from sources existing on such property:—Held, that there was a misdescription of the property purchased, and that the purchaser was therefore entitled to compensation. Leyland v. Iltingworth, Ex p. Webster, 6 Jur., N. S., 811; 29 L. J., Ch., 611; 8 W. R. 695; 2 De G. F. & J. 248.

XIV. OTHER CASES.

3. One stipulation in a contract for purchase was that the vendor should make a certain road, which it turned out he could not make without incurring a forfeiture:—Held, that the purchaser was entitled to a decree for specific performance with a compensation for the road. Peacock v. Penson, 11 Beav. 355; 18 L. J., N. S., Ch., 57; 12 Jur. 954; 14 id. 518.

4. Part of the lands sold under the decree was liable to quit-rent and tithe rent-charge, though not so stated in the rental. Another part was stated in the rental to be held from year to year by C. at a rent payable 1st May and 1st November; but the purchaser found, after he lodged his one-fourth of the purchase money, that it was held for a term, with power to the tenant to surrender on any 25th March or 29th September, giving six months' previous notice, and it was surrendered on the 25th March then next. The tenure by which other parts were held was not stated in the rental, but the purchaser on going into possession found they were held for lives still subsisting:—Held, that C. was at the time of sale a tenant, not from year to year, but for a term to end on the 25th March then next, and the purchaser was entitled to compensation therefore; held also that he was not entitled to compensation in respect of the premises whose tenure was not stated, as he should have ascertained how they were held. Martin v. Cottler, 8 Ir. Eq. R. 147.

5. Premises sold at auction were described in the particulars as being customary leaseholds, renewable every twenty-one years, at the customary rent of 10s., on payment of the customary fine. The fourth condition of sale, after fixing a time for the delivery of the abstract and objections to the title, stipulated that if there were any objection which the vendor should be unable or unwilling to remove, he might vacate the sale on repayment of the deposit money, without interest or costs. The fifth condition stipulated that the production of the lease by the vendor should be accepted as sufficient evidence of the lessor's title. The sixth condition stipulated that errors of description, or any errors inserted in the particular, should not vacate the sale, but should be subject to abatement or compensation. It turned out, on the investigation of the title, what was previously unknown to all the parties interested, that there was no custom to renew, but that the premises were held for an absolute term of twenty-one years:—Held, first, that the fact of the property being sold as leaseholds renewable by custom, when there was no such custom, was an error of description, not a defect of title. Secondly, that whatever might have been the decree, in the absence of the condition of sale providing that errors of description should not vitiate the sale, but that the same should be concluded, with compensation, the purchaser was, under that condition, entitled to specific performance, with a deduction from the price. Nemby v. Paynter, 17 Jur. 483; 22 L. J., Ch., 871; 11 Hare 26; 1 Eq. Rep. 173.

6. A reversion depending on the contingency of a tenant for life dying without issue, the tenant for life being fifty-six years of age, and married, and his wife being in her fifty-fourth year, and the only issue of the marriage having been a still-born child, eleven years previously, is the subject of estimate and calculation. Boothby v. Boothby, 1 Macn. & G. 604; 2 H. & Tw. 214.

7. A reversion depending upon the contingency of the tenant for life, who was sixty-three years of age, and a bachelor, dying without issue, is not the subject of estimate or calculation; but the purchaser of this reversion having, in his treaty with the vendor, proposed to deduct one-half of the reversion in respect of such contingency, and the treaty having been concluded upon that basis, the Court, as between the vendor and purchaser, will value the contingency accordingly. Baker v. Bent, 1 Russ. & M. 224; Tam. 368.

8. Course of proceeding where purchaser seeking specific performance asks also compensation for a misdescription. Contract held duly rescinded within conditions of sale. Observations on the effect of stringent conditions of sale on the value of the property. Hoy v. Smythies, 2 Jur., N. S., 1011.

9. Purchaser not entitled to compensation where the misdescription consisted in stating that the premises sold were in the joint occupation of A. and B. as lessees, the fact being that the premises had been demised to C., and by C. assigned to A., who was, together with B., in the occupation of them at the time of sale. Ridgway v. Gray, 1 Macn. & G. 109; 1 H. & Tw. 195.

The purchaser could not in this case be compelled to accept an indemnity. Id.

1. A vendor put up for sale by auction a certain sum of redeemed land tax, which he described in the particulars as charged on three houses. On investigating the title, it was discovered that the amount was made up of three sums, each of which was charged on a particular house, and not the whole upon each of the houses. The particulars referred to the contract with the commissioners for the redemption of the tax as part of the vendor's title, but did not further state, as appeared from the schedule to the contract, that the gross sum was charged in separate sums upon each of the houses. The purchaser had no notice of the real facts beyond what appeared upon the face of the particulars. Upon a bill by the vendor to enforce specific performance of a contract of purchase:—Held, that there was a material misdescription of the property sold; that the difference in value between what was offered for sale and what was bought was not a subject for compensation; and that specific performance of the contract could not be enforced against the purchaser. Cox v. Coventon, 8 Jur., N. S., 1142; 10 W. R. 829; 7 L. T., N. S., 78.

2. The plaintiff agreed to purchase from the defendants a certain manor, of which he was to be let into the enjoyment on a certain day. Before that day arrived, one of the copyhold tenants died, and three persons were admitted as his successors by the vendors, who received the fines payable upon such admission. To a bill filed by the plaintiff, praying that the said contract might be specifically performed by the defendants, with an abatement out of the purchase money by way of compensation to the plaintiff for the loss of the said fines, and for the depreciation in value of the said manor, caused by the admission of younger lives in lieu of the deceased tenant, a general demurrer was allowed. Cuddon v. Vite, 6 W. R. 606; 4 Jur., N. S., 579.

3. Specific performance of an agreement for sale of estate decreed, notwithstanding a variance from the description, with compensation for the deficiency in value, though a minute examination might have discovered the defects, as in the state of the house, etc., but not for a variance from the description, as lying within a ring fence; the premises consisting of leasehold farm, and three years having expired pending the suit, interest was given to the vendor, and a rent set upon it in respect of his possession. Dyer v. Hangrave, 10 Ves. 505.

4. Although according to the decided cases, a vendor who contracts for the sale of leasehold property described as held under a lease, cannot, if nothing further is said, make a good title unless it is held under an original lease, yet in a case where the particulars and conditions of sale of property so described contained enough to give notice to a purchaser that the property was held under a derivative lease:—Held, that the purchaser could not on that account refuse to complete, or claim compensation on the ground of misdescription. Madoley v. Booth (2 De G. & Sm. 718) commented on. Camberwell & South London Building Society v. Holloway, 13 L. R., Ch. D., 754; 49 L. J., Ch., 361; 41 L. T. 752; 28 W. R. 222.

I. BY ORIGINAL STIPULATIONS OR CONDITIONS.

1. In General, 7187.
2. As to Delivery of Abstract, 7189.
3. As to Delivery of Objections and Requisitions, 7189.
4. As to taking Possession, 7190.

1. In General.

5. Upon sale of a reversion, part of the terms was that the money be paid by a certain time; not being so by default of vendee, vendor discharged from his contract. Newman v. Rogers, 4 Bro. C. C. 391.

6. Bill for specific performance of articles for purchase, dismissed with costs, because title was not laid before counsel within time limited. Lewis v. Lechmere (Lord), 10 Mod. 502.

7. A purchase was to be completed on the 25th October. Before that day arrived the purchaser, at the vendor's request, extended the time to the 5th November. The title, however, was not completed on that day:—Held, on motion, that the purchaser was at liberty to abandon the contract. Parkin v. Thorold, 2 Sim., N. S., 1. Affirmed at the hearing 22 L. J., N. S., Ch., 170; 16 Jur. 959; 16 Beav. 59.

Where a contract has been entered into, by which a Court of law decides that the purchaser is not bound unless a title be made before a given day, if the Court of Equity gives relief, it must be, not on the ground that it puts on the words of the contract a construction different from that put on them at law, but because there are grounds collateral to the contract on which it can found a jurisdiction warranting its interference. Id.

In equity the time appointed for the completion of a contract is not, as at law, of the essence of the contract, but it may be made so by direct stipulation or necessary implication. S. C. 16 Beav. 59; 16 Jur. 959.

1. Time held to be of the essence of the contract partly upon construction of conditions of sale, and partly by reason of the nature of the trade carried on upon the property agreed to be sold. Seaton v. Mapp, 2 Colly. 556.

2. Time will, in equity, be deemed of the essence of the contract, in all cases where it can be collected, from the terms of the contract, that the parties intended that the time for its completion should be strictly adhered to. Hipwell v. Knight, 1 Y. & Coll. 401; 4 L. J., N. S., Exch. Eq., 52.

3. Time made of the essence of a contract by a special condition. Hudson v. Temple, 29 Beav. 536.

Upon the sale of some leaseholds, it was stipulated, "that if, from any cause or circumstance whatever, the purchase should not be completed on a day named, the vendor should be at liberty to annul the contract." The purchaser refused to pay the purchase money on the day named, the only remaining requisitions being as to the registration of a deed, and the sufficiency of a stamp, which the vendor undertook to supply. The purchaser, on the same day, annulled the contract:—Held, that he was justified in so doing. Id.

Conditions for sale of leasehold property expressly made time to be of the essence of the contract, and provided that if from any cause or circumstances whatever the contract was not completed agreeably to the conditions by the time specified, the vendor might annul the contract. The time fixed for completion was between one and two o'clock on the 11th October. The vendor attended then, and executed the assignment of the property, and the purchaser's agent almost immediately afterwards also executed it. The purchase money was not then paid. The vendor annulled the contract on the afternoon of the same day, viz., the 11th October, and re-sold the property:—Held, that he was entitled so to do; and upon a bill filed by him against the purchaser for a decree to cancel the assignment for a re-conveyance of the property, for an injunction to restrain two actions, and for payment of the costs of the suit:—Held, that he was entitled to such a decree. S. C. 3 L. T., N. S., 495.

If a vendor of leaseholds makes time the essence of a contract, and on the day specified for the completion of the purchase insists upon the money being paid, he may, in the event of the purchaser's neglect, omission, or refusal to comply with such request, avail himself of a power in the contract to annul the sale, though two objections to the title which he had given his written undertaking to remove remained unsatisfied, and though he had executed a deed which he had delivered to his solicitor as an escrow assigning the premises to the purchaser. S. C. 7 Jur., N. S., 248; 30 L. J., Ch., 251; 9 W. R. 243.

4. By an agreement entered into between the plaintiff, a landowner, and a railway company, the company was to take portions of the plaintiff's lands, and it was agreed that they should make and maintain, for the convenience of the plaintiff, so many crossings and of such kinds as C., the plaintiff's surveyor, should direct and notify in writing within one month after the company's obtaining possession of the land. In December 1858 the company entered into possession, but no award or notification of the works required was made until March following. In the meantime the company had made considerable progress in constructing the line, and they resisted the plaintiff's demand for the works notified. The plaintiff thereupon filed a bill to have the notified works executed and performed. In settling the terms of the agreement, the company had stipulated for a reduction from two months, the period originally proposed, to one month of the time within which C. should notify:—Held, that the stipulation as to time must be regarded as of the essence of the contract; and the Court considering that there was no sufficient evidence of any agreement to enlarge the time, specific performance of the works mentioned in the award or notification was refused. Darley v. London, Chatham, & Dover Railway Co., 9 Jur., N. S., 452; 33 L. J., Ch., 9; 11 W. R. 388; 8 L. T., N. S., 94.

The bill prayed specific performance of the agreement, but the case put forward by the plaintiff rested simply upon the award. At the bar plaintiff claimed relief upon the footing of the agreement independently of the award:—Held, that no such relief could be granted, since the company must necessarily have been led to suppose that the plaintiff relied upon the award only; but leave was given to amend. Id.

5. The time for paying the deposit may be made an essential term for entering into a contract for sale of an estate. Honeyman v. Marryat, 21 Beav. 14; 1 Jur., N. S., 857; 3 W. R. 502. And see S. C. 6 H. L. Ca. 112; 4 Jur., N. S., 17; 26 L. J., Ch., 619.

6. Upon the sale by auction of a contingent reversionary interest in railway stock, the conditions of sale were that the purchaser should pay to the auctioneers a deposit as part of the purchase money and sign agreements for payment of the remainder on or before August 17th, when the purchases were to be completed: should the completion of the purchases be delayed from any cause whatever beyond that period the purchasers were to pay interest on the balance of the purchase money from that date until the completion of the purchase:—Held, that as by the conditions of sale a possible postponement of the purchase was contemplated, time was not of the essence of the contract. Patrik v. Milner, 25 W. R. 700; 36 L. T., N. S., 738; 2 L. R., C. P. D., 342; 46 L. J., C. P. D., 537.

7. By a contract in writing, dated the 3rd September 1873, E. agreed to purchase freehold farms from N. for 33,000*l.*, subject to the title being accepted by his solicitor. The purchase money was to be paid on the 29th September 1873, on which day it was presumed that the contract would be completed and possession given; but in the event of the purchase not being completed on that day, the purchaser was to pay interest up to such reasonable time as might be agreed upon by his solicitor. When the title was produced it appeared that E. was not the legal owner of the land, but had agreed to purchase the same from the trustees of a settlement for 21,000*l.*, by a contract which was not completed till after the 29th September 1873. E. took the objection that it appeared on the face of the title that the trustees had sold the estate to N. for a grossly inadequate price. N. proved that the trustees had had a fair valuation made of the land before offering it to him, but notwithstanding, on the 29th September, E. wrote to N. stating that he considered the objection fatal, and that he rescinded the contract. N. then obtained a conveyance from the trustees, and re-sold the estate for 25,000*l.* to a stranger, and in August 1875 brought an action against E. to recover the difference of price by way of damages for breach of the contract. E. filed a bill against N. to restrain the action, and to obtain a declaration that the contract was rescinded:—Held, by Bacon, V.-Ch., first, that the bill to obtain a declaration of the rescission of the contract could not be maintained, and that E.'s bill must therefore be dismissed. Noble v. Edwardes, Edwardes v. Noble, 36 L. T., N. S., 312; 5 L. R., Ch. D., 378.

Held, secondly, that the apparently inadequate price at which the estate was sold by the trustees was not a fatal objection to the title, and, therefore, that E. had no right to rescind the contract. Id.

Held, thirdly, that N. had a right to re-sell the estate and claim the difference by way of damages against E., there being no distinction in this respect between a sale of chattels and of land. Id.

Held, on appeal (the objection not having been urged before the Vice-Chancellor), that, on the construction of the agreement, it was to be completed on the 29th September 1873, and that, the action having been commenced before the Judicature Act came into operation, time was of the essence of the contract; and that, the vendor not being on that day in a position to make a good title and execute a conveyance, he could not sustain an action for damages. S. C. 5 L. R., Ch. D., 378; 37 L. J., N. S., 7.

2. As to Delivery of Abstract.

1. Time will, in equity, be deemed of the essence of the contract, in all cases where it can be collected, from the terms of the contract, that the parties intended that the time for its completion should be strictly adhered to. Where, for instance, upon an agreement for the purchase of an estate, the parties entered into a stipulation that an abstract of title should be delivered immediately, and that, in case the contract was not completed by a given day, the purchaser should be released from his contract. Hymell v. Knight, 1 Y. & Coll. 401; 4 L. J., N. S., Exch. Eq., 52.

2. Merely undertaking to deliver an abstract and possession at a particular time does not make it the essence of the contract. Boehm v. Wood, 1 Jac. & Walk. 419.

3. Conditions of sale stated that an abstract of title would be furnished within seven days from the day of sale, on the application of the purchaser for the same, and provided that all objections should be taken within eight days of such delivery, or be considered as waived. The purchaser's solicitor called for the abstract two days after the sale, but owing to the estate being in mortgage, and the mortgagee being abroad, the abstract was not delivered till thirteen days after the sale. The purchaser brought an action for the deposit. The vendor filed a bill for specific performance, and an injunction:—Held, on demurrer, that the time of the delivery of the abstract was not of the essence of the contract, the importance of stipulations as to time being differently regarded in courts of law and equity. Roberts v. Berry, 3 De G. M. & G. 284; 22 L. J., Ch., 398.

4. When a contract for sale is entered into by which it is stipulated that the abstract is to be delivered on a particular day, and it is not delivered within a reasonable time after that day, the purchaser is at liberty to repudiate the contract. Venn v. Cattell, 27 L. T., N. S., 469.

The conditions of sale under which a purchase was made provided that the abstracts should be delivered within twenty-one days from the day of sale. When seventy-eight days had expired without any abstract having been delivered, the purchaser gave notice to the vendor that he declined to complete. After one hundred and eighteen days had elapsed, abstracts of the title to some of the lots were delivered to the purchaser, and the abstract of the remaining lot was delivered a fortnight later, but were returned by the purchaser on the same days on which they were delivered:—Held, that as the vendor had failed to deliver the abstracts within a reasonable time after the day named, he could not enforce the contract against the purchaser. Id.

3. As to Delivery of Objections and Requisitions.

5. The conditions of sale provided that all objections to the title disclosed by the abstract, not taken within a certain time after delivery of the abstract to the purchaser, should be deemed to be waived:—Held, that the time for objecting was not to be computed from the time of the delivery of an imperfect abstract; and that the purchaser was not precluded from taking an objection after the time fixed on, which arose out of evidence called for before the expiration of that time. Blacklow v. Laws, 2 Hare 40.

6. Where it was stipulated that all objections to the title should be taken within twenty-one days of the delivery of the abstract, or be deemed waived, and time as to this was to be considered the essence of the contract:—Held, that the twenty-one days did not begin to run till a perfect abstract had been delivered. Hobson v. Bell, 2 Beav. 17; 8 L. J., N. S., Ch., 241; 3 Jur. 196.

A sale was made by a mortgagee under a power, subject to certain special conditions:—Held, that they were not of such a depreciating character as to invalidate the sale. Id.

7. A special condition of sale stipulated, that by a fixed day the purchaser should either reject or accept the title, and if not rejected it was to be good. Within the time fixed the purchaser took an objection, but stated at the same time he did not reject the title upon that ground, but wished to hear how the vendor met the difficulty. The vendor insisted at first on the condition, by which the purchaser, not having rejected the title, was to be held to have accepted it, but subsequently entered upon a long correspondence:—Semble, that the vendor had by his conduct waived the condition. Lane v. Debenham, 17 Jur. 1006.

1. Conditions of sale stipulated that the sale should be completed on a certain day; and that objections to the title, not made within twenty-one days from the delivery of the abstract, should be considered as waived; and that if the purchaser should not comply with the conditions, his deposit should be forfeited, and the vendor be at liberty to re-sell the property. The purchaser did not deliver his objections until several weeks after the expiration of the twenty-one days, and after the day appointed for completing the purchase; the vendor's solicitor, however, received them, and entered into a long correspondence with the purchaser on the subject of them, but without coming to a satisfactory conclusion. Finally, the vendors re-sold the property, but at a less price, notwithstanding the purchaser protested against the re-sale, and gave notice to the vendor of his intention to file a bill to enforce the contract. About six months afterwards, he filed his bill, making the auctioneer and the purchaser at the re-sale, to whom he had some months before given notice of his prior contract, co-defendants to it. The Court held that the benefit of the conditions had been waived by the vendor's solicitor, and decreed a specific performance, with a reference to the Master as to title, and dismissed the bill with costs as against the auctioneer, because he denied that he had ever intended to part with the deposit, and without costs as against the purchaser at the re-sale, who claimed the benefit of his contract if the Court should think that the plaintiff's ought not to be performed. Where objections to title are to be considered as waived, unless made within a certain time after the delivery of the abstract, quære, whether that condition can be insisted on, if the abstract is very defective. Cutts v. Thodey, 13 Sim. 206; 6 Jur. 1027. Affirmed 1 Colly. 223. n.

2. In a condition of sale, that objections to the vendor's title are to be sent in within a given time, time is of essence of the contract. Oakden v. Pike, 11 Jur., N. S., 666; 34 L. J., Ch., 620; 13 W. R. 673; 12 L. T., N. S., 527.

Requisitions upon title were sent in, in pursuance of the conditions of sale, within the specified time after the delivery of a complete abstract, and satisfactorily complied with by the vendors. The purchaser afterwards raised an objection upon the title, and the vendors' solicitor replied, "The question must, of course, be set at rest, and I apprehend the only way this can be done is to file a bill for specific performance, unless you can suggest any better way of settling the point. Of course, none of the conditions of sale are waived"—Held, that, notwithstanding the reply, the objection was to be considered as waived, and that the vendors were entitled to specific performance. Id.

3. If a vendor does not deliver the abstract of title within the time specified in the conditions, he cannot hold the purchaser bound to send in his objections within the time limited for that purpose, even though it was stipulated in the condition for sending in the objections that time in that respect should be of the essence of the contract. In such a case, the time within which objections will be considered as waived will depend upon the general principles of the Court and the conduct of the parties. Upperton v. Nicholson, 6 L. R., Ch., 436; 40 L. J., Ch., 401; 25 L. T., N. S., 4; 19 W. R. 733.

Land was described in a contract for sale as freehold, but it was shown by the abstract that it was formerly copyhold, and had been enfranchised. A decree was afterwards made at the suit of the vendor for specific performance, and a general inquiry directed as to title; in the course of which the purchaser for the first time objected that the minerals were reserved to the lord of the manor under the enfranchisement:—Held, that the objection was fatal to the title; but as the purchaser had taken the objection so late, he was not allowed his costs. Id.

4. When a requisition is made by a purchaser, the vendor must be allowed a reasonable time to comply with it. Thus a requisition was made at the end of June, which involved the necessity of instituting a suit, and obtaining a decree. On the 1st August the vendor consented to comply with the requisition, and obtained a decree in Michaelmas term; but on the 9th August the purchaser gave notice to rescind the contract:—Held, that it was ineffectual. Nicholls v. Corbett, 22 Beav. 376.

5. Where executors, believing the testator to have charged his real estate with his debts, sold it under conditions of sale, by one of which it was stipulated that "the purchaser shall send his objections and requisitions (if any) in respect of the title, and all matters appearing on the abstract . . . within ten days from the delivery of the abstract, and in this respect time shall be of the essence of the contract, and in default of such requisitions and objections (if any), the purchaser shall be deemed to have accepted the title":—Held, that, although the ten days had expired, the purchaser was entitled to raise the objection that the vendors had no title at all, on the ground that there was no charge of debts. Want v. Stallibrass (8 L. R., Exch., 175) followed. Re Tanqueray-Willauve and Landau, 45 L. T. 181. Affirming 20 L. R., Ch. D., 465; 51 L. J., Ch., 434; 46 L. T. 542; 30 W. R. 801.

Quære, whether, when there is a charge of debts, executors selling real estate many years after the death of the testator are bound to answer the purchaser's inquiries whether any of the testator's debts remain unpaid. Sabin v. Hoap (27 Beav. 553) doubted. Id.

Unless twenty years have elapsed since the death of a testator who has charged his estate with the payment of his debts, the vendor selling under the power given by the charge is not bound to answer the purchaser's inquiry whether any debts of the testator still remain unpaid, and the purchaser ought not to make the inquiry, as he will get a good title even if there are no debts. Id.

4. As to taking Possession.

6. Although the Court will not order a reference of title on motion, where a purchaser resists the performance of the contract on another ground, yet it will take care that the latter is substantial. Semble. The motion was therefore granted, where the only other ground insisted upon by the owner was, that the time of possession had been made of the essence of the contract; but which, upon looking into it, appeared not to have been the case. Merely undertaking to deliver an abstract and possession at a particular time, does not make it of the essence of a contract. Boehm v. Wood, 1 Jac. & Walk. 419.

1. A. agreed to sell to B. an orchard, described as being in the occupation of P., and that the purchaser should have possession on the day appointed for completion:—Held, that possession did not mean personal occupation, and a decree for specific performance was made against B., although A. was unable, by reason of P.'s tenancy, to put him in actual occupation of the premises. Lake v. Dean, 28 Beav. 607.

2. In a suit by a vendor for specific performance against a purchaser, if the contract stipulated that the possession should be given at a specified day, it is competent for the purchaser to insist that both time and a vacant possession are of the essence of the contract, and the Court will receive, as evidence that such was the purchaser's intention, statements made by the agent of the purchaser at the time of signing the contract. Where a purchaser has consented to enlarge the time for completion, and where a vacant possession was of the essence of the contract, it is competent for him to object to complete at the expiration of such enlarged time, if the possession is not then vacant, and if he has done no act towards completion of the contract after he had notice that vacant possession could not be given at the day. But where a purchaser had by his acts waived the time of completion in the first instance, and had gone on for some time inducing the vendor to incur expenses to perfect his title, and suddenly, upon the discovery that vacant possession could not be given according to stipulation, declined to complete, the Court, although it dismissed a bill filed against such a purchaser for specific performance, dismissed it without costs. Nokes v. Kilmorey, 1 De G. & Sm. 444.

3. On the 14th December 1864 C. signed an agreement for the purchase from T. of a leasehold house and premises. The agreement contained these words: "Possession to be given on the 14th January next." A deposit was paid by T., and a receipt in writing was given to him by C.'s agent. The receipt stated that the deposit was "to be returned in the event of the sale not being completed through the vendor's fault." An abstract of title was delivered to C.'s solicitors on the 24th December, and they desiring to examine the abstract with the deeds, it appeared that the deeds were not in the possession of T., and that the purchase could not be completed on the 14th January. On that day C.'s solicitors gave notice to abandon the contract. Possession was on the same day tendered to C., but he refused to accept it. A bill was ultimately filed by T. against C. for specific performance. Upon the evidence the Court was of opinion that it was essential, that C.

should have, by the 14th January, possession of the house for repairs and improvements, with a view to his own immediate residence; a possession, therefore, with a title. Tilley v. Thomas, 16 W. R. 166; 3 L. R., Ch., 61; 17 L. T., N. S., 422.

II. WHEN ENGRAFTED BY NOTICE.

4. Party declaring, that unless contract was performed by such a day, he should consider it as a refusal by the other party to perform it, and would act accordingly, does not amount to a notice of abandonment of the contract. Reynolds v. Nelson, 6 Madd. 26.

Time may by the terms of the contract be made the essence thereof. But it is not decided, that where there is no special stipulation to that effect, it can be made so by a subsequent notice that it will be so considered. Id.

5. Where time is not the essence of the contract, by its original terms, it may be made so on reasonable notice by either party; but where an objection, founded on such a notice, is set up and fails, the defendant will have to pay the costs up to the hearing. Taylor v. Brown, 2 Beav. 180; 9 L. J., N. S., Ch., 14.

6. Though time be not of the essence of a contract, it may be made so by notice, where there has been great and improper delay on one side in completing. It may, however, be waived by proceeding in the purchase after the expiration of the time fixed by notice. King v. Wilson, 6 Beav. 124. And see Stewart v. Smith, 6 Hare 223. n.

7. Consideration of the questions, whether time was of the essence of the contract, whether reasonable notice to complete was given, and whether that notice was complied with. Maobryde v. Weekes, 2 Jur., N. S., 918: 22 Beav. 533.

A. agreed to grant a lease to B. After considerable delay on the part of A., B. gave a notice, that unless he completed within a month he would rescind the contract. The day before the expiration of the time thus limited, A. forwarded to B. the drafts, but he furnished no abstract, nor showed that he was in a situation to complete. B. rescinded the contract:—Held, that it was effectual, and the Court dismissed A.'s bill for specific performance, with costs. Id.

8. Though time be not originally an essential part of a contract, yet either party may, by notice, insist on its being completed within a reasonable time. Parkin v. Thorold, 16 Beav. 59; 16 Jur. 959; 22 L. J., N. S., Ch., 170. But see 2 Sim., N. S., 1.

A purchase was to be completed on the 25th October. Before that time the purchaser gave notice that unless the title was completed by the 5th November he would abandon his contract. The title was not completed till the 8th January following, and the purchaser accordingly revoked the contract. Specific performance nevertheless decreed against him. Id.

Observations as to the necessity of preserving an uniformity of decisions in the different courts. Id.

9. The purchaser cannot, owing merely to the delay of the vendor in complying with his requisition, determine the contract without notice, or bring an action for his deposit before the termination of his notice, where time was not originally of the essence of the contract. Whether he can do so after the expiration of notice where time has not been made of the essence of the contract, or, being of the essence of the contract, has been waived, depends upon the conduct of the vendor after notice. Wood v. Machu, 5 Hare 158.

1. Though time may not be of the essence of the contract, yet, upon unreasonable delay on the part of a vendor in completing, the purchaser, upon giving notice, may rescind the contract. Benon v. Lamb, 9 Beav. 502; 15 L. J., N. S., Ch., 218.

2. An agent, with authority by deed from the owners of a foreign mine to sell it for cash or credit, contracted to sell it partly for cash and partly for shares in a company which was to be formed for working the mine. The purchaser from the agent afterwards contracted to sell the mine to the company, who, before any conveyance to them was executed, discovered that the mine had been sold by its original owners to other parties. The company then gave to their vendor (the purchaser from the agent) three months' notice to rescind the contract, and the vendor filed a bill against them for specific performance, partly on the ground of unreasonably short notice. The bill was dismissed with costs. Reed v. Don Pedro North Del Rey Gold Mining Co., 12 W. R. 1049; 10 L. T., N. S., 836.

3. A. agreed to sell to B. a piece of land. A. was to make a new road, of which B. was to have the use, and B. was to expend 3,000*l.* in building a house on the property. The contract was to be completed on the 1st August, interest was payable if not completed on that day, and time was declared to be of the essence of the contract as regarded the making of objections to the title. The contract not having been completed, vendor, on the 4th August, gave notice that he rescinded the contract unless completed within a month. At this time, there only remained two substantial requisitions, with which the vendors were taking steps to comply:—Held, first, that time was not of the essence of the contract; secondly, that the notice was not reasonable; and thirdly, that there was nothing in the nature of the contract which prevented its being specifically performed. Wells v. Maxwell, 32 Beav. 408; 9 Jur., N. S., 565; 11 W. R. 676; 8 L. T., N. S., 591. Affirmed 9 Jur., N. S., 1021; 32 L. J., Ch., 44; 11 W. R. 842; 8 L. T., N. S., 713.

4. Where there is an undue delay on the part of the vendor in making out his title, the purchaser, on reasonable notice, pay put an end to the contract. Nott v. Riccard, 22 Beav. 307; 2 Jur., N. S., 1038; 25 L. J., Ch., 618; 4 W. R. 269.

The plaintiffs, on the 28th March 1855, agreed to sell some property to the defendant, the purchase to be completed on the 22nd June. By the conditions the vendors were bound to furnish a certain declaration as to seisin free from incumbrances. The vendors furnished an insufficient declaration, and on the 30th May positively refused to furnish any other. On the 23rd July the purchaser gave notice, that unless the requisite declaration were furnished within a fortnight, he would rescind the contract, and default being made by the vendors, he did so on the 10th August:—Held, that the purchaser was justified in putting an end to the contract, and a bill afterwards filed by the vendors for specific performance was dismissed, with costs. Id.

Semble, the purchaser was empowered to put an end to the contract without giving notice to rescind. Id.

5. A tenant held under an agreement which gave him the option of purchasing the estate from his landlord on giving three months' notice. He accordingly gave notice, which expired on the 14th August. On the 4th September the vendor urged him to complete the purchase, and on the 2nd November gave him notice that unless he completed within six weeks he should consider the contract as abandoned. The purchaser went on with the investigation of the title, but did not complete before the six weeks had expired. The vendor then treated the contract as abandoned. In a suit instituted by the purchaser for specific performance:—Held, first, that time was not of the essence of the contract, and that if it had been, it would have been waived by the conduct of the parties. Secondly, that six weeks limited by the defendant was not a reasonable time; and specific performance was decreed. Pegg v. Wisden, 16 Jur. 1105; 1 W. R. 43.

Held, also, that the purchaser, having proceeded to examine the deeds with the abstract, must be considered to have accepted the title; but, under the circumstances, he was allowed a week to bring in objections before the Master of the Rolls. Id.

6. In November 1861 S. agreed to purchase from the plaintiff "the mill property, including cottages in Esher village—all the property to be freehold," and verbally agreed to take a limited title. The property was identified by parol evidence. Negotiations were carried on as to the title till June 1863, when it was accepted subject to certain requisitions, of which the principal was this:—Part of the property was copyhold, and had been devised by a testator to one of his daughters in fee. After his death, two daughters of the testator, being co-heiresses, were admitted as tenants in common, and when the plaintiff enfranchised the copyhold the conveyance was made to the two daughters, their heirs and assigns. The daughter not beneficially interested refused to convey the legal estate, and an order was obtained from the Court vesting the legal estate, under the Trustee Act, s. 9, in trustees for the other daughter. The purchaser objected that the order should have been made under s. 10, and upon this objection negotiations went on till December 1864, when the purchaser gave notice that unless within one week the vendor would agree to comply with the requisitions, he should require a good marketable title to the whole property, and if that were not shown within five weeks the contract would be treated as rescinded:—Held, that the contract was not void for delay, which could only be computed from the termination of negotiations till the filing of the bill; that the purchaser having agreed to accept a limited title, and the negotiations having gone on upon that footing, a complete title could not be demanded; that the time limited by the notice to rescind was not reasonable. McMurray v. Spicer, 5 L. R., Eq., 527; 16 W. R. 332; 37 L. J., Ch., 505.

1. When time is not originally made of the essence of the contract for sale of land, one of the parties is not entitled afterwards by notice to make it of the essence, unless there has been some default or unreasonable delay by the other party. After a delay of two years on the part of a vendor, he gave notice to the purchaser to complete his contract within three weeks, and that, if he did not do so, the vendor would treat the contract as at an end:—Held, that the time limited for completion was, under the circumstances, unreasonably short, and the notice therefore of no effect. Green v. Sevin, 13 L. R., Ch. D., 589; 49 L. J., Ch., 166; 41 L. T. 724.

2. When, after a contract for the sale of land has been entered into, a notice is given to make time of the essence of the contract, the question whether the notice is reasonable or not must be judged of as at the date when it is given. The plaintiff held a lease from the defendant which gave him an option of purchasing the demised property at any time during the term, on giving the lessor three months' previous notice in writing. On the 24th March 1877 the plaintiff gave the defendant notice of his intention to exercise the option. There were some difficulties in completing the defendant's title to the property, and an abstract of title was not delivered to the plaintiff's solicitor till the 17th June 1878. The plaintiff's solicitor not having acknowledged the receipt of the abstract, and having neglected to answer several letters from the defendant's solicitors, they, on the 16th September, wrote to the plaintiff himself, asking whether he intended to complete the purchase. The plaintiff replied the next day that he would write at once to his solicitor. On the 24th September 1878, no further communication having been received from the plaintiff or his solicitor, the defendant gave the plaintiff a notice in writing, requiring him to complete the purchase, and stating that, unless he completed it on or before the 31st October 1878, the defendant would treat the contract as rescinded, and that in that respect time should be deemed of the essence of the contract. On the 26th September 1878 the plaintiff acknowledged the receipt of the notice, and said that he had seen his solicitor, who had promised to proceed as soon as possible. On the 1st November 1878, no further communications having been received from the plaintiff or his solicitor, the defendant's solicitor wrote to the plaintiff, that the defendant, in pursuance of his notice, declared the contract at an end; and they requested the return of the abstract, and demanded payment of rent for the property. The plaintiff had been in possession of the property ever since his notice to purchase, but had refused to pay any rent after the 24th June 1877. On the 21st November 1878 the plaintiff commenced his action for the specific performance of the contract to purchase:—Held, that the notice of the 24th September fixed an unreasonably short time for the completion of the purchase, and was therefore invalid. Specific performance was decreed, and the defendant was ordered to pay the costs of the action up to and including the trial. Cramford v. Thogood, 13 L. R., Ch. D. 153; 49 L. J., Ch., 108; 28 W. R. 248; 41 L. T. 549.

III. FROM NATURE OF SUBJECT MATTER OF CONTRACT.

3. Time is of the essence, where subject of contract is of nature liable to daily fluctuation in value. Doloret v. Rothschild, 1 Sim. & S. 590; 2 L. J., Ch., 125.

4. Time held to be of the essence of the contract between vendor and purchaser, partly by reason of the nature of the trade, viz., that of a publican, carried on upon the property offered for sale, and partly upon the construction of the conditions of sale. Seaton v. Mapp, 2 Colly. 556.

5. In an agreement by a tenant at will of a public-house, for the sale of the possession, trade, and goodwill of the house at a fixed sum, and of the stock and furniture at a valuation, one of the terms being, that possession should be taken, and the money paid on a given day, time is of the essence of the contract, and a purchaser who is not in a condition to fulfil his part of the contract on that day, cannot compel a specific performance, though he was ready on the following day to have proceeded to complete the purchase. Costake v. Tili, 1 Russ. 376.

6. Upon the sale of a public-house as a going concern time is of the essence of the contract. Cowles v. Gale, 7 L. R., Ch., 12; 41 L. J., Ch., 14; 25 L. T. 524; 20 W. R. 70.

When, therefore, upon the day for the completion of the contract the vendors were not in a position to transfer the licence under 9 Geo. 4, c. 61, s. 11, the purchaser was held entitled to repudiate the contract. Id.

The executors of the owner of a public-house renewed the licence in the name of the deceased owner:—Held, that the licence was absolutely void, and that the executors could not make a good title to the public-house. Id.

7. Time is of the essence of the contract for the sale of a public-house; and when the particulars of the contract for such a sale are silent on the subject, it is to be assumed that the transfer of the licence of the public-house will be made under the Licensing Act, 9 Geo. 4, c. 61, s. 11. Day v. Lühke, 37 L. J., Ch., 330; 16 W. R. 717; 5 L. R., Eq., 336.

8. The owner and licensee of an inn died on the 13th July 1870, having devised the inn to trustees for sale. His licence expired on the 10th October in the same year. On the 26th August 1870, at the annual general licensing meeting, the trustees procured a new licence in the testator's name. On the 12th October they contracted to sell the inn. On November 16th the meeting took place to effect the change, but the purchaser then objected that the trustees could not transfer the licence to him, and refused to complete:

—Held, that the licence taken out in the name of the dead man was invalid, and, therefore, that the trustees being unable on the 16th November to transfer a valid licence under which the business could be lawfully carried on, could not enforce the contract against the purchaser. Covles v. Gale, 41 L. J., Ch., 14; 7 L. R., Ch., 12.

1. Specific performance of agreement to buy fee-simple of lands and right, etc., refused, where part of subject of contract proves only leasehold, and the right is qualified; object being to work commercial speculation, which could only be done by enjoyment of unqualified right, and because twelve years had elapsed since agreement entered into. Wright v. Howard, 1 Sim. & S. 190; 1 L. J., Ch., 94.

2. Specific performance refused on the laches and trifling of the plaintiff, the contract being for a sale to the plaintiff, under a bankruptcy of a reversionary interest for life, which in the interval fell into possession, the defendant having also been in some degree remiss; the bill was dismissed without costs, on delivering up the agreement. Spurrer v. Hancock, 4 Ves. 667.

3. Upon sale of a reversion, part of the terms was that the money be paid by a certain time; not being so by default of the vendee, vendor discharged from his contract. Newman v. Rogers, 4 Bro. C. C. 391.

4. A wager contract was made in India (before such contracts were declared illegal) upon the average price to be obtained at the first public sale of opium at Calcutta of the 30th November 1846. The sale was then advertised for that day with the printed conditions of sale, but, owing to difficulties arising in the sale, it was postponed, and the sale took place with conditions somewhat altered on the 7th December following:—Held, that upon the true construction of the contract the words “30th of November” were merely words of description, and that the contract was binding on the parties with reference to the sale of the 7th December, time not being in such a case essential to the contract. Chotayloll v. Manickchand, Chotayloll v. Uggerohund, 4 W. R. 317; 6 Moo. Ind. App. 251.

5. When a contract for purchase provides that possession shall be given by a certain day, the word “possession” must be understood to mean possession with a good title shown. This construction is the same in equity as at law, although a court of equity will consider time not to be of the essence of the contract, and will relieve against a breach of performance at the date assigned, unless there is something in the contract, the nature of the property, or the circumstances, which renders it inequitable for the Court to interfere. Tilley v. Thomas, 3 L. R., Ch., 61; 17 L. T., N. S., 422.

A person agreed to purchase a leasehold house for his own residence, and contracted that he should have possession by a certain day; but the vendor, although he tendered possession, failed to show a good title by the day named:—Held, that the stipulation as to time was of the essence of the contract, and a bill for specific performance of the agreement dismissed. Id.

IV. WAIVER.

6. Where, on the sale of real estate, it was stipulated in the agreement of purchase, that it should be void if the money was not paid on a day stated, and the vendor authorised to re-sell:—Held, that the purchaser continuing in possession, and giving a warrant to confess judgment in ejectment, was a waiver of the forfeiture. Exp. Gardner, 4 Y. & Coll. 503; 10 L. J., N. S., Exch. Eq., 46.

7. Time will, in equity, be deemed of the essence of the contract, in all cases where it can be collected, from the terms of the contract, that the parties intended that the time for its completion should be strictly adhered to. But where, upon an agreement for the purchase of an estate, the parties entered into a stipulation that an abstract of title should be delivered immediately, and that, in case the contract was not completed by a given day, the purchaser should be released from his contract, and the abstract was not immediately delivered, but communications on the subject of the title were continued between the parties until the time limited by the contract had expired:—Held, that under these circumstances, the benefit of the stipulation as to time was waived by the purchaser. Hippell v. Knight, 1 Y. & Coll. 401; 4 L. J., N. S., Exch. Eq., 52.

Where a person had contracted for the purchase of an estate from trustees under a deed of release and assignment for the benefit of the creditors of a tender, upon a stipulation that a good title should be made by a given day, and that day fell within the period during which a fiat in bankruptcy might have issued against the trader:—Held, that he was in the situation of a purchaser who had waived a stipulation that time should be of the essence of the contract. Id.

8. By the terms of an auction the title deeds were to be produced by a certain day; they were not then ready, but the purchaser received them afterwards without objection; he cannot afterwards, on disliking the title, object to the delay. Smith v. Burnam, 2 Anstr. 527.

9. Specific performance of an agreement to purchase may be decreed after considerable delay, if the vendee has not demanded his deposit or shown a determination not to proceed in the purchase. Pincke v. Curtis, 4 Bro. C. C. 329.

10. Where, by the terms of an auction, the sale is to be completed by a certain day; yet, if neither party take any step to quicken the other, till it becomes impossible to execute the agreement by the day fixed, the time is waived, and equity will interfere to prevent the purchaser taking advantage of it at law. Jones v. Price, 3 Anstr. 924.

11. Time is of the essence of the contract; waived by a protracted treaty. Wood v. Bernal, 19 Ves. 220.

Vendor and purchaser having proceeded in treaty beyond the time limited for completion of contract, and the vendor having brought an action and withdrawn his record, on finding he could not support it, not having got in a judgment amounting to half the purchase money, and the purchaser having brought an action for his deposit and obtained a verdict: an injunction to restrain his proceeding was refused. Id.

1. Time may be made the essence of a contract, but may be waived by conduct. Hudson v. Bartram, 3 Madd. 440.

2. The time of valuation is of the essence of the contract; but the defendant cannot take advantage of it if he has improperly occasioned the delay. Morse v. Merest, 6 Madd. 26.

3. Though time be not of the essence of the contract, it may be made so by notice, where there has been great and improper delay on one side in completing. It may, however, be waived by proceeding in the purchase after the expiration of time fixed by notice. King v. Wilson, 6 Beav. 124.

4. A., in 1838, agreed to sell to B. certain lands; B. to pay 6,000*l.* of the purchase money at once, and the rest by the 1st January 1839, on a good title being made out; B. to get possession of L., part of the lands, on the 1st May 1838, subject to any question of title; the abstract to be delivered on the 1st November 1838, and a good title made out to the satisfaction of B.'s counsel in a month after; B. to execute the conveyance on the 1st January 1839; and if a good title were not made out by the 1st February 1839 (which was expressly fixed as of the essence of the contract), B. to be discharged from his purchase. B. paid the 6,000*l.* and entered into possession of L., and before January 1839 requested A. not to press the contract, as he was not in a condition to pay the balance; and at the request of B. A. deferred to furnish the abstract until 1844. In August 1845 B. furnished requisitions for searches. The discussion on the title continued until June 1847, when B. stated he considered himself no longer bound unless his objections were satisfactorily answered in a month. A. then furnished what he relied on as satisfactory evidence of the point in dispute, and declined to give further searches, and in March 1848 filed a bill for specific performance:—Held, that though time was originally of the essence of the contract, it was waived by the conduct of the parties; that B.'s right to give notice to rescind the contract could not arise until July 1847, and the bill was filed within a reasonable time after; that the retention of L. by B. was inconsistent with the rescinding of the contract. The "satisfaction of counsel" means "reasonable satisfaction." Gordon v. Mahony, 13 Ir. Eq. R. 363.

5. Specific performance decreed, the abstract (though delivered very late, and under a notice that vendee would insist on his deposit with interest, if the title should not be made out, etc.) having been delayed and kept without objection, and the vendee, upon the construction and the circumstances, not being entitled to insist on the time as the essence of the contract. Seton v. Slade, 7 Ves. 265.

6. Several suits at law and in equity to determine the title to certain lands were pending between persons claiming to be mortgagees of such lands and one who claimed the same lands in fee by title under a settlement paramount to the mortgage. The plaintiff, claiming to be a subsequent mortgagee of the same lands, contracted to purchase the interest of the prior mortgagees in their principal moneys, arrears of interests and securities, and to pay the purchase money at a certain stipulated time, all of which, except an annuity, were to be paid in 1843, and to pay and indemnify the prior mortgagees against the past and future costs of the suits and proceedings; and time was to be of the essence of the contract. The plaintiff did not pay the instalments until a considerable time after the stipulated period, but such later payments were accepted by the vendors. The bill filed in 1845 (when some of the payments still remained to be made) alleged that the defendants refused to perform the agreement, and prayed a specific performance:—Held, on demurrer, that the plaintiff being interested as second mortgagee in the subject of the suits, the contract was not to be deemed champerty. That, the defendants insisting upon their right to treat the agreement as void, the plaintiff was not bound to tender the unpaid instalments of the purchase money before filing his bill. That every default by the plaintiff in payment of the instalments at the stipulated time is a new breach of the contract, giving the defendants the right to rescind it, but that to preserve such a right it must be asserted immediately that the breach occurs, and that in this case the breach had been waived. That the time of performing the several acts required by the agreement on both sides being past, the Court would now enforce a contemporaneous performance of the contract by both parties. Hunter v. Daniel, 4 Hare 420; 14 L. J., N. S., Ch., 124; 9 Jur. 520.

7. In a suit by a vendor for specific performance against a purchaser, if the contract stipulated that the possession should be given at a specified day, it is competent for the purchaser to insist that both time and a vacant possession are of the essence of the contract, and the Court will receive, as evidence that such was the purchaser's intention, statements made by the agent of the purchaser at the time of signing the contract. Where a purchaser has consented to enlarge the time for completion, and where a vacant possession was of the essence of the contract, it is competent for him to object to complete at the expiration of such enlarged time, if the possession is not then vacant, and if he has done no act towards completion of the contract after he had notice that vacant possession could not be given at the day. But where a purchaser had by his acts waived the time of completion in the first instance, and had gone on for some time inducing the vendor to incur expenses to perfect his title, and suddenly, upon the discovery that vacant possession could not be given according to stipulation, declined to complete, the Court, although it dismissed a bill filed against such a purchaser for specific performance, dismissed it without costs. Nokes v. Kilmorey, 1 De G. & Sm. 444.

8. If it is of the essence of the contract that an act should be completed by a fixed date, an extension of the time does not operate as an absolute waiver of that condition, but only substitutes the extended time for the original time. Barclay v. Messenger, 43 L. J., Ch., 449; 30 L. T., N. S., 350; 22 W. R. 522.

M. & W., entitled to a lease under a building agreement, defeasible by notice in case they did not complete buildings by the 1st January 1874, in July 1873 entered into an agreement to sell their interest for 2,000*l.*, 200*l.* of which was paid on signing the agreement, 800*l.* and 1,000*l.* to be paid at the times specified in the 5th clause, which was as follows:—"If the purchaser shall fail to pay either the 800*l.* on the 14th July 1873 or the 1,000*l.* on the 31st July 1873, or as to the 1,000*l.* upon such deferred date as the parties might agree upon, all money paid previously to such default being made shall be absolutely forfeited and this contract become null and void." The 800*l.* was duly paid. The time for payment of the 1,000*l.* was extended to the 26th August 1873. The purchaser made default in payment at that date. The vendors gave notice to determine the agreement, and a suit for specific performance was instituted by the purchasers:—Held, that by the 5th clause time was made of the essence of the contract. That the extension of the time to the 26th August did not operate as an absolute waiver of that condition, but merely substituted the 26th August for the original date. Id.

V. DELAY IN APPLICATION TO RESCIND.

1. A conveyance made twenty years ago shall not be set aside on a suggestion that the party making it was non compos. Winchcomb v. Hall, 1 Ch. Rep. 40.

2. If time is to be considered as of the essence of a contract, that point must be made promptly. Monro v. Taylor, 8 Hare 62; 3 De G. M. & G. 113; 21 L. J., N. S., Ch., 525. See also Madeley v. Booth, 2 De G. & Sm. 718; Price v. Griffith, 1 De G. M. & G. 80; 21 L. J., N. S., Ch., 78; 15 Jur. 1093.

3. Delay of seven months in taking proceedings to set aside a sale, during which the purchaser was improving the property;—Held, no bar to the plaintiff's right to relief. Pearson v. Benson, 28 Beav. 598.

4. The defence of laches applies with peculiar force to a bill seeking to set aside a sale or lease of mineral property after a considerable lapse of time. Ernest v. Tivian, 33 L. J., Ch., 413; 12 W. R. 295; 9 L. T., N. S., 785.

Where property of which a void or defective lease has been granted is subsequently sold, the purchaser takes the property subject to the burden of any delay of which the vendor may have been guilty; and in reference to a defence founded on laches, the purchaser can stand in no better position than the vendor would have done, if he had never parted with the property. Id.

VI. OTHER CASES.

5. Time is not generally regarded as the essence of contract in equity. Seton v. Slade, 7 Ves. 273, where several instances of this doctrine are mentioned.

6. Time held not essence of contract. Gibson v. Patterson, 1 Atk. 12.

7. The time at which a contract is to be performed, is not essential in equity as at law. The relief against the lapse of time is in the discretion of the Court upon the circumstances, as if the contract is abandoned. Radcliffe v. Warrington, 12 Ves. 326.

8. A contract of which time is the essence, and a chief term in which is the punctual payment of interest, not enforced, where interest was left in arrear two or three days. Hicks v. Gardner, 1 Jur. 541.

9. On a bill for specific performance, the questions whether the time was originally of the essence of the contract, and whether being so, the defendant has done any act whereby he has waived it, as a ground of objection to the performance, are questions depending on evidence, and not to be decided except upon the hearing. Levy v. Lindo, 3 Meriv. 81.

I. GENERAL PRINCIPLES.

10. A title is first shown when the abstract states all the matters which, if proved, make a good title. Parr v. Lovegrove, 4 Drew. 170; 4 Jur., N. S., 600; 6 W. R. 201, 709.

A title is made when the matters are proved. Id.

A vendor can make a good title where a good title appears on the face of the abstract, and where he is able and willing to prove the deeds and facts alleged in the abstract. The showing a good title is the delivery of the abstract, where the vendor is in a condition to prove everything necessary to establish his title, appearing on the face of the abstract. Id.

A contest as to what species of evidence is necessary, and the non-production in the first instance of the evidence ultimately required, is not such a refusal to produce evidence, as that until such evidence is produced a vendor can be said not to have shown a good title. Id.

Whatever a vendor puts upon his abstract he is bound to prove and verify. Id.

A title may begin with a will. Id.

11. A marketable title is a title which at all times and under all circumstances may be forced upon an unwilling purchaser. Pyrke v. Waddington, 10 Hare 1.

12. A good title may be made to an estate, although the origin cannot be shown by any deed or will; but it must be shown that there has been such a long uninterrupted possession, enjoyment, and dealing with the property, as affords a reasonable presumption that there is an absolute title in fee-simple. Cottrell v. Watkins, 1 Beav. 361.

13. If a contract for the sale of land is silent as to the title which is to be shown by the vendor, the legal implication that the purchaser is entitled to a good title may be rebutted by evidence that, before the execution of the contract, the purchaser had notice of defects in the vendor's title. But if the contract expressly provides that a good title shall be shown, the purchaser is entitled to insist on a good title, notwithstanding that before the execution of the contract he had notice of defects in the vendor's title. Re Gloag and Miller's Contract, 23 L. R., Ch. D., 320; 52 L. J., Ch., 654; 48 L. T. 629; 31 W. R. 601.

1. A vendor is ordinarily bound to take the steps within his power to complete his contract, and heavy damages would be given for default; but he is not bound to enter into litigation with an adverse claimant in order to perfect his title. Williams v. Glenton, 1 L. R., Ch., 200.

2. Where a purchaser accepts the title, he is only bound to the extent to which he has been made cognisant of it. Bousfield v. Hodges, 33 Beav. 90.

3. A defendant admitted by his answer, his belief that at the time of the contract the plaintiff had a title:—Held, that it was not open to the defendant afterwards to show that plaintiff had no title. Phipps v. Child, 3 Drew. 709.

4. Equity does not compel a purchaser to take such a title as a willing purchaser might be satisfied with; but the Court will inquire whether a title can be had, and, if the title is defective as to part, there is no principle of equity more artificial than that which calls on the Court to decide whether the purchaser shall be bound to take with any and what compensation. Knatchbull v. Grueber, 3 Meriv. 140.

Where a man contracts to purchase, on the faith of the vendor's having a good title, he has a right to have the title sifted to the bottom, before he can be called upon either to accept an indemnity or compensation for a defect, or to abandon the contract. Id. 137.

5. A vendor is bound to use all reasonable diligence to make a good title; nor will the Court, without the consent of the purchaser, excuse the vendor from making a good title, on the terms of discharging the purchaser from his contract. Hawkins v. Shoven, 1 L. J., Ch., 148.

6. Purchaser must get such a title as he can force down upon a re-purchaser from him. Magennis v. Fallon, 2 Moll. 578.

7. The right of a good title does not grow out of the agreement between the parties, but is given by law; but a purchaser may waive his right, by going on with the agreement after he has full notice that he is not to expect a good title. This is, in such case, matter of notice, and not of contract. Ogilvie v. Poljambé, 3 Meriv. 53.

8. Observations on clearing a title, by showing the non-existence of rights under a reservation, or onerous covenant not stated, and on the duty of being careful and explicit in preparing for a sale. Martin v. Cotter, 2 Ir. Eq. R. 351; 3 J. & L. 496. Affirming 9 Ir. Eq. R. 44.

9. In November 1861 S. agreed to purchase from the plaintiff "the mill property, including cottages in Esher village—all the property to be freehold," and verbally agreed to take a limited title. The property was identified by parol evidence. Negotiations were carried on as to the title till June 1863, when it was accepted subject to certain requisitions, of which the principal was this: Part of the property was copyhold, and had been devised by a testator to one of his daughters in fee. After his death, two daughters of the testator, being co-heiresses, were admitted as tenants in common, and when the plaintiff enfranchised the copyhold the conveyance was made to the two daughters, their heirs and assigns. The daughter not beneficially interested refused to convey the legal estate, and an order was obtained from the Court vesting the legal estate, under the Trustee Act, s. 9, in trustees for the other daughter. The purchaser objected that the order should have been made under s. 10, and upon this objection negotiations went on till December 1864, when the purchaser gave notice that unless within one week the vendor would agree to comply with the requisitions, he should require a good marketable title to the whole property, and if that were not shown within five weeks the contract would be treated as rescinded:—Held, that the purchaser having agreed to accept a limited title, and the negotiations having gone on upon that footing, a complete title could not be demanded. Murray v. Spicer, 5 L. R., Eq., 527; 16 W. R. 332; 37 L. J., Ch., 505.

10. Whether the interest contracted for be freehold or leasehold, for a long term of years, or a short lease at rack-rent, the party who comes for a specific performance should be prepared to show that he is able to give what he seeks to compel the other to take. Fildes v. Hooker, 2 Meriv. 424.

11. The Court of Chancery does not warrant the title of an estate, which is purchased under its direction. Trulmin v. Moore, 3 Meriv. 223.

II. THE ABSTRACT. SUFFICIENCY.

12. A condition of sale was, that in case the purchaser should raise objections to the title which the vendor should not be able or willing to remove, the vendor might rescind the contract on notice, and re-payment of the deposit to the purchaser; and objections not delivered within fourteen days after delivery of the abstract to be treated as waived, in which respect time was to be essential. Morley v. Cook, 2 Hare 106; 12 L. J., N. S., Ch., 136.

Semble, that the vendor was only bound bonâ fide to deliver an abstract of such title as he had at the time of delivering it, and so long as the condition remained in force was not bound to deliver any supplemental abstract of title afterwards acquired. Id.

Quare, whether the benefit of the condition would not in equity be forfeited by a vendor, who designedly delivered an imperfect abstract of the title, which he had at the time of delivering it. Id.

13. The purchaser of shares in a mining company is not entitled to a regular abstract of the title of the mines themselves, as if he were purchasing a share in the land in which they are worked; but he is entitled to such evidence of the constitution of the company, and of the nature of the title under which the mines are worked, as will show that the subject matter of the purchase is what it professes to be, and that the proposed form of transfer to him will give him a valid title to the shares. Curling v. Flight, 2 Ph. 613; 17 L. J., N. S., Ch., 359; 12 Jur. 423. Varying 6 Hare 41; 17 L. J., N. S., Ch., 79; 12 Jur. 91.

1. Upon the death of one of two partners intestate, the personal representatives of the deceased partner agreed to sell his moiety of the real property of the partnership to the surviving partner, and at the same time stipulated that they would furnish him, at their own expense, with an abstract of their title to that moiety:—Held, that they were bound to furnish the usual abstract of title, and not merely the letters of administration under which they acted, in relation to the intestate's personal estate. Morris v. Kearsley, 2 Y. & Coll. 139.

2. The defendant sold and conveyed to the plaintiff some undivided shares in various properties. Disputes afterwards arose as to what shares had been purchased. They agreed to settle all these disputes, and signed a written agreement that the plaintiff should pay the defendant 9,500*l.*, and that the defendant should execute such deeds as the plaintiff should require for the conveyance of the estates. Upon a bill for specific performance:—Held, that the defendant was not bound to deduce any title to the property. Godson v. Turner, 15 Beav. 46.

3. Under the usual reference as to title, a good title is made out when it is proved, but is first shown when the facts necessary to make it out are specifically alleged on the abstract, and are within a vendor's power to prove. Parr v. Lovegrove, 4 Drew. 170; 4 Jur., N. S., 600; 6 W. R. 201, 709.

A title is first shown when the abstract states all the matters which, if proved, make a good title. Ib.

A title is made when the matters are proved. Ib.

Where a title commenced by a general devise and seisin, and was only proved by a deed more than sixty years old, reciting the seisin, and there was ground to assume that the vendor had deeds earlier than those on the abstract:—Held, the purchaser was entitled to inspection of those deeds, if in the vendor's possession, but not to have them in the abstract. Ib.

Quere, whether a purchaser is generally entitled to inspection of deeds earlier than a sixty years' title. Ib.

4. Distinction between showing a good title on the abstract and verifying it. Sherwin v. Shakespeare, 17 Beav. 267.

5. Even before the 22 & 23 Vict., c. 35, s. 24, a vendor was not justified in suppressing an equitable incumbrance, although it might have been subsequently discharged. Drummond v. Tracy, 1 Johns. 608; 6 Jur., N. S., 369; 29 L. J., Ch., 304; 8 W. R. 207. See also Smith v. Robinson, 13 L. R., Ch. D., 148; 49 L. J., Ch., 20; 41 L. T. 405; 28 W. R. 87.

6. Conditions of sale provided, that requisitions upon title should be delivered within a certain time; and in default, that all objections should be deemed to be waived. The purchaser did not deliver any requisitions. Upon a bill by the vendor for specific performance, the defence was, that no sufficient abstract had been delivered:—Held, that the onus lay upon the purchaser to show that the abstract was imperfect; and, in the absence of any evidence, a decree was made for specific performance, with a reference to chambers to settle the conveyance in case the parties differed. Ward v. Ghymes, 9 Jur., N. S., 1097; 11 W. R. 794; 8 L. T., N. S., 782.

7. The delivery of an abstract is the furnishing by a vendor of a document which contains with sufficient fulness the effect of every instrument which constitutes part of his title.

Oakden v. Pike, 11 Jur., N. S., 666; 34 L. J., Ch., 620; 13 W. R. 673; 12 L. T., N. S., 527.

8. A vendor is bound to disclose every fact within his knowledge relating to his title. Where a vendor has knowingly suppressed a defect in title, the Court will not allow him to force the title upon the purchaser, although in the conditions of sale he has employed general words large enough to include the defect. Edwards v. Wickwar, Re Brayne, 35 L. J., Ch., 48; 14 W. R. 79; 13 L. T., N. S., 428.

9. Where an abstract of title shows a good equitable title in the vendor, with power to get in the legal estate under the Trustee Acts or otherwise, it is unnecessary for the abstract to show the devolution of the legal estate. Camdenell and South London Building Society v. Holloway, 13 L. R., Ch. D., 754; 49 L. J., Ch., 361; 41 L. T. 752; 28 W. R. 222.

10. Wherever there is a sale by the Court, it is a necessary part of the title to show that the Court has jurisdiction to sell; and the vendor, though he may by his conditions protect himself from producing the pleadings themselves, must set forth in his abstract so much of the proceedings in the suit as is necessary to show that the Court had such jurisdiction. Waters v. Waters, 36 L. J., Ch., 195; 15 W. R. 191; 15 L. T., N. S., 406.

1. In General.

11. Bill by a purchaser praying specific performance upon the terms of the vendor deducing a good title, at her own expense, in the ordinary way, dismissed, the Court being of opinion, upon the construction of a series of letters, and upon the fact of the abstract of title having been delivered to the purchaser in the first instance, that the vendor entered into the negotiation only upon this footing, namely, that she should deliver an abstract of title, and verify it so far as she had the means in her possession at her own expense, but that the purchaser, if upon perusal of the abstract he were satisfied with the title, should be at the expense of completing its verification. Thomas v. Blackman, 1 Colly. 301.

1. Facts stated in conditions of sale as the ground of the conditions must be proved. Symons v. James, 1 Y. & Coll. C. C. 487.

2. Semble, the acceptance of a title by a joint purchaser is no answer to the right of the other purchaser to have a good title proved. Mackreth v. Dunn, 10 L. J., N. S., Ch., 367.

3. Where the vendor of mining shares filed a bill for specific performance of the contract, insisting that he was not bound to give other evidence of his title to the shares than attested extracts from the cost books or registers of the mines, and alleging the refusal of the defendant to accept such evidence, but not going on to allege that the plaintiff could not give other evidence:—Held, on demurrer by the defendant, that as the plaintiff was not precluded from giving other evidence, if necessary, it must be overruled. Curling v. Flight, 5 Hare 242.

4. Distinction between showing a good title on the abstract and verifying it. Sherwin v. Shakespeare, 17 Beav. 267.

5. A title is first shown when the abstract states all the matters which, if proved, make a good title. Parr v. Lovegrove, 4 Drew. 170; 4 Jur., N. S., 600; 6 W. R. 201, 709.

A title is made when the matters are proved. Ib.

A vendor can make a good title where a good title appears on the face of the abstract, and where he is able and willing to prove the deeds and facts alleged in the abstract. The showing a good title is the delivery of the abstract, where the vendor is in a condition to prove everything necessary to establish his title, appearing on the face of the abstract. Ib.

A contest as to what species of evidence is necessary, and the non-production in the first instance of the evidence ultimately required, is not such a refusal to produce evidence, as that until such evidence is produced a vendor can be said not to have shown a good title. Ib.

Whatever a vendor puts upon his abstract he is bound to prove and verify. Ib.

2. Proof by Recitals.

6. In a vendor's suit for specific performance, the abstract showed a seisin in fee in B. in 1798, and a devolution of the title both legal and equitable from him to the plaintiff, and uninterrupted enjoyment thereunder. In one of the deeds abstracted, dated in 1815, there was, however, a recital of seisin in A. in 1779, and that by mesne conveyances the premises came to B. The deeds recited were missing, but affidavits were produced verifying extracts from the account books of deceased solicitors who had been concerned in framing the recited deeds, in which charges were made for preparing those deeds, and for attending to witness their execution:—Held, that the recital coupled with the extracts was good secondary evidence of the execution and contents of the missing deeds. Moulton v. Edmonds, 1 De G. F. & J. 246; 6 Jur., N. S., 305; 29 L. J., Ch., 1818; 8 W. R. 153.

The abstracted deed of 1815 also contained recitals of deeds purporting to be mortgages of the premises by B., and subsequent reconveyances to him by the mortgagees. These deeds were also missing, but were abstracted in an abstract produced to the purchaser, which had been made out and examined by a conveyancer in 1815, and from which the recitals in the deed of 1815 had been prepared:—Held, that the abstract of 1815 was sufficient secondary evidence of the execution and contents of the missing deeds. Ib.

7. Where a deed, dated sixty years back, contains a recital of the creation of a mortgage term, and a subsequent assignment of it in trust to attend the inheritance, and the term is not subsequently noticed in the title, it will be presumed to have been surrendered; and it is no objection to the title that the vendor cannot produce the deed creating the term, nor the assignment of it. Townsend v. Chamberlorn, 1 Y. & J. 538.

8. By a deed executed in 1858 (after the death of the settlor), the trustees conveyed the property to a purchaser for value. This deed contained a recital of the deed of 1845, and a recital that the trustees "in pursuance of the trust for sale conferred on them" by that deed had caused the property to be put up for sale:—Held, that by virtue of s. 2 of the Vendor and Purchaser Act 1874, this recital, not being shown to be inaccurate, was conclusive evidence that the deed of 1845 had not been revoked either by an exercise by the settlor of the power of revocation, or by a sale of the property by him for value during his lifetime. Re Marsh and Granville (Earl), 24 L. R., Ch. D., 11; 48 L. T. 947; 31 W. R. 845. Affirming 62 L. J., Ch., 189; 47 L. T. 471; 31 W. R. 239.

9. Under the Vendor and Purchaser Act 1874 (37 & 38 Vict., c. 78, s. 2), a recital in a conveyance more than twenty years old, that the vendor was seised in fee-simple, is sufficient evidence of that fact, and no prior abstract of title can be demanded except so far as the recital shall be proved to be inaccurate; and in such cases a forty years' title is not required. Bolton v. London School Board, 7 L. R., Ch. D., 766; 26 W. R. 549; 47 L. J., Ch., 461; 38 L. T., N. S., 277.

10. In 1840 property was mortgaged to W. in fee, there being nothing in the mortgage deed to show that he was not the beneficial owner of the mortgage money. He died in 1842, having by his will devised and bequeathed his real and personal estate to three trustees (of whom his wife was one), on trusts for the benefit of his wife and children, and having appointed the same three persons executors. He also devised and bequeathed his trust and mortgaged estates to the same three persons, subject to the trusts and equities affecting the same respectively. The widow alone proved the will, and alone acted as trustee. The other two trustees disclaimed the trusts. In 1854 the widow obtained a decree absolute foreclosing the mortgage. In 1865 she, by a deed endorsed on the mortgage deed, conveyed the property, without receiving any pecuniary consideration for it, to K., C., and B., in fee, as joint tenants at law and in equity. The conveyance contained a recital that the testator held the mortgage money on an account under which K., C., and B. were then solely entitled thereto, as was thereby acknowledged, whereby the widow, as trustee under the testator's will, was trustee only of the property for K., C., and B., and they had requested her to convey it to them. On a subsequent sale of the property by persons who had purchased it from K., C., and B., the purchasers required evidence of the truth of the recital in the deed of 1865 that K., C., and B. were entitled to the mortgage money. And, assuming that the testator was a trustee of the mortgage money, the purchasers required the vendors to show that the property sold was comprised in the trust; that K., C., and B. were duly appointed to succeed the testator in the trust; and that they had an effectual power of sale and of giving a receipt for the purchase money:—Held, that it would be contrary to the practice of the Court to go behind a recital evidently framed for the purpose of keeping notice of trusts off the conveyance; that the requisitions need not be answered; and that a good title had been shown by the vendors. Re Harman and Uxbridge & Rickmansworth Railway Co., 24 L. R., Ch. D., 720; 52 L. J., Ch., 808; 49 L. T. 130; 31 W. R. 857.

3. Proof of Identity.

1. By the conditions of sale, no further evidence of identity was to be required than what was afforded by the abstract and the documents therein abstracted. The descriptions in the documents differed amongst themselves and from the description in the particulars of sale:—Held, that the purchaser was entitled to have further proof of the identity. Flower v. Hartopp, 6 Beav. 476; 12 L. J., N. S., Ch., 507; 7 Jur. 613.

2. A clause in an agreement for purchase, that the purchaser is not to require any further proof of identity than that given by the title-deeds, exempts the vendor from producing further evidence; but he cannot force the title on the purchaser unless the evidence is complete upon the deeds. Curling v. Austin, 2 Dr. & Sm. 129; 10 W. R. 682.

3. Identity is as much matter of title as devolution. Brown v. Wales, 15 L. R., Eq., 142.

4. Contract for the sale of the borough, lordship, and manor of H., with rights, royalties, members, and appurtenances, and all the messuages, lands, tenements, and other hereditaments, and their rights, members, and appurtenances, to the said borough, lordship, and manor belonging, as set forth and described in a particular referred to in the contract; the vendors derived their title under a conveyance in 1809, by the general description of the borough, lordship, and manor of H., with all and singular the rights, and members, and appurtenances thereunto belonging or appertaining, with a reference to preceding deeds, containing the same description, through which the title was traced in the same general manner to 1744; the purchaser objected that the identity of the several lands mentioned in the particular as forming part of the manor was not made out, and it appeared that some of them had been purchased since 1744, and therefore could not pass under the ancient and general description; the vendors thereupon produced abstracts of the title of such lands, and showed by stewards' books that the lands, ever since they had been purchased, had been annexed to and treated as part of the manor, and contended that they passed under the general words "appertaining or belonging" in the conveyance of 1809; to obviate the difficulty they also obtained a confirmation of that conveyance, with a declaration that the lands in question were intended to be passed by it under the general words. Exceptions to the Master's report of a good title were overruled, principally, as it should seem, on the grounds of the deed of confirmation; the Court declaring, that if it were of opinion that a good title could be made, it would hesitate to decree a specific performance, unless that deed was delivered to the purchaser. Townsend v. Champenore, 1 Y. & J. 538.

5. A. B. became the purchaser of a mansion-house and park under conditions of sale, which stated that the whole property was freehold except eight acres which were copyhold, but undistinguished except as to not including any of the buildings. The abstract of title having been delivered, and discussions thereon having taken place which raised difficulties in the way of completing the purchase, a supplemental agreement was entered into, detailing what requisitions as to title, etc., should be complied with. Among these requisitions was one in the following words: "Declaration of identity of lands mentioned in deeds to those now sold":—Held, on a bill filed by the vendor for specific performance, that a supplemental agreement was a substitution for the original contract, and that A. B. was not entitled to demand that the vendor should distinguish the freehold from the copyhold parts of the premises, so as to show that the latter did not include any of the buildings. Dawson v. Brinkman, 3 Macn. & G. 53. Affirming 3 De G. & Sm. 376.

6. A purchaser of lands under the description of "partly freehold and partly leasehold" is entitled to have the boundary dividing the freehold from the leasehold defined by reference to the instruments of title, or shown to be capable of being so defined; but the circumstance that the property is described in the agreement as partly freehold and partly leasehold, the boundaries distinguishing the one from the other not being therein, and having not theretofore been clearly defined, is not an objection to a decree for specific performance. Monro v. Taylor, 8 Hare 61. Affirmed 3 Macn. & G. 713; 21 L. J., N. S., Ch., 525.

The uncertainty in the boundary or extent of property which arises, not from an instrument being incapable of legal construction, but from its not having theretofore received any such legal construction, is not a ground for refusing specific performance of a contract to sell such property. Id.

If the boundary of property contracted to be purchased can be certainly defined, whether the extent be more or less, the purchaser will be bound by the contract; but whether he will be so bound if the boundary depends on a plan or instrument which is so vague as not to admit of legal construction, quære. Id.

A contract by a lessee under an ecclesiastical corporation, whilst he was in treaty with the corporation for the renewal of his lease, to sell the leasehold premises, does not necessarily throw upon him the obligation of procuring the renewal of the lease at his own expense, for the benefit of the purchaser; whether, if the vendor after the contract procure such renewed lease, the purchaser is not entitled to take it without bearing the expense of the renewal, quære. Id.

Although a good title was not shown by the vendor until during the pendency of the reference, the Court held that the purchaser must, nevertheless, bear the costs of the suit, it being manifest that, if the particular evidence which completed the title had been produced before the bill was filed, yet the suit would not have been avoided. Id.

1. Where, upon a contract for the sale of an estate, a separate and distinct contract is made for the sale of the timber upon it, the Court will not enforce the latter contract, unless the vendor can give the purchaser such possession and dominion over the timber as will entitle him to fell and remove it; but if an entire contract be made for the sale both of the estate and the timber (notwithstanding the purchase money is made up of distinct sums for each), the vendor is only bound to make out his title to the land according to the contract, and the title to the land is the title to the timber upon it. Crosse v. Lawrence, 9 Hare 462; 21 L. J., N. S., Ch., 889; 16 Jur. 142.

A contract for the purchase of copyhold land at a certain price, and the timber upon it at a specified valuation, enforced as one entire contract, although the vendor could not show any custom in the manor or licence from the lord enabling the tenants of the manor, or himself, or his assigns, to fell the timber. S. C. 9 Hare 469; 21 L. J., N. S., Ch., 889; 16 Jur. 142.

The purchaser of undistinguished freehold and copyhold land and timber under a single and entire contract must be considered as estimating, in the price he pays for the land, the price he pays for the timber. S. C. 9 Hare 467; 21 L. J., N. S., Ch., 889; 16 Jur. 142.

2. A lessee, being in possession of a lease of certain messuages, granted an underlease of one (No. 7) to A., who subsequently assigned it to B. The lessee, by his will, demised the leaseholds to trustees, who, under an order of the Court, sold inter alia No. 7 to a purchaser, in the particulars of sale No. 7 being described as leased to A. On investigating the title, it appeared that the parcels set out in the underlease to A. were, by a clerical mistake, the parcels of No. 6. The trustees, after the sale, obtained an order of the Court to correct this mistake, by authorising an assignment to the tenant of No. 6, and a new underlease, with proper parcels, to the tenant of No. 7; and the Court overruled an objection to the title by the purchaser of No. 7, and compelled him to complete his purchase. Grissell v. Peto, 2 Sm. & G. 39; 18 Jur. 591.

3. Where there was a doubt as to whether part of lands agreed to be sold was included in a particular devise, the Court, though disposed to solve the doubt in favour of the vendors, would not, under its discretionary jurisdiction in specific performance, compel the purchaser to accept the title. Ashton v. Wood, 3 Jur., N. S., 1164.

4. Proof of Pedigree.

4. Evidence as to the heirship of daughters. Hemming v. Spiers, 15 Sim. 550; 11 Jur. 294.

5. A conveyance to a purchaser in 1793, from persons residing in Bermuda, of lands then in their possession, and to which, subject to an outstanding but satisfied mortgage term, they claimed title, under an entail created in 1732, through a descent recited in the deeds. A subsequent assignment of the mortgage term from the mortgagee to the purchaser, and an uninterrupted enjoyment under his conveyance, will not enable him to make a good title, if unsupported by extrinsic evidence of the pedigree recited in the deeds, or of possession prior to 1793, conformably to that pedigree. Fort v. Clarke, 1 Russ. 601.

6. A vendor making title as heir is not bound to produce affirmative evidence in his possession that the ancestor from whom he traces descent took as purchaser, but may rely on the statutory presumption, until some proof to the contrary is adduced. But he is bound to disclose any matters within his knowledge tending to rebut the presumption that his ancestor took by purchase. Dorling v. Claydon, 1 Hem. & M. 402.

7. B. entered into a contract for the purchase of an estate, which stated that "N., the vendor, in 1848, entered into possession of the receipts of the rents of the estate, claiming as heir-at-law to his cousin, the last owner; that a copy of the pedigree on which such claim was based would be furnished to B., who should admit the right of N. as such heir-at-law, and should not require any further evidence of marriages, births, failure of issue, intestacies, survivorships, or any other matters of pedigree than such as were in the possession of N., he executing to B. a bond of indemnity against the claims of all other parties to the lands as heir-at-law of N., deceased, for the next seven years." A pedigree was furnished, but it failed to show that N. was the heir-at-law; and the purchaser refused to complete:—Held, that the purchaser was bound to admit the title of N. Nash v. Browne, 9 Jur., N. S., 431; 32 L. J., Ch., 148; 7 L. T., N. S., 667.

5. Proof of Seisin.

8. Where a title of more than sixty years commences with a will containing a general devise, and there is a subsequent deed of covenant by the devisee in fee to produce deeds of earlier date, that will and deed, coupled with continuous possession ever since, is sufficient evidence of seisin. A title more than sixty years old commenced by a general devise; a deed more than sixty years old recited the seisin of the devisor:—Held, that that, coupled with the continued possession, was sufficient evidence of seisin. Parr v. Lovegrove, 4 Drew. 170; 4 Jur., N. S., 600; 6 W. R. 201.

9. Where a condition of sale provided that the vendors should not be required to commence the title prior to the will of E., but that the purchaser should be satisfied with a declaration of the seisin of E. in fee-simple of the property, free from incumbrances for a certain period:—Held, that the declaration must strictly comply with the terms of the condition. Nott v. Riccard, 2 Jur., N. S., 1038; 25 L. J., Ch., 618.

1. A father, who died in 1760, made a general devise of freeholds and copyholds to his daughter in tail. His grandson was in 1783 admitted to the copyholds as tenant in tail, and was proved to have been in 1833 in possession of the copyholds and of certain freeholds then held therewith. He made a will purporting to devise these freeholds and the copyholds, and died in 1840. His brother and heir in 1841 executed a deed purporting to be for the purpose of barring any estates tail in the freeholds, whereby he conveyed the freeholds to the devisee under the will, and covenanted to surrender the copyholds. This deed was not enrolled, but the devisee was admitted to the copyholds. The devisee died intestate, and his brother succeeded him as his heir, and made a will purporting to devise the freeholds and the copyholds in fifths, the plaintiff taking one-fifth and the defendant another fifth. The defendant afterwards agreed to buy the plaintiffs one-fifth, and a conveyance was made by her conveying to the defendant her one-fifth and all her estates and shares in the land, neither of them being aware of the earlier title. Four years afterwards the deed purporting to bar the estate tail was found, and thereupon the defendant requested the plaintiff, who was heir in tail of the original testator, to confirm the sale, and sent to her the draft of a deed reciting that the original testator was seised in fee of the freeholds and devised them, and that she was tenant in tail. She then filed a bill to have her conveyance set aside and to be declared tenant in tail of the freeholds.—Held, that the conveyance by the plaintiff of the fee in the whole when she had intended to convey one-fifth only might embarrass her in proceeding at law, and that the Court must determine the question; but that the plaintiff was bound to show that the original testator was seised in fee of the freeholds claimed by her, and that as she had not done so, her bill must be dismissed; and that under the circumstances, the sending by the defendant of the draft deed stating that the original testator was seised in fee was not an admission by the defendant of the fact. The defendant had conveyed his estate to mortgagees, and that they, as purchasers for valuable consideration without notice, could not be interfered with. Bulley v. Bulley, 9 L. R., Ch., 739; 22 W. R. 779; 30 L. T., N. S., 848; 44 L. J., Ch., 79.

2. Under the Vendor and Purchaser Act 1874 (37 & 38 Vict., c. 78), s. 2, a recital in a conveyance more than twenty years old, that the vendor was seised in fee simple, is sufficient evidence of that fact, and no prior abstract of title can be demanded except so far as the recital shall be proved to be inaccurate; and in such cases a forty years' title is not required. Bolton v. London School Board, 7 L. R., Ch. D., 766; 26 W. R. 549; 47 L. J., Ch., 461; 38 L. T., N. S., 277.

See also SEISEIN.

6. Will. Probate or Establishment of.

3. Where the title of an estate was derived from a person who entered as heir, under the impression that his ancestor's will was void, a purchaser has a right to production of the will, or evidence of its contents. Stevens v. Guppy, 2 Sim. & S. 439; 4 L. J., Ch., 59.

4. Where a title depends on the words of a will, this is as properly determinable in equity as by a judge and jury at Nisi Prius. Tanner v. Wise, 3 P. W. 296; Ca. temp. Talb. 284.

5. A devisee obtains a decree to hold and enjoy against the heir, who it was supposed had suppressed the will; pending this suit, a third person gets an assignment of mortgage made by the testator, and then purchases the equity of redemption of the heir with notice of the will. The Court would not admit the purchaser to dispute the justness of the decree, nor to try at law whether the will was not cancelled by the testator. Finch v. Newnham, 2 Vern. 215.

6. In an abstract of a vendor's title, a will which formed part of it was represented as having been proved in the Spiritual Court, which afterwards appeared not to have been done. The purchaser filed his bill, praying that the defendants might either be decreed to prove the will, or that it might be deposited in the hands of the Master for safety. It appeared that two other persons were interested under the will, and they were added as parties, and, they not objecting, the will was directed to be deposited with the Master; the vendors having, by their misrepresentation, occasioned the suit, were ordered to pay all the costs. Harrison v. Coppard, 2 Cox 318.

7. One articles to buy lands, and the title is under a will, not proved in equity against the heir, yet, in some cases, equity will compel the purchaser to accept the title. Cotton v. Wilson, 3 P. W. 190.

8. An agreement having been entered into for the sale of certain securities upon tolls within the diocese of Lincoln, it appeared from the abstract of title that the will of one in the series of owners, through whom the property passed to the vendor, had been proved only in the Consistory Court of the Bishop of Lincoln. Upon a bill filed by purchaser against vendor, the Court declined either to force the title on the purchaser or to order the vendor to procure probate in the Prerogative Court of the Archbishop of Canterbury. Williams v. Bland, 2 Colly. 575; 15 L. J., N. S., Ch., 351; 10 Jur. 404.

9. In a suit for specific performance by a vendor whose title was derived under a suspicious will, it appeared that the heir had failed in an action of ejectment, and afterwards, on a motion for a new trial, the Master reported in favour of the title, and the Vice-Chancellor confirmed the report, and decreed specific performance, without requiring the plaintiff to establish the will. But the Lord Chancellor, on appeal, reversed that decision, holding that it was more consonant to the principles of this Court that the validity of the will in such a case should be conclusively determined, if possible, between the vendor and the heir, than that it should be left to be litigated between the heir and the purchaser after the purchase money should have been paid. Grove v. Bastard, 2 Ph. 619; 17 L. J., N. S., Ch., 351; 10 Jur. 385.

10. A testator, in 1836, devised all his real estate to his wife, and appointed her executrix.

He afterwards purchased an advowson, and died. The widow proved this will, and sold the advowson. An objection being made that the after-purchased property did not pass, a search was made, and another testamentary instrument of 1847 was found, purporting to confirm a will of 1836:—Held, that the purchaser was entitled to the same amount of proof of the codicil of 1847 as would be necessary to establish it against the heir, and that it ought to be proved in the Ecclesiastical Court. Weddall v. Nixon, 17 Beav. 160; 17 Jur. 642; 22 L. J., Ch., 939.

1. A purchaser of real property, the title to which is derived under a will, is not entitled to have the will established, or to have the concurrence of the testator's heir in the conveyance to him, unless some reasonable ground exists for doubting the validity of the will. McCulloch v. Gregory, 3 Kay & J. 12.

On a sale by parties claiming under a devisee named in a will, which has been unsuccessfully disputed in the Ecclesiastical Court, not by the next-of-kin or heir-at-law, but by parties claiming under a prior will, the purchaser has not in general a right to have the will established as against the heir. 8 C. 2 Jur., N. S., 1134.

Such a purchaser (the vendor having bought in the alleged rights, if any, of the heir-at-law, and being therefore in a position to convey as in the case of an intestacy, but not having contracted to sell otherwise than as devisee) has no right to put such vendor to any proof of the heirship of the party whose assumed rights of inheritance had been so brought in. Id.

Notwithstanding the above, semble, that in a proper case of suspicion being made out against a devisee, the Court will assist a purchaser in requiring the suspected will, under which such devisee claims, to be established against the heir. Id.

1. When Misleading. In General.

2. Quare, whether a vendor of a doubtful title is justified in selling under the usual conditions; that all objections not sent in within a limited time are waived for rescinding the contract, and that no one but the vendor is to be required to join; or in not putting in his abstract matter tending to show that doubts had been raised. Warde v. Dickson, 5 Jur., N. S., 698. S. C. nom. Warde v. Diaon, 28 L. J., Ch., 315.

Under such conditions a purchaser is not prevented from taking an objection which he has discovered aliunde after the time limited for taking objections. Id.

VOL. VII.

3. Conditions of sale which state certain facts, and represent that certain acts were done in error, and that the vendors could sell an absolute interest, will not preclude a purchaser from requiring proof of the title. Johnson v. Smiley, 22 L. J., Ch., 826; 17 Beav. 223; 1 W. R. 440; 1 Eq. Rep. 397.

4. A condition of sale which does not fairly state the objection to the title against which it is directed is not binding on a purchaser. Beioley v. Carter, 4 L. R., Ch., 230; 17 W. R. 300.

5. Conditions of sale must express in distinct terms a difficulty of title, and therefore when a condition set out facts from which the conclusion in law was that the vendors showed no title, but this conclusion was one which would not occur to an ordinary purchaser, and was not stated in the condition:—Held, that the sale could not be enforced. Williams v. Wood, 16 W. R. 1005.

6. The defendant having sold and conveyed land to the plaintiff, suggesting that he had a title, and it afterwards appearing that he was not entitled to part, the same being an encroachment from a common, though no eviction had happened or was threatened, a bill lies to set aside the conveyance, and for a return of the purchase money, and all expenses. Edwards v. McLeay, Coop. 308. Affirmed 2 Swan. 287.

7. A condition of sale which refers to a document as affecting the title and offers an opportunity of inspecting it is not misleading, unless it so states the document as to lead to the belief that all that is material in it is disclosed. Blenkorn v. Penrose, 43 L. T. 668; 29 W. R. 237.

8. A condition of sale is bad as misleading, (1) if it requires the purchaser to assume what the vendor knows to be false; (2) if it states that the state of the title is not accurately known when in fact it is known to the vendor. Re Banister, Broad v. Muntton, 12 L. R., Ch. D., 131; 48 L. J., Ch., 837; 27 W. R. 826; 40 L. T. 828.

At a sale of the fee simple of a farm under the order of the Court there was a condition that a declaration by the tenant should be produced to the purchaser that the farm was taken by him from E. in October 1835, and had since been held by him of her and those claiming under her in succession. The condition provided that the purchaser should be satisfied with the title so made, without the production of any document previous to the will of E. in 1860, who should be assumed to have been seized of the property in fee simple in possession, free from incumbrances, in October 1835, and up to and at her death. The condition further stated that it was not accurately known, and could not be satisfactorily explained, how she acquired the property, and it was expressly stipulated that no other title than as above should be acquired or inquired into. The purchaser, after an abstract of title in accordance with the condition had been furnished to him, discovered that E. was a mortgagee in possession, and had no title against the mortgagor except under the Statute of Limitations by adverse possession commencing in 1884; and that her executor in 1861 had paid legacy duty on the mortgage debt, and not succession duty on the estate.

These facts were well known to the vendor:—Held (reversing the decision of Fry, J., on fresh evidence), that the condition of sale was a misleading condition, and that the purchaser was entitled to have a good holding title notwithstanding the condition, or else to rescind his contract. Id.

The conveyancing counsel of the Court must be treated as the agent of the vendor as between the vendor and the purchaser. Id.

Where the conditions on the face of them purport to give only a good holding title, the purchaser on being relieved from them is not entitled to have more than a good holding title. Id.

1. B. entered into a contract for purchase of a freehold estate from H. One of the conditions of sale was, that the title to the beneficial ownership to the property should commence with the will of C., dated in 1829, and the purchaser should assume that C. was at his death beneficially entitled to the property in fee simple, free from incumbrances. On an investigation of the title it appeared that C. had in 1824 contracted for the purchase of the estate, but the vendor not at that time being able to make a good title, C. took possession and invested the purchase money, and it was not till long after the death of C. that the title was made out and the purchase money paid:—Held, in a suit by H. for specific performance of the contract, that the statement in the conditions of sale was erroneous and misleading, and was consequently not binding on the purchaser, and the bill was dismissed with costs, H. having declined to take an open reference as to title. Harnett v. Baker, 45 L. J., Ch., 64; 20 L. R., Eq., 50; 32 L. T., N. S., 382; 23 W. R. 559.

See also Following Subdivisions.

2. Conditions as to Commencement of Title.

2. Where the conditions of sale stated that the premises were acquired under an award of commissioners under an Inclosure Act, and that the abstract would not contain any earlier title than such award:—Held, that the award made in general terms must be prima facie evidence of the lands being freehold, and that the purchaser had no right to inquire as to the title to the lands given by vendor in exchange. Cattell v. Corral, 4 Y. & Coll. 228.

3. A. entered into a contract with B. for the purchase of B.'s interest in certain mud lands for 3,050*l.*, in the event of an Act of Parliament, which was to be applied for in order to reclaim them, being obtained. The contract provided, that B. should be called upon to produce only the title from his vendor (C.) to himself. C. was one only of four claimants of the mud lands, but A. was aware of this circumstance when he entered into the contract. The Act was passed, and A. took possession of the mud lands thereunder, and commenced operations to reclaim them, but he refused to complete his contract, upon the ground of there being conflicting claims to the mud lands. Upon a bill by A. against B. for specific performance of the contract:—Held, that evidence abundante to show want of title in C. was not admissible; and specific performance was decreed against A., on the ground that his contract with B. was for the purchase of such right, title, and interest as the vendor might have under C. Hume v. Pocock, 1 L. R., Eq., 423; 12 Jur., N. S., 20; 35 L. J., Ch., 662; 14 W. R. 495; 14 L. T., N. S., 127. Affirmed on the latter ground, 1 L. R., Ch., 379; 12 Jur., N. S., 445; 35 L. J., Ch., 731; 14 W. R. 681; 14 L. T., N. S., 386.

4. In a contract for the sale of leasehold hereditaments, it was agreed, that the vendor should produce a good and marketable title commencing from the freeholder, but that no title should be called for prior to the lease. In the course of the investigation of the title, it was stated, that the lease had been granted in pursuance of a prior contract, the benefit of which had been the subject of a security, which was by the same statement represented as having been satisfied:—Held, first, that the purchaser was entitled to investigate the dealings with the contract prior to the lease being granted; secondly, that stipulations as to title in a contract between a vendor and a purchaser are to be construed favourably to the latter, though not contained in conditions of sale exclusively prepared by the vendor. Rhodes v. Ibbetson, 4 De G. M. & G. 787; 23 L. J., Ch., 459; 2 Eq. Rep. 76.

5. A good title may be made to an estate, although the origin cannot be shown by any deed or will; but it must be shown that there has been such a long uninterrupted possession, enjoyment, and dealing with the property, as affords a reasonable presumption that there is an absolute title in fee-simple. Cottrell v. Watkins, 1 Beav. 361.

6. In 1857, in suits in chancery, it had been certified that a good title could be made to certain estates, and the estates were afterwards sold under orders of the Court, subject to a condition that the title should not be required prior to a private Act of Parliament which had vested the estates in trustees for sale, and which recited the previous certificate of good title made by the Court of Chancery:—Held, that the title up to the period for which it had been certified might be accepted without further examination as indefeasible for registration. Re Watney, 38 L. J., Ch., 57.

7. Special conditions of sale, limiting the extent of title:—Held, to be no excuse for a purchaser not insisting on the production of a deed beyond those limits of which he had notice. Peto v. Hammond, 30 Beav. 495.

8. Freehold property was sold in 1877 subject to a condition that the title should commence with a deed dated the 30th December 1867, and that no earlier or other title should be required or inquired into by the purchaser:—Held, that this condition did not preclude the purchaser from insisting on an objection to the prior title which was not discovered through any inquiry made by him, but was accidentally disclosed by the vendor. Smith v. Robinson, 13 L. R., Ch. D., 148; 49 L. J., Ch., 20; 41 L. T. 405; 28 W. R. 37.

But held, that, in an action by the vendor for the specific performance of the contract, the purchaser was only entitled to an inquiry whether the vendor could make a good holding title to the property. Id.

Where there is a condition of sale that no title to the property sold shall be shown before a certain date, semble, that s. 24 of the 22 & 23 Vict., c. 35, does not apply to the concealment of an incumbrance prior to that date. Ib.

1. The defendant purchased from a railway company land over a tunnel, which, not being "superfluous," the company had no power to sell, and the plaintiff contracted to purchase the land from the defendant as freehold building land. One of the conditions of sale was that the title should commence with the conveyance from the company; another, that the purchaser should not require the production of, or investigate or make any objection or requisition in respect of, such conveyance; and another, that the purchaser should send his objection, if any, to the title within seven days from the delivery of the abstract. The plaintiff declined to complete after the expiration of the seven days, and sued for the deposit:—Held, that the deposit could not be recovered. Rosenberg v. Cook, 8 L. R., Q. B. D., 162; 51 L. J., Q. B., 170; 30 W. R. 344.

2. Though a condition of sale that the title shall commence with a certain indenture leaves it open to the purchaser to show aliunde that the parties purporting to convey were not competent to do so, yet if this is not shown, their competency to convey must be assumed, and this where the conveyance was by a corporation only having power to convey under certain circumstances not shown to exist. Osborn v. Osborn, 18 W. R. 421.

3. Upon the sale of an estate, one of the conditions was that the title to the beneficial ownership should commence with the will of A. C., and the purchaser must assume that A. C. was at his death beneficially entitled to the property in fee simple free from incumbrances. A. C. had contracted before his death for the purchase of the property, but it was not till many years after his death that the title was made out, the property conveyed, and the purchase money paid:—Held, that the purchaser was not bound by the condition of sale, and the vendor declining an open reference as to title, his bill for specific performance was dismissed with costs. Harnett v. Baker, 20 L. R., Eq., 50; 32 L. T., N. S., 382; 23 W. R. 559; 45 L. J., Ch., 64.

4. A contract entered into in 1882 for the sale of freehold estate provided that the title should commence "with an indenture dated the 18th October 1845," and made between persons whose names were mentioned, and that the earlier title should not be investigated or objected to. From the abstract of title delivered by the vendors to the purchaser it appeared that the deed of 1845 was a conveyance by a person, who purported to be the absolute owner, of freehold and leasehold property to trustees, on trust for himself for life, and after his death on trust to sell the property, and to hold the proceeds of sale on the trusts declared by a deed of even date. An express power was reserved to the grantor to revoke the trusts. The deed was a voluntary one, except for the consideration which resulted from the liability assumed by the trustees in respect to the leaseholds:—Held, that, inasmuch as the fact that the deed of 1845 was a voluntary one would influence the purchaser in determining whether he would agree to accept a title commencing within forty years, the vendors ought to have stated in the condition of sale the nature of the deed; that the omission to state this rendered the condition a misleading one; and that the purchaser was not bound by the contract to accept a title commencing with that deed. Re Marsh and Granville (Earl), 24 L. R., Ch. D., 11; 48 L. T. 947; 31 W. R. 845. Affirming 52 L. J., Ch., 189; 47 L. T. 471; 31 W. R. 239.

5. Conditions of sale, settled by the Court in 1871, provided that a conveyance on a sale made by B. in 1838 should be the root of title, that no objection or requisition should be made with respect to earlier title, and that recitals in deeds twenty years old should be conclusive evidence of the instruments recited. That conveyance purported to recite the will, but stopped short of the final gift over, thus showing a good title to the fee in B.:—Held, that a purchaser under the Court was not precluded from showing that B.'s title under the will was defective, and that he was entitled to be freed from his contract, and to get all his costs. Elsae v. Elae, 41 L. J., Ch., 213; 13 L. R., Eq., 196; 20 W. R. 286; 25 L. T., N. S., 927.

3. Other Special Conditions.

6. Where condition of sale was for sale of interest "under such title as vendor lately held the same, an abstract of which may be seen," etc.:—Held, that the purchaser could not object to title. Freme v. Wright, 4 Madd. 364.

7. A stipulation to give such a title as shall be satisfactory to the purchaser does not authorise the purchaser to make any other than the usual objections to the title. Lord v. Stephens, 1 Y. & Coll. 222.

8. One of the terms of an agreement was, that the contract should be void if the purchaser's counsel should be of opinion that a marketable title could not be made by a certain time. The counsel being of that opinion, a bill by the purchaser for a specific performance with a compensation was dismissed with costs; and an application afterwards made by the plaintiff that his deposit might be set off against the defendant's costs, and the surplus (if any) paid to him, was refused with costs. Williams v. Edwards, 2 Sim. 78.

9. A. agrees in writing with C. for the purchase of an estate, if a good title could be made. B. (a stranger) afterwards files a bill claiming part of the lands; C. buys in his claim. C. is entitled to a specific execution of the agreement. Masters v. Cook, Colles' P. C. 433.

10. Circumstances under which special conditions of sale precluded a purchaser from requiring evidence of the assent of executors to a bequest. Jackson v. Whitehead, 6 Jur., N. S., 133.

11. The conditions of sale represented that a certain deed, under which an interest was claimed in the estate, was a forgery, and that the vendor had made his affidavit to that effect, and that, therefore, the purchaser should not take any objection to the title by reason of that deed. The purchaser afterwards refused to complete the purchase, brought an action for his deposit, and obtained a verdict, the jury declaring the deed to be genuine. A court of law having afterwards held that the purchaser was precluded from rescinding the contract, on the ground that the statement of the plaintiff turned out to be untrue, the vendor, in case he could make a good title in other respects, was held entitled to a decree for a specific performance of the contract with costs. Cattell v. Corral, 3 Y. & Coll. 413. And see Corral v. Cattell, 4 Mees. & Welsb. 734; 8 L. J., N. S., Exch., 225.

1. By the terms of a letter from the plaintiff, which was accepted and signed by the defendants, it was agreed that the "plaintiff should let to the defendants, or assign if preferred, for the longest term he could grant":—Held, that the defendants were bound to take such title as the plaintiff had at the time the agreement was made, and that under the terms of the agreement the defendants were not entitled to call upon the plaintiff to show his lessor's title. Molloy v. Sterne, 1 Dr. & Wal. 585.

2. Purchaser agreed to accept vendor's title "without dispute;" the purchaser afterwards objected that at the date of the agreement there was a flaw in the vendor's title, consisting of an unreleased incumbrance, which left the legal estate in the property outstanding. Upon a bill filed by the vendor for specific performance:—Held, that the purchaser was precluded, by the terms of his contract, from insisting on the objection. Duke v. Barnett, 2 Colly. 337; 15 L. J., N. S., Ch., 173; 10 Jur. 87.

3. If conditions of sale simply state the facts, and stipulate that the purchaser shall take such title or such interest as the circumstances detailed would confer upon him, and no other, the purchaser must accept it, whatever it may be; but if they go on to state, not as a conclusion of law from the circumstances detailed, but as a positive fact, that the vendors have power to sell the fee, the purchaser is not precluded from inquiring whether the vendors have anything to sell, as their power so to do may have arisen from separate and independent sources. Johnson v. Smiley, 17 Beav. 223; 22 L. J., Ch., 826; 1 Eq. Rep. 397.

A bankrupt was seised as tenant in tail in remainder of certain copyholds held of a manor in which the custom prevailed that a fine could not be levied of an estate tail until it came into possession. The commissioner, under the 65th section of the above Act, in 1832, sold by auction the estate during the life of the bankrupt, and the estate was bought by the bankrupt himself and conveyed to him. After he had obtained his certificate, the estate tail came into possession. In 1852 the assignees contracted to sell the fee, subject to the bankrupt's life estate, to the defendant:—Held, in a suit for specific performance, that nothing passed to the assignees beyond the power to sell the life estate of the bankrupt. S. C. 1 W. R. 440.

A condition of sale stated several facts upon which the vendors' title depended, and proceeded to say, that the vendors had power to bar the entail and sell the fee:—Held, that this did not preclude the purchaser from objecting to the vendors' title. Id.

4. Trustees of real estate having no power of leasing granted leases of it, and afterwards put it up for sale subject to the leases, the existence of which, as it was admitted, materially lessened the value of the property. The conditions of sale stated that the leases were made by the trustees without authority, and provided that the purchaser should make no objection in respect of them. The purchaser refused to complete, and contended that the conditions were binding as being a stipulation that he should concur in a breach of trust:—Held, that the conditions precluded the purchaser from objecting to the title on the ground of the existence of the leases. Nicholls v. Corbett, 3 De G. J. & S. 18.

5. A bill for a specific performance of an agreement between the plaintiff and defendant, in which, after reciting that B. was lord of the manor of certain lands, and that the plaintiff had contracted with him for the purchase of all his interest therein, it was agreed that the defendant should purchase from the plaintiff all his interest in the property, and that he should "be called upon to produce only the title from B. to himself":—Held, that the agreement must be specifically performed, and that the defendant was precluded from inquiring into the title of B., but could only call upon the plaintiff to show a title from B. to himself. Hume v. Pocock, 14 W. R. 191, 681; 13 L. T., N. S., 585.

6. On a contract for the sale of lands described as partly freehold and partly copyhold, and the timber thereupon (the latter at a specified valuation), upon a condition that the vendor should not be required to distinguish the freehold land from the copyhold, nor the respective boundaries thereof, it was held that upon the particulars and conditions the contract for the land and timber was one contract, and not separate contracts, and that the purchaser was bound to pay for the timber at a valuation, notwithstanding the fact that it might be wholly upon the copyhold land, and therefore subject to the rights of the lord and the restrictions of the custom. Crosse v. Lawrence, 9 Hare 462; 16 Jur. 142.

7. Where a condition of sale, under a decree of the Court, stipulates in very general terms that all documents dated more than twenty years ago shall be conclusive evidence of all matters referred to in or implied by them, and that all deeds and proceedings in Chancery shall be at the expense of the purchaser, the vendor is bound to set forth in his abstract so much of the pleadings in the suit as to show that the Court had jurisdiction and no more. Waters v. Waters, 15 W. R. 191; 15 L. T., N. S., 406; 36 L. J., Ch., 195.

8. A reversionary legacy, in which infants were interested, was sold by an order of the Court in an administration suit. The particulars of sale stated that infants were interested in the property, and there was a special condition that the purchaser should make no objection on the ground of want of jurisdiction:—Held, that the condition of sale was fair and reasonable, and that the purchaser was bound by it. Nunn v. Hancock, 6 L. R., Ch., 850; 40 L. J., Ch., 700; 25 L. T., N. S., 469; 19 W. R. 1041. Affirming 24 L. T., N. S., 569; 19 W. R. 843.

Semble, that the Court had jurisdiction to make the order for sale, and that the infants and all other parties were bound by it. Id.

1. Upon delivery of the abstract by a vendor who had contracted to deduce a good title in fee simple, it appeared that one of his predecessors had covenanted in his purchase deed not to use the property (which was a semi-detached villa standing on an eighth of an acre in a residential neighbourhood), or any part of it, for the purpose of gasworks or a public-house:—Held, that this was such a restriction upon the user and enjoyment of the property as to constitute a fatal objection to the title. Re Higgins and Hitchman's Contract, 21 L. R., Ch. D., 95; 51 L. J., Ch., 772; 30 W. R. 700.

2. T. agreed to sell to C. certain freehold houses, and to make a good marketable title. On investigation of the title it appeared that the houses were part of a property which had been sold by a building society in lots, subject to stringent restrictive covenants, which were admitted to make the title not a marketable one. T. having declined to procure a release of the covenants, C. brought an action to recover back his deposit. T. adduced evidence that C. knew of the restrictions at the time of the contract, and the jury found that he did:—Held, that this evidence could not be admitted to modify the terms of the express contract, and that the plaintiff was entitled to recover. Farebrother v. Gibson (1 De G. & J. 602) and Leyland v. Illingworth (2 De G. F. & J. 248) distinguished. Cato v. Thompson, 9 L. R., Q. B. D., 616; 47 L. T. 491.

3. A contract for sale of superfluous land of a railway company which had been conveyed by the company to the vendor contained a stipulation that the purchaser should assume and admit that everything (if anything was necessary) was done by the company to enable them to sell the land as surplus land, and should not call for or require production of any evidence to that effect; and a further stipulation that if the purchasers should fail to comply with the terms of the agreement the deposit should be forfeited to the vendor. The land was not situate in a town or used for building purposes. In the course of the investigation of the title the purchaser discovered that the prior owners had not waived their right of pre-emption; and as the vendor refused to remedy the defect, the purchaser brought an action claiming a return of the deposit and damages. The vendor then sold the land to one of the prior owners:—Held, that the purchaser was bound by the stipulations to admit the title of the company to sell to the vendor; and that as he had refused to abide by that stipulation, he had broken the contract, and could not maintain the action, or claim a return of his deposit. Best v. Hamand, 12 L. R., Ch. D., 1; 48 L. J., Ch., 503; 27 W. R. 742.

4. In an agreement for sale of freehold and leasehold property there was a condition that the purchaser was to assume that "E. M. was at the time of his death seised in fee simple of the premises," and should "not require the production of, or investigate, or make any objection in respect of the prior title to the lot, whether such prior title is or is not referred to in any abstracted document." The purchaser discovered by an inspection of an inclosure award that E. M. was not at the date of his death seised of the hereditaments, but that he, the purchaser, was entitled to the same:—Held, that this condition did not preclude the purchaser from acquiring such knowledge alunde, and on that ground refusing to carry out the contract, although no fraud was alleged. Jones v. Clifford, 35 L. T., N. S., 937; 3 L. R., Ch. D., 779; 24 W. R. 979; 45 L. J., Ch., 809.

4. Rescission by Vendor under Special Conditions as to Title.

5. One of the conditions of sale provided, that if the purchaser should raise objections to the title which the vendor should not be able or willing to remove, the vendor should be at liberty to rescind the contract, and that all objections which should not be taken in writing within ten days after the delivery of the abstract should be considered as waived:—Held, that the condition referred to the first delivery of objections, and if the vendor expressed his willingness to answer them, he could never afterwards rescind the contract. Tanner v. Smith, 10 Sim. 410.

The injunction was dissolved by the Lord Chancellor on appeal. S. C. 4 Jur. 310.

6. A condition of sale was, that in case the purchaser should raise objections to the title which the vendor should not be able or willing to remove, the vendor might rescind the contract, on notice and repayment of the deposit to the purchaser, and objections not delivered within fourteen days after delivery of the abstract to be treated as waived, in which respect time was to be essential. The purchaser returned the abstract with queries within the fourteen days, and the vendor answered the queries; the purchaser on the same day objected to the answers; the correspondence on the subject of the title continued for several weeks, and then the vendor gave notice that he rescinded the contract:—Held, that the continuance of the treaty for the completion of the title, after the first objection of the purchaser, was a waiver of the condition as to the rescinding of the contract; that such a condition of sale ought to be discouraged, and ought not to receive a construction oppressive on the purchaser; and that the vendor's right to rescind the contract under the condition must be co-extensive with the purchaser's right to object to the title under the same condition. Whether the benefit of the condition would not in equity be forfeited by a vendor who designedly delivered an imperfect abstract of the title which he had at the time of delivering it, querre. Morley v. Cook, 2 Hare 106; 12 L. J., N. S., Ch., 136; 7 Jur. 79.

Semble, the vendor is bound only to deliver a bonâ fide abstract of such title as he has at the time of making it out, and is not bound to deliver a further abstract of title afterwards acquired. Id.

7. By conditions of sale, all objections to the title were to be taken within twenty-eight days from the delivery of the abstract; and if they were not removed within fourteen days, the vendor was to be at liberty to annul the contract, on payment of the deposit, but without costs. The purchaser having made an objection which was not removed, the vendor gave notice to annul the contract. The objection being held valid, the Court considered the vendor entitled to avail himself of the condition; but was of opinion, that if, in giving the notice to annul, the defendant had sought improperly to "escape from the performance of a duty which, by the nature of the contract, he was bound to perform, it would have been invalid. Page v. Adam, 4 Beav. 269; 10 L. J., N. S., Ch., 407; 5 Jur. 793.

1. A condition of sale, which provides that if the purchaser insists upon any requisitions which the vendor shall be unable or unwilling to comply with, the vendor may annul the sale, does not entitle the vendor to annul the sale without answering the requisitions, upon the ground that he is unable to comply with them. Turpin v. Chambers, 29 Beav. 104; 7 Jur., N. S., 459; 30 L. J., Ch., 470; 9 W. R. 363.

2. A vendor put up for sale the absolute reversion to 2,000*l.* consols, with conditions that any objections to title should be made within ten days after delivery of the abstract, and that the vendor, in case he should be either unable or unwilling to meet any objection that should be raised, might rescind the contract upon return of the deposit without interest or costs. The vendor filed a bill for specific performance, and the case came on upon motion for decree:—Held, that, notwithstanding the expiration of the time allowed for making objections to title, the purchaser was entitled to raise objections in respect of matters not disclosed upon the face of the abstract, which he had subsequently discovered, and which would render the title bad or doubtful. Ward v. Dickson, 5 Jur., N. S., 698. S. C. nom. Ward v. Dixon, 28 L. J., Ch., 315.

Held, also, that the vendor could not rescind the contract under the condition without first dismissing his bill with costs, and cannot rescind at all if the cause comes to hearing. Id.

3. The particulars of sale (erroneously, but without any fraud) described a part of the property as customary leasehold, holden of a certain manor, and renewable every twenty-one years, at a customary fine, and an annual rent of 10*s.* This property proved to be holden only for the residue of a lease for twenty-one years, at a rent of 10*s.*, without any customary right of renewal. One of the conditions of sale fixed the time at which any objections to the title of vendor should be taken, and enabled him, at any time after the delivery of such objections, to vacate the sale. Another condition provided, that the purchaser should accept the existing lease and the assignment to the vendor as a sufficient title to the leasehold property, and a further condition stipulated, that if, through any mistake, the estate should be improperly described, or any error or misstatement be inserted in the particular, such error or misstatement should not vitiate the sale, but the vendor or purchaser should allow or pay compensation. Upon a bill by the purchaser against the vendor:—Held, that the purchaser was entitled to specific performance of the contract, with compensation for the absence of any customary right of renewal, the same being a misstatement or misdescription within the last-mentioned condition: that the power reserved to the vendor of vacating the sale must be construed to apply only to a case of dispute, arising upon an objection of title: that the claim of the purchaser for compensation, in respect of the absence of any customary right to renew the lease, was not an objection to the title within the meaning of the particulars and conditions of sale. Painter v. Newby, 11 Hare 26; 17 Jur. 483; 22 L. J., Ch., 871; 1 Eq. Rep. 173.

Held, also, that the word "title" referred to the title of the vendor to the thing described, and not to the description. S. C. 1 W. R. 284.

4. A contract for sale stipulated that the vendor should deliver an abstract of the title to the purchaser, who should make all his requisitions within seven days, and that the purchaser should take title as the vendor had:—Held, that, notwithstanding such a condition, if the vendor agrees to deliver an abstract, and stipulates that objections are to be taken within a specified time, that imports that objections may be taken. Kay v. Haydon, 1 W. R. 73; 9 Hare (App.) lix.

And a contract by purchaser to take such title as vendor has does not relieve vendor from the necessity of showing a bona fide title, and producing the best title he can from the materials in his power. S. C. 1 W. R. 112.

5. Special conditions of sale are construed most strictly against a vendor. Hoy v. Smythes, 22 Beav. 510; 2 Jur., N. S., 1011.

By the eighth condition of sale, a vendor reserved a right to rescind, in case of objection to title, etc., and by the eleventh, misdescriptions were not to annul the sale, but be the subject of compensation. Somble, that the eighth condition did not apply to cases of misdescription within the eleventh condition. Id.

On the sale of a copyhold manor, it was stated that the "fine was two years' improved value." The eighth condition enabled the vendor, in case of any objection to title, to rescind; and the eleventh condition provided for compensation in case of mistake or error. The abstract was delivered, and no objection was taken to the title, within the time prescribed for that purpose. Subsequently some doubt arose as to whether the fine was of one or two years' improved value:—Held, that (so far) the plaintiff was entitled to specific performance with a compensation. The purchaser having afterwards raised a question as to title, and filed a bill for specific performance, the vendor, on the same day, gave notice to rescind:—Held, that, although the objection as to title was waived at the bar, the vendor had a right to insist on the contract having been rescinded, and the bill was dismissed. Id.

6. Conditions of sale must be construed strictly against the person who frames them. Graaves v. Wilson, 25 Beav. 290; 4 Jur., N. S., 271; 27 L. J., Ch., 546; 6 W. R. 482.

A condition that the vendor shall be at liberty to rescind the contract, if the purchaser should "show any objection of title, conveyance, or otherwise, and should insist thereon":—Held, not to authorise the vendor to rescind the contract, without attempting to answer the requisitions, although some of them were untenable. Id.

Held, also, that he was bound to answer them, and give the purchaser an opportunity of either waiving or insisting upon them. Id.

The vendor, notwithstanding such a condition, held bound to comply with a requisition, that a mortgagee of the property, by underlease, should be paid off and concur in the conveyance. Id.

A vendor has duties, in that character, which he cannot get rid of by such conditions of sale. Id.

A condition of sale provided that if the purchaser should show any objection, whether of title, conveyance, or otherwise, and should insist thereon, the vendor should be at liberty to rescind the contract and annul the sale on returning the deposit without interest or costs. The purchaser delivered requisitions on the title, all of which were covered by the conditions of sale. He required also the concurrence in the assignment of certain mortgagees by demise. The vendor acknowledged the receipt of the requisitions, and stated that they were of such a kind that he thought fit to rescind the contract and annul the sale. A decree for specific performance was made at the instance of the purchaser, he waiving all objections, except as to the concurrence of the mortgagees in the assignment. Id.

Semble, that he might rescind on account of requisitions which would be tenable in the absence of any condition as to rescinding, even though he might be able to satisfy them, if such requisitions should be of an unreasonable character in respect of expense or otherwise. S. C. 6 W. R. 482.

1. Where a sale takes place under a condition providing that if the purchaser makes any requisition which the vendor is unable or unwilling to comply with, the vendor may, by notice in writing, annul the sale, the vendor may, if the purchaser insists upon a requisition, after being informed that the vendor is unable to comply with it, rescind the sale by notice, and such notice need not give the purchaser a time within which to waive his requisition. Duddell v. Simpson, 2 L. R., Ch., 102; 12 Jur., N. S., 969; 36 L. J., Ch., 70; 15 W. R. 115; 15 L. T., N. S., 305. Affirming 1 L. R., Eq., 578; 35 L. J., Ch., 451; 14 W. R. 418; 14 L. T., N. S., 11.

A vendor entitled to an underlease for a term of twenty-four years, less three days, put up the property for sale, as held under a lease for twenty-four years, relying on the promise of the persons entitled to the three days to concur. They afterwards refused to concur:—Held, that the vendor could not be considered to have made a misrepresentation, so as to disentitle him to the benefit of the above condition. Id.

2. In a contract for sale of lands containing valuable quarries, there was a clause reserving to the vendors power to rescind if any objection should be persisted in, and another providing that compensation should be given for any error in the description of the property or of the vendors' interest therein. The purchaser alleging that the right to the quarries was in a third party, under an exception of mines and minerals, in one of the title deeds, asked for compensation, which the vendors, insisting that they could make a title to the quarries under a custom or by adverse user, refused to make; and upon the purchaser persisting in his demand, they exercised their power of rescinding:—Held, that the question between the parties was one of title, and that the rescission was therefore justifiable. Manson v. Fletcher, 39 L. J., Ch., 583; 10 L. R., Eq., 212; 23 L. T., N. S., 277; 18 W. R. 798. Affirmed 19 W. R. 141; 23 L. T., N. S., 645.

3. Part of property sold was in the occupation of a tenant under a lease, by which the vendor agreed to repair. The repairs not being done, the tenant instituted a suit against both vendor and purchaser. The purchaser sent in an objection and requisition in respect of the repairs not being done:—Held, that such an objection was not an objection to title in respect of which the vendor was entitled to rescind the contract under a condition applying to objections to the abstract. Sale v. Lambert, 43 L. J., Ch., 470; 18 L. R., Eq., 1; 22 W. R. 478.

4. Particulars stated that property was to be sold pursuant to a decree of the Court, and one of the conditions was that if the purchaser should make any objection the vendor should be unable or unwilling to comply with, the latter should be entitled to rescind, and the deposit should be returned without interest or costs. The sale took place, and the deposit was paid and invested. It afterwards appeared that the sale took place before the chief clerk had made his certificate, and the Court had decided in a suit between the vendor and the purchaser of another lot, that the purchaser was entitled to be discharged:—Held, that the condition did not apply, and that the purchaser was entitled to the return of his deposit and to be indemnified against all expenses he had been put to, and to the bank annuities on which the deposit had been invested, and the dividends which had accrued thereon. Pomell v. Pomell, 19 L. R., Eq., 422; 44 L. J., Ch., 311; 32 L. T. 148; 23 W. R. 482.

5. A person contracted to sell property, and showed only an equitable title, and the purchaser required the vendor to get in the legal estate:—Held, that such requisition was as to a matter of conveyance only, and the vendor could not rescind the contract under a condition empowering him to rescind if any objection to title were made which he was unable or unwilling to remove. Kitchen v. Palmer, 46 L. J., Ch., 611.

6. A condition in a contract for sale that, if the purchaser shall make any objection or requisition which the vendor shall be unwilling on the ground of expense or otherwise to comply with, the vendor may annul the sale, does not enable a vendor to rescind the contract in a case where he fails to show any title whatever. Bowman v. Hyland, 8 L. R., Ch. D., 588; 47 L. J., Ch., 581; 39 L. T., N. S., 90; 26 W. R. 876.

7. At a sale by auction of leasehold property by a mortgagee under a power one condition of sale was that within the time limited from the delivery of the abstract the purchaser should send to the vendor's solicitors his requisitions on the title or evidence, and in default of any he should be deemed to have accepted the title, and for the purpose of requisitions the abstract was to be deemed to be perfect if it supplied the information suggesting the same, and if the purchaser should insist on any requisition which the vendor should be unable or should decline to comply with, he should be at liberty to rescind the contract. An abstract was delivered, but it did not show the real state of the title. After requisitions were sent and replies received, the purchasers' solicitors were informed by mortgagees that the property had been mortgaged by deposit of an underlease to them. The vendor, who was not aware of the mortgage, was required to pay the amount due to the mortgagee, but his reply was that he was unable and unwilling to satisfy the claim, and that he would rescind the contract. The purchasers insisted on the mortgage being discharged, and upon a summons under the Vendor and Purchaser Act 1874, a declaration was made that the vendor was not entitled under the conditions and circumstances to rescind. Re Jackson and Oakshott, 14 L. R., Ch. D., 851; 49 L. J., Ch., 523; 41 L. T. 719; 28 W. R. 794.

Repayment of Purchase Money.] 1. A person contracted to purchase real estate, subject to a condition that if he made any requisition which the vendor was unable or unwilling to comply with the vendor should be at liberty to rescind the contract. He made several requisitions and died intestate without completing the contract, and after death the vendor rescinded it on account of his alleged inability to comply with one of the requisitions, which if not complied with might have given the purchaser a right to compensation, but would not have entitled him to annul the contract:—Held, that the heir-at-law of the purchaser was entitled to have the amount of the purchase money paid to him out of the intestate's personal estate. Hudson v. Cooke or Cook, 41 L. J., Ch., 306; 13 L. R., Eq., 417; 20 W. R. 407; 26 L. T., N. S., 180.

V. DEFECTIVE OR DOUBTFUL, AND RELIEF IN RESPECT THEREOF.

See also XXIV. VI. post.

1. Defective. In General, 7210.
2. Defective as to Part of Property, 7212.
3. Doubtful Title, 7213.
4. Title made Good before Decree, 7218.

1. Defective. In General.

2. Vendor filed a bill for specific performance, but, not being able to make a good title, his bill was dismissed, and he was ordered to return the deposit with interest. Anson (Lord) v. Hodges, 5 Sim. 227.

3. Acceptance or non-acceptance of title is the criterion of right of specific performance of contracts in equity. Wyrill v. Ewster (Bishop), 1 Price 296.

4. Even after great delay and acquiescence, the Court will not compel a purchaser to complete, if the title appears to be manifestly bad. Blackford v. Kirkpatrick, 6 Beav. 232; 12 L. J., N. S., Ch., 108.

5. The vendor of a share in a co-partnership business filed a bill against the purchaser, who had taken possession, charging that he had grossly mismanaged the property and destroyed its value, and praying that he might be declared to have accepted the title, and might be decreed to perform the contract specifically: the Court was of opinion that the title had not been accepted, and as a good title was not shown, a specific performance could not be decreed:—Held, that upon a record so framed no accounts nor inquiries could be directed as to the defendant's possession and management of the property, with a view to ascertain whether any and what sum ought to be paid or compensation made by him to the plaintiff. Stevens v. Guppy, 3 Russ. 171; 6 L. J., Ch., 164.

6. J. S., under the belief that he had the fee-simple in an estate, subject to a life interest in his mother, conveyed all his interest to trustees for the benefit of his creditors; the conveyance contained covenants for title, and for further assurance. It turned out that, at the time of the conveyance, the mother had the fee-simple, which, upon her death, descended to J. S. as her heir-at-law:—Held, that, although no estate passed by the conveyance, yet the transaction amounted to a contract for the sale of the specific estate, and that J. S., unless he could set aside the contract for fraud, was, in equity, compellable to carry it into execution. Smith v. Baker, 1 Y. & Coll. C. C. 223.

7. Specific performance decreed, though vendor's title was founded on destruction of contingent remainders. Hasker v. Sutton, 2 Sim. & S. 513. And see Roake v. Kidd, 5 Ves. 647.

8. Equity will not decree specific performance of agreement which is contrary to the powers in a settlement. Stratford v. Aldborough, 1 Ridgw. P. C. 281.

9. Specific performance resisted, on the ground that antecedently to the contract a trust for sale had been created in the purchaser, an incumbrancer in possession. Chambers v. Walters, Coop. temp. Brough. 91.

10. An estate was devised to a feme covert for her separate use. She entered into a contract for sale and died, having devised the estate to her husband, who sued for a specific performance. The purchaser objected, that the feme covert had neither power to enter into a contract nor to devise the estate. The Court declined to compel a specific performance in the absence of the heir. Harris v. Mott, 14 Beav. 169; 15 Jur. 978.

11. Lessee subject to covenants cannot compel specific performance of agreement to purchase the premises of him, though he offers to indemnify purchaser against performance of covenants. Fildes v. Hooker, 3 Madd. 193.

12. Bill by purchaser for specific performance ordered to be dismissed for defect of title, a necessary party not choosing to concur in conveying. Order to dismiss without costs, it being against the principles of the Court on dismissal of bill to order the defendant to pay the plaintiff his costs. Lewis v. Loatham, 3 Meriv. 429.

13. Specific performance refused of agreement to sell in fee, by one who supposed himself absolute owner, being only tenant for life, under a settlement, with proviso empow-ing him to purchase an estate in fee-simple in possession, in some convenient place or places in England, of equal or better value, and to settle same to him in lieu of settled estate, which was then to be his own. Honell v. George, 1 Madd. 1.

1. A person who had entered into an agreement for the purchase of land, which was formerly part of the glebe of a rectory, and had been before sold for the redemption of the land-tax, is not bound to complete the purchase, when it appears that, upon the prior sale for the redemption of the land-tax, the rector was himself the actual purchaser in the name of his curate. Grover v. Hagell, 3 Russ. 428.

2. A person having contracted for the purchase of an estate in fee-simple, in possession, free from incumbrances, died intestate, before the completion of the contract; it subsequently appeared that a good title in possession could not be made in consequence of an outstanding lease, for the life of a person, at a low rent. A bill was filed by the heir-at-law of the purchaser for a specific performance of the contract, with an abatement of the purchase money as a compensation for the lease for life, and seeking to have the purchase money paid out of the personal assets of the purchaser:—Held, that the purchaser could not have been compelled to perform the contract, and that the heir was not entitled to have it completed for his benefit. Collier v. Jenkins, Younge 295.

3. A tenant for life under a settlement, with an ultimate reversion to himself in fee, enters into an agreement by himself as absolute owner to sell part of the settled land. This agreement the trustees of the settlement, who had a power to sell at the request and by the direction of the tenant for life, refused to adopt. Upon a bill filed against them and the tenant for life, it being held that the Court could not control the discretion of the trustees, a decree against the tenant for life for such performance as was in his power was refused, on the ground that it would be prejudicial to the other parties interested in the settlement. Thomas v. Dering, 1 Keen 729; 6 L. J., N. S., Ch., 267; 1 Jur. 211, 427.

4. A., supposing he has a right, enters into an agreement to sell to B., who brings a bill for specific execution against A., and also against C., who appears to be the true owner, and so insists in his answer. This bill dismissed, as well against A. as C., and the decree of dismissal was affirmed. Cornwall v. Williams, Colles' P. C. 117.

5. If a vendor enters into a contract on the supposition that he can sell and deal with the purchase money as he shall think fit, and it turns out that he has only a power of exchange, and is bound to re-invest in land, the Court will not decree specific performance against him. Hood v. Oglander, 11 Jur., N. S., 498; 13 W. R. 705; 12 L. T., N. S., 626; 34 L. J., Ch., 528.

The question whether he is absolute owner or has a mere power of exchange must be raised and decided at the hearing, and the defendant will not be permitted to insist upon this objection to specific performance after a reference has been made as to title. Ib.

6. Though an individual vendee may consent to accept a defective title, it is doubtful whether the directors of a railway company, acting on behalf of the company, can do so. Semble, Eastern Counties Railway Co. v. Hanks, 5 H. L. Ca. 331; 24 L. J., Ch., 601. And see Devenish v. Brown, 2 Jur., N. S., 1043; 26 L. J., Ch., 23.

Where a contract for the purchase of land is made by the proprietors of a proposed line of railway, though an action at law may be maintained upon the contract, a court of equity will not simply on that account refuse its interference to compel specific performance. Ib.

In a contract for the sale of land for the purposes of a projected railway, the vendor was described as having, so far as regarded one part of the land, no more than a mere life estate, and the proprietors of the railway undertook to obtain from parliament powers to enable him to make a good title:—Held, that where they did not fulfil this stipulation, or but for their own default the title might have been perfected, they could not set up his deficiency of title as an answer to a bill for specific performance. Ib.

7. Quære, whether the Court, in the absence of express stipulation, or of conduct waiving the objection, will decree specific performance of a contract, where the execution by a necessary party can only be obtained under a power of attorney. Beaufort (Duke) v. Glynn, 3 Sm. & G. 213.

8. Where a person sells property which he is neither able to convey nor to enforce a conveyance from other proper parties, the purchaser may repudiate the contract, and is not bound to wait to see if the vendor can induce some third person to join in making a good title. Forrer v. Nash, 35 Beav. 167.

9. A vendor contracted to sell and a purchaser to purchase an agreement for a lease. The purchaser afterwards repudiated the contract. At the date of the agreement, and of the repudiation, the agreement to lease was voidable at the will of a third party, but the third party took no steps to avoid the agreement, but was willing to confirm it on certain conditions:—Held, that the purchaser was entitled to repudiate the contract. Brewer v. Broadwood, 22 L. R., Ch. D., 105; 52 L. J., Ch., 136; 47 L. T. 508; 31 W. R. 115.

10. If a purchaser on the completion of his purchase acquires a defective title, that defective title cannot afterwards be strengthened either by his own fraud or the fraud of any other person. Heath v. Crealock, 44 L. J., Ch., 157; 10 L. R., Ch., 22.

11. Although a sale of leaseholds by an administrator durante absentia the person entitled to administration will be good if that person is living at the time of the conveyance, it is not such a title as the Court will force upon a purchaser. Webb v. Kirby, 7 De G. M. & G. 376; 3 Jur., N. S., 73; 26 L. J., Ch., 145. Reversing 3 Sm. & G. 333; 2 Jur., N. S., 996; 25 L. J., Ch., 872; 4 W. R. 770.

Particulars of sale stated that the sale was by order of the executors, and one of the conditions stated, "The vendor shall sell under the will of H., deceased, and the concurrence of the persons beneficially interested in his estate, or the purchase money shall not be required":—Held, that the purchaser was not precluded from requiring the concurrence of the cestui que trustent, it appearing that the vendor was selling, not as executor, but as administrator of the surviving trustee, who was also surviving executor, and that the testator had been dead thirty-five years. Ib.

2. Defective as to Part of Property.

1. Quere, how far the Court will go in compelling a party to complete a purchase, when no title can be made to some part of the property. Poolo v. Shergold, 1 Cox 273; 2 Bro. C. C. 118.

2. Specific performance refused of agreement to purchase, no good title being made to a small part which was essential to enjoyment of the rest, and on the ground of defendant having been let into possession and turned out again by plaintiff. Knatchbull v. Grueber, 1 Madd. 153. Affirmed 3 Meriv. 124.

3. An estate was sold, some part of which, material to the enjoyment of the rest, was subject to a defect of title known to the vendors, but not disclosed by the abstract, and unknown to the purchaser. The contract was rescinded, and the vendors were ordered to repay the purchase money, with all costs and expenses incident to the purchase and conveyance. Edwards v. McLeay, 2 Swan. 287. Affirming Coop. 308.

4. A. contracted to sell a wharf on the banks of the Thames with a jetty, which latter turned out to be liable to be removed by the Corporation of London, if they thought fit:—Held, that the jetty was essential to the beneficial occupation and enjoyment of the premises contracted to be sold, and that a specific performance could not be decreed. Peers v. Lambert, 7 Beav. 546.

5. A purchaser who had contracted for the entirety of an estate will not be compelled to take six undivided seventh parts of it. On a sale under a decree, the abstract stated that the vendor was devisee of A., who took as heir to B., and on inquiry, the vendor's solicitor confirmed that statement: the Master accordingly approved of the title. Just before the conveyance was executed, the purchaser discovered that C. was the heir of B., and it appeared that the vendor's solicitor had received information of that fact, but concealed it. A motion by the purchaser to be discharged from his purchase was granted, though the vendor had obtained a release from C. before the motion was made. Dalby v. Pullen, 3 Sim. 29; 1 Russ. & M. 296; 8 L. J., Ch., 74.

6. A person who purchases two lots is not justified in refusing to perform his contract for the purchase of the second lot, because a good title is not shown to the first lot. Lewin v. Guest, 1 Russ. 325.

7. Purchaser under decree of two-sevenths of estate in one lot is not obliged to take one-seventh, to which only title can be made. Roffey v. Shalloross, 4 Madd. 227.

8. Defect of title to a considerable part of the estate, though a good objection by the purchaser to a specific performance, is not by the vendor. Western v. Russell, 3 Ves. & B. 187.

9. Reference upon the title; an objection to the specific performance on the ground that premises to which no title could be made were represented as included in the purchase, and were a principal inducement to the purchaser, failing upon the evidence; cross-bill for specific performance, according to answer, dismissed with costs. Stapylton v. Scott, 13 Ves. 425.

10. If A. agrees to sell an estate, and it is afterwards discovered that a small portion of it is the property of another person, the Court will not discharge the purchaser from his contract without giving A. an opportunity of acquiring a title to that portion. Chamberlain v. Lee, 10 Sim. 441.

11. Under a bill to have a contract delivered up on the ground of defective title of defendant, the vendor, and for compensation for the injury to the plaintiff by the failure of the contract, decree was made for delivering up the contract without prejudice to an action, instead of an inquiry before the Master. Gwilliam v. Stone, 14 Ves. 128.

12. The particulars of sale described the property as a family residence, with a right to a pew in the middle aisle of the parish church. The title to the pew being defective:—Held, that it was not essential to the enjoyment of the property. Cooper v. —, 2 Jur. 29.

13. A railway company takes land under a 35 of the Lands Clauses Act, and subsequently enters into an agreement with the owners for the purchase of the lands so taken. To a portion of the land the owners cannot make an effectual title by reason of an outstanding legal estate in an heir-at-law resident in America. The purchase money is paid into court, but no conveyance is prepared. Upon a petition by the owners to have so much of the purchase money as represented the portion of the land to which they could make a title transferred to an account entitled in their names and the dividend paid, they undertaking to execute to the company a conveyance of the portion of the land to which a title would be made:—Held, that they were entitled to have the apportioned part of the fund transferred as prayed by the petition. Although the defect of title was such that in ordinary cases the contract must have failed, the taking and occupation of the land by the company rendered it impossible to annul the contract. Re Perkes's Estate, 2 W. R. 24; 7 Rail. Cas. 605.

14. By a written agreement between the plaintiff and defendant, the plaintiff agreed to sell and the defendant agreed to purchase, upon the terms stated, a certain property called the Leigh estate, and by the same agreement the defendant agreed to sell, and the plaintiff agreed to purchase, another estate called the Haresfield estate; and it was not expressed that the two contracts were to be dependent on each other. The defendant was eventually unable to make good title to the Haresfield estate:—Held, that the plaintiff was entitled to a specific performance of the contract as to the Leigh estate. Evidence aliunde was not admitted to show that it was the real intention of the parties that the agreement should take effect on the basis of a mutual exchange. Croome v. Lediard, 2 Myl. & K. 251; 3 L. J., N. S., Ch., 98.

15. When vendors having agreed to sell the entirety of property could make a title to one moiety only:—Held, that the purchaser was entitled to have such moiety conveyed to him on payment of one moiety of the purchase money. Bailey v. Piper, 43 L. J., Ch., 704; 18 L. R., Eq., 683; 22 W. R. 943; 31 L. T. N. S., 86.

1. A farm was put up for sale under the directions of the Court by particulars accompanied by a plan, and was described as "a compact small farm containing 41 a. 3 r. 35 p., divided as follows." Among the parcels was "490a, Bottlesey Green, containing 7 a. 1 r. 27 p.," opposite to which, in the column showing the amounts which made up the 41 a. 3 r. 35 p., was entered 4 a. 0 r. 38 p. The conditions provided that any error, misstatement, or omission in the particulars should not annul the sale, nor should any compensation be allowed except such (if any) as the judge in chambers should direct. G. bought the property in his own name, and was certified as purchaser. He in fact bought as agent for B., who was the owner of immediately adjoining property. On investigating the title it turned out that the vendors were only entitled to four undivided sevenths of 490 acres, which was a narrow close containing 7 a. 1 r. 27 p., having a long frontage to a highroad and at one end adjoined B.'s property. B. alleged that it was of great importance to the enjoyment of his property that he should have the whole of 490 acres, and G., by his directions, refused to complete. The vendors then entered into an arrangement with the owner of the other three-sevenths to give them up, receiving an equivalent out of another part of the farm having a frontage to another road:—Held, by the Master of the Rolls, that, as B. had not been substituted as purchaser, G. must be treated as the real purchaser, and could not take any objection depending on the circumstances of B.'s property, and that, as the arrangement must give the purchaser all he contracted to buy, he must complete without compensation:—But held, on appeal, that G., having only purchased as agent for B., could take any objection which B., had he been the nominal as well as the real purchaser, could have taken; that, for the purpose of resisting completion, the purchaser was entitled to say that he bought the farm as shown on the plan; that, as the possession of 490 acres was important to the enjoyment of B.'s property, completion could not be compelled unless he could get the whole of it, and that he was not bound to accept the arrangement by which he would obtain the whole of it by giving up another part of the purchased property; and that he must therefore be discharged from his purchase. Re Arnold, Arnold v. Arnold, 14 L. R., Ch. D., 270; 42 L. T. 705; 28 W. R. 635.

3. Doubtful Title.

2. Purchaser not compelled to take a doubtful title; no objection to a purchaser that the defect of title appeared on the abstract delivered before he filed his bill. Stappilton v. Scott, 16 Ves. 272.

3. A purchaser not compelled to take a doubtful title, nor will a case be directed without his consent. The Court also hesitated upon giving sanction to a title founded on the destruction of contingent remainders by tenant for life, there being no trustees to support them. Roake v. Kidd, 5 Ves. 647.

4. Specific performance decreed, though vendor's title was founded on destruction of contingent remainders. Hasker v. Sutton, 2 Sim. & S. 513.

5. Specific performance decreed with costs, in a case where the defendant, objecting to title, had been served with notice of a prior decision in a different cause, in favour of the same title, against a similar objection. Biscoe v. Wilks, 3 Meriv. 456.

6. Where the validity of a deed depends upon the bona fides of the transaction, to be collected from extrinsic circumstances, a court of equity will not compel a purchaser to accept a title under the deed, because neither the purchaser nor the Court had adequate means of ascertaining the circumstances. Hartley v. Smith, Buck 368.

7. Purchaser discharged from his agreement upon a doubt whether the land was not bound by a covenant of which he had not notice. Bristow v. Wood, 1 Colly. 480; 14 L. J., N. S., Ch., 50; 9 Jur. 99.

8. Title depending on recovery suffered by tenant in tail, the reversion of which had vested in the Crown by attainder of reversion:—Held, not such a title as purchaser is bound to accept. Blosse v. Clanmorris, 3 Bligh 62.

9. Devise to executors and trustees of a freehold of inheritance for a term of ten years, in trust to pay debts and legacies, and, after testator's decease, to his wife for life; then "to my grandson T. C., son of the late R. C., all that my estate where I now live, and all that other estate and premises thereto belonging, situate, etc., called or known by the name of W. estate, now in the holding of T., for his own use during his natural life, with remainder to the first son of the body of the said T. C. lawfully begotten, severally and successively in tail male of the name of C. And for want of such lawful issue of that name, either by my said grandson T. C., or my son J. C., then I give and devise the said estate where I now live, and the W. estate, amongst my daughters and their children, share and share alike, to hold unto them, his, her, or their heirs for ever as tenants in common, and not as joint tenants." T. C. suffered a recovery. He had no child:—Held, on an exception to the title taken by a purchaser under a sale by order of the Court, that the devisee could make a good title in fee to the vendee. The question of title or no title being matter of opinion for the Court, the purchaser is bound thereby, and cannot object to complete the purchase on the ground of the difficulty of the question on which the title depends. Rushton v. Craven, 12 Price 599.

10. Devise of real estates to A. for life, with remainder to trustees to preserve contingent remainders, remainder to first and other sons of A. in tail male, remainders over, with power from the persons from time to time entitled to the estates devised to lease all such estates except an estate called Juts, or any part thereof, and that every such person should live and reside on the said estate called Juts; and for default thereof all the devised estates to go over to the person next in succession, as if the person refusing or neglecting to reside or live at Juts were actually dead:—Held, in a suit by parties making title under a recovery suffered by A. and his eldest son, against a purchaser for specific performance, that it was too uncertain what the testator meant by "live and reside" for the Court to determine that there had been a forfeiture, and a specific performance decreed. Fillingham v. Bromley, T. & R. 530.

1. A court of equity will not, at the end of half a century, fix upon a purchaser a difficult construction of an ambiguous instrument, which it might have done as between the original parties in case there had been no sale. Thompson v. Simpson, 1 Dr. & War. 259.

When estates and other property forming a mixed fund are settled, subject to a power of appointment, there the Court, where the parties entitled to this mixed fund are numerous, will not, as against a purchaser of part of the mixed fund, in which purchase one of its objects acquiesced, act as against that purchaser without knowing all the dispositions of that mixed fund. Id.

2. By marriage articles, the husband agreed to settle out of the lands of K., in failure of A., his daughter by a former marriage, a jointure on his intended wife, the remainder of the lands on the issue male begotten on the wife, and in failure of issue male on the issue female; and in case A. should survive, and the lands of K. should not be made good, that then the lands of K., which were not settled on the former marriage, should be subject to the jointure, and be settled on the eldest son of the marriage, and, in failure of the said son, on the daughters of the said marriage. There was no male issue of the marriage, but female issue, B., C., and D.:—Held, that the lands of K. should be settled on them as tenants in common in tail. No settlement was executed, and the lands descended to A., B., C., and D., subject to the trusts of the articles, in 1763, when B., C., and D. went into possession. In 1783 they levied a fine, and conveyed to a purchaser for value, and covenanted that they were seised in fee. There were several subsequent conveyances for value. In 1847 the lands were contracted to be sold:—Held, in a suit for specific performance against the purchaser, that the legal title of A. and her heirs to one-fourth of the lands was barred by the Statute of Limitations, as a court of law would not notice the executory trusts of the articles, and the several conveyances operated as disseins. Semble, the equitable title of the heir of A., on failure of issue of B., C., and D., was also barred; but:—Held, that as a fine created no discontinuance in equity, the title was too doubtful to be forced on the purchaser. A conveyance of all her estate, etc., was obtained from the devisee of the heir-at-law of A., and was held to put an end to the objection; for although the reversion belonged to the heir of the settlor, he must trace title through the daughters, and all their right was extinguished by this conveyance and the fine. Stewart v. Conyngham (Marquis), 1 Ir. Ch. R. 534.

3. Purchaser must get such a title as he can force down upon a re-purchaser from him. Magennis v. Fallon, 2 Moll. 578.

4. Purchaser is not bound to take a doubtful title. Price v. Strange, 6 Madd. 159.

5. Purchaser cannot be compelled to take title, founded on matter of fact not admitting of satisfactory proof, or which cannot be well proved. Smith v. Death, 5 Madd. 371.

6. Where presumption in favour of title is so strong that a judge would feel himself bound to give a clear direction to a jury, the purchaser would be concluded thereby; but if the presumption would be left for a jury to determine, he would not be bound to take it. Emery v. Grocock, 6 Madd. 57.

7. Title reported good by deputy remembrancer in creditors' suit: purchaser not compellable to accept it, if only a prima facie title. Eyton v. Dicken, 4 Price 303.

8. Where, on a reference as to title in a suit against a purchaser for specific performance, the Master reports in favour of the title, but the Court holds it to be so doubtful that the purchaser should not be compelled to take it, the bill may be dismissed, without allowing the exceptions taken by the defendant to the report. Robinson v. Milner, 1 Hare 578. n.

9. Court will not decree a specific performance of a purchase where there is a doubtful title. Cooper v. Denno, 4 Bro. C. C. 80; 1 Ves. J. 565.

10. Purchaser is not to be compelled to take a doubtful title, depending on the decision of certain legal questions. Sloper v. Fish, 2 Ves. & B. 145.

11. Testator devised all his manor, messuages, lands, tenements, tithes, and hereditaments, and all his real estate whatsoever, "except what is hereinafter mentioned and devised," to the use of all his children successively, in strict settlement, and gave two of them annuities, which he charged upon a rectory held by him under a lease for lives, which he directed to be renewed if those two children or either should be living at his death, and that their lives or that of the survivor should be inserted in the new lease, and the fine to be paid out of his personal estate; he gave part of his personal estate specifically, and directed the residue to be laid out in land, to be settled to the same uses as his real estate; but afterwards, by a testamentary paper unattested, he disposed of his personal estate otherwise: the heir contracted to sell the lease of the rectory, and, upon a case directed to the Court of King's Bench on his bill for specific performance, the certificate was, that the lease did not pass by the will, but devolved on the heir as special occupant; but the Lord Chancellor considered that title too doubtful to be forced on a purchaser; an Act of Parliament was therefore obtained. Sheffield v. Mulgrave (Lord), 2 Ves. 525.

12. Where the purchaser of an interest sold under the decree of the Court acquires by that means a knowledge of a defect in the title to that interest, and afterwards buys up the estate of the person interested in taking advantage thereof, the Court will not allow him to rely upon the doctrine, that a purchaser is not obliged to take a doubtful title, in support of an objection to the title founded upon that defect. Quare, whether, if the objection were valid, the Court would allow him to rely on it. Sheppard v. Doolan, 3 Dr. & War. 1; 5 Ir. Eq. R. 6. See S. C. Fl. & K. 598; 4 Ir. Eq. R. 654.

13. To force a title on a purchaser, the opinion of the Court must be so clear that it does not apprehend that another judge would form a different opinion. Rogers v. Waterhouse, 4 Drew. 329; 6 W. R. 823.

Though the Court may entertain a strong opinion in favour of the title of a party, if it were a contest between him and another claiming title, that is not sufficient in a suit for specific performance. Ib.

In a suit for specific performance, where the title depends upon a will, the Court will not put a construction upon it, except to decide whether there is or is not any reasonable doubt as to the vendor's title. Ib.

1. A., being seised in fee of a piece of land, called New Hey, sold a portion thereof to B. The deed of conveyance to B. contained a mutual covenant between A., for himself, his heirs, executors, and administrators, B., for himself, his heirs, executors, and administrators, and that B. should not, on the portion remaining in his possession, erect any houses of less value than 300*l.*, and should not erect any steam engine or manufactory, or suffer any business to be carried on which might be considered a nuisance to the neighbourhood. A. subsequently contracted with C. to sell to him the remaining portion of New Hey, in fee-simple, free from incumbrances. No notice of the mutual covenant was taken in the contract, but C. had notice of its existence:—Held, that the title was too doubtful to force on C. Briston v. Wood, 9 Jur. 99.

2. By a marriage settlement of one of the daughters of a testator, who had bequeathed them rent-charges, and also bequeathed legacies, which were charged on the realty, one of the rent-charges and part of a legacy were vested in the children of the marriage, some of whom were minors, subject to an exclusive power of appointment in the parents. The minors were defendants in a suit to carry the trusts of the will into execution, in which the Master found, upon the consent of the connusee and trustee of the minors, that the legacies and rent-charges were in equal priority, and that the finding was in the nature of a compromise, and beneficial to the minor. The report was confirmed by a final decree, and the lands of P., among others, were decreed to be sold to pay the several sums reported, in the first instance subject to the rent-charge to the daughters, and if sufficient was not produced to pay the debts and legacies, then discharged of the said rent-charges; and, if the sum arising from such sale should be insufficient to pay the debts, legacies, and value of the rent-charges, and costs, the legatees and devisees of the rent-charges should abate ratably. The lands of P. were sold discharged of the rent-charges:—Held, allowing exceptions to the Master's report of good title, that the report and decree, being founded on a consent which the Court had no jurisdiction to take, were erroneous, and the title under it was bad. Weir v. Chamley, 1 Ir. Ch. R. 295.

Pending an appeal from the above decision, which was affirmed, a deed was executed by the father of the minors, appointing the rent-charge to a son who was adult when the consent was entered into, and was a party to it, and the legacy to him and two of the minors who had since come of age. The Lord Chancellor having, on the statement that the plaintiff could then show a good title, referred it back to the Master, to review his report, who found that a good title could be made by reason of said deed; semble, that the appointment, having been made on an emergency, and not bonâ fide for the end designed by the donor of the power, was void:—Held, that the title was too doubtful to be forced on a purchaser, and the exceptions to the Master's further report of good title were also allowed. Ib.

3. Devise of copyhold estates, the legal estate being outstanding, "to my son R., to be entailed upon his male heirs, and, failing such, to pass to his next brother, and so on from brother to brother, allowing 2,500*l.* to be raised upon the estates, for female children each;" whether a trust executed or executory; and, if the latter, whether an estate tail in R., quære. The point too doubtful to compel a purchaser to take the title. Jervise v. Northumberland, 1 Jac. & Walk. 559.

In compelling a purchaser to take a title, the Court formerly acted upon its own opinion; but now it will not compel him to take it if the point is doubtful. Id. 569.

4. Specific performance will not be decreed where title is doubtful. Collard v. Sampson, 1 Eq. Rep. 26.

5. Devise to trustees and the survivor of them, and the heirs and assigns of such survivor, upon trust to sell, the surviving trustee having devised the trust estate to persons who sold and who filed a bill to enforce specific performance of the contract to sell. Semble, that the legal estate trust to sell passed by the devise, but that there was sufficient doubt upon the point to prevent the Court from forcing the title upon the purchaser. Ashton v. Wood, 3 Sm. & G. 436; 3 Jur., N. S., 1164.

6. Testator by his will, in his own handwriting, devised an estate to Ann Aspinall and her heirs, if she should be then living; but, if not, then to her issue and their heirs. He afterwards made a codicil commencing thus: "This is a codicil to the last will and testament of me, J. S., and which will I some time since made in my own handwriting, and thereby devised to John Aspinall as therein mentioned." At the date of the codicil, Ann Aspinall had a son named John. Part of the testator's estates having been sold in pursuance of a direction in the will, the purchaser objected to the title on the ground that the reference in the codicil afforded strong presumption of the existence of a subsequent will. But, as the will contained a gift which might take effect in favour of John Aspinall, the objection was overruled. Howarth v. Smith, 6 Sim. 161.

7. L., having a term of ninety-nine years, with a covenant that he may within twenty years purchase the fee, demised to F. for ninety-nine years and a half, at a ground rent, and then acquired the fee. The ground rent was put up for sale described as "a freehold ground rent issuing out of lands on lease, which will expire in December 1922," being the expiration of the ninety-nine years and a half term:—Held, that the title was too doubtful, in reference to the remedies which the purchaser would have for enforcing the rent, to be forced on an unwilling purchaser. Langford v. Selmes, 3 Kay & J. 220; 3 Jur., N. S., 859.

Under such a description the purchaser has right to expect a power of entry and distress in case of non-payment. Ib.

1. On a vendor's bill for specific performance, the opinion of the Court was much in favour of the title, the question on which turned on the construction of a particular will; but the Court, being unable to found that opinion upon any general rule of law, or upon reason so conclusive as to satisfy the Court that other competent persons might not entertain a different opinion, or that the purchaser taking the title might not be exposed to substantial and not merely idle litigation, refused to decree a specific performance. Pyrke v. Waddingham, 10 Hare 1.

A doubtful title, which a purchaser will not be compelled to accept, is not only a title upon which the Court entertains doubts, but includes also a title which, although the Court has a favourable opinion of it, yet may reasonably and fairly be questioned in the opinion of other competent persons; for the Court has no means of binding the question as against adverse claimants, or of indemnifying the purchase, if its own opinion in favour of the title should turn out not to be well founded. Ib.

If the doubts as to a title arise upon a question connected with the general law, the Court is to judge whether the general law on the point is or is not settled; and if it be not, or if the doubts as to the title may be affected by extrinsic circumstances, which neither the purchaser nor the Court can satisfactorily investigate, specific performance will be refused. Ib.

The rule rests upon the principle that every purchaser is entitled to require a marketable title. Ib.

It is the duty of the Court, on questions of title depending on the possibility of future rights arising, to consider the course which would be taken if the rights had actually arisen, and were in course of litigation. Ib.

A marketable title is a title which at all times and under all circumstances may be forced upon an unwilling purchaser. Ib.

2. A testator by his will directed that his trustees should stand possessed of 5,000l. stock in case a daughter (naming her) should be living at the death of his wife (which happened), upon trust to pay the income to his daughter for life, and after the decease of the daughter, as to a moiety, to her children living at her decease; and as to the other moiety, equally between his sons who should be living at the decease of his daughter; in case of the daughter dying without issue, for the benefit of the sons; if all of the sons should die in the lifetime of the daughter, then, as to the whole, to transfer the stock to his daughter, or as she should appoint. The daughter was living (a married woman), and there were four sons. The life interest of the widow and the reversion had been put up for sale by auction. The conditions of sale stated the terms of the will as above set out. The purchasers contended that the conditions of sale did not accurately describe the effect of the will:—Held, that the title was so doubtful as to the right of appointment in the daughter, and when to be exercised, that the purchaser was not bound to take such a title. Hadley v. Robins, 14 W. R. 387; 14 L. T., N. S., 100.

3. D., being entitled to an undivided moiety of a lease for lives, containing a covenant for perpetual renewal, devised her interest to A.: the day after the date of this will a renewal was granted by D. to the defendant, who was entitled to the other moiety, and to C., who was supposed to have some interest in the lease, A. having contracted with the defendant to sell his (A.'s) moiety:—Held, on a bill by A. for specific performance, that the renewal did not operate as a revocation of the devise to A. in equity, although it admittedly did at law, and that A.'s was such a title as the Court would compel a purchaser to take. Poole v. Coates, 2 Dr. & War. 493; 1 Con. & L. 531; 4 Ir. Eq. R. 497.

4. A purchaser not compelled to take a title depending upon the words of a will which were too doubtful ever to be settled without litigation. Sharp v. Adcock, 4 Russ. 374.

5. It is difficult to say what ground of defect of title is sufficient to induce the Court to refuse a decree for specific performance. Bull v. Hutcheson, 9 Jur., N. S., 954; 11 W. R. 866; 8 L. T., N. S., 716.

A purchaser refused to complete his contract to buy real estate, on the grounds that the original title was at least doubtful, and that his pendens was a charge on the property. The lis pendens was afterwards decided to form no charge on the property; after which the vendor offered to stay all further proceedings if the purchaser would complete his contract and pay the costs up to the time of the offer. He refused to do so:—Held, that the vendor was entitled to a decree for specific performance, and with costs up to and inclusive of the hearing. Ib.

6. When it appears from the abstract of title delivered to a purchaser in pursuance of conditions of sale, that the vendor has previously executed a conveyance—on the face of it voluntary—comprising the lands in question, but without evidence of its being void as against a purchaser for value, the purchaser may refuse to accept the title, seeing that its validity depends on a doubtful state of facts, and may recover back his deposit, although he might have made the title good by acceptance. Clarke v. Willott, 7 L. R., Exch., 313; 41 L. J., Exch., 197; 21 W. R. 73.

7. Properties held partly by an absolute owner and partly by several sets of trustees under several trusts and for different persons were, by the vendors as a single body, agreed to be sold together in one lot for one undivided sum—which the absolute owner, and the trustees and their several sets of cestuis que trustent, afterwards apportioned by agreement amongst themselves, but not, as it appeared, on any sufficient data—and with special conditions limiting the title, without, however, properly defining the portions of the properties effected by the limitations. The purchaser refused to complete the purchase, and the vendors filed a bill for specific performance of the contract:—Held, that the case was too doubtful to entitle them to the relief. Rede v. Oakes, 4 De G. J. & S. 505; 34 L. J., Ch., 145; 13 W. R. 303; 11 L. T., N. S., 549.

8. The bare possibility that another judge might think a title open to question is not a sufficient reason for refusing to compel a purchaser to complete, where the Court itself entertains a strong opinion in favour of the title; but where there is an actual adverse decision, the Court, though thinking the question free from doubt, will not compel a purchaser to take the title. Mullings v. Trinder, 18 W. R. 1186; 23 L. T., N. S., 580; 39 L. J., Ch., 833; 10 L. R., Eq., 449.

The principles laid down in Pyrke v. Waddingham (10 Hare 1) approved of; but the decision disapproved of, and not followed under precisely similar circumstances. Id.

1. A title to real estate, accruing under a devise to trustees for an unmarried woman for her life, for her separate use, and on her death to convey it to her husband, is not too doubtful to be forced on an unwilling purchaser. Radford v. Willis, 20 W. R. 132; 41 L. J., Ch., 19. Reversing 40 L. J., Ch., 484; 12 L. R., Eq., 105; 19 W. R. 845; 24 L. T., N. S., 574.

A father gave his estates to trustees to pay the rents to his two daughters (both then unmarried) in equal shares during their lives, "independently of the control of any husband or husbands with whom they or either of them might happen to intermarry;" and after their respective decease to convey the estates "unto and equally between the husbands of them, my daughters, to hold to them, and their respective heirs and assigns;" with a proviso that if either of his daughters should depart this life unmarried, her share should go to the survivor for her life, and on her decease the whole should be conveyed to the husband of the surviving daughter. Both daughters married. One died in the lifetime of her husband. Then the husband of the other died, having devised his interest in the estate to his wife absolutely:—Held, that the surviving daughter could make a good title to a moiety of the estate; for that a gift to an unmarried woman for life, with remainder in fee to her husband, gives an indefeasible vested remainder in fee to her first husband. And that, as the question turned on a general rule of construction, unaffected by any special context in the will, the title would be forced on a purchaser. S. C. 7 L. R., Ch., 7; 25 L. T., N. S., 720.

2. A legatee of a reversionary interest under a will, which had been paid into court in an administration suit, presented a petition for liquidation in March 1873, and a trustee was appointed. In July he assigned his interest in the legacy to J., who obtained a stop-order on the fund in court. In November 1876 he assigned his interest to E., without notice of the liquidation, who also obtained a stop-order on the fund. Afterwards the trustee in liquidation obtained a stop-order. The plaintiffs purchased the interest of the trustee in liquidation and of J., and contracted to sell the legacy to the defendant. The defendant required E.'s mortgage to be abstracted as an incumbrance on the estate:—Held, by Jessel, M. R., that E. having obtained a stop-order before the trustee in liquidation, his interest was prior to that of the trustee, and was an incumbrance on the estate. Re Bright's Settlement (13 L. R., Ch. D., 413) considered:—Held, by the Court of Appeal, that the question of the priority of E.'s incumbrance was too doubtful to justify the vendor in omitting it from the abstract; and the decision of the Master of the Rolls was accordingly affirmed

3. The Court will not enforce specific performance of a contract for sale against a purchaser, where a question of title has to be determined, upon which the Court is not clearly in favour of the vendor. Burnell v. Firth, 15 W. R. 546.

4. Devise to trustees and their heirs during the life of A. B., in trust to lay out the rents and issues thereof in Government securities, until A. B. should attain twenty-one, and, after that, to suffer her to receive and take the profits during her life, not subject to the debts or control of her husband, her receipt to be a sufficient discharge; and, after her decease, to her heirs. Upon a suit for a specific performance of an agreement for the purchase of part of the estates, the question was whether A. B. took the legal or only an equitable interest for life in the property, so as to bring the title within the rule in Shelley's case (1 Rep. 93). The Lord Chancellor would not compel the defendant to accept the title. Playford v. Hoare, 3 Y. & J. 175.

5. Real estate was assured by deed unto and to the use of a trustee, his heirs and assigns, for a married woman for life to her separate use, and from and after the determination of that estate to stand seised to such uses and upon such trusts as she should by will appoint, and in default of appointment to the use of the heirs and assigns of the married woman:—Held, that the legal fee was vested in the trustee; that all the subsequent limitations were merely equitable, and that, therefore, under the rule in Shelley's case (1 Rep. 93), the wife took an equitable estate in fee, and could, with the concurrence of the trustee after her husband's death, make a good title in fee to the property, and one which the Court would force on an unwilling purchaser. Cooper v. Kynock, 7 L. R., Ch., 398; 41 L. J., Ch., 296; 26 L. T. 566; 20 W. P. 503.

6. When in a suit between vendor and purchaser a decree has been made for specific performance of a contract, subject to the usual reference as to whether a good title can be made, the words "good title" mean not an absolutely good title, but a good title having regard to the terms of the contract, although the latter words are not inserted in the decree. Upperton v. Nicholson, 6 L. R., Ch., 436; 40 L. J., Ch., 401; 25 L. T. 4; 19 W. R. 733.

7. Observations on the duty of the Court to decide doubtful questions of title as between vendor and purchaser. Osborne v. Rowlett, 13 L. R., Ch. D., 774; 49 L. J., Ch., 310; 42 L. T. 650; 28 W. R. 365.

8. It is the duty of the Court to decide doubtful questions of title, and when so decided they can no longer be considered as doubtful, so as to entitle purchasers to resist specific performance. Bell v. Hotby, 42 L. J., Ch., 266; 15 L. R., Eq., 178; 21 W. R. 321; 28 L. T., N. S., 9.

Duty of Court of Appeal. 9. Where the title to an estate is doubtful, and has been held bad by a judge of the court, the Court of Appeal will not force it on a purchaser. Sykes v. Sheard, 9 Jur. N. S., 1262; 12 W. R. 117; 9 L. T., N. S., 430.

10 Where a bill for specific performance by a vendor has been dismissed in the court below upon a question of title, it requires a very strong case for the Court of Appeal to force the title upon the purchaser. Collier v. M'Bean, 1 L. R., Ch., 51; 12 Jur., N. S., 1; 35 L. J., Ch., 144; 13 L. T., N. S., 484.

1. In a suit for specific performance, a purchaser will be forced to take a title which appears to the Court of Appeal to be good, although the judge of the Court below was of a different opinion; that fact not being sufficient to constitute a doubtful title. Beioley v. Carter, 4 L. R., Ch., 230; 17 W. R. 300.

2. When a question of title involves a question of general law applicable to all similar cases, the Court of Appeal is bound to say one way or another what the law is, and cannot escape from that duty by saying that the decision of the Court below in taking one view makes the other view, if held by the Court of Appeal, so doubtful that the latter will not force such a title on a purchaser. Alexander v. Mills, 40 L. J., Ch., 73; 6 L. R., Ch., 124; 24 L. T., N. S., 206; 19 W. R. 310.

4. Title made Good before Decree.

3. Where a person articles to sell an estate, and brings a bill for the execution of the agreement, though at the time of the agreement he cannot make a title to the purchaser, it is sufficient if he is able to do so when the decree or report is made. Langford v. Pitt, 2 P. W. 632.

4. Where time is not essence of contract, and there is no unreasonable delay, the vendor, though not having a good title till hearing of cause, is entitled to specific performance. Wynn v. Morgan, 7 Ves. 202.

5. Determined on a re-hearing to be sufficient if a party can make a good title in a bill for specific performance at any time before the final decree. Bennet College v. Carey, 3 Bro. C. C. 390.

6. The plaintiff in a bill for the specific performance of a contract is entitled to a decree, if, at the hearing, he can show a good title, although he had not such title at the time of the contract; but the defendant might, if he had thought fit, have retired from the contract, as soon as the want of title was discovered, and was not bound to wait till the plaintiff could acquire a good title. Haggart v. Scott, 1 Russ. & M. 293; Tambl. 500; 9 L. J., Ch., 54.

7. Vendor contracting to sell estate in which he has no title, purchaser not bound though real owner offers a title. Tendring v. London, 2 Eq. Abr. 680.

8. A specific performance of an agreement by a purchaser of an estate was decreed in equity, where he agreed with the vendor to buy if a good title could be made, and he afterwards bought up the claim of a stranger in his way. Masters v. Cook, Colles's P. C. 433.

9. Vendor not making good title, when bill filed, pays costs up to time title reported good. Harford v. Purrier, 1 Madd. 532.

10. The rule of compelling a purchaser to take the estate, where a title is not made till after the contract, not to be extended. Lechmere v. Brasier, 2 Jac. & Walk. 289.

11. If vendor can make a good title at hearing, on further directions, it is sufficient for specific performance, vendor paying costs. Paton v. Rogers, 6 Madd. 256.

12. It being necessary, in order to make a title perfect, that a recovery should be suffered for the purpose of barring an old estate tail vested in a person who was not a trustee for the vendor, the deed making the tenant to the practice, and the warrant for suffering the recovery, were executed before the filing of the bill for specific performance, but the recovery was not completed till a few days afterwards:—Held, that a good title was not shown before the commencement of the suit. Lewin v. Guest, 1 Russ. 325.

13. The requiring additional evidence of title to be supplied by the vendor is consistent with the rule of not keeping the purchaser too long in the suspense of investigation, and the question always is, whether it is the same title as existed at first that is followed up, or whether the vendor has been put to cast about for a new title. Magennis v. Fallon, 2 Moll. 580.

Purchaser need not wait for a new title, but may call on the vendor to abide by the original abstract; but if he goes on to contest variations made in the title, that is acquiescence by which he waives the objection grounded on delay. Id. 581.

14. A purchaser who has contracted for the entirety of an estate will not be compelled to take six undivided seventh parts of it. On a sale under a decree, the abstract stated that the vendor was devisee of A., who took as heir to B., and, on inquiry, the vendor's solicitor confirmed that statement. The Master accordingly approved of the title. Just before the conveyance was executed, the purchaser discovered that C. was the heir of B., and it appeared that the vendor's solicitor had received information of that fact, but concealed it. A motion by the purchaser to be discharged from his purchase was granted, though the vendor had obtained a release from C. before the motion was made. Dalby v. Pullen, 3 Sim. 29; 1 Russ. & M. 296; 8 L. J., Ch., 74.

15. Purchaser cannot insist on being discharged upon a report of defective title, if capable of being made good within a reasonable time; as to which, the vendor will be put under terms. Coffin v. Cooper, 14 Ves. 205.

16. A., being entitled under a settlement to lands for life, remainder to trustees for 1,000 years to raise jointure and portions, remainder to himself in fee, and there being a power of sale and exchange, given by the settlement to the trustees with A.'s consent, conveys, by way of exchange, some of the settled lands to B., without any reference to the power, and without the concurrence of the trustees. B.'s heir afterwards contracts to sell such lands, and, after objection being taken by the purchaser before the Master, in a suit for specific performance against such purchaser, procures certain deeds to be executed by A. and the surviving trustee and himself, which, if executed at the time of the exchange, would have given it validity:—Held, that the Court would not compel the purchaser to take the title, but no decision was given as to whether the exchange was validated. An objection was also taken to the deeds, on the ground of the inaccuracies and clerical errors which they contained. Congill v. Osmantown (Lord), 3 Y. & Coll. 369; 3 Jur. 813.

Semble, that the after-executed deeds, although the surviving trustee of the marriage settlement was a party to them, did not make the transaction between A. and B. a due execution of the power. Ib.

1. In a suit for specific performance, where the vendor cannot make a good title, when the cause comes on to be heard on further directions, the Court will not allow the cause to stand over, in order that he may be able to cure the defects in his title. No counsel having appeared for the plaintiff at the hearing on further directions, and the bill having been dismissed, a petition to have the cause again heard will be refused, with costs, where the ground of application is, that the counsel were instructed on the very day of the hearing, and that, if they had obtained further time from the Court, the defect of the title could have been cured. Boswell v. Mendham, 1 L. J., Ch., 160.

2. Upon a bill filed by a vendor for specific performance of the contract, it appeared that he could make a good title before the commencement of the suit, but did not show a good title to the purchaser until afterwards:—Held, that though specific performance must be decreed, the purchaser was entitled to the costs of the suit generally. Townsend v. Champenornon 3 Y. & Coll. 505.

3. Where the vendor had no title to a small portion of the land contracted for, but such defect was not discovered till after the contract, the Court refused, with costs, a motion by the purchaser to be discharged from his contract, without giving the vendor an opportunity of acquiring a title to the portion. Chamberlain v. Lee, 10 Sim. 444.

4. Where there was at the time of the contract a want of competency or right to contract in one of the parties, as, for instance, where the trustees of a will, with power to sell with consent of tenant for life, make a contract without having obtained the consent of the tenant for life, semble, that subsequent consent will not cure the defect. Adams v. Brooke, 1 Y. & Coll. C. C. 627.

5. Specific performance of a contract for sale of an estate in fee-simple decreed (subject to the usual inquiry as to title) in favour of a vendor who, at the time of the contract, was tenant for life only; the purchaser not having rejected the purchase as soon as he had ascertained the real position of the vendor, and the vendor being able by means of the consent of the parties interested in remainder to make a good prima facie title to the fee-simple at the hearing. Salisbury v. Hatcher, 2 Y. & Coll. C. C. 54; 12 L. J., N. S., Ch., 68; 6 Jur. 1051.

6. A person contracted to sell an estate, who at the time of the contract had no legal or equitable title to it, by reason of the alienage of a party through whom he claimed. The purchaser by his own inquiries ascertained the defect of title, but did not till after some months of negotiation with the vendor repudiate the contract. The vendor then filed his bill for specific performance, and, pending the investigation of the title in the Master's office, obtained a grant of the estate from the Crown:—Held, that he was entitled to a decree. Byston v. Simonds, 1 Y. & Coll. C. C. 608; 11 L. J., N. S., Ch., 376; 6 Jur. 817.

7. The assignee in bankruptcy having filed, as vendor, a bill for specific performance, alleging that defendant had accepted the title (which turned out not to be the fact), and the defendant having in his answer denied the validity of the bankruptcy, which was in fact valid, but it appearing, on a reference as to title, that the bankrupt had previously taken the benefit of the Insolvent Act, so that the concurrence of the insolvent assignee was required, which was given in the Master's office, the Court gave specific performance without making plaintiff pay costs. Sidebotham v. Barrington, 5 Beav. 261.

8. A bankrupt's estate is sold by auction. The purchaser, after having paid a deposit, gives notice that he means to abandon the purchase, on a supposed defect in the title. The commission is afterwards superseded, on the ground that there was no good petitioning creditor's debt, and another commission issues, and the same assignees are chosen:—Held, that as the assignees, at the time when they received notice from the purchaser, had not a good title to the estate, they could not enforce the contract, nor consequently retain the deposit. Bartlett v. Tuckin, 1 Marsh. 583.

9. A plaintiff may rely on a title acquired in point of form after he had filed the bill, if it be not inconsistent with his original claim, and is capable of having relation back; therefore, when the devisee of an insolvent debtor filed a bill for renewal, and the objection being raised, afterwards procured himself to be appointed assignee, and amended the bill stating that fact:—Held, that he could sustain the bill. Doyle v. Callow, 12 Ir. Eq. R. 241.

10. Semble, that, a vendor, who bona fide puts up a property for sale, believing himself absolute owner, when he has in fact only a partial interest, is entitled to enforce the contract if he can perfect the title. Murrell v. Goodyear, 1 De G. F. & J. 432.

11. Where specific performance of a binding contract is sought, and there is a reference to the Master to look into the title, or to ascertain who the parties to the conveyance are, that reference enables the vendor to make good any defect in his own title, or to procure a conveyance up to the date of the Master's report and of the decree; and there are cases in which an Act of Parliament has been obtained to remove defects; but when the Court had come to the conclusion upon the evidence that there was no binding contract, and refused to decree specific performance, on the ground that the assent of the proprietors was a term of the contract, and that, at the hearing, such consent was not proved, the Court declined to refer it to the Master to inquire whether the required consent could be obtained, or to make any reference to the Master. Clay v. Rufford, 5 De G. & Sm. 768.

12. The defendant having agreed to take part of a house upon certain conditions, with right to a lease for twenty-one years, afterwards repudiated the contract upon discovering that the plaintiff had power only to grant a lease for twenty years and a quarter, and that the performance of some of the conditions was beyond the plaintiff's control. The plaintiff filed his bill for specific performance. After the bill was filed, but before the hearing of the cause, he was in a position to perform the contract fully:—Held, that the defendant was not bound to wait; and the bill was dismissed with costs. Forrer v. Nash, 6 N. R. 361.

1. The purchaser of a house in London having taken various objections to the title, the vendor filed a bill for specific performance, and obtained a reference as to title. The objections were overruled; but before the certificate had been signed the purchaser discovered in a long blank wall, which formed one side of the house and fronted on a street, a stone with an inscription dated in 1776, stating that the wall had been built by and belonged to the East India Company, who had thrown the adjoining ground into the street. It turned out that the wall had been rebuilt in 1831 by the tenant of the house, and the stone set up again; but under what circumstances did not appear. No rent had from that time been paid to the company, or any acknowledgment of their title given; but their successors in title, on being applied to, claimed the wall as theirs, and the vendor obtained a release from them:—Held, that the vendor had not a good title when the bill was filed, for that there was no ground for holding a title to have been gained by possession adversely to the East India Company. Phillipson v. Gibbon, 6 L. R., Ch., 428; 40 L. J., Ch., 406; 24 L. T. 602; 19 W. R. 661.

Held, that the vendor was to blame, as he might, with reasonable diligence, have informed himself of this defect before selling, and that therefore, although he had been right on all points which arose before the bill was filed, he ought not to receive costs. Id.

VI. PARTICULAR OBJECTIONS.

1. General Principles, 7220.
2. Bankruptcy, 7220.
3. Charges, 7221.
4. Judgments and Lis Pendens, 7222.
5. Outstanding Estates and Interests, 7222.
6. Reservation of Minerals, 7224.
7. Tithes, 7224.
8. Voluntary Settlements, 7225.
9. Other Cases, 7225.

1. General Principles.

2. Objections to title mean such objections as can only be properly the subject of adjudication upon the investigation of the title, and such are cases where the dispute is as to the application of the conditions of sale, the propriety or validity of the conditions themselves not being questioned. Wood v. Machu, 5 Hare 158.

3. Mere suspicion, upon opinions in the abstract, etc., will not support an objection by a purchaser. McQueen v. Farguhar, 11 Ves. 467.

4. As between a vendor and purchaser, a purchaser cannot object to the vendor's title on the ground that he is under a stipulation to do an act the nature of which is so uncertain that he could not, on bill filed, be compelled to do as stipulated. Taylor v. Gilbertson, 2 Drew. 391.

5. A vendor, after recognising an objection to the title, and undertaking to remove it, is, by his misconduct, precluded from insisting that the objection is untenable. Ashton v. Wood, 3 Sm. & G. 436; 3 Jur., N. S., 1164.

6. A., having purchased lands, left the title to the investigation of C. and D., solicitors in partnership; upon whose advice the purchase was completed. D. was a trustee to uses to bar dower in the conveyance. A. died, and his devisee sold the property to D. On a bill for specific performance by the vendor, it was:—Held, that a solicitor who has been employed to advise on a title could not, on purchasing the property himself, set up an objection which he did not think important when advising his principal. Bevor v. Simpson, Tam. 69.

7. A party who has covenanted to remove and pay off an incumbrance on premises which are subject to a trust for sale, will not be allowed to raise an objection to the sale of the property, on the ground of the existence of that incumbrance. Roberts v. Boson, 3 L. J., Ch., 113.

8. If exceptions taken to report of good title are overruled, other objections to title cannot be made; but if allowed, and new abstract be delivered, other objections may be brought in. Brooke v. —, 4 Madd. 212.

2. Bankruptcy.

9. An act of bankruptcy a sufficient objection to title, without showing a debt upon which a commission could issue. Lowe v. Lush, 14 Ves. 547.

10. An act of bankruptcy, committed by the vendor, though no commission of bankruptcy issue, is a valid objection to the title. Foster v. Gould, 3 L. J., Ch., 200.

11. Where devisee of real estate, subject to debts and legacies, had contracted to sell estate in order to raise money to pay debts, and afterwards a bill was filed against her by legatees for administration of testator's estates, and purchaser consented to go before Master, upon reference as to title in that suit:—Held, he was not thereby bound to take equitable title, but might insist on having same title as though bill for specific performance had been filed against him; and that as two commissions of bankruptcy had issued against devisee before contract was entered into, though neither was proceeded in, he was not bound to accept title. Cann v. Cann, 1 Sim. & S. 284; 1 L. J., Ch., 219.

12. The bankrupts took a reversionary interest in some property as residuary devisees under their father's will, of which also they were constituted executors. The testator died more than forty years ago, and upon the death of the last tenant for life the bankrupts' assignees sold their interest in this property, and required the bankrupts to join in a conveyance to the purchasers. It was objected that some of the testator's debts, which were charged on this property, might be still unpaid, and that the assignees had no power to dispose of it, as it was thus subject to a trust:—Held, that, in the absence of all evidence of any outstanding debts, the assignees had a full right to dispose of this property, and that the bankrupts were bound to join in the conveyance. Exp. Bolton, Re Moxon, 1 M. D. & De G. 667.

At a meeting of the bankrupts' creditors, a resolution was entered into by the majority then present, that if certain claims of the bankrupts for compensation, in respect of seizures made by the Danish government, should prove beneficial to the estate, the creditors would relinquish all right to the above reversionary property:—Held, that this was only a conditional and not a final arrangement, and did not prevent the assignees from selling the reversionary property. Ib.

1. By marriage articles of 1767 it was agreed that 1,000*l.*, secured by the bond of A., the intended husband, on which judgment was entered, should be divided among the younger children of the marriage. By a deed of 1795 A. conveyed the lands of K., of which he was seised in fee, to the use of himself for life, remainder, subject to 500*l.* secured by a term for his younger children, to J., his second son, for life, remainder to his third, fourth, and other sons in tail. In 1798 A. made his will, without noticing the deed of 1795, and devised the land of K., subject to 1,000*l.* for his younger children, to J. A. died, and bills were filed in 1803 and 1818, on behalf of some of the younger children, to raise the 2,000*l.* secured by the articles and the will, but not noticing or relying on the deed, which was afterwards put in issue by one of the answers. In 1818 G., the fourth son, who was entitled to an estate tail in remainder under the deed, became insolvent. He and his assignee were parties to the latter suit, but not in respect of that estate. A decree for the sale of the fee was pronounced for the sum due under the articles, and a part of the sum due under the deed. The abstract of title stated the insolvency of G., and that the heir of his assignee would join in the conveyance. The assignment under the insolvency had been lost, but the deed of 1795 was referred to in the schedule:—Held, on objections to title: first, that the abstract and schedule afforded sufficient evidence of an actual assignment of the estate tail in remainder under the Insolvent Act then in force; secondly, that the assignment, though pendente lite, was valid, being made under the authority of a statute, and conveyed a base fee to the assignee, and, the decree not being binding on him, the title was defective; thirdly, that the defect could not be cured by the heir of the assignee joining in the conveyance, as he was a trustee for the creditors of G., who did not appear to have been paid, and were not bound by the decree; and, fourthly, that, under the circumstances, the decree was not erroneous in directing a sale of the fee for a portion of the sum secured by the term in the deed of 1795. Keogh v. Keogh, 13 Ir. Eq. R. 284.

2. When a debtor has filed a petition for liquidation, and resolutions accepting a composition are afterwards passed as provided by the Act, such debtor remains absolute master of his property until the creditors take action under s. 126 of the Bankruptcy Act 1869, and a purchaser from him is not entitled to any evidence whether or not the instalments under the composition have been duly paid. Re Kearley, 47 L. J., Ch., 474; 7 L. B., Ch. D., 615; 26 W. R. 324; 38 L. T., N. S., 92.

[Sale by Assignees.] See BANKRUPTCY, XVII. xliii. 7.

3. Charges.

3. Devise of real estate in trust to pay debts and legacies, and subject thereto the residue to one of the devisors' co-heirs, who was also residuary legatee: mortgage by her, and (several years after) bill filed against mortgagor and against devisee in trust for foreclosure:—Held, on exceptions to title, by purchaser under the decree to sell made in that cause for all persons having proved charges prior to the mortgage, that the co-heirs who came in and proved their legacies charged on the lands were not necessary parties; that no account of testator's debts and legacies need be specifically directed; and that the same person being residuary devisee and legatee, the account of the testator's personal estate was immaterial. Magennis v. Fallon, 2 Moll. 569.

4. Where a purchaser goes on contesting the title without a protest against delay, that is a waiver of that ground of objection. But if he protests against the delay, but, not being sure that his protest is valid, goes on to make the best case he can, otherwise to be discharged; that goes only to costs, and does not amount to acquiescence. Id. 578.

5. A tenant for life mortgaged under power the inheritance for 500*l.* and 1,000*l.*, and afterwards paid the first mortgage, and took an assignment to a trustee. After his death B. became entitled to the mortgages. C., the tenant in tail, being a minor, covenanted by marriage articles in 1827 to convey the lands in trust to sell and pay off the debts then affecting them, and subject thereto for herself for life, remainder to her children, and a recovery was suffered on her majority. B. filed a bill and obtained a report, finding in 1835 that arrears of rent and fines due in the life of A. and after were paid off by loan on mortgage; and found this sum and the two mortgages, with interest on them all before the death of A. to the time of the report, to be due, and a sale was decreed to pay them. In 1840 B.'s assignee filed a bill, not making the trustee of C.'s settlement a party, and obtained a decree to carry the former decree into execution:—Held, that the first decree was erroneous, declaring the inheritance liable for interest, payable by the life estates of A. and C., and that a purchaser under the second decree, in which the inheritance was not represented, could not be held to his purchase. A report of good title, plaintiff's solicitor undertaking to procure a signature, is informal. Maganley v. Brady, 9 Ir. Eq. R. 59.

6. A testator devised his estates to his eldest son, and charged some of them with legacies to his younger children, specifically charging one (20,000*l.*) upon one of the estates, and directed that his residuary property should be sold in payment of his debts, and in ease of his real estates. The estates charged with the payment of debts not being sufficient for that purpose, the finding of the Master, that that legacy was a charge subject to the judgment and bond debts, was confirmed, though the Court might afterwards direct that the creditors should be paid out of the other estates first. Bouverie v. Norbury, 3 Cl. & F. 247; 9 Bl. N. S. 611.

7. When an estate is sold free from incumbranches, and upon production of the abstract of title it appears that the estate is subject to a mortgage or other charge or incumbrance, the incumbrance does not afford an objection to the title, but is matter of conveyance only; and such is the rule even if the amount of the incumbrance be greater than the purchase money. Townsend v. Campervoun, 1 Y. & J. 449.

1. A testator devised his real estates to a devisee in fee, charged with certain annuities or annual rent-charges to two annuitants:—Held, on special case, that the annuitants took the annuities for life; that the 28th section of the Wills Act (1 Vict., c. 26) only applies to estates vested in, or in the power of, the testator, and not to estates or interests created de novo by his will; and that a purchaser could not maintain an objection to the vendor's title, or refuse to execute the contract for purchase, upon the ground that the annuities were given in fee, and not for lives. Nicholls v. Hawkes, 22 L. J., Ch., 255.

2. The legal estate in a term of years was vested in A., B., and C., as trustees for D. and E., mortgagees and joint tenants. By an indenture executed by all parties except E., the term was merged, the mortgage money being expressed to be paid to D. and E., and D. alone signed the receipt:—Held, that although the action to recover the money was gone by the release of one joint tenant, the land was not discharged, and specific performance of a contract to purchase the land under that title refused. Matson v. Dennis, 10 Jur., N. S., 461; 12 W. R. 926.

4. Judgments and Lis Pendens.

3. Purchaser not to be compelled to take an indemnity against a judgment, accounting to half of the purchase money. Wood v. Bernal, 19 Ves. 221.

4. Old judgments existing against a former owner of leaseholds, who parted with the property in 1770, and to enforce which no steps appeared to have been taken, are no objection to the title. Causton v. Macklem, 2 Sim. 242.

5. A father, tenant for life, with remainder to his son in tail, joined with his son in conveying the estate to trustees, in trust to sell and to pay 30,000*l.* to the father, and the residue to the son; and it was declared that the trustees' receipts should be sufficient discharges. The trustees contracted to sell to defendant, and afterwards judgments were entered up against the father:—Held, that the existence of the judgments was no objection to the title. Lodge v. Lyneley, 4 Sim. 70.

6. A registered lis pendens does not of itself create an incumbrance upon property, apart from the subject-matter in respect of which the lis pendens is registered. Bull v. Hutchons, 9 Jur., N. S., 954; 11 W. R. 866; 8 L. T., N. S., 716.

7. A mortgagee took, on the execution of his mortgage in 1844, an assignment of a term to a trustee, and relying on it, forbore to search for judgments. A judgment had been registered in November 1843. The mortgagee sold in 1846, under a power of sale in his mortgage; and on the purchaser objecting to complete without the concurrence of the judgment creditor, the mortgagee and his solicitor, and the mortgagor, to obviate the objection, made a statutory declaration, that at the time of the mortgage neither the mortgagee nor the solicitor had any notice of the judgment. The purchaser still insisted on his requisition, and, in March 1848, the vendor filed a bill for specific performance. During the proceedings in the Master's office, the five years from the registration of the judgment expired, and it was not re-registered till 1850:—Held, that at the hearing on further directions, in 1853, the purchaser could not be compelled to complete without the concurrence of the judgment creditor. Freer v. Hesse, 4 De G. M. & G. 495; 17 Jur. 703; 22 L. J., Ch., 597; 23 L. J., Ch., 338; 1 W. R. 242, 487.

Held, also, that though the question was one of conveyance, yet, as it had occasioned the suit, the vendor submitting to obtain the concurrence required, must pay the costs. Id.

8. In 1842 the defendant contracted to purchase an estate: a suit for specific performance having in the same year been instituted by the vendors, it appeared that the vendors claimed under a testator who died in 1809, and subject to his debts: that a creditors' suit had been instituted in 1813, and a decree for an account and sale made in 1817, since which time nothing effectual had been done in the suit, and no report of debts had been actually confirmed. After so great delay, no further time was given to the vendors to complete their title, and the bill for specific performance was dismissed with costs. Fraser v. Wood, 8 Beav. 339.

Sales by the Court.] See XXIV. vi. 3 post.

5. Outstanding Estates and Interests.

9. Purchaser is not to be compelled to take an equitable estate. Abel v. Heathcote, 2 Ves. J. 100; 4 Bro. C. C. 278.

10. Re-conveyance of the legal estate presumed under obscure circumstances after a great lapse of time, though the possession originally not adverse, but under a trust; upon that presumption a specific performance decreed against a purchaser. Hillary v. Waller, 12 Ves. 239.

11. Outstanding term to attend the inheritance, the trusts being performed, may be an objection to the conveyance, not to the title. Berkeley v. Daub, 16 Ves. 380.

12. An attendant term having become vested in the wife of the owner of the inheritance as administratrix of the trustee, and her husband becoming bankrupt, his assignees agree to sell the estate, and file a bill for specific performance of the agreement, pending which suit the husband dies:—Held, that the widow was not entitled to dower, that she was to assign the term to the purchaser, and that he was bound to accept the title. Mole v. Smith, Jac. 490.

Whether the purchaser can be compelled to take an assignment of a term as a protection against dower, quære. An attendant term having become vested in the wife of the owner of the inheritance, as the representative of the trustee, whether an assignment of it to a purchaser to prevent dower can be compelled, quære. S. C. 1 Jac. & Walk. 665.

1. A. agreed to demise certain premises to B.: there was an outstanding equitable interest vested in C.:—Held, that B. was bound to accept a demise from A., in which C. joined, and was not justified in insisting on A. obtaining a release from C., in order to enable him alone to make a valid demise. Reeves v. Gill, 1 Beav. 375.

2. An abstract showed the equitable fee to be in the vendor and the legal estate to be in A., as a mortgagee for a term, and subject thereto in B. in fee. By a supplemental abstract it appeared that, before the first abstract was delivered, A. assigned the mortgage money to B., and was declared a trustee of the term for him, and that he had since died intestate; that his father, who first took out administration to him, was also dead; and that he remained unrepresented for some years, after which S. took out administration to him:—Held, that the first abstract showed a complete title, the tracing of the title to the legal estate being matter of conveyance merely. Avarne v. Brown, 14 Sim. 303; 14 L. J., N. S., Ch., 30; 8 Jur. 1037.

3. In 1772 a woman, who was a party to a suit in Chancery, and who was married, but whose marriage did not appear in any of the proceedings in the suit, was, by an order in the suit, treating her as a feme sole, directed to convey a freehold estate to F., a purchaser; she afterwards, together with her husband, executed a conveyance of the estate to F., in which conveyance the husband covenanted with F. that he and his wife would levy a fine on the estate. It did not appear that a fine was ever levied. On a bill filed by a vendor, claiming under F. against a purchaser, for specific performance, the purchaser objected to the title, on the ground of the want of a fine and the defectiveness of the proceedings in Chancery:—Held, that the objection was not one of title, but of conveyance, inasmuch as the order in Chancery, notwithstanding its informality, was binding on the married woman, and rendered her a trustee for the purchaser, and she was, therefore, compellable to complete the legal title. Jumpson v. Pitchers, 1 Colly. 13; 13 L. J., N. S., Ch., 166.

4. A tenant in tail, upon the marriage of his eldest son, conveyed the entailed lands, as if he were seised in fee, to trustees, for a term of years, to secure a jointure for his own wife, and a jointure for the intended wife of his son, in case certain other property upon which the latter was previously charged should be sold; and subject thereto to the use of himself for life, remainder to other trustees for another term of years, to raise portions for his younger children; and subject thereto, to the use of the son for life; remainder, subject to a third term, to his first and other sons in tail. No fine or recovery was ever levied or suffered by the father or by the son. A bill was filed to raise the portions, and a decree was pronounced, directing a sale of the term. After the decree, the eldest son of the marriage, his father and grandfather both being dead, executed a disentailing deed, and conveyed the lands in fee to a person not a party to the suit, expressly subject to the term. That person afterwards conveyed the fee to the widow of the father, who was a party to the suit, and had allowed the decree to be made upon sequestration against her:—Held, upon an appeal from an order of the Master of the Rolls overruling the purchaser's objections to the title, that the acts of the eldest son operated as a confirmation of the settlement, and that a good title to the term could be made. Massey v. Batwell, 5 Ir. Eq. R. 382; 4 Dr. & War. 56.

Held, also, that the widow, having acquired her title after the decree, would be bound to give effect to that decree out of it. Id.

Held, also, that the judgments entered pending suit, against the eldest son of the marriage and his vendee, were not an objection to the title. Id.

5. T. C., the executor of S. E., purchased the equity of redemption of an estate for 615*l.*, subject to a mortgage in fee (which contained a power of sale), to secure the re-payment of 800*l.*; this security was transferred to Messrs. A. and D. T. C. was illegitimate. He died unmarried and intestate in December 1831. S. B. purchased the estate, which, on the 12th of August 1834, was conveyed to him in fee by A. and D., the mortgagees, and by S. A., the administratrix de bonis non of S. E. The deed recited that T. C. had purchased the estate in part with the money of S. E. T. B., the purchaser, died, and his estate was sold under the direction of the Court. Objections were taken to the title, because the mortgagees had not executed their power of sale under the mortgage, and because no person claiming through T. C. had conveyed the estate or was a party to the suit, because there was no evidence showing that T. C. was illegitimate, or that he died without heirs, or that he was a trustee for S. E.; and if those statements were true the estate had escheated to the Crown; and because, as the equity of redemption had not been foreclosed, it was assets for the payments of his debts, and his personal representative was not before the Court. The Master reported that a good title could not be made. Upon exceptions to his report:—Held, that the evidence of T. C., being a mere trustee, was not such that a purchaser could be compelled to take the title; that, assuming T. C. had a beneficial title, the equity of redemption had not escheated to the Crown; that, as the equity of redemption might possibly be assets for the payment of the debts of T. C. generally, and on covenant no title could be made in the absence of the legal personal representative of T. C. If it could, then mortgagees having the legal estate might hold the whole property against creditors discharged from the equity of redemption. The exceptions were therefore overruled; but as it was on grounds different from those on which the Master had relied, without costs. Beale v. Symonds, 22 L. J., Ch., 708.

6. In an agreement for sale of copyhold property the vendors contracted to give such title as they possessed at the time of the agreement "to extend over twenty years." The vendors were assignees of an unadmitted devisee, and had a complete equitable title, but refused to get in the legal estate on the ground that they were not bound to do so under the contract. A second term of the agreement was that "purchaser was to prepare his own conveyance and surrender at his own expense":—Held, that the purchaser was entitled to a surrender of the legal estate, and that vendors must pay all fines necessary to enable them to make such a surrender. Whiteley v. Taylor, 35 L. T., N. S., 187.

1. A person contracted to sell property, and showed only an equitable title, and the purchaser required the vendor to get in the legal estate:—Held, that such requisition was as to a matter of conveyance only, and the vendor could not rescind the contract under a condition empowering him to rescind if any objection to title were made which he was unable or unwilling to remove. Kitchen v. Palmer, 46 L. J., Ch., 611.

2. Property was put up for sale by the following description: "Freehold estate. To be sold by auction (by order of the executors of the late Stephen Roose), by Mr. Hughes, at the Dinorben Arms Hotel, Amlwch, Anglesey, on the 18th September 1855 (subject to the undermentioned conditions), two tenements called Penybryn and Tynaur, containing thirty-one acres, more or less, together with several dwelling houses and gardens attached, now or late in the occupations of Hugh Roberts and others, situate at Moelfra, Anglesey. Also two extensive lime quarries, well situate for shipping. Sale to commence at two o'clock." One of the conditions of sale provided that the purchaser should, on completion, be let into the receipt of "the rents and profits" of the premises. Part of the property sold was, at the time of the sale, out upon leases for lives:—Held, that, under the particulars and conditions of sale, the vendors were bound to show a title to an estate in fee-simple in possession; and they were not relieved from that obligation by the condition as to the receipt of the rents and profits. Hughes v. Jones, 8 Jur., N. S., 399; 31 L. J., Ch., 88; 10 W. R. 139.

"Rents and profits" were held to mean ordinary rents and profits. Id.

6. Reservation of Minerals.

3. The omission in a rental of a reservation of mines, minerals, and of right of entry to search for them, is a valid objection to the title. Barton v. Donnes (Lord), Fl. & K. 506.

4. In 1823 the lands of Minos were conveyed to J. C. and his heirs, "saving and excepting out of the conveyance the manorial rights belonging or appertaining to the manor of C., of which manor the lands hereby released are parcel, and the tolls and duties of the fairs and markets thereof, as also any liberty of turbary or limestone heretofore granted therein or thereout by Sir J. L. C. (a former owner), or his ancestors, to any of the tenants of the said manor, as expressed in their leases." Pursuant to a decree, the fee and inheritance in the lands of Minos was set up to be sold, under a recital, which did not advert to the reservation in the conveyance of 1823, and which stated that part of the lands was held under an article of agreement for lease for four lives, bearing date 1804, and one year. It did not appear that any fairs or markets had ever been held for the manor, or any court, for the last twenty years; and although there was no open limestone quarry, nor anything in the nature of turbary save a surface or top-sod on the lands, yet it did not distinctly appear that there was not either limestone or turf on them. It also appeared that the agreement of 1804 was for a lease for four lives and one year from and after the expiration of the tenant's then present lease, which lease did not expire until 1843; and that the tenant claimed to be entitled to a lease for four lives to be then named by him. Upon exceptions to a report of bad title:—Held, confirming the report, that the reservation of the liberty of turbary and limestone, in the conveyance of 1823, was a valid objection to the title, but not to the reservation of the manorial rights and tolls of the fairs and markets of the manor. Martin v. Cotter, 3 J. & L. 496; 9 Ir. Eq. R. 351. And see S. C. 9 Ir. Eq. R. 44.

Held, also, that the description of the tenant's interest under the article of 1804 was calculated to mislead the purchaser, and that he was entitled either to compensation or to be discharged in consequence thereof. Id.

The abstract was delivered to the purchaser on the 25th February 1845; the article of 1804 on the 9th April: on the 25th April the purchaser confirmed the sale, and on the 24th October he lodged objections to the title:—Held, that he had not waived his objections. Id.

5. A good title can be made to lands enfranchised under the 15 & 16 Vict., c. 51 without proof of the lord's title. Kerr v. Pawson, 4 Jur., N. S., 425; 27 L. J., Ch., 594.

Under an agreement made in 1853 by a copyholder for the enfranchisement and sale of a copyhold estate, and for making out and delivering a good title to the same:—Held, in the absence of any stipulation to the contrary, that the agreement must be taken to have had reference to the Copyhold Enfranchisement Acts, and that the purchaser was bound to accept the title subject to the reservation of minerals and other rights contained in the 48th section of the 15 & 16 Vict., c. 51. Id.

6. Specific performance of a contract for sale of lands held under an inclosure Act refused, it appearing upon the context that the right of the lord to the minerals in the allotted lands had not been affected by the Act. Pretty v. Solly, 26 Beav. 606.

7. Land was described in a contract for sale as freehold, but it was shown by the abstract that it was formerly copyhold, and had been enfranchised. A decree was afterwards made at the suit of the vendor for specific performance, and a general inquiry directed as to title; in the course of which the purchaser for the first time objected that the minerals were reserved to the lord of the manor under the enfranchisement:—Held, that the objection was fatal to the title; but as the purchaser had taken the objection so late, he was not allowed his costs. Upperton v. Nicholson, 6 L. R., Ch., 436; 40 L. J., Ch., 401; 25 L. T. 4; 19 W. R. 733.

7. Tithes.

8. Upon a late decision of the Court of Exchequer, that a presumption from non-payment of tithes cannot bar even a lay impropiator, the Lord Chancellor, though holding the contrary opinion, would not compel a purchaser to take such a title, and dismissed the bill against him for a specific performance. Rose v. Calland, 5 Ves. 186.

1. On the sale of an estate as tithe free, the question whether tithe free is not a question of title. Smith v. Lloyd, 2 Swan 224. n.

8. Voluntary Settlements.

2. Purchaser objecting to title on the ground of a voluntary settlement made by the vendor, a bill for specific performance by the vendor was dismissed, and an exception to the Master's report, approving the title, allowed. Smith v. Garland, 2 Meriv. 123.

3. On a bill by a vendor for specific performance, the purchaser set up a voluntary settlement as an objection to the title, but said he was willing to complete the purchase on having a good title. He had been let into possession as purchaser, and paid part of his purchase money, and had paid off a mortgage and got a conveyance of the legal estate and possession of the title-deeds.—Held, that, notwithstanding the voluntary settlement, the vendor was entitled to a decree for completing the purchase. Peter v. Nicolls, 11 L. R., Eq., 391; 24 L. T. N. S., 381; 19 W. R. 618.

Semble, that the principle of Smith v. Garland (2 Meriv. 120) does not apply to a defendant who says he is willing to complete on having a good title. Ib.

4. A. insured his life, and afterwards assigned the policy to B. for a nominal consideration. B.'s executors then sold and assigned the policy to D. for valuable consideration, and then D.'s executors sell it to E.—Held, that they could make a good title to the policy, and that E. was bound to complete his purchase. Ashley v. Ashley, 3 Sim. 149.

5. The Court was of opinion that limitations in a marriage settlement to the brothers of the settlor and their issue were voluntary; but thought, under the circumstances, that a purchaser could not be compelled to take the title depending on the validity of those limitations, and dismissed a bill by the creditors of the vendor after his death for specific performance, there having been subsequent dealings with the estate, which might have confirmed the settlement, the agreement for purchase being suspicious, and it being doubtful whether the creditors could file such a bill. Johnson v. Legard, T. & R. 281.

The author of a voluntary settlement cannot file a bill for specific performance of a contract afterwards entered into by him to sell the settled estate. Ib.

6. A testator devised a copyhold estate to trustees, in trust for his wife for life, with remainder in trust for such persons as she should appoint by will or deed attested by three witnesses, with remainder over. The wife married again, and she and her second husband, after their marriage, by deed attested by three witnesses, in pursuance of the power, appointed the estate, and directed the surviving trustee of her former husband's will to surrender it to the use of a mortgagee in trust to secure the sum of 1,600*l.* and interest, and subject thereto to the use of the husband and wife for their joint lives, and the life of the survivor, and after the decease of the survivor, in case there should be any daughters or younger sons of the marriage, upon trust to sell and divide the produce among such daughters or younger sons; and if there should be none such, then upon trust to surrender the estate to the use of such persons as the wife should, by will or deed attested by three witnesses, appoint, and, in default of such appointment, to the right heirs of the wife. A surrender was made to the mortgagee accordingly. The husband and wife afterwards sold the estate, and the mortgage was paid out of the purchase money; the husband and wife joined with the mortgagee in surrendering to the use of the purchaser, and they all released to him all their interest, by a deed attested by two witnesses only.—Held, that the purchaser could make a good title, by the assistance of the statute of 27 Eliz., c. 4 (against voluntary conveyances), without showing that there were no daughters or younger sons of the wife's second marriage. Currie v. Nind, 1 Myl. & C. 17; 5 L. J., N. S., Ch., 169.

7. Devise in trust for the testator's daughters, M. and C., for their lives, for their separate use; and in case both M. and C. should die without leaving issue, then over implied estates tail to M. and C., with cross-remainders in tail. M. died unmarried, and then C., conceiving herself tenant in fee-simple, in contemplation of marriage, conveyed her estate with the concurrence of her intended husband, by lease and release, to trustees and their heirs, in trust for herself until the marriage, and after the solemnization thereof in trust for herself for life, and then for her children, etc. There was issue of the marriage.—Held, that the trustees took a base fee, and that the husband was not tenant by the curtesy.—Held, also, that after C.'s death, her eldest son, having elected to take against the settlement, and barred the entail, could make a good title to a purchaser from him, and such as a court of equity would compel the purchaser to accept. Stanhouse v. Gaskell, 17 Jur. 157.

8. A purchaser must take a title, though depending on the invalidity of a voluntary conveyance, as against a purchaser for valuable consideration with notice. Butterfield v. Heath, 15 Beav. 408; 22 L. J., Ch., 270.

9. Other Cases.

9. Lands were sold as fee-simple, but the purchaser, after the sale, for the first time found that, though held in fee-simple, the owner was bound to raise and maintain the fences and keep the drains and watercourses clear, etc.—Held, that the purchaser could not be compelled to accept the title where the enjoyment of the estate was subject to such qualifications. Larkin v. Rouse (Lord), 10 Ir. Eq. R. 70.

10. A railway company having under their act the usual power to sell surplus lands, with a direction to offer them in the first instance to the owners of the adjoining lands, entered into a contract for sale to a stranger, and then made an offer of the same lands to the parties who were entitled to the right of pre-emption, which offer was declined; the purchaser refused to complete his contract, because the last-mentioned offer had not been made prior to the contract with him, and the company filed a bill to compel specific performance:—Held, that the objection was a question of conveyance and not of title, and that the purchaser must complete the contract; but the Court refused to give the plaintiffs the costs of the suit. London & Greenwich Railway Co. v. Gnoodehild, 3 Rail. Ca. 507; 13 L. J., N. S., Ch., 224; 8 Jur. 455.

1. Mortgage debt and premises were assigned by mortgagee to trustees, with power to sue and give acquittances, and all the same powers as mortgagee had. Mortgage estate was sold under a decree, and purchase money paid into court:—Held, on exceptions to title, because scheduled creditors were not parties to the bill, but only the trustees, that the trustees could make a good conveyance, and that the exceptions ought not to have been made to title, but to the conveyance. Binks v. Rokeby (Lord), 2 Madd. 227.

2. Objection by a purchaser upon illegitimacy, upon the circumstance that the register of marriage could not be found, an inaccurate statement in a deed, and some particularity of description of a child in a will. Upon the time of the marriage, previous to the Marriage Act, and under circumstances, the Lord Chancellor's opinion was against the objection; but it was overruled upon a general release, which, though only reciting generally that objections were taken, was held sufficient as binding the party to inquire into the nature of the objections. Braybroke (Lord) v. Inskip, 8 Ves. 417.

3. Objections to title overruled. Poole v. Poole, 6 Ir. Eq. R. 50.

4. It seems to be no objection to a title that a person, who sixty years back was the survivor of three trustees appointed by will for sale of an estate, did not execute a conveyance purporting to be made by him and the parties beneficially interested, possession having gone under that conveyance, and the estate in equity being converted into personality. Townsend v. Champenoren, 1 Y. & J. 538.

5. When a necessary party to a title is neither in law nor equity under the control of the vendor, the Master ought to report against the title, unless there is produced to him a legal or equitable obligation on the part of the stranger to join in the conveyance. Eadaile v. Stephenson, 6 Madd. 366.

6. Where a contract of purchase is made, and delay is occasioned by the purchaser, and during that delay the legal estate descends to an infant heir, the purchaser cannot avail himself of that difficulty in the title to protect himself from specific performance. Gunter v. Halsey, Amb. 586.

7. It is no objection to the title to an estate that an extent had issued from the Crown against the owner, which remained in the hands of the sheriff unexecuted; it appearing that the lords of the treasury had, in fact, compromised the debt, though a writ of amoveas manus had not actually issued. Poole v. Shergold, 1 Cox 160; 2 Bro. C. C. 118.

8. On the sale of a house or stables in a cui de sac, the vendor is not bound to show a title to the roadway. Curling v. Austin, 2 Dr. & Sm. 129; 10 W. R. 682.

9. King Charles II. by letters patent granted some property in fee, subject to a fee-farm rent, and to a proviso of re-entry in case a decree should be made at the suit of the king for repairing the property, and the same should afterwards remain for a year out of repair. The Crown afterwards granted away the rent:—Held, that the proviso for re-entry could not be exercised, and that it therefore formed no objection to the title to the property. Flower v. Hartopp, 6 Beav. 476; 12 L. J., N. S., Ch., 507; 7 Jur. 613.

10. It is no objection to title that two fee-farm rents, created by letters patent by James I., are not shown to have been extinguished, it being proved that no claim has been made by the Crown for the rents from the year 1706, and no proof of any claim previous. Simpson v. Gutteridge, 1 Madd. 609.

11. In a suit by a vendor for the specific performance of a contract to purchase an estate which, by deed, dated in 1841, was limited to the use of the vendor for life, without impeachment of waste; and after the determination of that estate, by any means in his lifetime, to the use of a trustee and his heirs during the life of the vendor, in trust, nevertheless, for the vendor and his assigns; and after the determination of the estate so limited to the trustee and his heirs, to the only use and behoof of the vendor, and his heirs and assigns for ever:—Held, upon objection taken by the defendant, that he was entitled to a conveyance of any interest which might have become vested, by forfeiture or otherwise, in the dower trustee (4 Jur., N. S., 431; 27 L. J., Ch., 295; 6 W. R. 348; 1 L. T., N. S., 148):—Held, on appeal by the purchaser, that the objection was frivolous and vexatious, and ought not to have been insisted on, and that costs ought not to be given to the purchaser. Collard v. Roe, 4 De G. & J. 525; 28 L. J., Ch., 560.

12. The father, vendor, claimed the estate by purchase from his son; the purchaser is entitled to evidence of the fairness of the transaction. Boswell v. Mendham, 6 Madd. 373.

13. Sale held bad from suppression of articles of marriage. Beatniff v. Smith, 1 Eq. Abr. 357.

14. Case sent to law, whether purchaser of lot 2 would, by a conveyance of vendor alone, without the concurrence of the lessee, acquire the same rights and remedies against lessee, in respect of the apportioned rent of 40l. therein to be reserved to him, as he would acquire in case no rent were mentioned in such conveyance from a vendor, by a jury, for that part of the reversion comprised in lot 2. Bliss v. Collins, 4 Madd. 229.

15. A. conveys lands to trustees on trust to sell, if the unsatisfied debt of a partnership in which he had been concerned should at a given time exceed 40,000l.; the trustees sell and convey to the purchaser by a deed which recites that the debts of the partnership exceeded the specific amount, and that A. had died intestate as to his real estate, and the heir-at-law of A. joins in that deed, and enters into a covenant for the title of the trustees, a covenant against all acts done by him or his father, and a covenant for further assurance. It afterwards appears to be uncertain whether A. had not devised his real estate, and the purchaser files a bill to have protection against a remedy of the alleged defect in his title which this discovery created:—Held, that the purchaser is not entitled to have an account taken of the debts of the partnership in order to establish the fact of their having, at the specified time, exceeded the specified amount. Hallett v. Middleton, 1 Russ. 243.

1. The reversion of an estate having been put up to sale by auction, describing it as leased with a covenant on the part of the tenant to repair, and the purchaser objecting to the title, because no counterpart of the lease was in the possession of the vendors, it being stated to be in the hands of a party under partition of the estate, made some time before; the Court thought that such counterpart ought to be deposited for the benefit of all parties, before it could compel the purchaser to take. Shore v. Collett, Coop. 234.

2. Testator by his will, in his own handwriting, devised an estate to Ann Aspinall and her heirs, if she should be then living, but, if not, then to her issue and their heirs. He afterwards made a codicil commencing thus:—"This is a codicil to the last will and testament of me, J. S., and which will I some time since made in my own handwriting, and thereby devised to John Aspinall as therein mentioned." At the date of the codicil, Ann Aspinall had a son named John. Part of the testator's estates having been sold in pursuance of a direction in the will, the purchaser objected to the title on the ground that the reference in the codicil afforded strong presumption of the existence of a subsequent will. But, as the will contained a gift which might take effect in favour of John Aspinall, the objection was overruled. Howarth v. Smith, 6 Sim. 161.

4. On Sale of Leaseholds. See XXII. 1. 1 post.

1. What is. In General.

3. The right of a good title does not grow out of the agreement between the parties, but is given by law; but a purchaser may waive his right, by going on with the agreement after he has full notice that he is not to expect a good title. This is, in such case, matter of notice, and not of contract. If the vendor of a leasehold interest means to sell, without producing his lessor's title, he ought to declare it. Ogilvie v. Foljambe, 3 Meriv. 53.

4. Specific performance decreed against purchaser, without reference as to title, upon possession, and no objection made to abstract. Fleetwood v. Green, 15 Ves. 594.

5. A. and B. agree to grant mutual leases upon terms stated in a letter by A.'s solicitor, and accepted by B.'s solicitor. A.'s solicitor sent B.'s a draft of a formal agreement, which was returned by B.'s unaccepted, as he considered the agreement already definite and binding. Both A. and B. had antecedent knowledge of the title, and B. appeared to have acted on his knowledge:—Held, that there was a waiver of objections to the title on the part of B., and that A. was entitled to specific performance. Herring v. Miles, 3 W. R. 127.

6. A purchaser having retained the abstract for five months, made no objections to the title, but simply required the vendor to verify the abstract with the title deeds:—Held, that he must be deemed to have accepted the title. Pegg v. Widen, 16 Beav. 239; 16 Jur. 1105; 1 W. R. 42.

7. An agreement, dated the 16th August 1849, for the purchase of the equity of redemption in leaseholds, stipulated that the four joint purchasers should indemnify the vendors against the payment of the mortgage money and interest; that the purchasers should be entitled to possession of the rents from the signing of the contract; and that an abstract of title should be delivered by the vendors, at their expense, within one month from that date. The vendors were the trustees, and the purchasers were shareholders, of and in a joint-stock building company, and as such trustees they mortgaged the property. The purchasers took and remained in possession until September 1852. Shortly after the date and execution of the agreement, a memorandum, "that in consideration of not being charged the proportions of abstract required by the purchasers of property from the company, we do undertake to pay for our own abstract when required by us," was written at the foot of the agreement, and signed by one of the purchasers on behalf of the four. No abstract of title had ever been required by the purchasers, and no assignment had ever been executed by the vendors. The purchasers having allowed the interest on the mortgage money to fall into arrear, the mortgagees brought an action against the vendors for the payment of the mortgage money, and gave notice to the tenants to pay their rents to the agent of the mortgagees. The bill prayed a declaration that the purchasers had waived their right to investigate the title, and had accepted such title: and that they might be decreed specifically to perform the agreement, by accepting an assignment of the equity of redemption without previous investigation of the title, and by executing and delivering to the vendors a proper deed of indemnity against the mortgage money and interest:—Held, that the purchasers, not having required an abstract, and not having investigated the title, and having taken possession and dealt with the property, and violated the terms of the agreement by allowing the interest on the mortgage money to fall into arrear, had lost their right to investigate the title; and specific performance of the agreement was therefore decreed, with costs. Sibbald v. Lowrie, 18 Jur. 141; 23 L. J., Ch., 593; 2 W. R. 89; 2 Eq. Rep. 485.

The mere act of taking possession was not of itself a waiver of the right to investigate the title, but the acts and conduct of the parties materially varied, and amounted to a waiver of that right. Id.

8. Purchaser need not wait for a new title, but may call on the vendor to abide by the original abstract; but if he goes on to contest variations made in the title, that is acquiescence, by which he waives the objection grounded on delay. Magennis v. Fallon, 2 Moll. 581.

Where a purchaser goes on contesting the title without a protest against delay, that is a waiver of that ground of objection. But if he protests against the delay, but, not being sure that his protest is valid, goes on to make the best case he can, otherwise to be discharged: that goes only to costs, and does not amount to acquiescence. Id. 578.

1. No objection to a purchaser that the defect of title appeared on the abstract delivered before he filed his bill. Stapylton v. Scott, 16 Ves. 272.

2. A defendant admitting by his answer that at the date of the contract the plaintiff was entitled, cannot at the hearing object that no abstract was delivered, and no title shown. Phipps v. Child, 3 Drew. 709.

3. Assignees of an insolvent put up for sale an estate, which had been impressed with the character of personality, and which, if it retained that character, belonged absolutely to the insolvent. A purchaser, upon investigation of the title, discovered that there was good reason to contend that a prior owner had elected to take the estate as realty, in which case the fee belonged to the heir of the insolvent's late wife, the insolvent himself being only tenant by the curtesy. The purchaser, after some correspondence, in which he required the concurrence of the heir, abruptly gave notice to determine the contract, and immediately afterwards brought up the title of the heir:—Held, that he could not avail himself of this purchase to defeat his contract, but that he had thereby removed the objections to the title, and specific performance was decreed against him, allowing him the expenses of his purchase from the heir. Murrell v. Goodyear, 1 De G. F. & J. 432.

Semble, that, a vendor who bonâ fide puts up a property for sale, believing himself absolute owner, when he has in fact only a partial interest, is entitled to enforce the contract if he can perfect the title. Id.

If a purchaser is entitled at all to insist that the vendor's having only a partial interest makes the contract void, he must insist upon the objection at once, and cannot avail himself of it after having treated the contract as good and required the concurrence of the persons who can complete the title. Id.

4. B., the purchaser of an advowson, had an abstract delivered to him, and, after the date for completion, sent in requisitions, and received answers thereto, and made no further reply, either accepting the same or otherwise. A. had a draft of the conveyance forwarded to him (without prejudice to the requisitions by B.), and he approved of it:—Held, that B. must be considered to have accepted the title. Sweet v. Meredith, 8 Jur., N. S., 637; 31 L. J., Ch., 817; 10 W. R. 402; 6 L. T., N. S., 413.

5. W. contracted to sell a dwelling-house to H., possession to be given on the 26th February; H. wanted the house for immediate occupation. On February 26th the vendor had not made a good title, and the purchaser did not enter into possession. He continued, however, to negotiate for some time longer, when he gave a peremptory notice of immediate abandonment of the contract:—Held, that there must be a decree for specific performance of the contract. Webb v. Hughes, 39 L. J., Ch., 606; 10 L. R., Eq., 281; 18 W. R. 749.

2. By Taking Possession or Exercising Acts of Ownership.

6. Possession taken generally amounts to a waiver even of objections to title. Fludger v. Cocker, 12 Ves. 27.

7. A purchaser was held entitled to an investigation of the vendor's title, notwithstanding possession taken, acts of ownership incident to possession, and preparation of a conveyance. Burroughs v. Oakley, 3 Swan. 159.

8. Specific performance decreed against purchaser without reference as to title, upon ground of possession, a correspondence, and no objection to title till two years after delivery of abstract. Anspach (Margravine) v. Noel, 1 Madd. 310.

9. A purchaser who, in the full knowledge of certain objections to the title, grants a lease of the property to a third party, must be taken to have waived the objections to the title. Exp. Sidebotham, 3 Dea. & Ch. 818; 1 Mont. & A. 655; 3 L. J., N. S., Bky., 122. Affirmed 4 Dea. & Ch. 693; 2 Mont. & A. 146; 4 L. J., N. S., Bky., 27.

10. Specific performance decreed against purchaser, without reference as to title, upon possession, and no objection made to abstract. Fleetwood v. Green, 15 Ves. 594.

11. Where a purchaser had entered into possession, as it appeared, without prejudice to an inquiry into the title, but had afterwards continued twenty years in possession, during which time he had taken many frivolous and vexatious objections:—Held, that he had forfeited all right to a reference as to title, and he was decreed, with costs, to perform the agreement, and pay 4 per cent. on the purchase money from the time of taking possession. Hall v. Laver, 3 Y. & Coll. 191.

12. Consent to accept a title given under the influence of representations made on the part of the vendor, which turn out to be inaccurate, will not bind the purchaser. If a purchaser, entitled by agreement to possession, enters and exercises ownership, he is not thereby precluded from having a reference as to title, on objections not appearing upon any previous abstract delivered to him. Johnes v. Cloughton, 2 L. J., Ch., 113.

13. A purchaser who took possession under agreement in 1813, admitted by answer that in that year an abstract of title was delivered to him, and approved by counsel:—Held, that he had a right to a reference to the Master, though he had all along continued in possession without taking any objection to title. Boothall v. Smithson, 3 L. J., Ch., 100.

14. If a purchaser, after the delivery of the abstract, on the face of which part of the estate appears to be subject to a right of sporting, not mentioned in the particulars of sale, enters into possession, he waives the objection. Burnell v. Brown, 1 Jac. & Walk. 168.

1. Where a party had contracted to purchase, and had been eight years in possession of, premises to which the vendor was unable to make a good title, and refused either to abandon the agreement or accept such title as the vendor could give, having paid no part of the purchase money and no rent; the Court, upon a bill filed by the vendor for relief, directed the agreement to be delivered up to be cancelled, and the rents and profits received by the purchaser to be accounted for, and ordered the purchaser to pay the costs of the suit. King v. King, 1 Myl. & K. 442.

2. A purchaser under a decree, who takes possession without the order of the Court, by an arrangement with the solicitor in the suit, accepts the title. Wilden v. Andrews, 4 L. J., Ch., 208.

3. A party who had contracted for the purchase of the benefit of an agreement for a lease, and who before the lease was granted entered into possession and paid part of the purchase money, the remainder being left a charge on the property, and who after the lease had been granted assigned his interest in it as a security for money lent; on a bill being filed against him by the lessee for specific performance and payment of the residue of the purchase money, or otherwise that the property might be sold:—Held, to have waived all objections on the score of title. Haydon v. Bell, 1 Beav. 337; 2 Jur. 1008.

4. The purchaser entered into possession early in 1836, under an agreement, that the consideration, which was deposited with trustees, should be paid to him if no title could be made. While in possession, in 1837, he made improvements, cut down timber, sold timber, also part of the materials of Fonthill Abbey, the subject of the contract, built kitchens, etc.:—Held, that these acts did not amount to an acceptance of the title. Fraser v. Bennett, 1 Jur. 473.

5. A purchaser of a share in a co-partnership business does not waive objections to the title by taking possession of the property, and acting as a partner, when the contract stipulates that a good title shall be made by a specified future day, and it appears to have been the intention of the parties that the purchaser should immediately, and before the day, have the possession. Stevens v. Guppy, 3 Russ. 171; 6 L. J., Ch., 164.

The vendor of a share in a co-partnership business filed a bill against the purchaser, who had taken possession, charging that he had grossly mismanaged the property, and destroyed its value, and praying that he might be declared to have accepted the title, and might be decreed to have performed the contract specifically. The Court was of opinion that the title had not been accepted, and, as a good title was not shown, a specific performance could not be decreed:—Held, that upon a record so framed, no accounts or inquiries could be directed as to defendant's possession and management of property, with a view to ascertain whether any or what sum ought to be paid, or compensation made by him, to the plaintiff. Id.

6. Although a purchaser entering into possession, and dealing with the property in a manner contrary to the usage in good husbandry, may be a ground for compelling him to pay the purchase money into court, or for the appointment of a receiver, it will not be a ground to force the title on him. Osborne v. Harvey, 1 Y. & Coll. C. C. 116; 11 L. J., N. S., Ch., 42.

7. An agreement is executed in August for purchase of the equity of redemption in certain property, with a stipulation for immediate possession, that the purchasers shall indemnify the vendors in respect of the mortgage money and interest, and that the abstract should be delivered when required by the purchasers. Possession is taken by the purchasers in the April following, no investigation of the title having been made, and retained for upwards of two years, when, the interest on the mortgage having fallen into arrear, the mortgagees take possession and sue the vendors upon the mortgage covenant. Upon bill by the vendors, specific performance of the agreement decreed with costs; the purchasers having by their conduct lost their right to investigate the title, and violated the terms of the contract under which they had taken possession. Where immediate possession is stipulated in an agreement, and also delivery of an abstract, the mere act of taking possession does not amount to a waiver of the title. Sibbald v. Lomrie, 2 W. R. 89; 18 Jur. 141; 2 Eq. Rep. 485; 23 L. J., Ch., 593.

8. S. entered into a negotiation with the plaintiff for the purchase and transfer to him of the plaintiff's business and property, and the terms of the agreement were, by a son of S., reduced into writing, in the form of a letter from the plaintiff to S. By that letter the plaintiff agreed to the terms proposed as to certain houses and rents, and agreed to give up to S. all deeds, etc., which he might require to carry on, and that might be necessary for him to take to, the whole of his business as a common brewer, and to sign and hand over all the necessary leases that might enable S. to have and possess the whole and sole control over the freehold, leasehold, and copyhold property of which the plaintiff was possessed or interested in, or about to become interested in, save the right of sale of his freehold property. The plaintiff was to use his best endeavours to secure to S. the whole of his trade, on the understanding that S. paid him 100*l.*, or such sum as should make up the deficiency between the two sums of 800*l.* and 900*l.* (the latter being the amount which the plaintiff considered his brewhouse and brewing utensils to be worth). If the brewhouse and utensils should not fetch 900*l.*, and if the brewhouse should not be sold within six months, S. agreed to pay interest at 4*l.* per cent. on the 550*l.*, being the value of that property without the utensils. The document contained a stipulation empowering S. to receive the rents; and at the foot of it a son of S., and on his behalf, signed his name, agreeing to the terms, but it was not signed by the plaintiff, nor did it contain his name. A duplicate copy was, however, signed by him and given to S., who subsequently took possession of some part of the property comprised in the agreement, including the brewery, and received the rents of other parts of the property, and was introduced to the plaintiff's customers. S. also took possession of some of the utensils and casks, and others were sold, both by him and the plaintiff, on S.'s behalf. S. afterwards died, having bequeathed all his estate to the defendant, who refused to complete the purchase of the brewhouse and utensils. But, on a bill for specific performance, the Court declared that, according to the true construction of the agreement, the defendant was the purchaser of the brewhouse and utensils at the price of 900*l.*; that she, upon 550*l.*, part thereof, must pay interest at 4*l.* per cent.; and that she must account for and pay 350*l.* for the utensils, without interest, to the date of the decree; and ordered a general account to be taken. Deller v. Simonds, 5 Jur., N. S., 997.

Held, also, that the right to an investigation of the title of the brewery had been waived by the purchaser. Ib.

1. In a suit to compel the defendant specifically to perform an agreement to take a lease:—Held, that under the circumstances of the case the intended lessee had waived his right to call for the title of the intended lessor. Simpson v. Sadd, 4 De G. M. & G. 665; 1 Jur., N. S., 457; 24 L. J., Ch., 662; 2 W. R. 578; 2 Eq. Rep. 798.

Form of the decree in this case directed as in Warren v. Richardson (Younge 1). Ib.

The mere fact of taking possession does not, either in the case of vendor and purchaser, or in that of lessor and lessee, operate as a waiver of the purchaser's or lessee's right to call for the vendor's or lessor's title, though an intention to waive the right is less probable in the former than in the latter instance. Ib.

2. Primâ facie taking possession after an abstract has been delivered, and not in pursuance of any provision in the contract, is a waiver of the objections appearing on the abstract, and it lies on the purchaser to rebut that presumption. Bown v. Stenson, 24 Beav. 631.

A purchaser had taken possession by his tenant, and not under the contract, after an abstract had been delivered, and he had made no objection to the title till long after, when a suit was threatened, and he had promised payment of part of the purchase money:—Held, that by his conduct, and on the correspondence, he had waived all objections to the title arising upon that abstract; but held, secondly, that he had not waived any objection not arising on the abstract. Ib.

3. Taking possession by a purchaser does not, in all cases, amount to a waiver of a requisition which has not been answered, and, therefore, where a purchaser took possession with leave of the vendor pending an answer to a requisition as to the tenure of the property, and the purchaser discovered aliunde after taking possession that the description of the property was not correct, and gave up possession immediately, insisting on his right to rescind:—Held, that he was not precluded from rescinding by such taking possession. Turquand v. Rhodes, 16 W. R. 1074; 18 L. T., N. S., 844; 37 L. J., Ch., 830.

4. If a contract for the sale of land is silent as to the title which is to be shown by the vendor, the legal implication that the purchaser is entitled to a good title may be rebutted by evidence that, before the execution of the contract, the purchaser had notice of defects in the vendor's title. But, if the contract expressly provides that a good title shall be shown, the purchaser is entitled to insist on a good title, notwithstanding that before the execution of the contract he had notice of defects in the vendor's title. If the contract contains no stipulation as to possession being taken by the purchaser before completion, and he takes possession with knowledge that there are defects in the title which the vendor cannot remove, the taking possession amounts to a waiver of the purchaser's right to require the removal of those defects, or to repudiate his contract. If, on the other hand, the defects are removable by the vendor, the taking of possession does not amount to such a waiver. Re Gloag and Miller's contract, 23 L. R., Ch. D., 320; 52 L. J., Ch., 654; 48 L. T. 629; 31 W. R. 601.

3. By Delay.

5. Specific performance decreed against purchaser without reference as to title, on ground of possession, a correspondence, and no objection to title till two years after delivery of abstract. Anspach (Margravine) v. Noel, 1 Madd. 310.

6. A delay of seven months held no waiver of an objection to the title, which turned upon a question of fact. Observations on clearing a title, by showing the non-existence of rights under a reservation, or onerous covenant not stated, and on the duty of being careful and explicit in preparing for a sale. Martin v. Cottle, 9 Ir. Eq. R. 351; 3 J. & L. 496. Affirming 9 Ir. Eq. R. 44.

7. A party to a contract becoming aware of an objection to the validity of the contract, must forthwith state it as an objection on which he means to resist performance of the contract; or if, after such knowledge, he treats the contract as subsisting, he will be considered to have waived the objection. Flint v. Woodin, 9 Hare 618; 16 Jur. 719.

8. Circumstances of delay considered not to amount to a waiver of requisitions on title. Cooch v. Warden, 46 L. J., Ch., 639.

9. Purchaser, having two distinct grounds, and contesting the right to enforce his contract upon one which failed:—Held, not to have waived the other, which was conclusive, although he did not bring it forward for a considerable time after he became aware of it, during which he continued to insist upon the first ground, but he was refused costs. Magennis v. Fallon, 2 Moll. 591.

10. Laches will be imputed to a vendor on account of delay, however long, in filing his bill for specific performance, where negotiations respecting the title have been going on the whole time. M'Murray v. Spicer, 16 W. R. 332; 5 L. R., Eq., 527; 37 L. J., Ch., 505.

1. General Principles.

1. General rule that Court will not decide upon a title without reference to Master, unless unequivocally, and without fraud or surprise, waived; a plaintiff seeking specific performance of contract being entitled to opportunity of making a better title before the Master, and the defendant having a right to further inquiry, beyond objections arising on abstract, upon principle that bill seeks relief beyond the law. Jenkins v. Hiles, 6 Ves. 646.

2. Bill for specific performance of a contract for sale of an estate, upon various objections to the title, dismissed in the first instance without a reference. Omerod v. Hardman, 5 Ves. 723.

3. Real estate ordered to be sold pending inquiries before the Master. Martin v. Hadlow, 1 W. R. 101.

4. Court refused to make an order under Act of Parliament for sale of estate upon opinion of conveyancer merely approving the conveyance, without reference to Master. Exp. Newcastle (Duke), 6 Ves. 454.

5. Motion by a vendor for a reference as to title refused, because he had been guilty of laches in prosecuting the suit. Dorin v. Harvey, 15 Sim. 49; 9 Jur. 648.

6. Questions as to the validity of the contract, and as to whether it is inequitable to enforce its specific performance, must be determined at the hearing; questions of title are referred to chambers. Hood v. Oglander, 34 Beav. 513; 11 Jur. N. S., 498; 34 L. J., Ch., 528.

Circumstances under which a question of title may be discussed at the hearing of a suit for specific performance. S. C. 6 N. R. 57.

7. New practice as to the consideration of the vendor's title in suits for specific performance of a purchase. Pegg v. Wisdon, 16 Jur. 1105; 16 Beav. 239.

In a suit for specific performance, plaintiff directed to bring in objections to defendant's title before judge in chambers within one week, and vendor could then either remove them or argue them in open court. S. C. 1 W. R. 43; 16 Jur. 1105.

In a suit for specific performance, although in strictness the plaintiff had accepted the title, yet as the point had not been fairly raised on the pleadings, the plaintiff was allowed to bring in objections. Ib.

8. If the common decree for specific performance and for inquiry as to title are made, and no special directions, the purchaser may under it raise objections which he had abandoned before suit. Curling v. Austin, 2 Dr. & Sm. 129; 10 W. R. 682.

The Court will not add any special inquiry on the subject to the decree, or direct the chief clerk to state special circumstances. Ib.

And on further consideration the Court will not, upon the question of costs or interest, look at any evidence but that in the cause, and will not look at the proceedings and evidence in chambers or on interlocutory motion. Ib.

9. In a suit for specific performance by the vendor against the purchaser, when the first question is on the contract, and the Court declares that the vendor is entitled to specific performance of the contract, and the purchaser then insists that no title has been shown, the Court may proceed to determine whether the purchaser is entitled to any further abstract, or let the cause stand over to be argued on that question, on a day to be named; and if the Court decides that the purchaser is entitled to a further abstract, the cause must again stand over, affording him the opportunity of taking any objection that may arise on that abstract. Keyes v. Heydon, 9 Hare (App.) v.

10. Manner of proceeding in a suit for specific performance of a contract, where the contract, the sufficiency of the abstract delivered, and the title of the vendor, are all disputed. Keyes v. Heydon, 9 Hare (App.) lviii.

11. In suits for specific performance where the contract is not disputed, it is in almost every case the duty of the vendor to obtain an immediate reference for title so as to save unnecessary costs. Phillipson v. Gibbon, 40 L. J., Ch., 406; 24 L. T., N. S., 602; 19 W. R. 661; 6 L. R., Ch., 428.

A vendor refused to take an order for reference for title by consent, but brought the suit to a hearing, when he obtained the ordinary decree only, subject to the usual inquiry as to title. The defendant took certain specific objections to the title by his answer, which were overruled by the Court; while the matter was in chambers, another and important defect, which did not appear on the abstract, was discovered by him on inspection of the property. This defect was only cured by the vendor shortly before the cause came on for further consideration:—Held, that although the plaintiff was entitled to a decree, no costs should, under the circumstances, be given to either party, except that the plaintiff should pay the cost of the original hearing occasioned by his refusal to take the reference for title by consent. Ib.

Principles on which costs are given in suits for specific performance stated. Ib.

2. Order for. How Obtained.

12. Motion for reference of title must be made on notice, if made by any of the parties to cause. M'Cann v. O'Farrell, 1 Hog. 121.

13. The Court will not, by one order, direct a reference as to the propriety of a proposed reinvestment, and as to title, and for the completion of the purchase by payment to the vendors, and for taxation and payment of costs. After the Master has approved of the title and settled the conveyance, the matter must come again to the Court for approval and further directions. Exp. Duckle, 16 Jur. 511.

1. A vendor filed a claim for specific performance, and gave notice of motion for a decree. The defendant did not appear, and a decree was made against him, directing a specific performance, without any reference as to title. Subsequently, upon the motion of the defendant, the Court allowed a reference as to title to be inserted in the decree upon his paying all the costs of the application. Hughes v. Jones, 26 Beav. 24.

2. An estate having been sold, in which the petitioners were interested, it was represented to them that a good title could not be made; and they were induced to give a brief to counsel to consent to the purchase being discharged; they subsequently discovered circumstances which led them to conclude they had been deceived, and that, in fact, a good title could be made, and thereupon petitioned the Court that the order might be discharged. The Court discharged the order, giving the purchaser his costs, and referred it to the Master to inquire whether a good title could be made; the solicitor for the petitioner to have the conduct of the inquiry. Butter v. Ommanney, Tambl. 344.

3. Before Answer.

3. Motion after bill filed, and before answer, for reference as to title, counsel for defendant stating there were other matters in question besides title, motion was refused. Mathews v. Dana, 3 Madd. 470.

4. Reference of title before answer; plaintiff the vendor undertaking to do all such acts for the purpose of executing what the Court thinks right, as if the answer was in, and the cause brought to hearing; direction, if the report shall be against the title, for compensation; refused as to indemnity. Balmanno v. Lumley, 1 Ves. & B. 224.

3. On Motion after Answer.

5. The practice to direct a reference upon title, on motion after answer, limited to the case where the title only is disputed. Gompertz v. —, 12 Ves. 17.

6. After answer submitting to perform contract, if good title can be made, reference was directed, on motion whether good title can be made, and whether it appears on the abstract. Wright v. Bond, 11 Ves. 39.

7. The Court of Exchequer will not, on bill for specific performance, make an interlocutory order to refer a title, the validity of which is denied by answer, and depends on facts, to the Deputy Remembrancer, until the cause is brought to a hearing, without consent. Bowyer v. Bright, 3 Price, 300.

8. Reference as to title before decree only made where title alone is in dispute. Blyth v. Elmhirst, 1 Ves. & B. 1.

9. Reference as to title before decree refused where purchaser, on other grounds, resists performance of contract. Paton v. Rogers, 1 Ves. & B. 351.

10. Reference before decree confined to the case of title; where there was a further subject of dispute, under a claim of compensation, it was refused with costs. — v. Skelton, 1 Ves. & B. 516.

11. Reference of title before decree refused, where the purchaser, besides objecting to the title, claimed compensation for defect of quantity, even though he submitted to complete his agreement. Love v. Manners, 1 Meriv. 19.

12. There can be no reference of title except where the title only is in dispute. Morgan v. Shaw, 2 Meriv. 138.

13. Receiver appointed on the motion of the vendor pending a reference of title. Boehm v. Wood, 2 Jac. & Walk. 236.

Although the Court will not order a reference of title, on motion, when a purchaser resists the performance of the contract on another ground, yet it will take care that the latter is substantial, semble. The motion was therefore granted, where the only other ground insisted upon by the owner was, that the time of possession had been made of the essence of the contract, but which, upon looking into it, appeared not to be the case. Merely undertaking to deliver an abstract and possession at a particular time, does make it of the essence of a contract. S. C. 1 Jac. & Walk. 419.

14. In a suit for specific performance between vendor and purchaser, everything connected with the title may be the subject of the usual reference upon motion as to the vendor's title, and may be added by way of inquiry to that reference; but the Court will not allow any inquiry to be added as to matters which have no reference to the title, and which are not admitted by the answer. Bennett v. Rees, 1 Keen 405.

15. A reference of the title will not be ordered upon the coming in of the answer, if the purchaser, in his answer, objects to the performance of the contract on the ground that the premises are subject to a right of foot-path, and that the vendor represented to him that no such right of foot-path existed. Amon, 1 L. J., Ch., 177.

16. Although the defence of the purchaser was, that time was of the essence of the contract, and that the abstract had been delivered too late, yet the Court granted on motion a preliminary inquiry as to whether the title was good, and when it was first shown to be so. Forlome v. Amcoats, 3 Beav. 496; 4 Jur. 1053.

17. Reference as to title directed on motion after answer to a bill for specific performance by the vendor against the purchaser, notwithstanding the purchaser stated that his requisitions on the abstract had not been complied with, although the time for completion of the contract had long expired, and he had given notice of his intention to rescind the contract. Wood v. Maohu, 5 Hare 158.

18. Reference of title upon motion by the plaintiff (the vendor) after answer, notwithstanding the question in dispute in the cause might have been conveniently determined by the Court at the hearing without a reference. Whether the question in a cause be what evidence of title the vendor is bound to give, or whether he is able to give sufficient evidence, the question is equally one of title, and the proper subject of a reference. Curling v. Flight, 5 Hare, 242, 243. And see S. C. 2 Ph. 613; 6 Hare 41; 17 L. J., N. S., Ch., 79; id. 359; 12 Jur. 423; id. 91. See also Daves v. Betts, 12 Jur. 709; id. 412.

1. Where answer to bill for specific performance raises other objections to performance beside defect of title, Court will not, on motion by plaintiff for reference of title, after the answer, decide whether other objections are frivolous or not, semble. Withy v. Cottle, 1 Sim. & S. 174; 1 L. J., Ch., 117. S. P. Gordon v. Ball, 1 Sim. & S. 178.

2. A contract for the purchase of a farm described it as containing "349 acres, or thereabout, be the same more or less"; and stipulated that the premises should be taken at the quantity above stated, whether more or less. In fact, the farm consisted of only 349 customary acres, which was less than the same number of statute acres by about 100 acres or upwards. On a bill being filed for specific performance, the purchaser admitting that he had been for several months in possession of the property, and had exercised acts of ownership over it, on the faith that a good title to 349 acres would be shown, insisted that in the contract "acres" meant "statute acres," and that he was not bound to perform the contract unless 349 statute acres were conveyed to him.—Held, that in such case a reference of title would not be directed on motion. Portman v. Mill, 2 Russ. 570.

3. In a suit for specific performance, the Court will not, if any other defence is set up besides want of title, direct a reference as to title on motion before the hearing:—Semble, in a suit by a vendor the Court will not in any case direct a reference upon a motion of the defendant. Reed v. Dom Pedro North Del Rey Gold Co., 2 N. R. 473; 32 L. J., Ch., 773; 11 W. R. 935; 9 L. T., N. S., 132; 3 De G. J. & S. 593. Affirming 2 N. R. 413; 32 L. J., Ch., 773; 9 Jur., N. S., 865; 8 L. T., N. S., 601.

5. At the Hearing.

4. The vendor's bill, in a suit for specific performance of an agreement to take an assignment of a lease, stated a covenant in the lease, not to assign without the license of the lessor, but did not aver that the plaintiff had or could obtain such a license:—Held, upon demurrer, that the Court at the hearing would not on such facts dismiss the bill, but would refer it to the Master to inquire whether the vendor could make a good title, and that the demurrer must therefore be overruled. Smith v. Capron, 7 Hare 185; 19 L. J., N. S., Ch., 322; 14 Jur. 686.

5. Although a plaintiff is bound to prove his whole case at the hearing, yet if there be no failure of title, but an omission in the proof of it, the Court may in its discretion direct a reference to the Master to inquire into it. McAllister v. Walsh, 8 Ir. Eq. R. 250.

6. General Reference. When directed.

6. Upon a bill filed by the vendor for the specific performance of a contract, it appeared that the defendant, in the course of correspondence between the solicitors, and upon a case stated on his part for the opinion of counsel, expressed himself willing to accept the title, if a particular objection then referred to were removed. That objection not being removed, the bill was filed, and the Court ruled that the reference to the Master as to the title must be in general terms, and not confined to the particular objection. Lesturgeon v. Martin, 3 Myl. & K. 255.

7. When money in court is subject to a trust for investment in land, and the tenant for life enters into a provisional contract for the purchase of an estate, subject to conditions of sale, the Court makes a general reference as to the title, and not whether a good title can be made subject to the conditions of sale. Meyrick v. Lams, 34 Beav. 58.

8. Where land is purchased for immediate occupation the Court will not direct a general enquiry as to title, so as to give the vendor an opportunity of making good defects which existed in the title when possession should have been given. Hyde v. Warden, 47 L. J., Exch. D., 121.

9. When in a suit between vendor and purchaser a decree has been made for specific performance of a contract, subject to the usual reference as to whether a good title can be made, the words "good title" mean not an absolutely good title, but a good title having regard to the terms of the contract, although the latter words are not inserted in the decree. Upperton v. Nickolson, 40 L. J., Ch., 401; 6 L. R., Ch., 436; 25 L. T., N. S., 4; 19 W. R. 733. S. C. in court below 39 L. J., Ch., 758; 10 L. R., Eq., 228; 23 L. T., N. S., 343.

7. What Matters or Inquiries Referred.

10. No reference of title upon a question whether the estate was tithe-free, having been sold as such. Wallinger v. Hilbert, 1 Meriv. 104.

11. On reference of title on bill for specific performance, the reference may extend to all that concerns the title, but not to other matters; it may be extended, therefore, to inquire whether it appeared by the abstract in the pleadings mentioned, that a good title could be made. Jennings v. Hopton, 1 Madd. 211.

12. The particulars of sale stated that the timber on the estate would be included in the purchase. Title was not made out to the timber on a very small portion of the lands. There being no misrepresentation, the Court referred it to the Master to inquire whether the timber on that portion was material to the possession and enjoyment of the estate. Stewart v. Conyngham (Marquis), 1 Ir. Ch. R. 534.

13. Where the vendor, entitled as to part for life, and as to other part absolutely, and as to the remainder it was doubtful if he had any title at all, unless with the consent and approval of the trustees in whom it was vested, contracted to sell the whole, a reference ordered to inquire whether the vendor could, by application to the trustees, make a good title as to that part. Graham v. Oliver, 3 Beav. 124.

14. A reference will not be granted as to the fact on which the foundation of plaintiff's title rests; and accordingly, where the assignee of an insolvent omitted to prove that a fund which he claimed to recover as having been fraudulently settled had ever been the property of the insolvent, a reference as to the fact was refused. Holden v. Hearn, 1 Beav. 445; 8 L. J., N. S., Ch., 260; 3 Jur. 428.

1. Semble, a trustee under an old trust creating successive limitations of equitable interests, some of which had failed, is entitled, before he can be required to convey, to have the equitable title of those who call for a conveyance ascertained by inquiry, and to have the deed of conveyance settled in the Master's office. Goodson v. Ellison, 3 Russ. 583.

2. A. contracts with B. to purchase an estate, and, after accepting the title, agrees to sell to C., who refuses to complete his purchase, on the ground of his having discovered another will made thirty years ago, not set forth in the abstract, but supposed to affect the title. Upon a bill for specific performance by the original vendor against A., who, by his answer (which was sent in, and the cause set down for hearing before this discovery was made), admitted the title, quære, if he may be allowed to set up the will as an objection to the title by a supplementary answer. By consent of both parties, a reference was directed to the Master to inquire whether a good title could be made, regard being had to the will only. Const v. Barr, 2 Meriv. 57.

3. The truth of a plea that the plaintiff is not executrix of her testator, must be tried under a reference, and not a replication. Bourke v. Kelly, 1 Hog. 172.

4. A vendor, by public auction of shares in a railway company, incorporated by Act of Parliament, at the request of the purchaser (who had paid his purchase money), executed a transfer to a third party, who did not accept the transfer, or register himself as a shareholder. On a bill filed by the vendor against the purchaser for a specific performance, the Court directed the usual reference as to title. Shaw v. Fisher, 2 De G. & Sm. 11; 12 Jur. 162.

5. Where the title to a contract is made out by showing the title to the land which is the subject of the contract, the Court will enter into the question of the title to the land at the time of the contract; and if the party insisting on the contract makes out a good title to the land at that time, the Court will direct a reference to the Master as to the subsequent title. Cater v. Croydon Canal Co., 4 Y. & Coll. 405; 13 L. J., N. S., Ch., 89.

Upon a reference to the Master to inquire as to the title to compensation for damage done to lands, the Master ought regularly to inquire whether the damage was temporary or permanent. Ib.

6. In granting a decree for the specific performance of an agreement to purchase the plaintiff's lands, where the defendant has been guilty of delay, and other acts amounting to a partial waiver of his originally unrestricted right to investigate the vendor's title, the Court will refuse an inquiry in the case of the items as to which there has been such acceptance, allowing it to proceed as to the rest. Corless v. Sparling, 8 Ir. R., Eq., 335.

7. The defendant purchased an estate, having agreed with the plaintiff that, if he made the purchase, he would cede part to the plaintiff. There was some uncertainty in the memorandum of agreement as to the exact portion which was to be ceded to the plaintiff. In an action by him for specific performance of the agreement, the Court directed a reference to chambers to ascertain what portion the plaintiff was entitled to, and decreed that the defendant should convey such portion to the plaintiff. Chattock v. Muller, 8 L. R., Ch. D., 177.

8. Inquiry as to Time when Title First Made.

8. Inquiry as to time when title could be made is the subject of further directions after report upon title, and is not to be combined with reference as to title. Gibson v. Clark, 2 Ves. & B. 108.

9. Court will not, on motion, after an order for reference, direct Master to inquire (if he have found that a good title can be made to premises, the subject of a suit for specific performance) when such good title could be first made. Such direction should have been applied for at hearing. Lubin v. Lightbody, 8 Price 606.

10. Decree for a reference upon the title; the cause coming on for further directions, after a report approving the title, the defendant is entitled to have an inquiry at what time a title could have been made. Daly v. Osborne, 1 Meriv. 382.

11. On a reference of title, the Master having reported that a good title could be made, order referring it back to the Master to see whether such title could have been made prior to the filing of the bill by the vendor for a specific performance. Biroh v. Haynes, 2 Meriv. 444.

12. Reference having been made as to title on one motion, party cannot afterwards, by another motion, have reference as to delivery of abstract. Hyde v. Wroughton, 3 Madd. 279.

13. The defendant, a purchaser of a public house, insisted that time was of the essence of the contract, and that the abstract had not been delivered within the time agreed on. A reference without prejudice was made on motion as to the title, and when it was first shown. Foxlove v. Amcoats, 3 Beav. 496; 4 Jur. 1053.

14. Motion may be made on bill for specific performance, for reference as to title, and whether title was shown prior to filing bill. Anon., 3 Madd. 495.

15. In cases of specific performance, the Court will, for the future, add to the reference as to whether a good title can be made, a direction to the Master to inquire and report at what time a good title could have been shown, as interest on the purchase money will be payable from that date. Enraght v. Fitzgerald, 2 Dr. & War. 43; 1 Con. & L. 181.

16. Where, on a bill for specific performance, it is not only a question of title, but other questions are made on the terms of the contract, etc., the Court will not direct an inquiry as to when the title was first shown. Potter v. Crossley, 5 W. R. 35; 28 L. T. 137.

1. In a suit by vendor for specific performance the defendant disputed the contract. The Court only gave the common inquiry as to title, refusing an inquiry as to when first a good title could be made by the plaintiff. Morris v. Wilson, 5 Jur., N. S., 168.

2. Where under a decree, in a suit for specific performance, there is a reference as to "whether the vendor can make a good title, and if so, when such title was first shown," the making and showing a good title are intentionally distinct matters. Parr v. Lovegrove, 6 W. R. 709, 201; 4 Drew. 170; 4 Jur., N. S., 600.

3. The bill praying the inquiry into the title, and a specific performance, on the defendant's motion after answer, an inquiry was directed as to the title, at what time the abstract was delivered, and whether it was sufficient, but the Court would not decide upon any matter of relief. Moss v. Mathews, 3 Ves. 329.

4. On motion for the usual order of reference as to title, it being objected that the answer stated that a good title could not be made, and that a question of costs would arise on the point of notice of no title before filing the bill, the Court ordered the usual reference to the Master, and directed, that if a good title could not be made, the Master should state when it was first shown that a good title could not be made, with liberty to state special circumstances as to the time when it was first shown that a good title could or could not be made to the estate contracted to be sold. Martin v. Jardine, 7 L. J., N. S., Ch., 250.

5. Where specific performance of a binding contract is sought, and there is a reference to the Master to look into the title, or to ascertain who the parties to the conveyance are, that reference enables the vendor to make good any defect in his own title, or to procure a conveyance up to the date of the Master's report and of the decree; and there are cases in which an Act of Parliament has been obtained to remove defects; but when the Court had come to the conclusion upon the evidence that there was no binding contract, and refused to decree specific performance, on the ground that the assent of the proprietors was a term of the contract, and that, at the hearing, such consent was not proved, the Court declined to refer it to the Master to inquire whether the required consent could be obtained, or to make any reference to the Master. Clay v. Rufford, 5 De G. & Sm. 768.

9. Evidence in the Master's Office.

6. Order made on motion for a reference as to title ought to contain the directions usual in decrees, as for production of deeds, etc., and examination of parties upon oath. Winterbottom v. Ingham, 9 Sim. 654.

7. If a reference as to title is made on motion, the Master, under Lord Lyndhurst's 51st Order, has the same power to examine witnesses as he would have had if the reference had been made by decree. Woodroffe v. Titterton, 8 Sim. 238.

8. On reference to a Master to see whether a good title can be made, the Master proceeds on the abstract only, unless the purchaser requires the production of the deeds themselves; and if he omits to make such requisition, he cannot except to the report, on the ground of the deeds not having been produced before the Master. Pool v. Shergold, 1 Cox 160.

9. Quere, whether a Master to whom a question of title is referred, has a right to require the parties to procure for him the opinion of any conveyancer whom he shall select, upon the abstracts of title which have been brought into his office. Flower v. Walker, 1 Russ. 408.

10. Under the usual reference as to title, a good title is made out when it is proved, but is first shown when the facts necessary to make it out are specifically alleged on the abstract, and are within a vendor's power to prove. Parr v. Lovegrove, 4 Drew. 170; 4 Jur., N. S., 600; 6 W. R. 201.

Where there is conclusive evidence of intestacy sufficient to satisfy the Court of the fact, yet without search for a will, a purchaser is entitled to require such search. Id.

When a person is alleged to have died intestate, the registers of the Bishop's Court or of the Prerogative Court should be searched for a will. Id.

10. Form of Report.

11. It is informal for the Master to state on his report that he has founded his opinion as to the vendor's title upon the opinion of a conveyancer. Re Collard, 10 Beav. 334.

12. Report generally that a good title could not be made out, irregular. The Master should state the precise points in which the title is defective. Green v. Monks, 2 Moll. 325.

13. It is informal to report a good title conditionally on performance of an undertaking to do certain acts for clearing the title. The Master ought to give a reasonable time to do the acts, and afterwards make his report. Magennis v. Fallon, 2 Moll. 575.

14. Upon reference to the Master as to the title, a report that A. B., with the concurrence of C. D., etc., can make a good title, is an excess of his authority, being a report upon the conveyance rather than upon the fact, title or not. Parties, therefore, having omitted to take exceptions to it, are not concluded by its confirmation. Lewis v. Lozam, 1 Meriv. 179.

15. A report that good title cannot be made out is an integral part of an estate sold in one lot, is tantamount to a general report that a good title could not be made out. Prendergast v. Eyre, 2 Hog. 80.

16. Title reported good by deputy remembrancer in creditors' suit, purchaser not bound to take it if only prima facie title. Eyton v. Dicken, 4 Price 303.

11. Taking Exceptions or Objections and Waiver.

17. Exception to report in favour of title on ground that reversion in fee might have been disposed of, so as not to have descended to heir from whom the title was derived, overruled. Sperling v. Trevor, 7 Ves. 497.

1. Exceptions to Master's report in favour of title of vendor of bishop's lease, on ground of non-production of bishop's title, overruled. Fane v. Spence, 2 Madd. 438.

2. Bill by devisees in trust to sell, for specific performance of an agreement to purchase, that the heir of the deviser is not a party to the suit, is not matter of exception to the report in favour of the title. Wakeman v. Rutland (Duke), 3 Ves. 234.

3. On a reference as to title, the Master by his report stated that he had looked into certain documents and states of facts, and that no title had been made. The counsel who were before the Master stated that the Master had disallowed the state of facts. Exceptions to the report allowed. Wilkinson v. Hartley, 14 Jur. 187.

4. A suit for specific performance of a contract, made subject to the final approbation of the Court, was instituted against a party appointed by the Court to enter into such contract for the benefit of an infant plaintiff in a cause then pending. The Master to whom such pending cause was referred having refused to hear, in a proceeding before him to consider the title, the vendors in defence thereof, and having ex parte decided against it:—Held, that the vendors were not bound by such ex parte decision, but that there ought to be a reference as to the title to the Master to whom the former cause was referred, with liberty for the plaintiff in that cause to attend. Barrow v. Budd, 4 Jur. 41.

5. Mortgage debt and premises were assigned by mortgagee to trustee, with power to sue and give acquittances, and all the same powers as mortgagee had. Mortgage estate was sold under decree, and purchase money paid into court:—Held, on exceptions to title, because scheduled creditors were not parties to the bills, but only the trustees, that the trustees could make a good conveyance, and that the exceptions ought not to have been made to title, but to the conveyance. Binks v. Rokeby, 2 Madd. 227.

6. A testator having directed his real estates to be sold, the decree in a suit for the performance of the trusts of his will directed the Master to inquire and state what estates passed by the will, and that all the estates which the Master should find to have passed should be sold with his approbation. The Master having ascertained, from a state of facts laid before him, what estates passed, proceeded to sell them. The purchaser objected to the title, because the Master had not made any report in pursuance of the first direction in the decree. But, it being the practice of the Masters in such a case to sell before they make any report, the objection was overruled. Dykes v. Taylor, 16 Sim. 563.

7. J. C. by his will devised all his estates, real and personal, to trustees, first, to pay all his debts, etc., next, to the use of his son G. C. for life, with remainder to his issue; and if G. C. should die without issue, to M. W. for life, with remainder to such of her children as should be living at her death, in equal shares. G. C. died without issue, and M. W. had several children living. In a suit by the creditors of J. C. to have the trusts of his will for payment of his debts executed, and praying a sale of the real estate, the estate was set up to be sold; and three of the children being out of the jurisdiction, the highest bidder excepted to the Master's report of good title, on the ground that the absent children would not join in the conveyance, and were not bound by the decree:—Held, that the exceptions were irregular, being exceptions not to title, but to conveyance, but that the exceptant would not be compelled to complete his purchase, as the objection for want of parties was fatal. Oldham v. Wilkins, 1 Ir. Eq. R. 59.

8. A vendor took an exception, which contested the validity of his own title:—Held, that it was irregular. Bradley v. Munton, 15 Beav. 460.

9. A summons to vary the chief clerk's certificate, finding that a letter alleging a fact creating a good title, and offering to prove it in a short time, was the period at which a good title was first shown, dismissed with costs. Parr v. Lovegrove, 6 W. R. 709.

10. By the marriage settlement of one of the daughters of a testator, who had bequeathed them rent-charges, and also bequeathed legacies, which were charged on the realty, one of the rent-charges and part of a legacy were vested in the children of the marriage, some of whom were minors, subject to an exclusive power of appointment in the parents. The minors were defendants in a suit to carry the trusts of the will into execution, in which the Master found, upon the consent of the devisee and trustee of the minors, that the legacies and rent-charges were in equal priority, and that the finding was in the nature of a compromise, and beneficial to the minor. The report was confirmed by a final decree, and the lands of P., among others, were decreed to be sold to pay the several sums reported, in the first instance subject to the rent-charge to the daughters, and if sufficient was not produced to pay the debts and legacies, then discharged of the said rent-charges; and if the sum arising from such sale should be insufficient to pay the debts, legacies, and value of the rent-charges, and costs, the legatees and devisees of the rent-charges should abate ratably. The lands of P. were sold discharged of the rent-charges:—Held, allowing exceptions to the Master's report of good title, that the report and decree, being founded on a consent which the Court had no jurisdiction to take, were erroneous, and the title under it was bad. Weir v. Chamley, 1 Ir. Ch. R. 295.

Pending an appeal from the above decision, which was affirmed, a deed was executed by the father of the minors, appointing the rent-charge to a son who was adult when the consent was entered into, and was a party to it, and the legacy to him and two of the minors who had since come of age. The Lord Chancellor having, on the statement that the plaintiff could then show a good title, referred it back to the Master, to review his report, who found that a good title could be made by reason of said deed; semble, that the appointment, having been made on an emergency, and not bonâ fide for the end designed by the donor of the power, was void:—Held, that the title was too doubtful to be forced on a purchaser, and the exceptions to the Master's further report of good title were also allowed. Id.

1. If exceptions taken to report of good title are overruled, other objections cannot be made; but if allowed, and new abstract be delivered, other objections may be brought in. Brooke v. —, 4 Madd. 212.

2. Where plaintiff has accepted the title in so far as that he had proceeded to examine the deeds:—Held, that although in strictness the title had been accepted, yet, as the point had not been fairly raised on the pleadings, the plaintiff was allowed to bring in objections to the defendant's title. Pegg v. Wisden, 1 W. R. 43; 16 Jur. 1105; 16 Beav. 239.

3. If a decree for specific performance and for an inquiry for title is made, the purchaser may raise objections which he abandoned before the suit, and the Court will not add any inquiry on the subject to the decree, or direct the chief clerk to state special circumstances. Curling v. Austin, 10 W. R. 682; 2 Dr. & Sm. 129.

4. A purchaser in a suit for specific performance moved for a reference to chambers, to inquire whether the vendor could make a good title, and that the reference should be without prejudice to any question in the cause. There were two grounds of defence—that the vendor could not make a good title; and that if he could he had failed to do so in time:—Held, that the purchaser could not make such a motion without waiving the other objection. Reed v. Don Pedro North Del Rey Gold Mining Co., 9 Jur., N. S., 865; 32 L. J., Ch., 773; 8 L. T., N. S., 601; 2 N. R. 413. Affirmed 32 L. J., Ch., 773; 11 W. R. 935; 9 L. T., N. S., 132; 3 De G. J. & S. 593; 2 N. R. 473.

5. In granting a decree for the specific performance of an agreement to purchase the plaintiff's lands, where the defendant has been guilty of delay, and other acts amounting to a partial waiver of his originally unrestricted right to investigate the vendor's title, the Court will refuse an inquiry in the case of the items as to which there has been such acceptance, allowing it to proceed as to the rest. Corless v. Sparking, 8 Ir. R., Eq., 335.

6. The decree in a vendor's suit for specific performance directed the ordinary inquiry as to title, and the chief clerk found the title good:—Held, on summons to vary the certificate, that the purchaser could not then raise a valid objection waived before suit. Upperton v. Nicholson, 39 L. J., Ch., 758; 10 L. R., Eq., 228; 23 L. T., N. S., 843.

If a vendor wishes to prevent a purchaser raising objections in chambers on the reference for title on the ground that they have been waived before suit, he must guard himself by insisting at the hearing on a special decree based on such waiver. Id.

12. Report referred Back.

7. If, upon a question of title, the Master is satisfied with the evidence produced before him, but, upon the hearing of an exception to the report, the Court thinks the evidence not sufficient, the Court, upon the application of the vendor, will refer it back to the Master to review his report, in order to give the vendor an opportunity of producing further evidence. Andrew v. Andrew, 3 Sim. 390.

8. Upon the allowance of exceptions to a report approving of a title, the Court will, on the application of the vendor, refer it back to the Master to review his report, in order to give the vendor an opportunity of producing evidence to remove the objection. Egerton v. Jones, 3 Sim. 392.

An exception to a report in favour of the title having been, on argument, allowed, leave was given to the plaintiff, some time afterwards, to go again before the Master, for the purpose of bringing evidence to show that the objection which the Court had sustained was, under the circumstances, immaterial. S. C. 1 Russ. & M. 694.

9. After exceptions allowed to the Master's report of good title in a suit for specific performance, the practice is, not to discharge the purchaser, but, at the request of the plaintiff, to refer it back to the Master to review his report, and to inquire whether a good title can be made to the lands. Stewart v. Conyngham (Marquis), 1 Ir. Ch. R. 534.

10. Where the report is in favour of the title, the Court, on allowing exceptions to it, will give the vendor a reasonable time within which to remove the objection, although the exceptions and further directions were set down to come on together. Portman v. Mill, 1 Russ. & M. 696; 9 L. J., Ch., 193.

13. Practice on Taking Exceptions or Objections.

11. Where a party objects to a Master's report as to title, his proper course is to file exceptions, and set them down for hearing in the cause list. Harwood v. Bland, Fl. & K. 540.

A plaintiff cannot, after proceeding before the Master on a reference as to title, rely on previous acts of the purchaser as binding him to his purchase, notwithstanding a report of bad title. Id.

12. If exceptions taken to the report of a good title be overruled, other objections cannot be made; but if exceptions allowed, and new abstract of title delivered, other objection may be made. Brooke v. —, 4 Madd. 212.

13. Purchaser who is dissatisfied with deputy remembrancer's report of title of premises sold under decree, must move for leave to file exceptions thereto; otherwise, the motion to confirm may be made absolute in the first instance, but on moving, if prepared, he may show exceptions instantan. Eyton v. Dioken, 4 Price 303.

14. Where, in a suit by a vendor for specific performances, the Master reported in favour of the title, but the Court, on an exception taken by the purchaser, deemed the title doubtful, an order was made dismissing the bill without costs, but neither allowing nor disallowing the exception. Willow v. Bellairs, T. & R. 491.

15. Where on a reference as to title in a suit against the purchaser for specific performance, the Master reports in favour of the title, but the Court holds it to be so doubtful that the purchaser should not be compelled to take it, the bill may be dismissed without overruling the exceptions taken by the defendant to the report. Robinson v. Milner, 1 Hare 578. n.

1. Objections to chief clerk's finding as to title should be made and at once referred to the judge in chambers before certificate made, as the cheapest mode of deciding the question. Parr v. Lovegrove, 6 W. R. 201; 4 Jur., N. S., 600; 4 Drew. 170.

14. Other Matters.

2. The Master's report on reference of title will not be suspended to await the event of a suit commenced against the vendor for recovery of part of the estate; but the two suits may be heard together. Osbaldiston v. Ashew, 2 Jac. & Walk. 539.

3. On a reference of title in a suit by vendor, for the specific performance of a contract for the purchase of lands, the mere fact that a suit has been subsequently instituted, and is pending, in which part of the lands is claimed adversely to the vendor, is not a sufficient ground for reporting that a good title cannot be made. Osbaldiston v. Ashew, 1 Russ. 160.

4. Order to dismiss a bill for want of prosecution, not of course, pending a reference on motion, the title alone being in question. Biscoe v. Brett, 2 Ves. & B. 377.

5. A decree for reference of title, on a bill for specific performance, should contain a declaration that the contract ought to be specifically performed. Mole v. Smith, Jac. 495.

6. Court will not make absolute the common order nisi to dissolve injunction (granted to restrain purchaser from proceeding at law to recover part of the purchase-money paid by him in advance, the vendor not being able to make title, and there being outstanding incumbrances) without Master's report as to sufficiency of title, although objections are fully stated in defendant's answer. Church v. Leggett, 1 Price 301.

XII. Proceedings under Vendor and Purchaser Act 1874 (37 & 38 Vict., c. 78), sect. 9.

- I. Jurisdiction and Powers of Court, 7238.
- II. Action for Specific Performance barred, 7239.
- III. Practice and Appeal, 7239.
- IV. Costs, 7239.

I. JURISDICTION AND POWERS OF COURT.

7. The summary jurisdiction created by sect. 9 of the Vendor and Purchaser Act 1874, is not intended to apply to cases where there are questions of controverted fact, but is intended for the settlement of short points of law or construction. Re Popple, 25 W. R. 248.

8. On a summons under sect. 9 of the Vendor and Purchaser Act 1874, 37 & 38 Vict., c. 78, the parties are placed in the same position, and the Court has exactly the same powers, as in the case of a reference to chambers as to title in a suit for specific performance, and the same evidence is admissible as could be received on such a reference. Re Burroughes, 36 L. T., N. S., 778; 46 L. J., Ch., 528; 5 L. R., Ch. D., 601; 25 W. R. 520.

Evidence, therefore, by affidavit and cross-examination thereon, is admissible as to the vendor's title, and it is open to the purchaser to show that the vendor has no title. Id.

9. The Court has jurisdiction, upon a summons under sect. 9 of the Vendor and Purchaser Act 1874, to order the return of a purchaser's deposit with interest. Re Smith & Stott's Contract, 48 L. T. 512; 31 W. R. 411.

10. The tenant for life of lands, of which the tenant in tail in remainder was an infant, was desirous of making a voluntary grant of part thereof as a site for a church. An application was made to the Court under the Vendor and Purchaser Act 1874, sect. 9, for an opinion whether it was necessary, under the Places of Worship Sites Act 1873, sect. 1, to appoint a guardian to concur in the grant on behalf of the infant:—Held, that the Vendor and Purchaser Act 1874 did not apply to a voluntary grant, but that this defect might be cured by the admission of a contract for a nominal consideration. Re Salisbury (Marquis), 23 W. R. 824; 20 L. R., Eq., 527; 44 L. J., Ch., 541.

11. Where executors with a charge of debts on the testator's real estate sold it under conditions of sale, by one of which it was stipulated that the "purchaser shall send in his objections and requisitions (if any) in respect of the title, and all matters appearing on the abstract . . . within ten days from the delivery of the abstract, and in this respect time shall be of the essence of the contract, and in default of such requisitions and objections (if none), and subject only to such (if any), the purchaser shall be deemed to have accepted the title"—Held, that, although the ten days had expired, the purchaser was entitled to raise the objection, by summons under the Vendor and Purchaser Act 1874; that the vendors had no power to sell, on the ground that the will did not create a charge. Re Tanqueray-Williamson and Landau, 20 L. R., Ch. D., 465; 51 L. J., Ch., 434; 46 L. T. 542; 30 W. R. 801. Affirming 45 L. T. 181.

12. A purchaser makes the following requisition: "Is there to the knowledge of the vendors or their solicitors any settlement, deed, fact, omission, or any incumbrance affecting the property not disclosed by the abstract?"—Held, that neither the vendors nor their solicitors were bound under the Vendor and Purchaser Act 1874 to answer any part of the requisition. Re Ford and Hill, 10 L. R., Ch. D., 865; 48 L. J., Ch., 327; 27 W. R. 371; 40 L. T. 41.

13. Application under Vendor and Purchaser Act 1874 for rescission of contract by vendor. Re Jackson and Oakshott, 14 L. R., Ch. D., 851; 49 L. J., Ch., 523; 41 L. T. 719; 28 W. R. 794.

14. A testator, by his will, dated in 1845, devised and bequeathed his real and personal estate to his wife for life, subject to the payment of his debts, and from and after her decease to A. and B., "their heirs, executors, and administrators, upon trust to sell and dispose thereof at such times and in such manner as they my said trustees shall deem expedient." A. and B. both predeceased the tenant for life, B., the surviving trustee, having devised his trust estates. Upon the death of the tenant for life, B.'s devisees contracted to sell part of the real estate of the original testator:—Held, upon a summons under the Vendor and Purchaser Act 1874, B.'s devisees could make a good title, and one which the Court would force upon a purchaser. Osborne to Rowlett, 13 L. R., Ch. D., 774; 49 L. J., Ch., 310; 42 L. T. 650; 28 W. R. 365.

Observations on the duty of the Court to decide doubtful questions of title as between vendor and purchaser. Ib.

1. A requisition as to the competency of a married woman to give a discharge for a legacy, on the sale of land charged with the legacy, having been brought before the judge in chambers under the Vendor and Purchaser Act 1874, sect. 9, and afterwards adjourned into court, the judge decided the point, and, being of opinion that to make the unsuccessful party pay the costs would be to interfere with the beneficial operation of the Act, ordered each party to pay his own costs. Re Conard, 23 W. R. 606; 20 L. R., Eq., 179; 44 L. J., Ch., 384; 32 L. T., N. S., 682.

2. A testator after directing his debts to be paid, and setting apart certain sums to provide annuities for his two sons, devised and bequeathed all his real and personal estate to his four daughters to be equally divided between them; provided as follows—that the share of his wife should be divided after her death between his four daughters or the survivors and their children; and the testator appointed his wife and T. Davies, his executors, to act jointly in carrying out all the intentions of his will, and to invest his daughters' shares for their benefit and the benefit of their children:—Held, upon an application under the Vendor and Purchaser Act, that the legal estate in freeholds was vested in the executors who could make a good title to a purchaser. Davies to Jones, 24 L. R., Ch. D., 190; 52 L. J., Ch., 720; 49 L. T. 624.

3. On a summons under the Vendor and Purchaser Act 1874, the Court has power to direct a covenant to be inserted in a conveyance, and to settle the terms of the covenant. But, semble, the Court has no power in such a summons to determine a preliminary question of fact. Re Gray & Metropolitan Railway Co., 44 L. T. 567.

II. ACTION FOR SPECIFIC PERFORMANCE BARRED.

4. A purchaser who has availed himself of the provisions of the Vendor and Purchaser Act 1874, and has thereby obtained an order on summons which has disposed of every objection which he thought fit to raise, and under which the vendor has been ordered to make compensation, is not entitled to bring an action for specific performance of the contract for sale and damages. If a vendor does not comply with the order made on the vendor and purchaser summons, the purchaser should apply in chambers to get it enforced:—Action dismissed without prejudice to any proceedings plaintiff (the purchaser) might adopt under the Vendor and Purchaser Act 1874. Thompson v. Ringer, 44 L. T. 507; 29 W. R. 520.

III. PRACTICE AND APPEAL.

5. On a summons under the Vendor and Purchaser Act 1874, sect. 9, heard in chambers, judgment ought to be given in Court if the purchaser desires it. Coleman v. Jarrom, 25 W. R. 137; 35 L. T. 614.

6. The time within which an appeal can be brought from an order under the Vendor and Purchaser Act 1874, sect. 9, is twenty-one days. Re Blyth and Young, 13 L. R., Ch. D., 416.

IV. COSTS.

7. A requisition as to the competency of a married woman to give a discharge for a legacy, on the sale of land charged with the legacy, having been brought before the judge in chambers under the Vendor and Purchaser Act 1874, sect. 9, and afterwards adjourned into court, the judge decided the point, and, being of opinion that to make the unsuccessful party pay the costs would be to interfere with the beneficial operation of the Act, ordered each party to pay his own costs. Re Conard, 23 W. R. 606; 20 L. R., Eq., 179; 44 L. J., Ch., 384; 32 L. T., N. S., 682.

8. The question of costs as between vendor and purchaser where the title is disputed considered. Osborne to Rowlett, 13 L. R., Ch. D., 774; 49 L. J., Ch., 310; 42 L. T. 650; 28 W. R. 365.

I. IN GENERAL.

9. From the execution of the contract, the estate is in equity the property of the vendee, will descend, and is devisable as such. Seton v. Slade, 7 Ves. 274.

10. Where the equitable title is complete, a legal conveyance will be decreed, though the property may have been much enhanced or depreciated in value. Subsequent events will not in equity vary a contract fairly entered into. Revell v. Hussey, 2 Ball. & B. 287.

11. The purchaser, being in possession of part of the property under the arrangement, and being advised to rescind the contract, and assert his paramount title to the property, was not bound to give up possession before he could assert such paramount title, by making a formal entry on the property. Southcomb v. Exeter (Bishop), 6 Hare 213; 16 L. J., N. S., Ch., 378; 11 Jur. 725.

12. If a purchaser for a valuable consideration has not the legal estate properly conveyed to him, though the consideration cannot create a use by way of covenant to stand seised, yet the vendor will be considered a trustee for the purchaser. Polleasfen v. Griffith, 3 Atk. 273.

1. In the absence of express contract on the subject a person is to be treated as purchaser from the time at which, acting prudently, he could have taken possession, that is (usually though not universally) the time at which a good title was first shown. Up to the time at which the purchaser is to be treated as purchaser expenses and outgoings must be borne by the vendor, from that time by the purchaser. Carrodus v. Sharp, 20 Beav. 56.

Injunction against Re-sale, Waste, and Other Dealings with the Property pending Suit for Specific Performance.] See SPECIFIC PERFORMANCE, V.

II. DETERIORATION OR LOSS.

See also XXIV. IX. 1 post.

1. Right of Purchaser to Compensation or Abatement, 7240.
2. Liability of Purchaser, 7240.
3. Loss by Fire, 7241.

1. Right of Purchaser to Compensation or Abatement.

2. The amount of deterioration of an estate, pending a suit for specific performance, having been ascertained by an issue, the purchaser was allowed it out of his purchase money which he had paid into court, under an order, with interest from the time when he paid in his money. Ferguson v. Tadmam, 1 Sim. 530.

3. Distinction between a purchase and a lease for lives; as time is not essential in a purchase, any delay may be compensated, either by receipt of the rents and profits, or, in case a title cannot be made out, by interest on the deposit; but in a lease depending on lives, where time is most essential, delay does not admit of any compensation. Ormond v. Anderson, 2 Ball. & A. 370.

4. Deterioration of the estate, arising from delay in completing the purchase, is not a ground for rescinding the contract, but may be the subject of an allowance to the purchaser. Lord v. Stephens, 1 Y. & Coll. 222.

5. When the completion of a purchase is delayed through the default of the vendor in possession, and the property has diminished in value, or has been deteriorated by permissive waste, the purchaser is entitled to compensation. Regent's Canal Co. v. Ware, 23 Beav. 575.

6. Completion of contract being delayed for three years by difficulties in title, vendor is accountable for deterioration of the land during that period. Forster v. Deacon, 3 Madd. 394.

7. There is no instance of a court of equity compelling a purchaser who contracted for the purchase of a demesne with ornamental timber, where ornamental timber has been cut down between the contract and possession given, or title shown, to complete the purchase. Ornamental timber is essentially different from ordinary timber. Magennis v. Fallon, 1 Moll. 590.

8. Agreement for the sale of a lease, "with possession on the 1st December, the rent to commence at Christmas." Possession was not given until the 31st January, through the default of the vendor:—Held, that the purchaser was entitled to compensation, and an inquiry was directed. Gedye v. Montrose (Duke), 26 Beav. 45.

9. Where, between the date of the contract and conveyance, any deterioration to the property occurs from accident, without the fault of either party, the loss falls on the purchaser. But where, without any improper neglect or delay, a purchase could not be completed for three years, and the death of a trustee for sale occasioned the expense of a fine on a new admittance, although by the contract the conveyance was to be at the expense of the purchaser:—Held, that the extraordinary expense of the fine should be borne by the trust estate. Paramore v. Greenslade, 1 Sm. & G. 541; 17 Jur. 1064.

10. The completion of a contract having been delayed for six years, the property became deteriorated by dilapidations:—Held, that as this delay in completion was occasioned by the default of the vendor, the loss by dilapidation must be set off against the interest on the purchase money. Phillips v. Silvester, 20 W. R. 406. Affirmed 42 L. J., Ch., 225; 8 L. R., Ch., 173; 21 W. R. 179; 27 L. T., N. S., 840.

11. The case of the purchase of a fee-simple is distinguishable from that of a life estate with respect to compensation for casualties. Vesey v. Elwood, 2 Con. & L. 47; 3 Dr. & War. 74; Fl. & K. 667; 5 Ir. Eq. R. 184.

12. A., on the 4th December 1857, at a sale by auction, entered into a contract for the purchase of a manor of which there were fifty-nine copyhold tenants. The 4th February 1858 was the day fixed for the completion of the purchase. On the 23rd January 1858 F., one of the copyhold tenants, died, and between that day and the 4th February the vendor admitted F.'s widow and her two sons to be tenants of the manor. A. filed a bill for specific performance of the contract, and prayed that an abatement out of the purchase money, as and for compensation for the loss of fines, might be made, and because the value of the manor had been depreciated by the admission of younger lives in lieu of the deceased tenant. To a bill the defendant demurred generally, and the demurrer was allowed, with costs. Cuddon v. Tve, 4 Jur., N. S., 579.

2. Liability of Purchaser.

13. Deterioration arising from the agreement between intended purchaser and tenant of vendor being misunderstood by tenant, purchaser held liable to the loss. Harford v. Purrier, 1 Madd. 532.

14. In August 1828 the plaintiff agreed to sell a property to the defendant. The contract was to be completed on the 9th October following, and the purchaser was to be entitled to possession up to that time; and if the purchase should not then be completed, the purchaser was to pay interest at 5 per cent. from that day until full payment. The abstract having been delivered, all parties seemed to agree that a good title was not shown; and in November 1828 the time for completion was enlarged to the 21st February 1829, when the purchase money was to be paid without interest, and the defendant let into possession; and if the plaintiff should fail to make a good title, the deposit was to be returned with interest at 4 per cent. from the 9th October. The defendant refused to complete, and in 1829 brought an action for his deposit, and the plaintiff filed his bill for specific performance. The defendant had not taken possession, and great dilapidation had occurred. It was decided that a good title had been shown in August 1828. A decree was made against the defendant with costs; and it was determined that he should sustain the loss by dilapidation, and pay interest at 4 per cent. on his purchase money from the time of filing the bill. Minchin v. Nance, 4 Beav. 332.

1. The vendor of a share in a co-partnership business filed a bill against the purchaser, who had taken possession, charging that he had grossly mismanaged the property and destroyed its value, and praying that he might be declared to have accepted the title, and might be decreed to perform the contract specifically; the Court was of opinion that the title had not been accepted, and as a good title was not shown, a specific performance could not be decreed:—Held, that upon a record so framed no accounts or inquiries could be directed as to the defendant's possession and management of the property, with a view to ascertain whether any and what sum ought to be paid or compensation made by him to the plaintiff. Stevens v. Guppy, 3 Russ. 171; 6 L. J., Ch., 164.

3. Loss by Fire.

2. It is against natural justice that any one should pay for a bargain which he cannot have: as if A. articles to buy a house, and the house is burnt down before the day of payment, A. is not bound to pay the money. Stent v. Bailis, 2 P. W. 220.

3. Contract for sale of houses, which from defects in title, could not be completed on the day fixed: the treaty was proceeded in on proposal to waive objections on certain terms: the houses being burnt before conveyance, the purchaser is bound, if he accepted title; the circumstance of vendor suffering insurance to expire on the day on which the contract ought originally to have been completed without notice, makes no difference; a reference was, therefore, directed to Master to inquire whether the proposal was accepted or acquiesced in on behalf of the purchaser. Paine v. Meller, 6 Ves. 347.

[Right to Insurance Policies.] See INSURANCE, I. VI. 2.

III. RENTS AND PROFITS.

See also XXIV. IX. 3 post.

1. General Principles, 7241.
2. Liability of Purchaser, 7241.
3. Account against Vendor, 7242.

1. General Principles.

4. Where, in consideration of sale, there is no stipulation as to interest, and purchaser completes his part, he pays 4 per cent. interest, and takes rents and profits; but if rents and profits value under that rate, he pays no interest, and vendor takes them. Eadaile v. Stephenson, 1 Sim. & S. 122.

5. Purchaser is entitled to interest on his deposit, and to costs at law and in equity until the vendor has made his title good: but vendor is entitled to subsequent costs, and may enforce the contract, if his title be good, when the report is made; the rents belong to the vendor till his title is made good, and afterwards the purchaser must take to the rents, and pay interest on his purchase money, till the principal is discharged. Pinoko v. Curteis, 4 Bro. C. C. 329. And see Id. 333. n.

6. A statement in conditions of sale that a purchaser is to be led into the receipt of the rents and profits from a certain day, must be construed to mean ordinary rents and profits, and not rents reserved on leases for lives. Hughes v. Jones, 10 W. R. 139; 5 L. T., N. S., 408; 8 Jur., N. S., 399; 31 L. J., Ch., 83.

2. Liability of Purchaser.

7. On motion by vendor against purchaser in possession for reference to set occupation rent, title not being completed, order was accordingly made, and that interest at 5 per cent. on deposit should, under circumstances, be deducted from rent. Smith v. Jackson, 1 Madd. 618.

8. Where a party had contracted to purchase, and had been eight years in possession of premises to which the vendor was unable to make a good title, and refused either to abandon the agreement or accept such title as the vendor could give, having paid no part of the purchase money and no rent; the Court, upon a bill filed by the vendor for relief, directed the agreement to be delivered up to be cancelled, and the rents and profits received by the purchaser to be accounted for, and ordered the purchaser to pay the costs of the suit. King v. King, 1 Myl. & K. 442.

9. On a bill by a vendor for specific performance, where the purchaser had, in 1814, entered into possession under the agreement, and, pending the suit, continued in possession until 1823, the plaintiff, in consequence of a defect in the title, failing in his attempt to compel the performance of the contract, the Court refused to decree, under the prayer for general relief, an account of rents and profits against the purchaser, though he had stated, by his answer, that he was willing to pay a fair rent. Williams v. Shaw, 3 Russ. 178; 3 L. J., Ch., 157.

10. By an agreement entered into with executors for the purchase of a leasehold public-house, and the goodwill and licences connected with it, the household furniture, stock in trade, and other effects upon the premises were to be taken by the purchaser at a valuation, and possession was to be delivered up to him on the 29th September 1821. The valuation was made, but on the 29th September the purchaser alleging that there was a defect in the title to the leasehold refused to perform his contract: the executors filed a bill for specific performance, but in the meantime remained in possession of the house, and carried on the business:—Held, that though the executors were entitled to a decree for specific performance, and though the purchaser had done wrong in refusing to perform the contract, he could not be made answerable for the trade which had been carried on in the premises since September 1821; that he could not be compelled to take that portion of the stock in trade on the premises at the time of the decree, which was not there at the date of the agreement, but had been substituted for such parts of the old stock as had been consumed in the usual course of the business; that the purchaser ought to be charged with rents and taxes and other outgoings paid by the executors since September 1821, and with interest on the same as paid by them; that the purchaser was not entitled to any occupation rent, or other allowance for the use of the house and fixtures by the executors during the period that elapsed after the 29th September 1821. Dakin v. Cope, 2 Russ. 170.

1. An admission by a defendant, in his answer, that he alone has been in the possession or receipt of the rents and profits of an estate since a time therein specified, will not, under a decree directing him to account for the rents received by him since that time, preclude him from showing, in the Master's office, that a part of such rents was not received by him, but was paid by the tenants to other parties. Howell v. Howell, 2 Myl. & C. 478; 1 Jur. 492.

The account of rents given against a purchaser for value, who, after being in possession, is evicted by a party having better title, ought not to extend to such rents as, without his default or neglect, might have been received, if no special case of fraud is made against him. Id.

The decree for such an account ought to contain a direction for just allowance. Id.

2. The vendor of a share of a co-partnership business filed a bill against the purchaser, who had taken possession, charging that he had grossly mismanaged the property, and destroyed its value, and praying that he might be declared to have accepted the title, and might be decreed to perform the contract specifically; the Court was of opinion that the title had not been accepted; and as a good title was not shown, a specific performance could not be decreed:—Held, that, upon a record so framed, no accounts or inquiries could be directed as to the defendant's possession and management of the property, with a view to ascertain whether any and what sum ought to be paid or compensation made by him to the plaintiff. Stevens v. Guppy, 3 Russ. 171; 6 L. J., Ch., 164.

3. Sale in 1808. The present suit was instituted in 1822, and in 1823 the principal defendant answered the bill. No further proceedings in the cause were had until 1839, when the suit was revived:—Held, that as the circumstances were such, that the purchase could not be sustained, the plaintiff was entitled to relief, notwithstanding the lapse of time. But costs were refused to both parties in consequence of the great delay; and an account of the rent was directed only from the filing of the bill of revivor and supplement in 1839. Thornhill v. Glover, 3 Dr. & War. 195.

4. A bill to set aside, on the ground of lunacy and fraud, a conveyance of an estate by a party claiming the fee-simple. The lunacy was established, but it appeared that the plaintiff was only entitled to a life estate in the property:—Held, that the plaintiff (and his personal representative after his death) was entitled to an account of the rents and profits during the life of the plaintiff, as against the parties in possession under the conveyance. Price v. Berrington, 7 Hare 394.

3. Account against Vendor.

5. The title appearing on the abstract not being satisfactory, and the purchaser, for that reason, not having taken possession, the vendor to account for the rents received, or which, without his wilful default, might have been received. Wilson v. Clapham, 1 Jac. & Walk. 36.

6. By conditions of sale, the purchase money was to be paid in May, and, if not paid, from any cause whatever, interest was to be paid till the purchase was completed, and the purchaser to be let into possession from the quarter-day next preceding the day of payment. Payment was made in December:—Held, that the purchaser, paying interest from May, was entitled to the rents from the 25th March. Nicholson v. Nicholson, 5 L. J., N. S., Ch., 51.

7. By an agreement entered into with executors for the purchase of a leasehold public-house, and the goodwill and licenses connected with it, the household furniture, stock in trade, and other effects upon the premises, were to be taken by the purchaser at a valuation, and possession was to be delivered up to him on the 29th September 1821. The valuation was made, but on the 29th September the purchaser, alleging that there was a defect in the title to the leasehold, refused to perform his contract; the executors filed a bill for specific performance, but in the meantime remained in possession of the house, and carried on the business:—Held, that though the executors were entitled to a decree for specific performance, and though the purchaser had done wrong in refusing to perform the contract, he could not be made answerable for the trade which had been carried on in the premises since September 1821: that he could not be compelled to take that portion of the stock in trade on the premises at the time of the decree, which was not there at the time of the agreement; but had been substituted for such parts of the old stock as had been consumed in the usual course of the business: that the purchaser ought to be charged with rent and taxes, and other outgoings paid by the executors since September 1821, and with interest on the same so paid by them: and that the purchaser was not entitled to any occupation, rent, or other allowance, for the use of the house and furniture by the executors, during the period that elapsed after the 29th September 1821. Dakin v. Cope, 2 Russ. 170.

8. When the purchase is completed, the purchaser is entitled to the rents and profits till possession given, and vendor to purchase money with interest: and if by neglect of vendor no rents, etc., have been received, he will be liable for what he might have received while purchaser was out of possession. Ackland v. Cuming or Gaisford, 2 Madd. 28.

1. A vendor who has to account to the purchaser for rents and profits, from the time fixed for completion, is not, unless a special case be made, liable to account for sums which he might have received but for his wilful default, nor entitled to an inquiry as to repairs or lasting improvements. Sherwin v. Shakspear, 5 De G. M. & G. 517; 2 Eq. Rep. 957; 2 W. R. 66; 18 Jur. 843; 23 L. J., Ch., 898; 1 W. R. 460.

In fixing occupation rent to be paid by a vendor, in such circumstances it is not according to the course of the Court to insert in the decree a provision respecting income tax, any just allowance in that respect being comprehended in the general and usual words. Id.

The established forms of decrees ought not to be lightly departed from. S. C. 2 W. R. 668.

2. Though the Court decreed specific performance of an agreement to let the plaintiff into a trade (contra 9 Ves. 357), it refused to direct an account of the profits from the time the plaintiff ought to have been admitted; his remedy for that having been at law. Anon., 2 Ves. 630.

3. On a bill by a purchaser for specific performance of a contract for the sale of an estate, a vendor, who, during fifteen years, had retained possession of the whole estate and of one-third of the purchase money was, under the circumstances, charged with interest on one-third of the rents and profits. Burton v. Todd, 1 Swan. 255.

4. In July 1867 L. sold to a railway company a house in which he was carrying on the business of a victualler, the terms being that the purchase money was to be paid on the 25th March 1869, or at such earlier time as the company should choose, possession to be given on payment, they paying 5 per cent. interest in the meantime; and he was to be their tenant at a given rent, the tenancy not to be determined before the 25th March 1869, unless the company, after three months' notice, paid the money sooner, but to be determinable on the 25th March 1869, by a week's notice. The interest and rent were paid up to the 25th March 1869. L. gave due notice to determine the tenancy on that day; but the company not having the purchase money ready, he refused to give up possession, and in April filed a bill for specific performance. On the 18th November 1869 a decree for specific performance, with a declaration that the title had been accepted, and an order for payment of the purchase money, with interest from the 25th March 1869, was made; and an inquiry was added whether, having regard to the circumstances and conduct of the parties, the company was entitled to any and what allowance in respect of L.'s occupation of the premises after the 25th March 1869:—Held, that the company was not entitled to any allowance by way of occupation rent. Leggott

v. Metropolitan Railway Co., 5 L. R., Ch., 716; 18 W. R. 1060.

5. An agreement for purchase of real estate provided that the purchaser should be entitled to the possession or rents from the 25th March, and in the event of the purchase not being completed on that day, the purchaser should pay interest on the unpaid balance till completion. Disputes having arisen the purchase was not completed for several years, and the vendor refused to allow the purchaser to take possession in the meantime, but suffered the estate to remain unoccupied, and to fall into decay:—Held, that the purchaser was entitled to charge the vendor with rents and profits which, without wilful default, he might have received, and also with deterioration, and to set off what might be found due against his purchase money and interest. Phillips v. Silvester, 42 L. J., Ch., 225; 8 L. R., Ch., 173; 21 W. R. 179; 27 L. T., N. S., 840. Affirming 20 W. R. 406.

6. Houses described in the particulars as in the respective occupations of specified under tenants, and as let to Messrs. J., "at the very low rent of 50*l.* per annum, who have received notice to quit," at a day past, but with a subsequent written permission to occupy on the same terms as before until the tenements are sold, were contracted to be sold, subject to a condition, that the purchaser should be entitled to the rents from a specified day. On completion after that date, the purchaser claimed to be allowed a rent at the rate of 160*l.* a year, the sum which the under-tenants paid the tenant; on the ground that, in allowing the tenant to continue in possession at the rent of 50*l.* a year after the date of the contract for sale, the vendors were guilty of wilful default. On a claim by the vendors to enforce specific performance:—Held, that the purchaser not having required the vendors to turn the tenant out, they were not guilty of wilful default in allowing him to remain at the lesser rent; and specific performance was decreed, the plaintiffs accounting only for the lesser rent. Crosse v. Beaumont (Duke), 5 De G. & Sm. 7.

7. In May a person agreed to purchase an estate, including hay and growing crops, for 9,000*l.* The purchase was to be completed in June, when the purchaser was to be let into possession, and if not, then he was to pay interest on the purchase money. By a subsequent agreement, November was substituted for June. The contract was not completed until the following February, and in the meantime the vendors sold the hay and used the garden produce:—Held, that under the altered contract, the purchaser was not entitled to this hay or produce. Webster v. Donaldson, 34 Beav. 461; 11 Jur., N. S., 404; 13 W. R. 515; 12 L. T., N. S., 69.

Held, also, that if he was entitled to the produce of the crops, his remedy was by action. Id.

IV. IMPROVEMENTS OR INCREASED VALUE.

1. Allowance for to Purchaser when Sale set Aside, 7244.
2. Allowance for to Vendor, 7244.
3. On Sale of Reversion, 7244.

1 Allowance for to Purchaser when Sale set Aside.

1. A purchaser who has laid out money in bonâ fide improvements on lands purchased by him upon a sale which was invalid but not exactly fraudulent, is entitled to an allowance for sums so expended by him. Stepney v. Biddulph, 13 W. R. 576; 12 L. T., N. S., 176.

Therefore, where a railway company authorised to purchase from tenants for life lands for the purpose of building warehouses, and to re-sell such portions of the land as should not be required for that purpose, treated with A. (the tenant for life for the time being) for the purchase of certain settled estates, and, before the sale was completed, contracted, with A.'s knowledge, to re-sell part of the land to B. and C., upon an understanding (which was carried into effect) that B. and C. should put up certain buildings and improvements thereon; and a new tenant for life and the remaindermen filed a bill to set aside the sale:—Held, that the sale must be set aside, but that, in the absence of fraud, B. and C. were entitled to the re-payment of the sums so expended in improvements, with interest at 5½. per cent. from the death of the last tenant for life. Ib.

2. There may be a degree of unfairness in obtaining articles for the purchase of an estate, for which this Court will not set them aside, but will refuse its aid to carry them into execution; and if the party who obtained such articles had been in possession, and made lasting improvements, he shall be allowed for them on consenting to deliver up the articles, and account for the profits; otherwise if he goes to law and fails there. Savage v. Taylor, Forrest. 234.

3. Pending a suit against an agent for re-conveyance of an estate purchased of his principal, defendant sold part of the property, after which a decree was made for re-conveyance with the usual accounts. After that a supplemental bill is filed against the purchasers, to which the personal representatives of the original defendant (who had died during the original suit) were made parties, as being interested in the account against the purchasers. In this suit a decree was made for re-payment to the purchasers of their purchase money by the representatives of the original defendant, and for an allowance to them for the substantial repairs and improvements. Trevelyan v. White, 1 Beav. 588.

4. In estimating lasting improvements, old buildings pulled down, if incapable of repair, to be valued as old materials only. Robinson v. Ridley, 6 Madd. 2.

5. Where the title is fraudulent, equity, in giving relief, will reimburse the party in possession for permanent improvements. Shine v. Gough, 1 Ball & B. 444.

6. If an assignee purchase part of the bankrupt's estate, and improve, the estate must be re-sold, and put up at the price given by the assignee, adding the sum laid out in improvements. Exp. Hewitt, Re Johnston, 2 Mont. & A. 477.

2. Allowance for to Vendor.

7. There is no consideration between the purchaser and the vendor's creditor to entitle the latter to recover from the former the amount of the repairs done to the subject matter of the purchase. Rattenbury v. Fenton, 3 Myl. & K. 505; 8 L. J., N. S., Ch., 203.

8. In a decree for specific performance directing an account of rents against a vendor who has remained in possession pending the discussion upon the title, and directing an occupation rent to be fixed, it is irregular (where no special case has been made for it) to insert, as a matter of course, a direction that he shall be allowed for the expenses of needful repairs, or for income tax, in fixing the occupation rent. Sherwin v. Shakspear, 18 Jur. 843; 23 L. J., Ch., 898; 5 De G. M. & G. 517; 1 W. R. 460; 2 W. R. 668; 2 Eq. Rep. 957.

3. On Sale of Reversions.

9. In December 1812 A. agreed to become the purchaser of a reversionary estate. B., the vendor, agreed to make out a good title by the 1st May next, from which time A. was to be entitled to the rents and profits. Part of the purchase money was paid at the time of the agreement, and the remainder was to be paid on the 1st May, A. further agreeing to pay, at the same time, all such further sums as should be awarded by indifferent persons in respect of any increase in the value of the estate, by the deaths of any persons on whose lives leases had been granted. The purchase was not completed for a considerable period. In a suit for specific performance by the vendor, it had been referred to the Master to inquire as to whether vendor could make a good title, and report how much the value of the estate had been increased by the dropping of lives:—Held, affirming the judgment of the Court below, that the form of the order was correct, and that the vendor was not entitled to the benefit of any increase in the value of the estate from the wearing of lives. Brooke v. Champenonne, 4 Cl. & F. 589; 9 Bli. N. S. 199.

10. Quære, on what principle the increased value of an estate arising from the dropping of lives, between the commencement and completion of the contract, is to be calculated. Townsend v. Champenonne, 3 Y. & Coll. 506.

Rights to Interest on Sale of.] See XIV. IX. 2 post.

V. VENDOR'S DUTY TO LET PREMISES.

11. When the vendor of a farm subject to a yearly tenancy finds that, without default on the part either of himself or the purchaser, the purchase cannot be completed on the appointed day, and that the tenancy will determine before actual completion, it is his duty as trustee for the purchaser, whether the tenancy is determined in the ordinary course by landlord or tenant, or on a notice to quit given by the vendor at the request and for the convenience of the purchaser, to re-let the farm on a yearly tenancy so as to prevent it going out of cultivation, unless he obtains an indemnity from the purchaser against all risk arising from its remaining unlet. Egmont (Earl) v. Smith, 46 L. J., Ch., 356; 6 L. R., Ch. D., 469.

VI. RIGHT OF PURCHASER TO TAKE POSSESSION.

1. The rule that a purchaser shall have possession as from the quarter-day receding the sale, does not apply to a colliery, which is an article of trade, the profits accruing daily; the proper period is the month or week in which the purchase takes place, according to the usual course of taking the account. Wren v. Kirton, 8 Ves. 502.

2. A mortgagee purchased part of the mortgaged estate. His principal and interest, calculated up to the 24th March, exceeded the purchase money. He was let into possession from the preceding Christmas. Bates v. Bonnor, 7 Sim. 427.

3. Where the vendor of a piece of land, of which he was himself in occupation, contracted to sell the land under conditions of sale, by one of which it was provided that the purchaser should be entitled "to the possession or the receipt of the rents and profits" of the land from a specified date:—Held, that, on the construction of the written agreement, the vendor was bound to give possession to the purchaser on the date specified, and that no effect could be given to the words referring in the alternative to the receipt of the rents and profits; and that evidence was not admissible to prove an alleged contemporary parol agreement by which the vendor was to retain possession of the land to a later date, paying the purchaser in the meantime, by way of rent, interest on his purchase money. Anker v. Franklin, 53 L. T. 317.

4. A contract for sale of a house provided that the purchaser should be entitled to immediate possession upon depositing the purchase money, but the purchaser was not to be considered as accepting the vendor's title:—Held, that this clause had the same operation as s. 85 of the Lands Clauses Act (8 & 9 Vict., c. 18), and the purchaser was entitled, upon depositing the purchase money, not only to take possession but to pull down the house, that being the object for which the purchase was effected. Bolton v. London School Board, 7 L. R., Ch. D., 766; 26 W. R. 549; 47 L. J., Ch., 461.

1. Forfeiture or Return of and Interest.

5. Vendor filed a bill for specific performance, but not being able to make a good title, his bill was dismissed, and he was ordered to return the deposit with interest. Anson v. Hodges, 5 Sim. 227.

6. If a bill by a purchaser for specific performance be dismissed, the Court cannot order the deposit to be returned; but secus if the bill be filed by the vendor. Aylett v. Ashton, 5 L. J., N. S., Ch., 71. See Bonnet (College) v. Cary, 3 Bro. C. C. 390.

7. In dismissing a bill for specific performance by a vendor, the Court has jurisdiction to order a return of the deposit. Turquand v. Rhodes, 57 L. J., Ch., 830; 18 L. T., N. S., 844; 16 W. R. 1074.

8. Relief against forfeiture of the deposit, upon putting the other party in the same situation as if the contract had been performed at the time agreed. Moss v. Matthews, 3 Ves. 279.

9. The Lord Chancellor's jurisdiction as to acts done in the bankruptcy is not determined by the superseding of the commission; so, after the commission is superseded, a petition will lie on behalf of a purchaser of the estates put up to sale by the assignees, for the repayment of the deposit. Exp. Fector, Buck 428.

10. A. articles to buy land, and pays part of the purchase money; afterwards he enters into several orders of court to pay the residue by such a day, or, in default thereof, to give up the articles, and lose what he had before paid. Court will relieve, though these articles have not been complied with. Vernon v. Stephens, 2 P. W. 66.

11. A condition, that if any objection or requisition should be made which the vendor should be unable or unwilling to remove, it should be lawful for him to rescind the contract, and that in that case the purchaser should be entitled to a return of his deposit without interest, but should not be entitled to any costs or damages, does not entitle the vendor, after making numerous fruitless attempts to remove an objection made by a purchaser desirous of being discharged, to return him his deposit only, but the vendor must then pay interest upon the deposit and the costs of the purchaser. McCulloch v. Gregory, 1 Kay & J. 286; 24 L. J., Ch., 246; 3 W. R. 231; 3 Eq. Rep. 495.

12. Power of the Court to order the return of the deposit where the vendor's bill is dismissed, he having given an undertaking. Royon v. Paul, 28 L. J., Ch., 255.

13. Where there is no contract, or no contract which can be enforced, a purchaser is entitled to a return of his deposit. Casson v. Roberts, 31 Beav. 613; 32 L. J., Ch., 105; 7 L. T., N. S., 588; 1 N. R. 9; 8 Jur., N. S., 1199; 11 W. R. 102.

Therefore, where one contracted by parol for the purchase of lands, and paid a deposit, and afterwards declined to complete, his right to a return of the deposit constituted a sufficient debt to support a creditor's suit against the representative of the vendor. Ib.

The purchaser having been guilty of delay in making his claim, interest on the deposit was not allowed. Ib.

1. A bill by a vendor for specific performance being dismissed, and the purchaser not wishing for a return of the deposit unless it was ordered to be returned with interest:—Held, that the Court ought not to order a return of the deposit, but to leave the purchaser to his remedy at law. Rede v. Oakes, 2 De G. J. & S. 518; 11 Jur., N. S., 229; 13 W. R. 420; 5 N. R. 391.

2. Where the vendor's bill for specific performance is dismissed, on the ground of his laches in instituting the suit, and without any decision on the question of title, the Court will not order the deposit to be returned to the purchaser, but will leave both parties to their legal remedies. Southcomb v. Exeter (Bishop), 6 Hare 225; 12 Jur. 744.

3. One of the terms of an agreement was, that the contract should be void if the purchaser's counsel should be of opinion that a marketable title could not be made by a certain time. The counsel being of that opinion, a bill by the purchaser for a specific performance with a compensation, was dismissed with costs, and an application afterwards made by the plaintiff that his deposit might be set off against the defendant's costs, and the surplus (if any) paid to him, was refused with costs. Williams v. Edwards, 2 Sim. 78.

4. N. contracted to purchase an estate, and a bill was filed against him for specific performance. He then became bankrupt on his own petition, having brought an action to recover his deposit, which was restrained on the terms of the deposit being brought into court. The assignees were then made parties to the suit, and subsequently disclaimed in respect of the contract. The usual inquiry was directed as to title, and a good title certified:—Held, the assignees and bankrupt appearing, that all proceedings must be stayed, and the deposit paid out to the party paying it in, without prejudice to any proceeding under the Bankrupt Act 1849, s. 146. Kell v. Nokes, 14 W. R. 908; 14 L. T., N. S., 697.

5. In the particulars of sale of leaseholds, the premises were stated to be sold "by order of the executors;" they were in fact sold by the administrator de bonis non of the testator durante absentia of his next of kin. The sale was by auction, and the purchaser paid a deposit, but refused to complete on discovering the nature of the vendor's title:—Held, dismissing a bill for specific performance, that although the effect of the grant during the lifetime of the absent principal would have been perfectly valid, yet inasmuch as the principal might at the time of the sale have been dead, the title was not such as a purchaser was bound to accept, and the deposit with interest was ordered to be refunded. Webb v. Kirby, 7 De G. M. & G. 376; 3 Jur., N. S., 73; 26 L. J., Ch., 145. Reversing 3 Sm. & G. 333; 2 Jur., N. S., 996; 25 L. J., Ch., 872; 4 W. R. 770.

6. A contract for sale of superfluous land of a railway company which had been conveyed by the company to the vendor contained a stipulation that the purchaser should assume and admit that everything (if anything was necessary) was done by the company to enable them to sell the land as surplus land, and should not call for or require production of any evidence to that effect; and a further stipulation that if the purchasers should fail to comply with the terms of the agreement the deposit should be forfeited to the vendor. The land was not situate in a town or used for building purposes. In the course of the investigation of the title the purchaser discovered that the prior owners had not waived their right of pre-emption; and as the vendor refused to remedy the defect, the purchaser brought an action claiming a return of the deposit and damages. The vendor then sold the land to one of the prior owners:—Held, that the purchaser was bound by the stipulations to admit the title of the company to sell to the vendor; and that as he had refused to abide by that stipulation he had broken the contract, and could not maintain the action, or claim a return of his deposit. Best v. Hamand, 12 L. R., Ch. D., 1; 48 L. J., Ch., 503; 27 W. R. 742.

7. S., being in the occupation of a public-house, contracted with W. to sell to him the residue of the lease, of which twelve and a half years at least were unexpired. W., the day after signing the contract, by which he agreed to take possession on the 15th April 1878, paid a sum as a deposit to S.'s agent. The abstract of title showed that S.'s lessors had a right of option to determine the lease at the end of five years, and W. at once rescinded the contract, and required the return of the deposit money. S. refused to repay the money, and W. issued a writ in his action on the 10th April to recover it:—Held, that W.'s objection to the title was valid; that he was not bound to wait till the 15th April before issuing the writ; and that he was entitled to repayment of the deposit money with interest. Weston v. Savage, 10 L. R., Ch. D., 736; 48 L. J., Ch., 229; 27 W. R. 654.

8. Where, in a suit by a vendor for specific performance, it was certified that a good title was not deduced, the Court ordered a return to the defendant of his deposit money, with interest at 4 per cent., and declared the defendant entitled to a lien on the estate of the same, and also for his costs, with liberty to apply; and, subject thereto, dismissed the bill. Turner v. Marriott, 3 L. R., Eq., 744; 15 L. T., N. S., 607; 15 W. R. 420.

9. When a purchaser by a decree in a suit for specific performance was decreed to pay the purchase money within a specified time, and failed to do so, the Court, on the application of the vendor, ordered the contract to be rescinded, and stayed all proceedings in the suit with costs, to be paid by the purchaser, and refused to make an order for the return of the deposit to him. Dunn v. Vere, 23 L. T., N. S., 432; 19 W. R. 151.

10. Where a purchaser became bankrupt after signing an agreement for the purchase of certain property sold by auction by order of the Court, and his assignees refused to complete the purchase:—Held, that the assignees were not entitled to the deposit which had been paid by the bankrupt on signing the agreement, though the conditions of sale did not stipulate for the forfeiture of the deposit in the event of the purchaser making default.

Depree v. Bedborough, 3 N. R. 187; 4 Giff. 479; 33 L. J., Ch., 134; 9 Jur., N. S., 1317; 12 W. R. 191; 9 L. T., N. S., 533.

Semble, where a purchaser makes default, no express stipulation is necessary to entitle the vendor to the deposit. Id.

1. When a contract for sale goes off by default of the purchaser, the vendor is entitled to retain the deposit. Eap. Barrell, Re Parnell, 10 L. R., Ch., 512; 44 L. J., Ch., 138; 23 W. R. 846; 33 L. T., N. S., 115.

By a contract for sale of real estate it was stipulated that a portion of the purchase money should be paid immediately, and the residue on the completion of the contract. There was no stipulation as to the forfeiture of the deposit in case the purchase went off through the purchaser's default. After the title had been accepted the purchaser became bankrupt, and the trustee disclaimed the contract under the Bankruptcy Act 1869, s. 23, and called upon the vendor to repay the deposit:—Held, that the vendor was entitled to retain the deposit. Id.

2. Injunction against Suits for.

2. Purchaser entering into possession, knowing of objections to abstract, but continuing to negotiate, cannot break off contract: an injunction will lie against his proceeding at law to recover back purchase money; but otherwise if he had declared off, on delivery of abstract. Ward v. Jeffery, 4 Price 294.

3. Court will not make absolute the common order nisi to dissolve injunction (granted to restrain purchaser from proceedings at law to recover part of the purchase money paid by him in advance, the contract being impracticable on the ground of want of title and outstanding incumbrances) without Master's report as to sufficiency of title, although objections are fully stated in defendant's answer. Church v. Leggett, 1 Price 301.

4. Auctioneer, on motion of vendor, ordered to pay deposit into Court, minus his charges and expenses; and purchaser restrained by injunction from proceeding in his action against the auctioneer for the deposit, in which action he had obtained a judgment to the whole amount of the deposit. Annesley v. Muggridge, 1 Madd. 593.

5. Motion for an injunction to restrain an action against the auctioneer for the deposit, refused where there had been a great delay on the part of the vendor. Lloyd v. Collett, 4 Bro. C. C. 469.

6. Vendor proceeding in treaty beyond the time for completing the contract, and the vendor having brought an action and withdrawn his record on finding he could not support it, not having got in a judgment amounting to half the purchase money, and the purchaser having brought an action for his deposit and obtained a verdict; an injunction to restrain his proceeding was refused. Wood v. Bernal, 19 Ves. 220.

7. Injunction granted to stay action against the auctioneer for the deposit, although the estate sold was represented as freehold, with leasehold adjoining, and turned out to be almost all leasehold; and although there had been great delay in making out the plaintiff's title. Fordyce v. Ford, 4 Bro. C. C. 494.

8. Injunction to stay proceedings in an action brought by a purchaser to recover the amount of his deposit, refused, the description in the printed particular of sale being calculated grossly to deceive as to the real nature and value of the estate sold. Stewart v. Alliston, 1 Meriv. 26.

9. There is no general rule of practice to the effect that the Court will not, in a suit for specific performance by a vendor, restrain an action by the purchaser to recover the deposit. Kell v. Nokes, 32 L. J., Ch., 785; 11 W. R. 978; 8 L. T., N. S., 824.

A purchaser of property by private contract having paid his deposit, considered the title defective, and brought an action for the recovery of such deposit. The vendor then filed a bill and moved for an injunction to restrain such action:—Held, that a court of equity is the proper tribunal to try a question of title, and that on bringing the deposit into court, the injunction must be granted. Id.

3. Payment by Cheque.

10. The custom of auctioneers to accept, on sales of large properties, a cheque in lieu of cash for the deposit, is reasonable, and a mortgagee vendor was held to be justified in acting on it, and not to be guilty of negligence in the conduct of the sale, though the cheque was dishonoured. Farrer v. Lacy, 25 L. R., Ch. D., 636; 53 L. J., Ch., 569; 50 L. T. 121; 32 W. R. 196.

In such a case a mortgagee, who has endeavoured to sell under his powers, is entitled to add the costs of the abortive sale to his security. Id.

4. Other Cases.

11. The Court will not compel vendor to pay deposit money into court, though he retains possession of the estate, if delay in completion of contract is caused by purchaser. Wynne v. Griffith, 1 Sim. & S. 147; 1 L. J., Ch., 110.

12. On a contract for purchase, a part of the purchase money was paid as "deposit" to the vendor's solicitor, who paid it away at the desire of the vendor, without the concurrence of the purchaser. This created a difficulty in completing the purchase, as a mortgagee of the estate would not join in the conveyance without payment to him of the deposit. In a suit by the purchaser for specific performance, the solicitors were declared liable to make good the money. Wiggins v. Lord, 4 Beav. 30. S. C. nom. Wiggins v. Ford, 2 Jur. 786.

13. On the occasion of a sale of a freehold estate it was agreed that the purchase money should be paid in railway bonds, and the purchaser deposited with and assigned to A., who alleged himself to be the solicitor of the vendor, one of such bonds in part payment of the purchase money. The contract turned out to be a fraud on the purchaser and went off, and on the purchaser applying to A. for the return of the deposited bond, he was informed that A. had placed it in the hands of B. to secure a debt due from himself to B. B. had no notice of the terms upon which A. held the bond:—Held, in a suit by the purchaser against B. to restrain him from dealing with the bond, that the deposit and assignment of the bond by the purchaser to A. for the purpose mentioned did not make A., in the events which happened, a constructive trustee for the purchase, and that as B. was a bond fide purchaser of the bond for value without notice, he could not be restrained from dealing with it. Ashwin v. Burton, 11 W. R. 103; 9 Jur., N. S., 319; 32 L. J., Ch., 196; 7 L. T., N. S., 589.

II. PAYMENT OF PURCHASE MONEY.

1. In General, 7248.
2. To Solicitor, 7249.
3. To Auctioneer. See XXIV. v. 1 post.
4. Indorsed Receipt. See DEEDS, III. 8.
5. Rescission of Contract for Non-payment after Decree in Suits for Specific Performance. See SPECIFIC PERFORMANCE, XV. 1.
6. On Exercise of Options to Purchase. See XXIII. post.

1. In General.

1. Where conveyance is executed to purchaser, which expresses purchase money to have been paid, estate does not pass by the conveyance in equity till money actually paid, although receipt for same is indorsed on conveyance. Winter v. Anson (Lord), 1 Sim. 444.

2. Where upon the sale of a ship to A. and B., in which A. was to be interested in one-third and B. in two-thirds, and upon the execution of the bill of sale, although expressing that B. had paid two-thirds of the purchase money, only one-third was actually paid, and A.'s acceptances given for the remainder, which were, from A. becoming bankrupt, dishonoured:—Held, that B. remained liable for the payment of the unpaid purchase money, notwithstanding the form of the bills given for the amount. Lynn v. Chaters, 2 Keen 521.

3. In an agreement for the purchase of an estate, the purchaser stipulated to pay the residue of the purchase money on a day specified, "upon the vendors making a good title or otherwise; if such title should not then be completed, upon his executing a bond to complete such title, and to convey the estate as soon as the estate could be completed;" the vendor is bound to show a good title; and till a good title is shown, the purchaser, though he had entered into possession, is not bound to pay the purchase money. Clarke v. Fausa, 3 Russ. 320. S. C. sub. nom. Clarke v. Fausa, 6 L. J., Ch., 17.

4. A. sold to B., and covenanted against himself and all claiming under him; B. secured the purchase money, and was evicted by a title paramount to A.'s title; B. was relieved from the payment of the purchase money. Anon., 2 Ch. Ca. 19.

5. When eviction entitles a purchaser to relief. Maynard v. Moseley, 3 Swan. 661.

Different consequence of eviction before and after payment of purchase money. Ib.

6. A company, incorporated by an Act of Parliament for making a dock, agreed for the purposes of its undertaking to purchase certain land for 4,000*l.*, of which 2,000*l.* was to be paid at once, the balance at a future date. The agreement contained a proviso empowering the vendor, on default in the payment of the balance or any part of it by a day named, to re-enter and re-possess the land without any obligation to repay any portion of the purchase money received:—Held, that this was a penalty from which the Court would relieve the purchaser. Re Dagenham Thames Dock Co., Hulst's claim, 43 L. J., Ch., 261; 8 L. R., Ch., 1022.

7. In an action by a vendor whose purchase money was to be paid by instalments, some of which were not yet due, for specific performance of his contract and a declaration of his lien, liberty was given to apply in respect of future instalments as they accrued due. Nives v. Nives, 15 L. R., Ch. D., 649; 49 L. J., Ch., 674; 42 L. T. 832; 29 W. R. 302.

8. A trader had, before adjudication,—the purchaser having had no notice of any act of bankruptcy,—contracted to sell a leasehold property, and had received a deposit in respect of the purchase money. After the adjudication had been made, but before it had been advertised, the purchaser, having no notice of the adjudication, paid the remainder of the purchase money to the bankrupt:—Held, that the trustee in the bankruptcy could not be compelled to assign the lease to the purchaser except upon the terms of his paying the purchase money. Exp. Rabbidge, Re Pooley, 8 L. R., Ch. D., 367; 26 W. R. 646; 38 L. T., N. S., 663.

9. When vendors having agreed to sell the entirety of property could make a title to one moiety only:—Held, that the purchaser was entitled to have such moiety conveyed to him on payment of one moiety of the purchase money. Bailey v. Piper, 18 L. R., Eq., 683; 43 L. J., Ch., 704; 31 L. T. 86; 22 W. R. 943.

Account. Rests.] 10. Where payments have been made by vendee at different times on account of purchase, all exceeding the interest due at the time of such payments, and the decree in suit by vendor for specific performance directs accounts to be taken of what is due to the plaintiff for principal and interest in respect of purchase, rests are always made therein. Griffith v. Heaton, 1 Sim. & S. 271; 1 L. J., Ch., 197. S. P. Rome v. Dodson, 1 L. J., Ch., 183.

Security for.] 11. On sale of estate, part of the consideration was to be an annuity, but it was not settled how it should be secured; the Court ordered it to be secured on the estate as well as by bond and judgment, which latter was the mode proposed by purchaser. Remington v. Deverall, 2 Anstr. 550.

Proof of Payment.] 12. After twenty years' possession, a purchaser shall not be put to prove the payment of his bond for the purchase money. Anon., Mos. 37.

13. Receipt for purchase money indorsed not conclusive evidence in favour of the purchaser; and upon other evidence:—Held, that the payment was disproved. Hankins v. Gardner, 2 Sm. & G. 441.

To Agent acting under Power of Attorney.]

1. The owner of an estate, residing abroad, gave a power of attorney to his agent in this country to sell the estate and give a discharge for the purchase money. The agent sold the estate, and the conveyance sent abroad and executed was by the principal. Semble, the agent in England cannot give an immediate good discharge for the purchase money, by reason of the uncertainty whether the principal may be alive at the time of the payment. Bailey v. Collett, 18 Beav. 179; 2 W. R. 216; 23 L. J., Ch., 230.

2. To Solicitor.

2. Although a purchaser has not the right in every case to insist upon the vendor being present to receive his purchase money, yet should the requisition be made under the circumstances which justify it, the vendor should comply with the request. Viney v. Chaplin, 4 Jur., N. S., 619; 27 L. J., Ch., 434; 6 W. R. 562; 1 L. T. N., S., 142. Affirming 4 Drew. 237; 6 W. R. 302.

In any case where a vendor does not attend personally to receive his money, a purchaser has a right to insist upon a written authority to pay to the solicitor. Id.

A vendor's solicitor has no authority by virtue of his office to receive the purchase money, although he may have possession of the deed of conveyance, with the receipt endorsed or signed by his client.

3. On a sale by auction of shares in a ship, part of a bankrupt's estate, one of the conditions was that the purchase money should be paid to the solicitor of the assignees on or before a certain day, when the purchase was to be completed, and the purchaser to have possession and a bill of sale; the purchaser paid part of the purchase money to the solicitor before the day appointed for the completion of the purchase, and had possession, but not a bill of sale:—Held, that the payment and the execution of the bill of sale ought, in pursuance of the condition, to have been contemporaneous; that the assignees, not having received the money from the solicitor, or executed the bill of sale, would not be restrained from taking proceedings to recover possession of the ship; and that the purchaser was not entitled to a decree for specific performance of the contract, by the execution of the bill of sale by the assignees, upon payment to them of the balance of the purchase money. Hughes v. Morris, 9 Hare 636. And see S. C. 16 Jur. 603; 21 L. J., Ch., 761.

4. It is well settled that it is not within the ordinary business of a solicitor to receive purchase money belonging to his client, or money due to him on mortgage, nor to receive money from him for the purpose of investment generally, and one partner is not liable for the misapplication of money so received by another without his privity. Bourdillon v. Rooke, 27 L. J., Ch., 681.

Secus, where the money is received for the purpose of being invested on a particular security. Id.

5. A. purchased an estate from B., and on the completion one solicitor acted for both parties, and the purchase money was paid into his hands. Afterwards the purchaser was defeated by C., who had a paramount mortgage. The purchaser presented a petition against the solicitor, asking payment by the solicitor out of the purchase money of the losses occasioned, or that he might indemnify the petitioner. The petition was dismissed with costs, the Court holding, first, that it had no jurisdiction to award compensation or damages in such a case; and, secondly, that the money having come to the hands of the solicitor as agent of the vendor, and not of the petitioner, it could not interfere. Tylee v. Webb, 14 Beav. 14; 15 Jur. 1023.

6. The 56th section of the Conveyancing Act 1881 does not authorise vendors who are trustees with a power of sale to require the purchaser to pay the purchase money to their solicitor on production of the deed of conveyance duly executed in cases where, before the Act, they could not have required the purchaser to pay the purchase money to their solicitor under a special authority. Trustees of real estate, with a power to sell and give receipts, sold the estate. The purchasers required that the vendors should attend in person to receive the purchase money, or should authorise the purchasers to pay it into a bank to the joint account of the vendors. The vendors insisted that the money should be paid to their solicitor, on his producing the conveyance duly executed. They gave no special reason why the money should be paid to the solicitor, but relied on the 56th section of the Conveyancing Act 1881. A summons having been taken out under the Vendor and Purchaser Act:—Held, (dissentiente Bagallay, L. J.), that the 56th section had no application, and that the purchasers had a right to insist on their requisition. Re Bellamy & Metropolitan Board of Works, 24 L. R., Ch. D., 387; 52 L. J., Ch., 870; 48 L. T. 801; 31 W. R. 900. Reversing 52 L. J., Ch., 89.

III. RISK AND INCREMENT.

7. Vendor, resisting an application by the purchaser for payment into court of the deposit in the hands of the vendor's agent, charged with a loss by the agent's failure. Fenton v. Browne, 14 Ves. 144.

8. When purchase money is agreed to be paid, and a conveyance made at a given time, and disputes arise as to title, and the purchaser proposes to vendor to lay out the purchase money in Exchequer bills till wanted, but vendor returns no answer, and money is so laid out, the purchaser is at the risk, and the vendor is entitled to the money, with 4 per cent. interest. Ackland v. Cuming, or Gaisford, 2 Madd. 28.

9. Effect of a deposit by vendee, with notice to vendor to stop or determine the rate of interest, not as a tender and appropriation, transferring the risk as to the principal: therefore, upon an investment in stock by the vendee, the title not being ready, and the vendor having notice, but returning no answer, the advantage by a rise, as the loss by a fall, is the vendee's. Roberts v. Massey, 13 Ves. 561.

10. Money paid in as earnest at a sale of an estate, and ordered to be laid out in the funds, is part payment of the purchase money, and the vendor must abide by the rise or fall of the funds. Poole v. Rudd, 3 Bro. C. C. 49.

1. A deposit made on opening a bidding having been laid out in the public funds, this deposit is considered as part of the purchase money paid, and therefore the depositor is not entitled to the dividends accruing between the time of the deposit and the completion of the purchase; but only interest on the deposit at 4 per cent. D'Oyley v. Powis (Countess), 1 Cox 206; 2 Bro. C. C. 33.

2. The deposit made upon opening a bidding is considered as part of the purchase money paid, although, in the event of the depositor not being reported the best bidder, it must be returned to him; and therefore, where the deposit is laid out in the public funds, which rise between the time of the deposit and the purchase being completed, the estate will have the benefit of the rise. Ambrose v. Ambrose, 1 Cox 194.

3. Purchase money invested under order of Court, obtained by purchaser without notice to all parties, is at risk of purchaser; but investment is at risk of estate, if order for investment is made on motion, of which all parties had notice. McCann v. Forbes, 1 Hog. 18.

4. Pending a dispute respecting the title to land contracted to be sold, and to avoid the question as to the interest of the purchase money, the vendor gave the purchaser the opportunity of investing the purchase money in consols, in the joint names of the vendor and purchaser, provided the investment was made by a certain day, and the purchaser made the investment accordingly:—Held, that the vendor, having proposed the investment, could not have charged the purchaser with the loss if the funds had fallen, and that the vendor was entitled to the benefit accruing from the funds having risen. Burroughes v. Browne, 9 Hare 609; 22 L. J., N. S., Ch., 148.

A purchaser cannot throw upon a vendor the risk of an investment of the purchase money; and if he makes a payment to or on account of the vendor in respect of the purchase money, the money paid becomes the property of the vendor, so that the purchaser can claim no benefit of any investment which the vendor may make. Id.

5. If a purchaser agrees to pay, on a specified day, for an estate in 3 per cent. consols, taken at a given value, but, in consequence of intervening difficulties, the purchase cannot be completed on that day, and he continues to hold the stock; he holds it as a trustee for the vendor, and, when the purchase is completed, must pay by a transfer of the stock at a value fixed, unless the vendor desired him distinctly to convert it into money, so as to have thrown the risk of keeping it unsold upon the purchaser. Puddicombe v. Bythesea, 1 L. J., Ch., 186.

6. A mortgagor contracted to sell the estate, and one of the conditions was, that the purchaser should pay a deposit to the auctioneer. The mortgagee afterwards concurred and adopted the contract. A loss having occurred by the insolvency of the auctioneer:—Held, that, as between the purchaser and mortgagee, the latter stood in the shoes of the vendor, and must bear the loss. Rowe v. May, 18 Beav. 613.

7. A sale in chambers under a decree in a partition suit having been declared invalid on the ground that the sale took place before the certificate in an answer to the inquiries directed by the decree was made:—Held, that the vendors could not avail themselves of a condition enabling them, if unwilling, or unable for any reasonable cause to remove or comply with any objection or requisition by the purchaser, to rescind on repayment of the deposit without interest and without costs on either side; and that the discharged purchaser was entitled to the stock arising from his deposit, which had been paid into court and invested, with the dividends thereon, or the actual amount of deposit and the produce, with costs, charges, and expenses. Powell v. Powell, 19 L. R., Eq., 422; 44 L. J., Ch., 311; 23 W. R. 482; 32 L. T., N. S., 148.

8. The plaintiff contracted to sell land to the defendant, for the purposes of their works, for 4,069*l.* The parties subsequently agreed that 4,000*l.* should be deposited in a bank in their joint names pending the completion of the purchase, and that the defendants should enter into possession and pay the plaintiff interest:—Held, that the loss sustained in consequence of the failure of the bank subsequent to the deposit must be borne by the plaintiff. St. Paul v. Birmingham, Wolverhampton, & Stour Valley Railway Co., 1 Eq. Rep. 274; 1 W. R. 494; 17 Jur. 1176; 11 Hare 305.

IV. RETURN OF.

9. I. S. bought an estate of A., who gave him a bond to suffer a recovery within three years, or to return him his money upon a re-conveyance. A. tendered a recovery, but before it was suffered, a third person made a title to the land, whereupon I. S. brought his bill for the purchase money, but the Court could not relieve him, for having consented to take the bond, he must resort to A.'s covenant against incumbrances. Maynard's case, 2 Freem. 42.

10. A. agrees with B., lord of the manor, to purchase a copyhold for two lives, such as A. shall name; A. pays 200*l.* part of the purchase money, and was to pay the rest in three months. A court is held; three months pass. B. died suddenly, and the money came to one who was not bound by the contract. The executors of B. to refund the 200*l.* Ambrey v. Keen, 1 Vern. 472.

11. A. purchased an estate from B., and on the completion one solicitor acted for both parties, and the purchase money was paid into his hands. Afterwards the purchaser was defeated by C., who had a paramount mortgage. The purchaser presented a petition against the solicitor, asking payment by the solicitor out of the purchase money of the losses occasioned, or that he might indemnify the petitioner. The petition was dismissed with costs, the Court holding, first that it had no jurisdiction to award compensation or damages in such a case; and, secondly, that the money having come to the hands of the solicitor as agent of the vendor, and not of the petitioner, it could not interfere. Tylee v. Webb, 14 Beav. 14; 15 Jur. 1023.

1. If an estate be conveyed away in the lifetime of the party to whom it belonged, and he dies within forty days from the execution of the conveyance, his heir may recover it from the purchaser. Under such circumstances, if the heir has received the purchase money, he cannot have the estate restored without refunding the price paid for it. But where the price has been paid to other persons, the purchaser cannot call upon the heir to repay it, but must recover it as he can from those to whom it has been given by the deceased. Marrett v. Jennes, 1 Knapp 103.

2. A vendor and his solicitor fraudulently, and in the absence of the purchaser's solicitor, obtained from a purchaser (who was desirous of completing the purchase, and had entered into possession) the purchase money and covenants for the production of title deeds, while the title as to a part of the purchased premises was still under investigation. On a bill filed by the purchaser against the vendor and his solicitor, it was:—Held, that the plaintiff was entitled to have the contract rescinded, and his purchase money, together with all costs, charges, and expenses (including auction duty), repaid to him, and to have the deeds of covenant executed by him delivered up to be cancelled. Berry v. Armistead, 2 Keen 221; 5 L. J., N. S., Ch., 370.

3. Purchaser entering into possession knowing of objections to abstract, but continuing to negotiate, cannot break off contract, and injunction will lie against his proceeding at law to recover back purchase money. Secus, if he had declared off, on delivery of abstract. Ward v. Jeffery, 4 Price 294.

4. The defendant, having sold and conveyed land to the plaintiff, suggesting that he had a title, and it afterwards appearing that he was not entitled to part, the same being an encroachment from a common, though no eviction had happened, or was threatened, a bill lies to set aside the conveyance, and for a return of the purchase money and all expenses. Edwards v. McLeay, Coop. 308.

5. A. purchases an estate from B., and pays part of the purchase money; it is afterwards discovered that B. has no title to it, or interest in it, except that, under the trusts of a will, he is to have a share of the money arising from the sale of it:—Held, that a court of equity cannot give the purchaser any relief beyond directing an account of B.'s share of the proceeds of the estate. Williams v. Hignett, 6 L. J., Ch., 125.

6. A. purchases from B. a share in a concern, and gives for it a price which he understands to be four times the amount of the yearly profits, but which, in consequence of a mistake made by B. in the estimate of the profits, turns out to be more than that; the deed of assignment purports to be for an absolute sum; there is evidence that B. never intended to sell for less than that absolute sum, and no evidence to the contrary:—Held, that a court of equity will not decree the sum, which A. alleges to be overpaid, to be refunded to him. Stewart v. Stuart, 1 L. J., Ch., 61.

7. Where a purchaser was not bound to take property agreed to be sold to him without compensation, and the compensation could not be ascertained:—Held, that he was entitled to the return of his purchase money with interest at 4 per cent., and to a lien on the estate for the amount. Westmacott v. Robins, 4 De G. F. & J. 390.

1. In What Cases.

8. In a suit by a vendor, to establish a lien upon the estate for the amount of the unpaid purchase money, the Court decreed that the plaintiff, notwithstanding the recital in the deed of conveyance of the payment of the consideration money, and the receipt indorsed on it, was entitled to an inquiry whether the full amount of the consideration money was paid; and to a lien as an unpaid vendor, on the lands, for so much of the consideration money as should, upon inquiry, appear to be unpaid, with interest from the date of the conveyance. Croly v. Callaghan, 5 Ir. Eq. R. 25.

Held, that the onus of proving the payment of the consideration money lay upon the defendant (the assignee of the vendee); and that neither the recital nor the receipt was any evidence of the fact. Id.

9. If a vendor who knows that the purchase money is trust money suffers one of the trustees to retain part of it, without the knowledge of the co-trustees, or the cestui que trust, he has no lien on the estate for the part so retained. White v. Wakefield, 7 Sim. 491; 4 L. J., N. S., Ch., 195.

10. Testator had, according to his usual course of dealing with the bankrupts, sold them land, allowing the purchase money to remain as a charge, and made them advances for the purpose of building, such advances, as well as the purchase money, being stated in a written memorandum to be a charge upon the land. The executors and devisees in trust of the testator, being authorised by the will to continue the same course of dealing, sold other land to the bankrupts, leaving the purchase money unpaid, and made advances to them for the purpose of building, without taking any memorandum:—Held, these latter advances, as well as those made by the testator, and the purchase money in each case, were a charge upon the lands. All claim to costs as to the claim of the executor was waived by them. Exp. Linden, Re Baker, 1 M. D. & De G. 428; 10 L. J., N. S., Bk., 22; 5 Jur. 57.

11. A son conveys an estate to his father nominally as purchaser, but really as a trustee, and in order that the father, who was in better credit than the son, might raise money upon it by way of mortgage, for the use of the son; the father died shortly afterwards, and before any money was raised, having, by a will, subsequent to the conveyance, made a general devise of all his real estate: the case is within the Statute of Frauds, and parol evidence is not admissible to prove the trust; but the son has a lien on the estate as vendor for the apparent consideration, no part of which was paid. Leman v. Whitley, 4 Russ. 423; 6 L. J., Ch., 152.

1. The lien of a vendor upon the land and title deeds until payment of the purchase money does not apply to a conveyance to the purchaser executed by some, but not all of the parties, where the contract has gone off by the vendor's default; and if there be any lien on such a conveyance, it is vested in the purchaser as security for his deposit. Owenham v. Esdail, 3 Y. & J. 263.

2. A. sells lands to B., who afterwards becomes bankrupt, part of the purchase money not being paid. A. shall not be bound to come in as a creditor under the statute; but the lands shall stand charged with the money unpaid, though no agreement for that purpose. Chapman v. Tanner, 1 Vern. 267, 268.

3. A trustee for the sale of a brewhouse and plant (the cestuis que trustent being infants) contracts to sell them, and lets the purchaser into possession:—Held, that the purchaser was in possession within the statute 21 Jac. 1, c. 19, and therefore the plant, upon his becoming bankrupt, passed to his assignees without being subject to the lien for the purchase money. Earp, Dale, Buck 365.

4. Upon the bankruptcy of the purchaser of timber felled, quære, whether the vendor has a lien, and can prove for the deficiency. Erp. Gwynne, 12 Ves. 379.

5. A firm of solicitors was employed in May 1853 by trustees to sell copyhold estates; the purchaser also employed them to complete the purchase. They had money of his in their hands more than sufficient to pay the purchase money, and the purchaser directed the solicitors to apply it and pay the purchase money. The purchaser was let into possession in October 1853. In December following the vendors executed a deed of covenant to surrender the estates purchased, and they signed the receipt for the purchase money indorsed thereon. The title deeds were retained by the solicitors, who deposited them in a box containing other title deeds and documents of the purchaser. The steward of the manor was one of the firm of solicitors, and in 1854 he admitted the purchaser to the land purchased. The purchase money was not actually paid by the solicitors, as directed by the purchaser, but they settled accounts with the vendors, the trustees, and gave them credit for the purchase money as received by them; and after allowing costs and charges, there was a balance due to the parties. Four-fifths of this balance were paid to four of the five cestuis que trustent entitled to the proceeds of the sale. The solicitors retained the other one-fifth in their hands, and upon the remaining cestui que trust requiring payment of his share the solicitors stated that the purchaser had not paid the purchase money, and that they had retained the deeds which the trustees required them to hold as security. The solicitors did not pay the purchase money, and in 1856 became bankrupt. Upon a bill by the vendors:—Held, that they were entitled to a lien upon the estate for the balance of the purchase money remaining unpaid. Wrost v. Davies, 27 L. J., Ch., 635; 25 Beav. 369; 4 Jur., N. S., 396; 1 L. T., N. S. 261.

6. A trustee for the sale of certain real estate entered into a contract for the sale of a house and garden at the price of 300*l.*, the house being insured for 100*l.* Before the time fixed for completion of the contract the house was burnt down, and the trustee received the insurance money. The property was subsequently conveyed to the purchaser, who paid 200*l.* to a mortgagee of the property, and the insurance money was taken to cover the rest of the price. The trustee subsequently absconded without accounting for any of the money, and it was discovered that the mortgage which had been paid off by the purchaser was fraudulent. On a bill by one of the cestuis que trustent:—Held, that the purchaser having had notice of the fraudulent nature of the mortgage, the plaintiff was entitled to a lien on the property for the whole amount of the purchase money, including the insurance money. Poole v. Adams, 4 N. R. 9; 32 L. J., Ch., 639; 12 W. R. 683; 10 L. T., N. S., 287.

7. A vendor agreed with a trustee for a joint-stock company about to be formed for the sale of the goodwill, plant, etc., of his business for 8,000*l.*, to be paid as to 6,000*l.* in cash and 2,000*l.* in paid-up shares. After the formation and registration of the company he executed an assignment to them, whereby, after reciting that he had agreed for the sale of the property to the company for 6,000*l.* to be paid as thereafter mentioned, that is to say, 50*l.* per cent. of all sums of money to be received by the company on the sale of shares, and 50*l.* per cent. upon all money borrowed; in consideration of the sum of 6,000*l.*, to be paid to him in manner thereinbefore stated, he assigned the property to the company. 2,000*l.* worth of paid-up shares were all allotted to him. No other shares were ever subscribed for, and no money borrowed. The company was wound up, and the only assets consisted of the proceeds of sale of the property conveyed to them by the vendor, and which had been resold:—Held, that the vendor had no lien on those proceeds for his unpaid purchase money, his lien being excluded by the nature of the contract. Re Brentwood Brick and Coal Co., Rowe's claim, 46 L. J., Ch., 554; 36 L. T., N. S., 343; 4 L. R., Ch. D., 532; 25 W. R. 481.

2. Sale in Consideration of an Annuity.

8. A. conveys an estate to B., in consideration of B.'s entering into the covenant contained in the deed, for paying an annuity to A., and 3,000*l.* to certain persons, in the event of his (B.'s) marrying:—Held, that the covenants did not create a lien on the estate. Clarke v. Royle, 3 Sim. 499.

1. A. agreed to sell an estate to B. for an annuity, and B. was to pay off a mortgage to which the estate was subject. Accordingly, B. executed a deed, by which he granted the annuity to A., and covenanted to pay it; and by a conveyance of even date but executed after the annuity deed, after reciting the agreement and the annuity deed, A. and the mortgagee, in pursuance of the agreement, and in consideration of the annuity having been so granted as aforesaid, and of the payment of the mortgage money, conveyed the estate to B. The annuity afterwards became in arrear:—Held, that A. had no lien on the estate for the annuity. Buckland v. Poole, 13 Sim. 406.

2. A vendor, in lieu of the price of 3,000*l.*, agreed to accept an annuity of 100*l.* a year for the joint lives of her intended husband and herself, in case the purchaser should so long live, the purchaser engaging that his personal representatives should, within three months after his decease, in certain events, but not in all events, pay a further sum of 3,000*l.* This is not a security, but a substitution for the price; and the lien of the vendor on the land is discharged. Parrot v. Sweetland, Myl. & K. 655.

3. Sale and assignment of a life interest in leaseholds in consideration of a weekly sum to be paid to the vendor during her life, with a covenant by the purchaser, for himself, his heirs, executors, and administrators, to make the weekly payment to the vendor, and to repair and insure the premises, and otherwise perform the covenants in the lease:—Held, that the vendor was entitled to a lien on the life interest in the leaseholds, which was the subject of the assignment for the weekly payment. Matthew v. Bowler, 6 Hare 110; 16 L. J., N. S., Ch., 239; 11 Jur. 297.

4. A. conveyed her life estate in lands to her son, in consideration of his paying the rent of a house for her, and supplying her with sufficient hay and corn, and he covenanted to pay the rent and supply the hay and corn:—Held, that A. had a security on the estate conveyed in the nature of a vendor's lien for the purchase money, for the performance of the son's contract. Richardson v. M'Cauley, Beat. 457.

5. An agreement to purchase land for an annuity for the life of the vendor, to be a charge on the land, and to be paid quarterly, entitles the vendor, not only to the security of the charge, but to the covenant of the purchaser for the payment of the annuity. Bower v. Cooper, 2 Hare 408; 11 L. J., N. S., Ch., 287; 6 Jur. 681.

6. An agreement to sell land, in consideration of an annuity for three lives "to be secured by bond":—Held, that the annuity was not a lien upon the land. Dixon v. Gayfer, 6 W. R. 52; 1 De G. & J. 655; 27 L. J., Ch., 148; 8 Jur., N. S., 1157; 1 L. T., N. S., 162. Affirming 4 W. R. 39; 25 L. J., Ch., 189; 1 Jur., N. S., 1180; 21 Beav. 118.

Where there was an agreement for the sale of an equitable estate in land, in consideration of the grant of an annuity for three lives and the life of the survivor, to be secured by bond, but neither the bond was given nor the estate conveyed in the lifetime of the purchaser; upon the annuity falling into arrear:—Held, that the principle of vendor's lien did not apply, the agreement evidencing a contrary intention; but that the Court would not decree a conveyance of the legal estate until a valid and sufficient bond should be given to secure the arrears and future payments of the annuity. 8 C. 3 Jur., N. S., 1157.

Whether a vendor who takes an annuity as the consideration has or has not a lien on the estate for his annuity must depend upon the particular circumstances of each case. Id.

7. The rule of equity, in the case of an implied lien, is that the vendor's lien is not gone by accepting a bond or note from the purchaser, nor will a receipt for the purchase money discharge the lien till the money be paid; this rule is strengthened when applied to the case of an express charge. Saunders v. Leslie, 2 Ball & B. 514.

A vendor accepting a mortgage on another estate is not conclusive evidence against the existence of his lien on the estate sold. Id. 515.

8. Whether the vendor of an estate, who takes bond of the vendee for the purchase money, has a lien on the land for the purchase money remaining unpaid. Blackburne v. Grogan, 1 Cox 90; 1 Bro. C. C. 420.

9. If the vendor parts with his estate, and takes a security for the consideration money, there is no reason for a court of equity to assist him against the creditors of the purchaser. Fawell v. Heelis, Ambl. 726.

10. Vendor's lien on the estate for the purchase money not discharged by taking bills of exchange, which are to be considered, not as a security, but as a mode of payment. Grant v. Mills, 2 Ves. & B. 306.

11. A. purchases lands of B., and mortgages back those lands for part of the purchase money, and gives a note to B. for 200*l.*, the other part thereof; A. devises those lands to be sold for payment of his debts: this 200*l.* note, though for part of the purchase money, shall not be preferred to other debts, nor be a charge on the land in equity. Bond v. Kent, 2 Vern. 281.

12. Vendor has a lien on estate sold for purchase money, though he has received bills from purchaser in payment of same, and though purchaser becomes bankrupt. Exp. Peake, 1 Madd. 346.

13. Vendor held not to have waived his lien on the estate sold, by taking the promissory note of the vendee, and receiving its amount by discount. Exp. Loaring, 2 Rose 79.

14. Purchase money unpaid is prima facie a lien on the lands sold; and if a security is taken for that money, it lies on the vendee to show that the vendor agreed to rest on that security, and to discharge the lands. A note passed by a vendee to a trustee for part of the purchase money, out of the amount of which nominally as purchaser, but really as a trustee, and in order that the father, who was in better credit than the son, might raise money upon it by way of mortgage, for the use of the son; the father died shortly afterwards, and before any money was raised, having, by a will, subsequent to the conveyance, made a general devise of all his real estate: the case is within the Statute of Frauds, and parol evidence is not admissible to prove the trust; but the son has a lien on the estate as vendor for the apparent consideration, no part of which was paid. Leman v. Whitley, 4 Russ. 423; 6 L. J., Ch., 152.

1. The lien of a vendor upon the land and title deeds until payment of the purchase money does not apply to a conveyance to the purchaser executed by some, but not all of the parties, where the contract has gone off by the vendor's default; and if there be any lien on such a conveyance, it is vested in the purchaser as security for his deposit. Ovenham v. Eddale, 8 Y. & J. 263.

2. A. sells lands to B., who afterwards becomes bankrupt, part of the purchase money not being paid. A. shall not be bound to come in as a creditor under the statute; but the lands shall stand charged with the money unpaid, though no agreement for that purpose. Chapman v. Tanner, 1 Vern. 267, 268.

3. A trustee for the sale of a browhouse and plant (the cestuis que trustent being infants) contracts to sell them, and lets the purchaser into possession:—Held, that the purchaser was in possession within the statute 21 Jac. 1, c. 19, and therefore the plant, upon his becoming bankrupt, passed to his assignees without being subject to the lien for the purchase money. Exp. Dale, Buck 365.

4. Upon the bankruptcy of the purchaser of timber felled, quære, whether the vendor has a lien, and can prove for the deficiency. Exp. Gwynne, 12 Ves. 379.

5. A firm of solicitors was employed in May 1853 by trustees to sell copyhold estates; the purchaser also employed them to complete the purchase. They had money of his in their hands more than sufficient to pay the purchase money, and the purchaser directed the solicitors to apply it and pay the purchase money. The purchaser was let into possession in October 1853. In December following the vendors executed a deed of covenant to surrender the estates purchased, and they signed the receipt for the purchase money indorsed thereon. The title deeds were retained by the solicitors, who deposited them in a box containing other title deeds and documents of the purchaser. The steward of the manor was one of the firm of solicitors, and in 1854 he admitted the purchaser to the land purchased. The purchase money was not actually paid by the solicitors, as directed by the purchaser, but they settled accounts with the vendors, the trustees, and gave them credit for the purchase money as received by them; and after allowing costs and charges, there was a balance due to the parties. Four-fifths of this balance were paid to four of the five cestuis que trustent entitled to the proceeds of the sale. The solicitors retained the other one-fifth in their hands, and upon the remaining cestui que trust requiring payment of his share the solicitors stated that the purchaser had not paid the purchase money, and that they had retained the deeds which the trustees required them to hold as security. The solicitors did not pay the purchase money, and in 1856 became bankrupt. Upon a bill by the vendors:—Held, that they were entitled to a lien upon the estate for the balance of the purchase money remaining unpaid. Wrou v. Daves, 27 L. J., Ch., 635; 25 Beav. 369; 4 Jur., N. S., 396; 1 L. T., N. S. 261.

6. A trustee for the sale of certain real estate entered into a contract for the sale of a house and garden at the price of 300*l*., the house being insured for 100*l*.. Before the time fixed for completion of the contract the house was burnt down, and the trustee received the insurance money. The property was subsequently conveyed to the purchaser, who paid 200*l*. to a mortgagee of the property, and the insurance money was taken to cover the rest of the price. The trustee subsequently absconded without accounting for any of the money, and it was discovered that the mortgage which had been paid off by the purchaser was fraudulent. On a bill by one of the cestuis que trustent:—Held, that the purchaser having had notice of the fraudulent nature of the mortgage, the plaintiff was entitled to a lien on the property for the whole amount of the purchase money, including the insurance money. Poole v. Adams, 4 N. R. 9; 32 L. J., Ch., 639; 12 W. R. 683; 10 L. T., N. S., 287.

7. A vendor agreed with a trustee for a joint-stock company about to be formed for the sale of the goodwill, plant, etc., of his business for 8,000*l*., to be paid as to 6,000*l*. in cash and 2,000*l*. in paid-up shares. After the formation and registration of the company he executed an assignment to them, whereby, after reciting that he had agreed for the sale of the property to the company for 6,000*l*. to be paid as thereafter mentioned, that is to say, 50*l*. per cent. of all sums of money to be received by the company on the sale of shares, and 50*l*. per cent. upon all money borrowed; in consideration of the sum of 6,000*l*., to be paid to him in manner thereinbefore stated, he assigned the property to the company. 2,000*l*. worth of paid-up shares were all allotted to him. No other shares were ever subscribed for, and no money borrowed. The company was wound up, and the only assets consisted of the proceeds of sale of the property conveyed to them by the vendor, and which had been resold:—Held, that the vendor had no lien on those proceeds for his unpaid purchase money, his lien being excluded by the nature of the contract. Re Brentwood Brick and Coal Co., Rowe's claim, 46 L. J., Ch., 554; 36 L. T., N. S., 343; 4 L. R., Ch. D., 532; 25 W. R. 481.

2. Sale in Consideration of an Annuity.

8. A. conveys an estate to B., in consideration of B.'s entering into the covenant contained in the deed, for paying an annuity to A., and 3,000*l*. to certain persons, in the event of his (B.'s) marrying:—Held, that the covenants did not create a lien on the estate. Clarke v. Royle, 3 Sim. 499.

1. A. agreed to sell an estate to B. for an annuity, and B. was to pay off a mortgage to which the estate was subject. Accordingly, B. executed a deed, by which he granted the annuity to A., and covenanted to pay it; and by a conveyance of even date but executed after the annuity deed, after reciting the agreement and the annuity deed, A. and the mortgagee, in pursuance of the agreement, and in consideration of the annuity having been so granted as aforesaid, and of the payment of the mortgage money, conveyed the estate to B. The annuity afterwards became in arrear:—Held, that A. had no lien on the estate for the annuity. Buckland v. Pochnell, 13 Sim. 406.

2. A vendor, in lieu of the price of 3,000*l.*, agreed to accept an annuity of 100*l.* a year for the joint lives of her intended husband and herself, in case the purchaser should so long live, the purchaser engaging that his personal representatives should, within three months after his decease, in certain events, but not in all events, pay a further sum of 3,000*l.* This is not a security, but a substitution for the price; and the lien of the vendor on the land is discharged. Parrot v. Sweetland, Myl. & K. 655.

3. Sale and assignment of a life interest in leaseholds in consideration of a weekly sum to be paid to the vendor during her life, with a covenant by the purchaser, for himself, his heirs, executors, and administrators, to make the weekly payment to the vendor, and to repair and insure the premises, and otherwise perform the covenants in the lease:—Held, that the vendor was entitled to a lien on the life interest in the leaseholds, which was the subject of the assignment for the weekly payment. Matthew v. Bowler, 6 Hare 110; 16 L. J., N. S., Ch., 239; 11 Jur. 297.

4. A. conveyed her life estate in lands to her son, in consideration of his paying the rent of a house for her, and supplying her with sufficient hay and corn, and he covenanted to pay the rent and supply the hay and corn:—Held, that A. had a security on the estate conveyed in the nature of a vendor's lien for the purchase money, for the performance of the son's contract. Richardson v. Mc Causland, Beat. 457.

5. An agreement to purchase land for an annuity for the life of the vendor, to be a charge on the land, and to be paid quarterly, entitles the vendor, not only to the security of the charge, but to the covenant of the purchaser for the payment of the annuity. Boner v. Cooper, 2 Hare 408; 11 L. J., N. S., Ch., 287; 6 Jur. 681.

6. An agreement to sell land, in consideration of an annuity for three lives "to be secured by bond":—Held, that the annuity was not a lien upon the land. Dixon v. Gayfer, 6 W. R. 52; 1 De G. & J. 655; 27 L. J., Ch., 148; 8 Jur., N. S., 1157; 1 L. T., N. S., 162. Affirming 4 W. R. 89; 25 L. J., Ch., 189; 1 Jur., N. S., 1180; 21 Beav. 118.

Where there was an agreement for the sale of an equitable estate in land, in consideration of the grant of an annuity for three lives and the life of the survivor, to be secured by bond, but neither the bond was given nor the estate conveyed in the lifetime of the purchaser; upon the annuity falling into arrear:—Held, that the principle of vendor's lien did not apply, the agreement evidencing a contrary intention; but that the Court would not decree a conveyance of the legal estate until a valid and sufficient bond should be given to secure the arrears and future payments of the annuity. 8. C. 3 Jur., N. S., 1157.

Whether a vendor who takes an annuity as the consideration has or has not a lien on the estate for his annuity must depend upon the particular circumstances of each case. Ib.

(a) By taking Collateral Securities or Bills, 7253.

(b) Other Cases, 7255.

(a) By taking Collateral Securities or Bills.

7. The rule of equity, in the case of an implied lien, is that the vendor's lien is not gone by accepting a bond or note from the purchaser, nor will a receipt for the purchase money discharge the lien till the money be paid; this rule is strengthened when applied to the case of an express charge. Saunders v. Leslie, 2 Ball & B. 514.

A vendor accepting a mortgage on another estate is not conclusive evidence against the existence of his lien on the estate sold. Ib. 515.

8. Whether the vendor of an estate, who takes bond of the vendee for the purchase money, has a lien on the land for the purchase money remaining unpaid. Blackburne v. Gregson, 1 Cox 90; 1 Bro. C. C. 420.

9. If the vendor parts with his estate, and takes a security for the consideration money, there is no reason for a court of equity to assist him against the creditors of the purchaser. Fanell v. Heelis, Amb. 726.

10. Vendor's lien on the estate for the purchase money not discharged by taking bills of exchange, which are to be considered, not as a security, but as a mode of payment. Grant v. Mills, 2 Ves. & B. 306.

11. A. purchases lands of B., and mortgages back those lands for part of the purchase money, and gives a note to B. for 200*l.*, the other part thereof; A. devises those lands to be sold for payment of his debts: this 200*l.* note, though for part of the purchase money, shall not be preferred to other debts, nor be a charge on the land in equity. Bond v. Kent, 2 Vern. 281.

12. Vendor has a lien on estate sold for purchase money, though he has received bills from purchaser in payment of same, and though purchaser becomes bankrupt. Exp. Peake, 1 Madd. 346.

13. Vendor held not to have waived his lien on the estate sold, by taking the promissory note of the vendee, and receiving its amount by discount. Exp. Loaring, 2 Rose 79.

14. Purchase money unpaid is prima facie a lien on the lands sold; and if a security is taken for that money, it lies on the vendee to show that the vendor agreed to rest on that security, and to discharge the lands. A note passed by a vendee to a trustee for part of the purchase money, out of the amount of which incumbrances then not ascertained were to be satisfied, and the balance only paid to the vendor, is not such a security as will discharge the lien on the lands. Hughes v. Kearney, 1 Sch. & Lef. 132.

1. Vendor's equitable lien upon estate for purchase money is lost by taking special security by way of pledge of stock. Nairn v. Promse, 6 Ves. 752.

2. Vendor's lien for purchase money unpaid, against the vendee, volunteers, and purchasers with notice, or having equitable interest only, claiming under him, unless clearly relinquished, of which another security taken and relied on, may be evidence according to the circumstances, the nature of the security, etc.; the proof being upon the purchaser, and, failing in part, upon the circumstances; another security being relied on, may prevail as to the residue. Macbreth v. Symmons, 15 Ves. 329.

3. By an agreement for the sale of an estate, the purchase money, with interest, was to be secured by the bond of the purchaser, and was to remain so secured during the life of the vendor. The conveyance which was afterwards executed expressed that the purchase money had been paid, and the vendor's receipt was indorsed upon it; but, in fact, only a part of the price had been paid, and the residue was secured by the purchaser's bond, conditioned by payment of the principal with interest within twelve months after the death of the vendor; and of interest in the meantime. The vendor was held to have a lien on the estate for the amount of the bond. Winter v. Anson, 3 Russ. 488; 6 L. J., Ch., 11. Reversing 1 Sim. & S. 434; 6 L. J., Ch., 7.

There is no distinction between copyholds and freeholds as to the doctrine of the vendor's lien for his purchase money. Id. 492.

4. A vendor who has taken, as security for part of the purchase money, the bond of the vendee and a mortgage of part of the property sold, has not, on the bankruptcy of the vendee, a lien on the whole estate. Capper v. Spottiswoode, Taml. 21.

5. The vendor of a plantation in the colony of Berbice takes, in payment of his purchase money, certain bills of exchange, drawn by the purchaser upon persons in England, and also a mortgage and hypothecation upon the plantation to secure the due payment of the bills. The bills are returned to the colony under protest:—Held, that the vendor has a preferent right to payment out of the proceeds of the estate, not only for the amount of the bills, but also in respect of interest, costs, and damages, although, at the time of the purchase, another creditor had a judgment, or tacit hypothec, against the purchaser, the Court being of opinion, that the damages, in fact, formed part of the purchase money. Cameron v. Gillard, 6 Jur. 113.

A. sold B.'s plantation in Berbice. The purchase money was secured by bills of exchange drawn by B. on houses in England; and as a further security B., on receiving a transport of the estate, hypothecated the same to A. for amount of the purchase money then due on the bills, with interest and damages accruing thereon, declaring such mortgage to be a first and preferent charge. Some of the bills were protested, and returned to the colony, and the plantation was in consequence sold under an execution sale at the suit of A. The Supreme Court of British Guiana, in adjudicating the claim of A. and the other creditors of B., held A. to have a preferential claim for the principal and interest due upon the protested bills, but refused to allow such right for the damages consequent thereon. The decree, so far as it refused the preferential right for damages, held erroneous, and reversed. S.C. on appeal nom. Cameron v. Fraser, 4 Moo. P. C. 1.

6. A vendor, in lieu of the price of 3,000*l.*, agreed to accept an annuity of 100*l.* a year for the joint lives of her intended husband and herself, in case the purchaser should so long live, the purchaser engaging that his personal representatives should within three months after his decease, in certain events, but not in all events, pay a further sum of 3,000*l.* This is not a security, but a substitution for the price; and the lien of the vendor on the land is discharged. Parrot v. Sweetland, 3 Myl. & K. 655.

7. Upon a sale of a debt proved in an administration suit the purchaser gave a bond for the purchase money, payable by instalments:—Held, that the vendor had not lost his lien on the debt for payment of the unpaid purchase money. Collins v. Collins, Donnes v. Donnes, 31 Beav. 346.

8. An estate was expressed to be conveyed in consideration of 150*l.* paid down and an acceptance of a bill of exchange for 300*l.*:—Held, that the vendor might give evidence of the real nature of the transaction, and that his lien was not discharged; and a mortgagee having notice through the solicitor who had been employed in all the transactions, was bound to see that the vendor's claim for his purchase money was satisfied. Frail v. Ellis, 1 W. R. 72; 22 L. J., Ch., 467; 16 Beav. 350.

9. A trustee purchased an estate on behalf of the trust. The vendor executed a conveyance to the trustees, which recited the trust, and that the trustee had called in trust moneys sufficient to pay the purchase money, and it contained a receipt for the whole purchase money. In fact, only part was paid, and the trustee gave his bond, and a memorandum of deposit for the deficiency, the latter reciting that the vendor had lent the trustee that sum to enable him to complete:—Held, that the vendor had no lien on the title deeds in his possession for the unpaid purchase money. Muir v. Jolly, 26 Beav. 143.

10. A plaintiff agreed with H., in consideration of his erecting some houses thereon, to grant him a building lease of some land, with the option of purchasing the fee. The plaintiff advanced H. 970*l.* to enable him to build. Afterwards E. and P. jointly made further advances to H. for the same purpose. Subsequently E. (who was the solicitor both of the plaintiff and of P.) induced the plaintiff to execute a conveyance to H. without receiving the consideration, in order that H. might then execute a mortgage to E. and P. to secure their advances, but on the promise of E. alone, that the conveyance and the mortgage should be held on behalf of the plaintiff until the "land could be sold, or a transfer of the mortgages obtained, and that in either case the plaintiff should, in the first place, out of the moneys obtained by such sale or transfer be paid the purchase money" and advances:—Held, that the plaintiff had lost his lien for his purchase money and his priority for it, and his advances over the mortgage. Smith v. Evans, 28 Beav. 59.

1. An agreement by a vendor to take a bond for the payment of the consideration for land sold exonerates the land from all claim for the purchase money in the hands of a subsequent bonâ fide purchaser. Dixon v. Gayfer, 21 Beav. 118; 25 L. J., Ch., 189; 1 Jur., N. S., 1180; 4 W. R. 39. Affirmed 6 W. R. 52; 1 De G. & J. 655; 27 L. J., Ch., 148; 3 Jur., N. S., 1157; 1 L. T., N. S., 162.

(b) Other Cases.

2. A special contract for the payment of purchase money must be explicit to deprive a vendor of his lien upon the estate sold; and though a contract is stated in the conveyance of the estate, evidence may be given to show the real nature of the transaction, and a subsequent purchaser is bound to inquire whether it was accepted in substitution of the lien. Frail v. Ellis, 22 L. J., Ch., 467; 1 W. R. 72; 16 Beav. 350.

3. Semble, that a vendor by retaining, under a special agreement, possession of the title deeds of the estate, does not waive or exclude his lien. Wreford v. Lethorn, 2 L. J., Ch., 173.

4. Covenant between vendor and purchaser, that purchase money should be repaid within two years after resale, discharges the vendor's lien. Exp. Parkes, 1 G. & J. 228.

5. Case in which vendor of estate loses his lien, by a contract between all parties for a second sale, the first vendor being unable to complete his contract. Cood v. Pollard, 9 Price 544. Affirmed 10 Price 109.

6. A rule in equity in the case of an implied lien is, that the vendor's lien is not gone by accepting a bond or note from the purchaser, nor will a receipt for the purchase money discharge the lien till the money be paid; this rule is strengthened when applied to the case of an express charge. Saunders v. Leslie, 2 Ball & B. 514.

7. The agent of vendors who had authority to receive the purchase money had in his hands a sum belonging to the purchaser sufficient for that purpose, and was directed by him to apply it in payment. The agent accordingly debited the purchaser's account, and credited the vendor's account with the amount, and he rendered to the vendors an account charging himself with that sum as received from the purchaser:—Held, that this was not a valid payment to the vendors, and that they had still a lien on the estate for a part of the money lost by the bankruptcy of the agent. Wrouth v. Davies, 25 Beav. 369; 4 Jur., N. S., 396; 1 L. T., N. S., 261; 27 L. J., Ch., 635.

The vendors had executed the conveyance, and signed a receipt, which remained in the hands of the common agent of the vendors and purchaser, and the purchaser had been admitted to the copyhold estate and obtained possession:—Held, that this did not vary the case. Id.

8. Judgment against the purchaser of a leasehold house and furniture for damages and costs does not destroy the lien of the vendor upon the house and furniture; and therefore proof allowed under a commission against the purchaser for the deficiency. Exp. Seaforth (Lord), 11 Ves. 235; 1 Rose 302.

9. J. M. devised his real estate, charged with the payment of his debts, to T. M. in fee. In 1811 T. M. contracted to sell part of the testator's real estate to J. S., who was immediately let into possession, although the purchase money was not paid. In 1812 J. S. sold part of the estate to C. S., who was let into possession of that part, but never paid his purchase money. T. M. became a bankrupt, and in 1844 his assignees filed a bill against the trustees of the will of J. S. and the parties claiming under him, seeking to establish a lien on the estate for the purchase money and interest. Suits had previously been instituted for the administration of the estates of J. M. and J. S.:—Held, overruling the decision of the Vice-Chancellor, upon evidence not then before the Court, that the right of the vendor was not barred, a letter to the plaintiffs from the solicitor of the parties representing the purchaser taking the case out of the operation of the Statute of Limitations. Toft v. Stephenson, 1 De G. M. & G. 28; 21 L. J., N. S., Ch., 129; 15 Jur. 1187. Reversing 7 Hare 1.

10. A trustee for the sale of a brewhouse and plant (the cestuis que trustent being infants) contracts to sell them, and lets the purchaser into possession:—Held, that the purchaser was in possession within the stat. 21 Jac. 1, c. 19, and therefore the plant, upon his becoming bankrupt, passed to his assignees, without being subject to the lien for the purchase money. Exp. Dale, Buck 365.

4. Priority.

11. Vendor's lien for purchase money unpaid against the vendee, volunteers, and purchasers with notice, or having equitable interests only claiming under him, unless clearly relinquished. Mackreth v. Symmons, 15 Ves. 329.

12. An equitable mortgagee from vendee who has not paid purchase money can sell only bankrupt's interest, unless vendor consents; and the Court will not act till he is served. Exp. Wright, Re Watts, 3 Mont. & A. 49.

13. The plaintiffs conveyed an estate, but retained the conveyance and title deeds, as security for unpaid purchase money. The purchaser mortgaged the estate, but the mortgagee neglected to ask for the first conveyance:—Held, that the plaintiffs had a lien upon the estate prior to that of the mortgagee. Worthington v. Morgan, 16 Sim. 547; 18 L. J., N. S., Ch., 233; 13 Jur. 316.

14. Judgment against the purchaser of a leasehold house and furniture for damages and costs does not destroy lien of the vendor upon the house and furniture; and therefore proof under a commission of bankruptcy against the purchaser for the deficiency allowed. Exp. Seaforth (Lord), 19 Ves. 235; 1 Rose 306.

15. Subsequent transactions, even under authority of a special Act of Parliament, cannot affect a vendor's lien for unpaid purchase money. Nash v. Worcester Improvement Commissioners, 1 Jur., N. S., 973.

16. An estate was devised to trustees, upon trust, by sale or mortgage, to discharge a specific debt, and to apply the residue for the benefit of the testator's children. A. purchased the estate of the surviving trustee (who was A.'s father), but left the purchase money, except what was required to satisfy the debt, unpaid, giving his bond as a collateral security for the payment of it. Between the time of the contract and the actual conveyance of the premises, A. entered into marriage articles, whereby he covenanted to settle the premises on his intended wife and her issue. After A.'s marriage and the execution of the conveyance, a settlement was made in pursuance of the articles. The settlement recited the conveyance, and the conveyance referred to the will:—Held, that the settlement conveyed notice to the will, and that such notice was binding on the wife and children of A., although the articles were silent as to the will, and consequently that the testator's children were entitled as against the children of A., to a lien on the estate to the amount of the purchase money left unpaid. Davies v. Thomas, 2 Y. & Coll. 234; 7 L. J., N. S., Exch. Eq., 21.

1. Where a vendor signs a receipt for the whole purchase money, but suffers the purchaser to retain part of it, and remains in possession of the estate as tenant to the purchaser, his possession is no notice, to a subsequent purchaser or incumbrancer, of his lien on the estate for the sum retained. White v. Wakefield, 7 Sim. 401; 4 L. J., N. S., Ch., 195.

2. A. and B. were equal partners in certain mills and concerns, of which A. was the lessee. In November 1810 they took in C. as a partner, for 8,500*l.* In January 1811 B. proposed to A. and C. to sell them his share for 8,500*l.*, and to let his name continue in the firm for five years, they paying interest at 8 per cent. on his money remaining in their hands; this was accepted, and thenceforward A. had two-thirds, and C. one-third of the profits. In July 1812 A. conveyed to C. the legal estate in one-third of the mills and concerns, by a deed which was never registered. In August 1812 C., by his marriage settlement, conveyed his one-third to A. and D., as trustees for himself for life, with remainder for plaintiffs as tenants in common; this deed was registered in 1814. In 1819 B. withdrew his name from the firm, and furnished A. and C. with an account current, showing a balance due to him of about 24,000*l.* This was made up of the 8,500*l.*, and interest at 8 per cent., and of advances made to the firm since 1814 on the credit of C. A mortgage of the mills was then executed by A. and C. to B., to secure this 24,000*l.* It was soon after registered. C. died in 1820, and A. in 1823. In 1826 B. procured, from the representatives of A., an assignment of the equity of redemption, and entered into possession of the mills. The bill charged that, before the execution of the mortgage, B. was informed by A. and C. of the previous settlement. It prayed for an account and partition, and allotment of one-third. The only evidence of notice was by E., who swore that he had apprised B. of the settlement:—Held, that the defendant had no claim of lien against the plaintiffs, as an unpaid vendor. Stuart v. Ferguson, Hayes 452.

3. M., in 1862, obtained a decree against H for specific performance of an agreement for payment of the residue of the purchase money, and in default, for a sale of the hereditaments under the direction of the Court. S. and others were judgment creditors of H. prior to the date of the decree; they alleged that they were not bound thereby, and they claimed interests in the hereditaments, but M. charged that their interests were subordinate to his lien, and he applied to S. and the other judgment creditors to release and disclaim. That application was refused; and thereupon M. filed a bill, charging that such refusal had rendered it necessary, and that they ought to pay the costs. All the defendants other than S. had, prior to the hearing, agreed to release; and as to S.'s interest, the Court declared that the hereditaments were freed and absolutely discharged, and ordered him to pay all the costs of the suit. Moscrop v. Sandeman, Twynam v. Sandeman, 9 Jur., N. S., 1146.

4. Vendor conveyed without receiving his purchase money; the receipt of it was indorsed on the deed, and the title deeds delivered to the purchaser. The purchaser then made a mortgage by deposit, and absconded:—Held, as between the vendor's lien for his unpaid purchase money and the right of the mortgagee, that the possession of the title deeds and the fact of the indorsement of the receipt on the deed gave the mortgagee the better equity. Rice v. Rice, 2 Drew. 73; 23 L. J., Ch., 289; 2 W. R. 139; 2 Eq. Rep. 341.

Principles of the rule as to the effect of priority in point of time. Id.

5. T. assigned a piece of ground, with a message thereon, to L. for the residue of a term, to secure certain sums and interest; and he subsequently charged the premises with other sums due to A. and the plaintiff. T. afterwards contracted to sell the premises to O., and by a deed, dated the 4th August 1855, they were assigned to O. for the residue of the term, subject to a mortgage thereon to L. On the same day (Saturday, the 4th August) O. handed to T. a cheque, drawn by the firm of which he was a partner, upon their private bankers, for the amount of the purchase money; but afterwards, fearing that the insurance money might not have been paid, or that interest on L.'s mortgage might be in arrear, O., on the following Monday morning, stopped the payment of the cheque. On Wednesday, the 8th August, however, O. was induced to withdraw his countermand, and the money was paid on the same day. On Tuesday, the 7th, O. had been made acquainted with the existence of the second and third incumbrancers. A bill was filed by the third incumbrancer, praying to be allowed to redeem the first and second incumbrancers, and that O. might redeem him. He contended that the purchase was not completed on the 4th August by the delivery of the cheque, and that before the 8th August O. had notice of the second and third incumbrances. O. contended that the purchase was completed on the 4th August, and asserted his right to redeem L. in priority to the plaintiff. The Court held that the purchase was not completed on the 4th August, by the delivery of the cheque, considering the circumstances that took place afterwards, and a decree was made in conformity with the prayer of the bill. Tildesley v. Lodge, 3 Jur., N. S., 1000.

1. A. conveyed an estate to B., and, according to the conveyance, an acceptance was given in full satisfaction for the absolute purchase; but in reality it was agreed that the vendor should have a mortgage for the money. Before the acceptance became due, B. mortgaged to C., who employed the same solicitor as had been engaged in the purchase, and C. had notice that the bill had not been paid, and of the form of the conveyance:—Held, first, that C. was affected by the notice to his solicitor; and, secondly, that, under the circumstances, he was bound to inquire into the true nature of the transaction between A. and B., and consequently that his security ought to be postponed to A.'s. Frail v. Ellis, 16 Beav. 350; 22 L. J., Ch., 467; 1 W. R. 72.

2. S., owner of a piece of land, agreed with a builder, upon his completing divers houses, to grant him a lease, or to allow him to purchase the land. S. advanced money to the builder for the erection of the houses. He afterwards applied for advice to a solicitor, but finally, being dissatisfied, he ceased to make further advances. The solicitor and P., with a knowledge of these circumstances, made advances to the builder out of the funds of which they were trustees. The solicitor then obtained a conveyance of the land from S. to the builder, who mortgaged the land and houses to the solicitor, and P., to secure the advances made by them; the builder then became insolvent, and the solicitor afterwards became bankrupt:—Held, that the conveyance was executed upon the faith of representations made by the solicitor, that S. should be first paid his purchase money and advances; that P. was no party to such representations; that the conveyance was made to the builder to enable him to secure the advances made by the solicitor, and P.; and that the mortgage so made gave a priority to the solicitor and P. over the lien of S. for his unpaid purchase money and advances. Smith v. Evans, 6 Jur., N. S., 388; 29 L. J., Ch., 531.

3. A solicitor purchased through a third party property belonging to his clients; the solicitor paid no purchase money to his clients, but their trustee, acting under his direction, indorsed on a conveyance to a third party, whom the client treated as the real purchaser, a receipt for the purchase money payable to the third party; the solicitor afterwards deposited the title deeds by way of equitable mortgage, became bankrupt, and left the country:—Held, that notwithstanding the relation of solicitor and client, the claim of the equitable mortgagee had priority over the clients' lien for unpaid purchase money. Worthington v. German, 16 W. R. 187.

4. A person through his son, as solicitor, lent money on mortgage of property. The son did not inquire whether the purchase money had been paid by the mortgagor, and there was no receipt for it on the mortgagor's purchase deed. The money so lent was applied in paying off a mortgage held by a third person on the property, and the deeds were handed to the son by such third person, not as mortgagee, but as solicitor of the mortgagor:—Held, that, under the circumstances, the representative of the vendor was entitled to his lien for unpaid purchase money in priority to the mortgagee. Bowen v. Cobb, 18 W. R. 911. Affirmed 19 W. R. 614.

5. A vendor of land situate in a register county, part of whose purchase money remains unpaid, is under no obligation to obtain for the unpaid amount any written security which can be registered, but is entitled to rely simply on his equitable lien, which he can enforce against sub-purchasers who have notice of it, actual or constructive; and such a vendor will not, by registering the conveyance to his purchaser, if he retains the deed in his possession, lose his lien as against sub-purchasers from the original purchaser. Kettlewell v. Watson, 21 L. R., Ch. D., 685; 51 L. J., Ch., 281; 46 L. T. 83; 30 W. R. 402.

Land belonging to the trustees of a charity situate in the suburbs of Leeds, in the West Riding of Yorkshire, was sold by the trustees, with the sanction of the charity commissioners, to some estate agents who occupied a good position in Leeds. They bought the land with the intention of re-selling it in small lots for building purposes. A receipt for the whole purchase money, signed by the vendors, was indorsed on the conveyance, but only part of it was in fact paid. The vendors retained the deed in their possession, but at the request of the purchasers, the vendor's solicitors registered a memorandum of it in the West Riding registry. The vendors took no written security for their unpaid purchase money, but relied only on their equitable lien. The purchasers sold the land again in lots, some of which were very small. None of the sub-purchasers had actual notice of the lien of the original vendors:—Held, that the original vendors were entitled to enforce their lien against such of the sub-purchasers as had constructive notice of it. Id.

One of the sub-purchasers, who bought a small lot for 42*l.*, allowed the purchasers, at their suggestion, to employ their own solicitor to prepare the conveyance to him. He did not in any other way employ a solicitor in the matter, and he made no inquiries about the title or the deeds, nor did he search the register:—Held, that, under these circumstances, it was not the duty of the solicitor to communicate the existence of the lien to the sub-purchaser, and that consequently notice of it could not be imputed to him through the solicitor. Id.

Held, also, that having regard to all the circumstances, and especially to the smallness of the purchase money, and the expense which a regular investigation of the title would have occasioned, it could not be said that the sub-purchaser had wilfully abstained from making inquiries with the view of not receiving notice of any prior charge, and that, consequently, he could not be fixed with constructive notice of the original vendor's lien, but was entitled to hold his plot free from it. Id.

Another sub-purchaser employed no solicitor in the matter, and made no inquiries himself, but, as he said, left it to the original purchasers "to manage the business," and they prepared the conveyance to him, charging him for it:—Held, that he had made them his general agents in the matter, and that it was their duty as such to communicate the lien to him; that, consequently, it must be assumed that they did so, and that notice of the lien must be imputed to him. Ib.

The vendors, at the request of two of the sub-purchasers, released the plots which they purchased from the lien:—Held, that it not being shown that when these releases were given the vendors knew that the original purchasers had parted with any other portions of the land, the releases did not affect the right of the vendors to enforce their lien against the other sub-purchasers. Ib.

The action was brought by the original vendors against some of the sub-purchasers to enforce the lien against them. The plaintiffs in their statement of claim alleged that three of the sub-purchasers whose conveyances were expressed to be made for value had in fact given no consideration for them, and they adduced evidence which proved this allegation in this case of one of the three:—Held, that, under the circumstances, the onus was on the plaintiffs to prove the allegation in the case of the other two, and that they had failed to do so. Ib.

5. Remedies.

1. Where an estate has been sold to a person who has since died, the Court will direct an account to be taken of the personal estate, and decree that the vendor shall have a lien on the land for so much as the personal estate will not extend to pay. Topham v. Constantine, Taml. 135.

2. Vendor of an estate obtained a decree for specific performance, with a declaration that if the purchase money was not paid by a given day the estate should be sold and the proceeds paid in discharge of principal, interest, and costs, and that the purchaser should be made personally liable in the event of any deficiency. Before the day of payment arrived the purchaser died insolvent, and a creditor's suit was instituted for the administration of the assets. The estate was afterwards sold, but the proceeds were insufficient to pay the whole amount due to the vendor. Held, on further direction, that by the construction of the decree which rendered the purchaser liable only for the deficiency, the vendor was entitled to prove in the creditor's suit for the balance only of his debt, but semble that independently of the decree he would have been entitled to prove for the balance, only the case of a vendor's lien being different in this respect from the case of a mortgagee's security. Rome v. Young, 4 Y. & Coll. 204; 3 id. 199; 9 L. J., N. S., Exch. Eq., 41; 2 Jur. 963.

3. Vendor may acquire a lien on fund in court, under contract for sale, and, if vendee refuses to complete contract, may prevent him by injunction from drawing out of court fund which was appropriated by the contract to be applied in part discharge of purchase money. Doyno v. Harvey, 1 Hog. 3.

4. A vendor of some mines, who by express agreement had a lien for his unpaid purchase money, filed a bill to enforce that lien, and to recover from the purchasers the value of the minerals they had got, and by getting which they had made the premises an inadequate security: a demurrer for want of equity was overruled. Attwood v. Small, 8 L. J., N. S., Ch., 145; 9 id. 132; 6 Cl. & F. 523. n.

5. The purchaser of a real estate became insolvent after part but before the whole of the purchase money was paid, or the conveyance executed. The vendor died, having devised the estate to the plaintiffs and appointed one of them his executor. The bill was filed against the provisional assignee of the insolvent and an equitable mortgagee by deposit of the agreement for purchase; and it prayed the payment of the residue of the purchase money by the defendants or by sale of the estate. The plaintiffs did not prove their title as devisees: the defendants disclaimed:—Held, that the Court could not make the decree sought without evidence of the devise, but that, upon payment of the costs of the defendants, the Court might (the defendants not opposing) declare the plaintiffs absolutely entitled to the estate. Gabriel v. Sturgis, 5 Hare 97; 15 L. J., N. S., Ch., 201; 10 Jur. 215.

6. A. sells land to B., who afterwards becomes a bankrupt; part of the purchase money not being paid, A. shall not be bound to come in as a creditor under the statute, but the land shall stand charged with the money unpaid, though no agreement for that purpose. Chapman v. Tanner, 1 Vern. 267.

7. Application by vendor who has not conveyed for a sale of the premises in discharge of his lien for the unpaid purchase money, and to prove for any deficiency, granted. Exp. Gyde, 1 G. & J. 323.

8. The vendor's title and the contract being admitted, decree will be made for sale, and satisfaction to the vendor out of the moneys, and for payment of the deficiency, if any, by the purchaser, notwithstanding an Act of Parliament has dealt with the lands in question since the date of the contract. Nash v. Worcester Improvement Commissioners, 1 Jur., N. S., 973.

Mode of directing sales of lands held in trust. The order should direct the sale to be made by the trustee or by the judge at chambers, not by the trustee with the approbation of the judge. Ib.

9. When a landowner seeks to enforce his lien for unpaid purchase money against a railway company, the Court will order a sale of the land, but will not grant an injunction to restrain the company from running trains over the land. Lycei v. Stafford & Uttoxeter Railway Co., 25 L. T., N. S., 870.

10. In a suit by an unpaid vendor, the Court decreed a specific performance, and the payment of the purchase money and damages. The purchasers were unable to pay, and the property was in the possession of a receiver in another suit instituted by persons claiming charges under the purchasers. A petition by the vendor, served upon the purchaser and the plaintiffs in the other suit to enforce his lien and obtain a sale of the property, was dismissed with costs, the proper remedy being by bill. Att.-Gen. v. Sittingbourne Railway Co., 35 Leav. 268; 14 W. R. 414; 1 L. R., Eq., 636; 25 L. J., Ch., 318; 14 L. T., N. S., 92.

11. In an action by a vendor whose purchase money was to be paid by instalments, some of which were not yet due, for specific performance of his contract and a declaration of his lien, liberty was given to apply in respect of future instalments as they accrued due. Nives v. Nives, 15 L. R., Ch. D., 649; 49 L. J., Ch., 674; 42 L. T. 832; 29 W. R. 302.

1. Where the Court had declared that certain devised estates were devised, subject to incumbrances charged thereon, and a vendor had a lien for unpaid purchase money on one of such estates:—Held, that the vendor's lien stood precisely in the same position as any other incumbrance, and that it must be paid out of the particular estate on which it attached. Harnewell v. Ironmonger, 1 Dr. & Sm. 255.

2. In 1845 P. became purchaser from A. of a piece of land, the purchase money to be paid in 1852 and 1855, as mentioned in the agreement. A. retained the title deeds of the land, and in 1851 deposited them with the plaintiff to secure the payment of a sum then advanced. Between P. and A. there were various cash dealings, and in 1848 the amount due by P., in respect of the purchase money, was, by means of the money due to him, reduced. The accounts between the parties continued unsettled, and no appropriation of the balance due to P. was made by him by way of satisfaction of the residue of the purchase money due to A., who, in 1855, was adjudicated bankrupt. The evidence as to when P. received notice of the plaintiff's equitable mortgage was conflicting:—Held, that the plaintiff was entitled to a decree against P. to the extent of the equitable interest which A. had in the land, no appropriation of the debt due to P. having been made before he had notice of the equitable lien of the plaintiff. Rayne v. Baker, 6 Jur., N. S., 366.

3. On the 4th March 1811 an agreement was entered into for the purchase of freehold land for 6,900*l.*, to be paid on the 13th May 1811, and the purchasers were immediately put into possession. In 1827 the purchaser, before any conveyance was made to him, and before he had paid any part of the purchase money, died, having devised the lands to trustees. The trustees disclaimed, and others were appointed by the Court. In 1834 the attorney of these trustees wrote to the assignees of the vendor (who had become bankrupt), stating that the purchase money was ready to be paid on the purchase being completed. On a bill filed by the assignees in 1844, to enforce the lien, to which the Statute of Limitations, 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 27, was set up as a defence by answer:—Held, on evidence not before the Court below, that the trustees were persons by whom the purchase money was payable, within the meaning of the Statute of Limitations, 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 27. Toft v. Stephenson, 1 De G. M. & G. 28; 21 L. J., N. S., Ch., 129; 15 Jur. 1187. Reversing 7 Hare 1.

In 1849 the assignees of the vendor filed a bill, seeking to enforce the vendor's lien on the estate for the purchase money:—Held, that the 42nd section of the statute did not apply to the arrears of interest, but that the whole was recoverable from the 13th May 1811. S. C. 5 De G. M. & G. 785.

6. Other Matters.

4. The benefit of the vendor's lien for purchase money unpaid may be assigned by parol to a third party, semble. Dryden v. Frost, 3 Myl. & C. 670; 8 L. J., N. S., Ch., 235; 2 Jur. 1030. Reversing on this point 1 Jur. 330.

5. J. S. being indebted, sold his lands, and took the purchaser's bond, which he assigned to one of his creditors. This assignment is good in equity. Munn v. East India Co., Finch 299.

6. Extent of lien on a fund, where the grantor of an annuity agreed to sell to the grantee the fund on which the annuity was secured, and to re-purchase the annuity, but, in consequence of a mutual mistake, the contract for the sale of the fund could not be specifically performed. Colyer v. Clay, 7 Beav. 188.

VI. LIEN OF PURCHASER.

7. Lien of vendee, having paid prematurely, is analogous to that of vendor. Mackreth v. Symmons, 15 Ves. 345.

8. Although the vendor of an estate has fraudulently concealed an incumbrance, yet the purchaser has no lien on the purchase money after it has been paid over. Cator v. Bolingbroke, 1 Bro. C. C. 301.

Purchaser, without notice of a rent-charge, transfers stock in payment; the party entitled for life grants an annuity out of the dividend, secured by a letter of attorney to receive the dividend, to a person who had no notice of the transaction; the purchaser of the estate is evicted by grantee of the rent-charge; he has no lien on the stock. Id.

9. Remainderman having sold property to a purchaser, by whom money is advanced to pay off a heavy and pressing incumbrance, the remainderman representing himself as having a right to sell, with the concurrence of the tenant for life for that purpose, whereupon a draft of conveyance is prepared, to which the tenants for life and remaindermen are made parties, and the purchaser takes possession, gives the purchaser such an equitable title to the purchase as, having cleared the estate from a charge to which the tenant for life was liable, to establish a lien on the property, which equity will protect by enjoining the tenant for life from proceeding by ejectment to obtain possession, until the cause shall be finally determined on the hearing, whatever case may be made by the answer, on merits stated on the part of defendant in equity. Ludlow v. Grayall, 11 Price 58.

10. The wife, being entitled in equity to real estate under a contract of sale entered into before her marriage, the husband, after their marriage, completed the purchase, and took the conveyance to himself. Afterwards, acting upon the supposition that the estate was his own, the husband laid out money in improvements upon it, and ultimately, in the lifetime of the wife (under the same mistake), sold the estate, and the purchasers took a conveyance from him. The husband survived the wife. After the death of the husband, the heir-at-law of the wife recovered the estate from the purchasers by a suit in equity:—Held, that the husband, and the purchasers from him, were entitled in that suit to a lien on the estate in respect of the purchase money paid by the husband; and semble, also, in respect of the moneys expended on lasting improvements. Neesom v. Clarkson, 4 Hare 97; 9 Jur. 82.

1. A purchaser, who has accepted a conveyance with knowledge of an incumbrance, has no lien on the fund in court in respect of the incumbrance. Miller v. Pridden, 3 Jur., N. S., 78; 26 L. J., Ch., 183.

2. The lien of a vendor upon the land and title deeds until payment of the purchase money, does not apply to a conveyance to the purchaser executed by some, but not all of the parties, where the contract has gone off by the vendor's default; and if there be any lien on such a conveyance, it is vested in the purchaser as security for his deposit. Ozenham v. Esdaile, 3 Y. & J. 263.

3. An hotel keeper, who was also the owner, agreed, on the 24th March 1851, to sell his hotel, and to assist in carrying on the business for two years, receiving half the profits. The purchaser's wife (who was the hotel keeper's daughter) went on the premises and assisted in managing the concern. From the purchaser's letters, it appeared that he was not able to supply the funds necessary to carry on the business; and in a letter of the 24th May 1851 he wrote thus to the hotel keeper: "You must mortgage or sell the premises." He subsequently asked the hotel keeper to give him a mortgage on the hotel, for sums which he claimed to be due to him, and brought an action against the hotel keeper for, among other things, a remuneration in respect of the services of his (the purchaser's) wife above mentioned. The hotel keeper became bankrupt. Upon a claim filed by the purchaser against the assignees, claiming that they should elect specifically to perform the agreement, or that it should be declared that the purchaser was entitled to a lien for the sums he had advanced under the contract:—Held, that although the purchaser would have been entitled to a lien, if the contract had failed through the vendor's default, yet that, as the purchaser had himself abandoned the contract, the purchaser was not entitled to any lien, and his claim was dismissed. Dinn v. Grant, 5 De G. & Sm. 451.

4. L. having contracted in writing to sell estates for 350,000*l.* to H., by a defeasance and subsequent agreement, on the same stipulations, re-sells to W. for 380,000*l.*, not subject to defeasance. W. claims 76,084*l.*, compensation for misdescription and defects of title, and L. gives him notice in writing that unless in three months he complies with the contract, he shall re-sell. The three months elapse, and W., having paid 38,000*l.* deposit of 10*l.* per cent. on the purchase money, files a bill for the return of such deposit and other moneys advanced, costs, interest, and expenses; and for a declaration that he has a lien on the estates for such sums; for an account, receiver, inquiries, and injunction, to restrain a sale to any other person. On a general demurrer to this bill for want of equity, demurrer overruled without costs, on the ground that prima facie a purchaser who has paid his deposit, where the contract goes off for defect of title, ought to have a lien upon the estate for such deposit, on the dicta and opinions of Sir Thomas Clarke, in Burges v. Wheate (1 Eden), and Lord St. Leonards, in his Treatise on Vendors and Purchasers. Wythes v. Lee, 4 W. R. 184; 3 Drew. 396; 25 L. J., Ch., 177; 2 Jur., N. S., 7; 26 L. T. 192. S. C. on appeal 4 W. R. 316; 25 L. J., Ch., 389; 2 Jur., N. S., 130.

5. Under a contract for the purchase of an estate, where the money is to be paid in portions, every payment is a part performance of the contract by the vendee, and in equity transfers to him a corresponding portion of the estate. Rose v. Watson, 10 H. L. Ca. 672; 10 Jur., N. S., 297; 33 L. J., Ch., 385; 12 W. R. 585; 13 L. T., N. S., 106. Affirming 10 W. R. 745; 6 L. T., N. S., 804.

An owner of an estate, part of which was subject to a contract for sale, executed a mortgage upon it. The mortgagee gave to the vendee notice of the fact of the mortgage, but in all other respects left matters as they were before the mortgage. The vendee was bound by his contract to pay certain sums at stated intervals, together with interest on all that remained unpaid. He made several of these payments, but at length declined to complete the purchase, on the ground that the representations on which he had been induced to enter into the contract for purchase were unfulfilled:—Held, that he was entitled, so far as the payments extended, to claim a lien on the estate for their amount, and to enforce that claim against the assignees of the vendor. Id.

Interest was allowed the purchaser on the sums paid by him at the rate of 4*l.* per cent. per annum, simple interest. S. C. 3 N. R. 673.

6. Where, in a suit by a vendor for specific performance, it was certified that a good title was not deduced, the Court ordered a return to the defendant of his deposit money, with interest at 4 per cent., and declared the defendant entitled to a lien on the estate of the same, and also for his costs, with liberty to apply; and, subject thereto, dismissed the bill. Turner v. Marriott, 3 L. R., Eq., 744; 15 L. T., N. S., 607; 15 W. R. 420.

1. In General.

7. Where a mortgage was made to secure stock, which was for the purpose sold by trustees who had power to give receipts for moneys and power to vary securities, the mortgage held, as between vendor and purchaser, not to be sufficiently discharged on payment of a sum of money to the trustees, the money not appearing to have been again invested in stock or upon security. Pell v. De Winton, 2 De G. & J. 13; 4 Jur., N. S., 225; 27 L. J., Ch., 230.

C., in consideration of the transfer to him of stock to enable him to purchase an estate, created a mortgage of the property to the trustees of the will of Y., and covenanted to replace the stock at a specified time, and pay so much interest in the meantime as the stock would have produced in the funds, such interest to be held upon the trusts of the will. The plaintiff purchased the mortgaged estate, at which time the parties entitled to the proceeds of the mortgage were J. and the trustees of the marriage settlement of M.; J. being entitled absolutely as to one moiety, and to two-thirds of the other moiety as the surviving trustee under the marriage settlement of C., and the trustees under the settlement of M. being entitled to the remaining one-third. Both settlements contained the usual clauses making trustees' receipts good discharges, and giving them power to vary the securities. The plaintiff having agreed to sell the estate, objection was raised by the vendee, that as money had been paid to the trustees instead of a transfer of stock, he was entitled to have it ascertained that the purchase moneys had been properly invested in stock according to the trusts of the settlements. The plaintiff having filed a bill for specific performance of the agreement:—Held, that the objection to the title was valid. Id.

1. Semble, that an innocent vendor of lands, discovering before completion that the purchasers are trustees, is not concerned to see that the investment is authorised by the trust. Mansfield v. Childers, 46 L. J., Ch., 30; 2 L. R., Ch. D., 82.

2. A. B. contracted to purchase a mortgaged estate, the mortgagee to be paid off out of the purchase money. The mortgagee held his debt as trustee (as to part) for a third party, who, while the contract was pending, filed a bill in Chancery to establish the trust, and gave notice to the purchaser. In the meantime the mortgagee filed a petition in lunacy to carry out the sale, and the purchaser paid the purchase money to the receiver, to be administered under the order in lunacy:—Held, in a suit by the cestui que trust, that the purchaser was bound to see to the application of the purchase money; but the suit was ordered to stand over in order that the plaintiff might go in under the petition and establish his right in lunacy. Morris v. Stuart, 1 W. R. 94. S. C. nom. Norris v. Dudley Stuart (Lord), 16 Beav. 359.

3. Semble, the rule requiring purchasers of property to see to the application of the purchase money, does not apply to the case of debtors, so as to implicate them in trusts created by their creditors. Fernie v. Maguire, 6 Ir. Eq. R. 137.

2. In Discharge of Incumbrances by Vendor.

4. It is not a rule of equity that upon the purchase of property, subject to incumbrances, for its full value, the vendor is bound to apply the purchase money in payment of the incumbrances according to their priorities.

Such a duty can only be the result of express agreement, or of a contract to be implied from the circumstances of the case. Att.-Gen. v. Cox, Pearce v. Att.-Gen., 3 H. L. Ca. 240. Reversing S. C. sub. nom. Greenwood v. Taylor, 14 Sim. 505; 9 Jur. 480.

5. Where a purchaser is in possession of lands under an executed conveyance, and part of the purchase money has been secured by a bond, the purchaser may come into equity to have it employed in the discharge of an arrear of ground-rent due at the date of the conveyance, and is not confined to his remedy at law on the covenants in his conveyance. Woods v. Martin, 11 Ir. Ch. R. 148.

6. Purchaser not permitted to apply part of his purchase money in discharge of a mortgage on the estate, though some of the parties consented, others being infants; and that there was such an incumbrance not appearing on the report. Quære, could it be done if all were competent, and consented. — v. Stratton, 1 Ves. J. 266.

7. The plaintiff by one contract purchased an estate and a judgment for 1,000*l.*:—Held, that he was entitled to apportion the purchase money between the estate and the judgment, and to have separate conveyances of each. Clark v. May, 16 Beav. 273; 2 L. J., Ch., 302.

On Sales by the Court.] See XXIV. v. post.

3. Allowance for Incumbrances bought up by Purchaser.

8. If a purchaser compromises debts charged on purchased premises (the vendor being bound to relieve the incumbrances), he ought not to charge the vendor more than he actually pays, as that is the amount of damage he sustains by breach of covenant. Cane v. Allen (Lord), 2 Dow. 296.

9. A purchaser is not at liberty to use information derived from the abstract for his own advantage, adversely to the vendor. Murrell v. Goodyear, 2 Giff. 51; 6 Jur., N. S., 91; 29 L. J., Ch., 298. Affirmed 29 L. J., Ch., 425; 8 W. R. 398.

Therefore, where a purchaser having ascertained that the concurrence of the heir was required to complete the title, gave notice to rescind the contract and bought up the interest of the heir, the Court decreed specific performance of the contract with costs, but allowed him to deduct from the price he had paid the heir. Id.

See also XXIV. v. post.

4. Apportionment.

10. On a bill for specific performance of an agreement, for the sale of a lease, the Court cannot apportion the price according to the time already expired. King v. Wightman, 1 Anstr. 80.

11. If the legatee in remainder of a term of years which was converted into stock, the legatee in remainder not being a party to the conversion, sues for a portion of the purchase money in the lifetime of the tenant for life, whether the Court will do more than secure the fund, or whether it will apportion it according to the value of the respective interests, quære. Phillips v. Sarjent, 7 Hare 33.

1. A purchaser of property included in one contract may divide the property purchased and apportion the purchase money, and he may direct its conveyance to be made by the vendors in such a manner as he may deem most expedient, and by one or more deeds; but in this case, the objections on both sides being frivolous, the decree was made without costs. Clark v. May, 22 L. J., Ch., 302; 16 Beav. 273.

2. Under the will of the uncle of A., made in 1818, A. was tenant for life, with remainder to B., his eldest son, in fee, of lands in which the legal estate was outstanding. In 1849 A. mortgaged his equitable life estate, and in 1852 B. mortgaged his remainder in fee to the same persons, with powers of sale. Default was made, and in 1864 the mortgagees in exercise of the power of sale conveyed a portion of the lands to C., by a deed, which recited (as the fact was) that the purchase money had been apportioned between the life estate and the remainder according to the valuation, the propriety of which was not disputed. C. devised the purchased lands to D., his nephew, for life, with remainders over. A portion of the purchased lands was afterwards sold:—Held, that the mortgagee's powers of sale were properly exercised. Re Cooper, 46 L. J., Ch., 133; 4 L. R., Ch. D., 302; 35 L. T., N. S., 890; 25 W. R. 301.

3. When a vendor succeeds in a suit for specific performance, he is entitled to costs, notwithstanding the title was first shown in the Master's office, if the suit was occasioned solely by the conduct of the defendant. Interest on arrears of rent and an apportionment, as between landlord and tenant, disallowed. Peers v. Sneyd, 17 Beav. 151.

4. Where a testator had created a term of 500 years for the payment of his debts and legacies, and, subject thereto, had devised the property in strict settlement; and the fee simple had been sold under a private Act of Parliament:—Somble, that the difference between the price realised by the sale of the fee, and that which would have been realised by the sale of the term, ought to be apportioned between the reversion and the term. Brook v. Mustyn, 4 N. R. 41.

5. A message belonged to one who devised his real estate in trust for sale. An adjoining message was vested in the trustees of his settlement upon trust for sale, and the purchase money, subject to the payment of definite sums, belonged to the testator's estate. Under a decree for administering the estate the two messages were put up for sale together in one lot, and it was provided that the purchase money should be paid into court to the credit of the cause, "The proceeds of the sale of the testator's real estate." The trustees of the settlement had obtained liberty to attend the proceedings as to the sale. The purchaser objected to the title on the ground that the two properties were sold together for one lump sum, without any provision for apportioning it, and that it was to be paid into court in a suit unconnected with the settlement:—Held, that this objection was not sustainable, for that the Court, having the money in its custody, would see it properly applied. The Court, however, for the satisfaction of the purchaser, ordered that the purchase money should be apportioned, and the part apportioned to the settled message paid into court to a separate account. Cavendish v. Cavendish, 10 L. R., Ch., 319; 33 L. T., N. S., 219; 23 W. R. 313.

1. Order for. In General.

6. Purchase money ordered to be paid into court till the hearing. Grundy v. Masters, 1 Jur. 669.

7. A purchaser who is not in possession, and has not accepted the title, will not be ordered to pay his purchase money into court. Asen, 1 L. J., Ch., 177.

8. The bill stated a parol agreement for sale, and possession had been given of five acres. The answer admitted an agreement to purchase three acres only. Motion, that the purchase money for the five acres, or otherwise for the three acres, might be brought into court, refused. Benson v. Glastonbury Canal Co., 1 Coop. C. C. 350; C. P. C. 42.

9. Parties interested in an estate which was sold for a large sum of money asked that the purchaser might pay a part of the purchase money into court without prejudice to objections to the title:—Held, that such an order would be contrary to the rule of the court; and though such rule was not inflexible, the Court refused to make the order even with the consent of the purchaser. Ouseley v. Anstruther, 11 Beav. 399; 18 L. J., N. S., Ch., 157.

Offer by Purchaser. 10. Purchaser under circumstances allowed to pay his purchase money into court, and to be let into the possession and receipt of the rents and profits without prejudice to any subsequent objection which he might be advised to make to the title. Marfell v. Rudge, 2 Y. & Coll. 566; 2 Jur. 78.

11. Offer of a purchaser before conveyance to pay into court instalments due, and interest, according to the contract, the subject being a coal mine, and the purchaser in possession and working it. Buck v. Lodge, 18 Ves. 450.

2. Where Purchaser in Possession. In General.

1. Motion, for a purchaser in possession to pay money into court, refused, under the circumstances of possession given independently of the agreement to purchase, and laches on the part of the vendor in completing his title. Fbw v. Birch, 1 Meriv. 105.

2. A motion by vendor that a purchaser who had taken possession should pay the purchase money into court, refused; the agreement admitted by the answer differing from that stated by the bill. Benson v. Glastonbury Navigation Co., C. P. C. 42; Coop. C. C. 350.

3. Generally a purchaser shall not be allowed both to retain possession of the estate, and to keep his purchase money; but in a case where he was willing to give up possession, which he had taken under the agreement, and it was a question whether there was or was not a subsisting contract, the Lord Chancellor refused to order payment of the purchase money into court. Morgan v. Shan, 2 Meriv. 138.

4. Bill for specific performance against vendor, the vendee being in possession, and an account being necessary of the vendee's personal estate, referred to the Master to fix a short day for the payment of the purchase money; otherwise the bill to be dismissed, as against those defendants, with costs. Lowther v. Andover, 1 Bro. C. C. 396.

5. Court will not compel vendor to pay deposit money into court, though he retains possession of the estate, if the delay in the completion of the contract is occasioned by purchaser. Wynne v. Griffith, 1 Sim. & S. 147; 1 L. J., Ch., 110.

6. Vendor permitting purchaser to take possession before completion of title, without stipulation as to purchase money, cannot, on motion, have purchase money paid into court. Clarke v. Elliot, 1 Madd. 606.

7. Motion by one tenant in common, who had agreed to sell to the other, that the latter should pay his purchase money into court, refused, where such purchaser had been before and at the time of the purchase in possession of the whole, with the approbation of the other tenant in common. Freebody v. Perry, Coop. 91.

8. Where a purchaser was allowed to enter into possession by consent before the time fixed for completion, and, when that time arrived, delayed payment of the purchase money, alleging that the title had not yet been sufficiently shown, the Court ordered payment of the purchase money into court. Lilley v. Allen, 12 Jur., N. S., 181; 14 L. T., N. S., 52.

9. Where purchasers were entitled under the contract to possession and receipt of the rents from a certain day, and obtained possession previously thereto from the tenants, the Court refused to order payment in of the purchase money, though the corpus of the estate was being dealt with, but directed the rents to be paid into court. Robertshaw v. Bray, 12 Jur., N. S., 224; 35 L. J., Ch., 844; 14 L. T., N. S., 101.

10. Possession by a purchaser given or permitted by the vendor, without receipt of rents and profits by the purchaser, does not render the purchaser liable to pay the purchase money into court, but he will be ordered to give up possession, or to pay the purchase money into court. Curling v. Austin, 2 Dr. & Sm. 129; 10 W. R. 682.

11. C. contracted with a railway company to sell land, with a stipulation that he should have possession and pay the purchase money in two years, with interest. They took possession, but only paid one-third of the purchase money, and a bill was filed for specific performance and payment of the purchase money unpaid and interest. Before answer the plaintiff moved for payment of the balance of the purchase money into court, or delivery up of the land. Order made for payment or delivery up within a month; and if the land should be delivered up, payment into court by the vendors of the one-third received by them in a fortnight after delivery up of possession. Cooper v. London, Chatham, & Dover Railway Co., 14 W. R. 985.

3. Where Purchaser in Possession but Title not Accepted.

12. Purchaser having taken possession, but objecting to the title, required to pay in the purchase money, or deliver up possession. Clarke v. Wilson, 15 Ves. 317.

13. Purchaser in possession objecting to title, ordered to pay purchase money into court. (Smith v. Lloyd, 1 Madd. 83); and though possession not admitted by answer, and only shown by affidavit. Boothby v. Walker, id. 197.

14. Vendee in possession, objecting to title, required to pay his purchase money into court, although the fact of possession appeared, not upon the pleadings, but upon affidavits only. Burroughs v. Oakley, 1 Meriv. 52.

15. Purchaser in possession not ordered to pay money into court where he objects to title. Gell v. Watson, 3 Madd. 225.

16. Purchaser in possession, and objecting to title on the ground of a claim to dower, ordered to pay the purchase money into court, on the objection being removed by the widow consenting to accept an equivalent from the vendor. Mole v. Smith, 1 Jac. & Walk. 665.

17. By an agreement for the sale of an estate, the purchaser was to pay part of his purchase money on the 24th December then next, when the conveyance was to be executed, and the residue was to be secured by a mortgage of the estate, payable at not less than twelve months from the date of the conveyance. The purchaser entered into possession immediately after the execution of the agreement, but on some objections to the title refused to pay his purchase money. A bill was filed by the vendor, for the specific performance of the contract; and more than twelve months having elapsed from the time when the conveyance ought to have been executed, the defendant was on motion ordered to pay the purchase money into court. Younge v. Duncombe, Younge 275.

18. A purchaser, who had been three years in possession, and who had not paid the purchase money on the ground that a good title had not been made out, was ordered either to pay the purchase money within two months, or to give up possession. Tindal v. Cobham, 2 Myl. & K. 385; 4 L. J., N. S., Ch., 98.

the fund, or whether it will apportion it according to the value of the respective interests, quære. Phillips v. Sarjent, 7 Hare 33.

1. A purchaser of property included in one contract may divide the property purchased and apportion the purchase money, and he may direct its conveyance to be made by the vendors in such a manner as he may deem most expedient, and by one or more deeds; but in this case, the objections on both sides being frivolous, the decree was made without costs. Clark v. May, 22 L. J., Ch., 302; 16 Beav. 273.

2. Under the will of the uncle of A., made in 1818, A. was tenant for life, with remainder to B., his eldest son, in fee, of lands in which the legal estate was outstanding. In 1849 A. mortgaged his equitable life estate, and in 1852 B. mortgaged his remainder in fee to the same persons, with powers of sale. Default was made, and in 1864 the mortgagees in exercise of the power of sale conveyed a portion of the lands to C., by a deed, which recited (as the fact was) that the purchase money had been apportioned between the life estate and the remainder according to the valuation, the propriety of which was not disputed. C. devised the purchased lands to D., his nephew, for life, with remainders over. A portion of the purchased lands was afterwards sold:—Held, that the mortgagee's powers of sale were properly exercised. Re Cooper, 46 L. J., Ch., 133; 4 L. R., Ch. D., 302; 35 L. T., N. S., 890; 25 W. R. 301.

3. When a vendor succeeds in a suit for specific performance, he is entitled to costs, notwithstanding the title was first shown in the Master's office, if the suit was occasioned solely by the conduct of the defendant. Interest on arrears of rent and an apportionment, as between landlord and tenant, disallowed. Peers v. Sneyd, 17 Beav. 151.

4. Where a testator had created a term of 500 years for the payment of his debts and legacies, and, subject thereto, had devised the property in strict settlement; and the fee simple had been sold under a private Act of Parliament:—Somble, that the difference between the price realised by the sale of the fee, and that which would have been realised by the sale of the term, ought to be apportioned between the reversion and the term. Brook v. Mustyn, 4 N. R. 41.

5. A message belonged to one who devised his real estate in trust for sale. An adjoining message was vested in the trustees of his settlement upon trust for sale, and the purchase money, subject to the payment of definite sums, belonged to the testator's estate. Under a decree for administering the estate the two messages were put up for sale together in one lot, and it was provided that the purchase money should be paid into court to the credit of the cause, "The proceeds of the sale of the testator's real estate." 3. Where Purchaser in Possession but Title not Accepted.

12. Purchaser having taken possession, but objecting to the title, required to pay in the purchase money, or deliver up possession. Clarke v. Wilson, 15 Ves. 317.

13. Purchaser in possession objecting to title, ordered to pay purchase money into court. (Smith v. Lloyd, 1 Madd. 83); and though possession not admitted by answer, and only shown by affidavit. Boothby v. Walker, id. 197.

14. Vendee in possession, objecting to title, required to pay his purchase money into court, although the fact of possession appeared, not upon the pleadings, but upon affidavits only. Burroughs v. Oakley, 1 Meriv. 52.

15. Purchaser in possession not ordered to pay money into court where he objects to title. Gell v. Watson, 3 Madd. 225.

16. Purchaser in possession, and objecting to title on the ground of a claim to dower, ordered to pay the purchase money into court, on the objection being removed by the widow consenting to accept an equivalent from the vendor. Mole v. Smith, 1 Jac. & Walk. 665.

Cobham*, 2 Myl. & K. 385; 4 L. J., N. S., Ch., 98.

See also Next Subdivision.

4. On Exercise of Acts of Ownership by Purchaser.

1. Purchaser in possession having made alterations and improvements on estate, ordered to pay purchase money into court. Bramley v. Teal, 3 Madd. 219.

2. Possession by a purchaser, according to the contract, not a ground for payment of the money into court, on objections to the title; acts of alteration or destruction against the nature of the contract, are; and slight acts after the objections discovered more effectual for that purpose, than if done with an understanding one side that there is a title, on the other that there is not. Dixon v. Astley, 19 Ves. 564; 1 Meriv. 133.

3. On bill by vendor for a specific performance, the Court will not, before answer, make an order for payment of the purchase money, by the defendant in possession, unless under special circumstances, such as unreasonable delay, committing acts of ownership in alteration of the property, etc. In this case, the defendant being in possession, not under the agreement to purchase, but as tenant to the plaintiff at the time of the purchase, no order was made. Bonner v. Johnston, 1 Meriv. 366.

4. Acts of ownership amounting to waste, by alteration and conversion of property, sufficient to induce the Court to order payment of purchase money into court, upon the ground that a vendor has a lien on the estate for the amount, and might have filed his bill to restrain the purchaser in possession from committing such acts of ownership. Though the bill contained no charge of such acts having been committed, the order was made on an affidavit supplying the fact, the defendant not having answered, nor being in contempt, nor under any decree for time. Cutler v. Symons, 2 Meriv. 103.

5. Defendant being in possession, and having exercised acts of ownership, payment of the money ordered, although an infant heir was a necessary party to the conveyance. Bradshaw v. Bradshaw, 2 Meriv. 492.

6. Purchaser having taken possession, and exercised ownership, although good title was to be made before purchase money paid, which was not done, must nevertheless pay purchase money into court. Wickham v. Evered, 4 Madd. 53.

7. Where a purchaser is let into possession of the estate under contract, his dealing with the property (contrary to former usage, or contrary to the usual course of husbandry) may be ground for ordering him to pay the purchase money into court, or for the appointment of a receiver, but will not authorise a decree against him, to compel him to accept the title on the ground of waiver of objections. Osborne v. Harvey, 1 Y. & Coll. C. C. 116; 12 L. J., N. S., Ch., 66; 7 Jur. 229.

8. Purchaser (a trustee acting on behalf of himself and others, his co-trustees, and of the cestui que trust) ordered to pay purchase money into court, the agreement having been entered into in the name of himself alone, upon affidavits that the plaintiffs (the vendors) had no notice of his acting for others, and of acts of ownership committed since possession given to him under the agreement, in opposition to the answer alleging notice, and denying any act of ownership by himself, or by any other person to his knowledge. Crutskley v. Jerningham 2 Meriv. 502.

9. A purchaser, who entered into possession in the year 1827, without prejudice to any question of title, took objections to the title, and, in consequence of the minority of a party necessary to the conveyance, the conveyance was postponed. The purchaser remained in possession down to the present time, doing various acts of ownership, and still objects to the title:—Held, upon the motion of the vendor, in a suit for specific performance, that under the circumstances, the defendant should pay the purchase money into court, with interest. Adams v. Heathcote, 10 Jur. 301.

10. A railway company having contracted with the ground landlord for the purchase of freehold house property, entered into possession and turned out the weekly tenants, to whom the property was sub-let by lessees under the ground landlord. After the weekly tenants had been turned out, the property was greatly damaged by strangers, who entered forcibly and pulled some of the houses to pieces:—Held, that the damage, to the deterioration of the property, having been occasioned by the act of the railway company, in entering upon the houses and turning the tenants out of possession, they must pay the purchase money into court without being allowed the option of giving up possession. Pope v. Great Eastern Railway Co., 3 L. R., Eq., 171; 36 L. J., Ch., 60; 15 W. R. 192.

5. Deduction of Income Tax.

11. Where purchase money and interest are to be paid into court, no deduction is to be made on account of income tax. Danson v. Danson, 11 Jur. 984.

12. A purchaser paying his purchase money, with interest, into court, is not to deduct the income tax payable on the interest. Humble v. Humble, 12 Beav. 43.

13. Where interest is payable on purchase money upon a sale by order of the Court, the purchaser must pay the full purchase money and interest into court without deducting the income tax. Holroyd v. Wyatt, 1 De G. & Sm. 126; 16 L. J., N. S., Ch., 174; 11 Jur. 261.

14. Upon the question whether when a purchaser pays his purchase money into court he is entitled to deduct income tax:—Held, that he is not. Semble, there is no difference between the former and modern statutes. Flight v. Comac, 2 W. R. 437; 2 Eq. Rep. 1134.

15. A purchaser liable to pay interest on his purchase money may deduct income tax from such interest. It was the practice to deduct the tax from the interest on debts upon promissory notes, and the like, in the offices of the Masters in Chancery. Bebb v. Bunney, 1 Kay & J. 216; 1 Jur., N. S., 203.

The tax is not deducted on payment of purchase money into court, but the purchaser, it seems, may apply to have it deducted when the purchase money is paid out of court; the words "yearly interest" in s. 40 of 16 & 17 Vict., c. 34, mean not only interest accruing de anno in annum, but any interest at a fixed rate per cent. per annum, though accruing de die in diem. Id.

16. Where a vendor in the occupation of property is charged with an occupation rent, a direction for the deduction of income tax ought not to be inserted in the decree. Sherwin v. Shakespear, 2 W. R. 668; 2 Eq. Rep. 957; 5 De G. M. & G. 517; 18 Jur. 748; 23 L. J., Ch., 898; 1 W. R. 460.

6. Practice on Application.

1. Purchaser taking possession without consent or privity of vendor, ordered, on motion, before answer to pay purchase money into court. Blackburn v. Stace, 6 Madd. 69.

2. On bill by vendor for a specific performance, the Court will not, before answer, make an order for payment of the purchase money, by the defendant in possession, unless under special circumstances, such as unreasonable delay, committing acts of ownership in alteration of the property, etc. In this case, the defendant being in possession, not under the agreement to purchase, but as tenant to the plaintiff at the time of the purchase, no order was made. Bonner v. Johnston, 1 Meriv. 366.

3. Purchaser in possession objecting to title, ordered to pay purchase money into court, though possession not admitted by answer, and only shown by affidavit. Boothby v. Walker, 1 Madd. 197.

4. Affidavits admitted, after answer, to be read in support of a motion to pay purchase money into court. Bradshaw v. Bradshaw, 2 Meriv. 492.

5. Acts of ownership amounting to waste, by alteration and conversion of property, sufficient to induce the Court to order payment of purchase money into court, upon the ground that a vendor has a lien on the estate for the amount, and might have filed his bill to restrain the purchaser in possession from committing such acts of ownership. Though the bill contained no charge of such acts having been committed, the order was made on affidavit supplying the fact, the defendant not having answered, nor being in contempt, nor under any decree for time. Cutler v. Symons, 2 Meriv. 103.

6. Purchaser (a trustee acting on behalf of himself and others, his co-trustees, and of the cestui que trust) ordered to pay purchase money into court, the agreement having been entered into in the name of himself alone, upon affidavits that the plaintiffs (the vendors) had no notice of his acting for others, and of acts of ownership committed since possession given to him under the agreement, in opposition to the answer alleging notice, and denying any act of ownership by himself, or by any other person to his knowledge. Crutchley v. Jerningham, 2 Meriv. 502.

7. A purchaser may be committed for disobeying an order to pay in his money. Lansdown v. Elderton, 14 Ves. 512.

7. Other Matters.

8. Payment to the solicitor for all parties in the suit is equivalent to payment into court. Price v. North, 2 Y. & Coll. 620; 7 L. J., N. S., Exch. Eq., 9.

9. Conditions of sale provided that the purchase should be completed on a given day, and that "if from any cause whatever the purchase should not be then completed," the purchaser should pay interest from that time till the day of completion. The title was accepted, and the deeds prepared and tendered some days before the time fixed. Two days before that time the vendor died, having devised her estates to an infant, which rendered a suit necessary to obtain completion, and delay was occasioned. After filing the bill, the purchaser paid his money into court, to the general credit of the cause:—Held, that the death of the vendor was an event within the contemplation of the parties, and the purchaser was liable to pay interest, that the payment into court was not a payment to the purchaser; and that, there being no fault in either party, the decree must be without costs. Bannerman v. Clarke, 3 Drew. 632; 26 L. J., Ch., 77; 5 W. R. 37.

10. Where, pending a demurrer to bill, the vendor is ordered to place proper conveyance into hands of Court, purchaser is ordered to place purchase money there also; the purchaser will not be permitted to take out conveyance, though he consents to vendor taking out the money. Cutler v. Broughton, 3 Madd. 95.

11. Purchase money paid into court is the property of vendor. Gell v. Watson, 2 Sim. & 8. 402; 3 L. J., Ch., 199.

12. The vendor dying intestate, and having an infant heir, the purchase money, being paid into court in a suit for a specific performance instituted after his death, will be retained till the heir attains twenty-one, and conveys. Bullock v. Bullock, 1 Jac. & Walk. 603.

13. A purchaser is not conclusively bound by the acceptance of the title by his counsel, but if he pays his purchase money into court he is bound. This rule, however, does not apply to a case where the counsel is misled by the abstract of title. McCulloch v. Gregory, 1 Kay & J. 286; 24 L. J., Ch., 246; 3 W. R. 231; 3 Eq. Rep. 495.

6. Right of Vendor to Interest. In General, 7269.

7. Right of Vendor to Interest under Express Conditions, 7271.

1. From what Time.

14. A purchaser taking possession without a conveyance was compelled to pay interest, though the money was to be paid at a particular day, on the execution of the conveyance. Fludyer v. Cocker, 12 Ves. 25.

15. Specific performance prayed both by original and cross-bill, after considerable delay upon the title; the rents to be received, and interest paid, from the time stipulated. Fenton v. Brown, 14 Ves. 144.

16. Purchaser, after long possession and vexatious objections to complete the purchase:—Held, to have waived his right to an investigation of the title, and decreed to perform the agreement specifically, to pay interest at 4 per cent. on the unpaid purchase money from the time of taking possession, and to pay the costs of the suit. Hall v. Laver, 3 Y. & Coll. 191.

1. Circumstances under which it was held, that the ordinary relation of vendor and purchaser existed between a railway company and the owner of certain lands taken by the company; and that the owner was entitled to interest on the purchase money, from the time the company took possession of the lands, up to the time of lodging the money in the bank. Blount v. Great Southern & Western Railway Co., 2 Ir. Ch. R. 40.

2. Sale of an annuity before the Master takes effect from the confirmation of the report, and the sale being on the 11th August, and the report confirmed in Michaelmas term, interest was given upon the purchase money from the first day on which the report could have been confirmed, viz., the first seal before the term. Twigg v. Fyfield, 13 Ves. 517.

3. A purchaser under a decree for sale, having accepted, and (on a report of an objection to the title for which compensation was ordered) retained possession, must pay interest on the purchase money from the time at which he might have safely taken possession, and is entitled to an allowance for prior, not for subsequent, deterioration of the estate. Binks v. Rokeby (Lord), 2 Swan. 222.

4. Under an Inclosure Act an allotment had been made to the improprator in lieu of tithes; and by the Act the tithes were to cease on the allotment being made, but the Act did not authorise the sale of allotments before the execution of the award; in the interim, the improprator agreed to sell his allotment for 700*l.*, to be paid on the 25th March then next, on a good and valid title being made and executed. The award was not made until several years after the agreement, but the purchaser had been all along in possession of the allotment. The Court ordered him to pay 4 per cent. interest on his purchase money from the 25th March next after the date of the agreement, although a good title could not be made until the award was executed. Att.-Gen. v. Christ Church (Dean), Oxford, 13 Sim. 214; 12 L. J., N. S., Ch., 28; 5 Jur. 1007.

5. A purchaser who has not been in possession is bound to pay interest on the purchase money, and take the rents and profits only from the time when a good title was first shown, and not from the time fixed by the agreement for the completion of the purchase. Jones v. Mudd, 4 Russ. 118; 6 L. J., Ch., 27.

6. On decree for a specific performance to purchase lands, the general rule is that the purchase money carries interest from the day when the contract ought to have been performed. But in a suit against an executor for specific performance of a contract by his testator to purchase lands, the plaintiff having taken a decree on consent for specific performance, and a reference to take an account of real and personal assets, was held entitled to interest only from the date of the report, the executor having admitted assets by his answer and the accounts having been unnecessarily taken. Enraght v. Fitzgerald, 8 Ir. Eq. R. 87.

7. A purchaser will be charged with interest on his purchase money, only from the time when, with reasonable diligence on his part, the conveyance might have been completed. Boehm v. Wood, 1 L. J., Ch., 234.

8. Where, on a reference as to title in a suit for specific performance, the plaintiff, the vendor, showed a good title in the opinion of the Master from the time of producing before him certain evidence, the existence of which was well known to the defendant; but it had formed no subject of dispute between him and the vendor:—Held, that interest on the purchase money ought to be allowed from the time fixed by the contract for completion, and not merely from the time of the good title actually shown; held, also, that the plaintiff was, under the same circumstances, entitled to the costs of the suit. Monro v. Taylor, 3 Macn. & G. 713; 21 L. J., N. S., Ch., 525. Affirming 8 Hare 51.

9. The decree in a suit for specific performance established, that a good title had been shown within a few days of the original contract. There had been, however, after that time a second agreement between the parties, qualifying the terms of the original contract, and which was made under the impression that a good title had not then been shown since the date of the original contract, which was more than thirteen years before the decree, but only fifteen months before the bill was filed. There had been great dilapidation in the property:—Held, that the whole of the loss incurred thereby fell upon the purchaser, but that interest on the purchase money only ran from the filing of the bill, and interest also was given to the purchaser in the terms of the second agreement, between the date of that agreement and the filing of the bill, upon the balance of his purchase money then lying unproductive. Minchin v. Nanoe, 4 Beav. 332.

10. A purchaser is liable to pay interest on his purchase money from the time when he could prudently take possession; but held, that he could not prudently take possession at the time a good title was shown, if he had no assurance that a person having a charge on the property would join in the conveyance. Wells v. Maxwell, 32 Beav. 550.

11. In the course of the winding-up of a company, it was ordered that the hereditaments which constituted the real estate of the company should be sold. The hereditaments had been, at the time when the company purchased them, conveyed to each of the shareholders, his heirs and assigns, in so many undivided one-hundredth parts as represented the number of his shares in the company. In pursuance of the order the official manager put up the hereditaments for sale, and sold the same according to certain conditions. By one of such conditions it was provided that the vendor should deliver to the purchaser an abstract of the documents affecting the shares into which the company was divided, but that he should nevertheless accept a conveyance of the entire property from the official manager, under the powers contained in the Winding-up Acts, without requiring the concurrence of any of the shareholders, or of any other person. Also, that if the purchaser should consider the legal estate to be outstanding, and should require a conveyance thereof, he should bear the expenses of obtaining such conveyance, and all other expenses incidental thereto:—Held, that the contract was completed when the conveyance of the equitable interest by the official manager was made; and that the purchaser must pay interest on the remainder of the purchase money from that time. Sheerness Well or Waterworks Co. (Official Manager) v. Polson, 9 W. R. 113; 3 De G. F. & J. 35; 29 Beav. 70; 7 Jur., N. S., 12; 30 L. J., Ch., 326; 4 L. T., N. S., 568.

Under Express Conditions.] See 7 infra.

2. Rate.

1. Where no stipulation as to interest, and purchaser completes his part, he pays 5 per cent. interest, and takes rents and profits; but where rents and profits do not value at 5 per cent. he pays no interest, and vendor takes rents and profits. Edaile v. Stephenson, 1 Sim. & S. 122.

2. Purchaser charged with 5l. per cent. interest on the purchase money unpaid. Burnell v. Brown, 1 Jac. & Walk. 168.

3. Agreement for the payment of the purchase money of an estate, by half-yearly instalments, the four last of which are to be retained by the purchaser as an indemnity until a good title shall be made, does not entitle the vendor to compound interest on such instalments upon a bill by him for specific performance of the agreement, it appearing that until such bill was filed he was not prepared to make a good title to the premises in question. Stratton v. Symon, 2 Moore 125.

4. On motion by vendor against purchaser in possession for reference to set occupation rent, title not being completed, order was accordingly made, and that interest at 5 per cent. on deposit should, under circumstances, be deducted from rent. Smith v. Jackson, 1 Madd. 618.

On Promissory Notes (Ireland).] See XXIV. v. 3 (b) post.

3. After Appropriation of Purchase Money.

5. To excuse a purchaser from paying interest during the delay in clearing difficulties as to the title, it is not sufficient that the money was appropriated and unproductive, but the vendor must have notice thereof. Powell v. Martyr, 8 Ves. 146.

6. Effect of a deposit by vendee, with notice to vendor to stop or determine the rate of interest, not as a tender and appropriation, transferring the risk as to the principal: therefore, upon an investment in stock by the vendee, the title not being ready, and the vendor having notice, but returning no answer, the advantage by a rise, as the loss by a fall, is the vendee's. Roberts v. Massey, 13 Ves. 561.

7. When purchase money is agreed to be paid, and a conveyance made at a given time, and disputes arise as to title, and the purchaser proposes to vendor to lay out the purchase money in exchequer bills till wanted, but vendor returns no answer, and money is so laid out, the purchaser is at the risk, and the vendor is entitled to the money, with 4 per cent. interest. (See 13 Ves. 563. n.) When the purchase is completed, the purchaser is entitled to the rents and profits till possession given, and vendor to purchase money with interest: and if by neglect of vendor no rents, etc., have been received, he will be liable for what he might have received while purchaser was out of possession. Ackland v. Cuming or Gaisford, 2 Madd. 28.

8. A contract having been made for sale of an estate, it afterwards appeared that there were several outgoing from the estate which were not disclosed at the time of the contract, yet these being matters which be in compensation, the contract shall be carried into execution, with an allowance only to the purchaser for these particulars which diminish the value; the agreement not being completed within the time specified, the purchaser shall be allowed interest for such time as the purchase money shall appear to have been kept dead for the especial purpose of completing the contract. Howland v. Norris, 1 Cox 59.

9. Purchaser paying purchase money into his banker's, where it remained four years with notice to vendor:—Held, not liable for interest on difference between his average balance in banker's hands during a few days, when less than the purchase money was therein, and during the three preceding years. Winter v. Blades, 2 Sim. & S. 393; 4 L. J., Ch., 81.

10. Where the Great Western Railway Company have paid the purchase money of property under settlement into the Bank of England, the vendors (the trustees) cannot apply under the Act, by petition, to charge them with interest during the time it has lain idle, on the ground, that the company ought to have paid it to the trustees who were authorised by the settlement to receive it. Exp. White, Re Great Western Railway Co., 9 L. J., N. S., Exch. Eq., 9.

11. Where interest was to be paid, if delay arose from any cause in payment of the purchase money:—Held, that it was not payable where notice was given that the money was lying unproductive, and the delay arose from the state of the title. Donning v. Henderson, 1 De G. & Sm. 689; 17 L. J., N. S., Ch., 8; 12 Jur. 89.

12. By the conditions of sale it was stipulated that the purchaser should pay the remainder of the purchase money, after deducting the deposit, into court on or before the 26th December 1845; but, if he should fail in making such payment, etc., then, and from whatever cause the delay might have arisen, he should pay interest at 5 per cent. per annum on the said balance from that day until the day of payment. The purchaser deposited the balance on the 23rd December with his bankers at 2½ per cent. per annum, and gave notice thereof to the vendors. The title was not completed until August 1847, but the purchaser, being satisfied with the title, paid the balance and interest at 5 per cent. into court in the July previously, reserving the question of his right to compensation for loss of the difference between interest at 2½ and 5 per cent. occasioned by the delay of the vendors:—Held, that the purchaser must bear the loss arising from the unproductiveness of the purchase money, it being his own voluntary act to invest it. De Visme v. De Visme, 1 Macn. & G. 336; 1 H. & Tw. 408; 19 L. J., N. S., Ch., 52; 18 L. J., N. S., Ch., 159; 13 Jur. 205, 1037.

1. A purchaser agreed that, "if from any cause whatever" the purchase should not be completed by a day named, interest should be payable. He spent a considerable part of the intervening time without taking any steps towards investigating the title, having been prevented from paying the purchase money before the appointed day only by reason of his being disappointed in procuring the discounting of some bills for that purpose; on receiving a note, after the day, from the vendor that he should be charged with interest he paid the money into a banker's, and informed the vendor that it should lie there until the completion of the purchase, having meanwhile raised some objections of little weight to the title, which were removed after a reasonable time:—Held, that under these circumstances the vendor was entitled to the stipulated interest. Stocks v. Holdsworth, 2 W. R. 450.

Quære, if the vendor is a maltster, is that fact notice to a purchaser that he is a Crown debtor. Ib.

2. The rule that, where a vendor fails to complete at the time agreed upon, the purchaser, by providing himself with the money, and giving notice that it is lying idle, may free himself from payment of subsequent interest, is settled by well-established authorities, and could not have been intended to be rendered doubtful by the dicta in De Visme v. De Visme (1 Macn. & G. 352). Dyson v. Hornby, 4 De G. & Sm. 481.

3. Vendor held accountable for the rents, but not entitled to any interest on the purchase money, the purchase not having been completed through the default of the vendor, and the purchase money having, after notice to the vendor, been lying idle. Regent's Canal Co. v. Ware, 23 Beav. 575. See Storry v. Walsh, 27 L. J., Ch., 338.

4. A purchaser contracted for the purchase of real estate at the price of 38,500*l.*, which was to carry interest at 5 per cent. until payment, and he was let into possession. Afterwards, difficulties having arisen in completing the purchase, he paid 38,000*l.* into a bank to a separate account, and gave notice to the vendors that this sum was appropriated for the purposes of the purchase, and that he would refuse to pay interest under the contract. The vendors replied that they disputed the sufficiency of the notice, but did not point out that the sum paid in was deficient by 500*l.* On discovering the deficiency, the purchaser paid in 500*l.*, with interest at 5 per cent.:—Held, that the purchaser was not liable for interest subsequently to the time when he paid 38,000*l.* into the bank. Kershaw v. Kershaw, 9 L. R., Eq., 56; 18 W. R. 477; 21 L. T., N. S., 651.

5. The decree in a suit for specific performance established, that a good title had been shown within a few days of the original contract. There had been, however, after that time a second agreement between some parties qualifying the terms of the original contract, and which was made under the impression that a good title had not then been shown since the date of the original contract, which was more than thirteen years before the decree, but only fifteen months before the bill was filed. There had been great dilapidation in the property:—Held, that the whole of the loss incurred thereby fell upon the purchaser, but that interest on the purchase money only ran from the filing of the bill, and interest also was given to the purchaser in the terms of the second agreement, between the date of that agreement and the filing of the bill, upon the balance of his purchase money then lying unproductive. Minchin v. Nance, 4 Beav. 332.

4. On Sale of Reversions.

6. The purchaser of a reversion, under a decree for sale, had, by one of the conditions of sale, stipulated to pay the purchase money by a certain day. The vendors did not deliver an abstract of their title until after the day named for payment of the purchase money:—Held, notwithstanding the non-delivery of the abstract, that the vendors were entitled to interest from that day. Lewis v. Tucker, 5 Jur. 1105.

7. A purchaser of a future interest, after a term, shall not pay interest on an increased price for a part of the term elapsing before the purchase is completed unless the delay be his fault. Growscock v. Smith, 3 Anstr. 877.

8. The purchaser of a reversionary interest under the decree of the Court is bound to pay interest at the rate of 3*l.* 10*s.* per cent. on the three-fourths of his purchase money from the date of the report of good title, he not having been guilty of any laches up to that period, to the date of the lodgment. Hutchinson v. Cathcart, Jon. & C. 260; 11r. Eq. R. 452.

The rule is the same if the property be in its nature reversionary, though there be a small present profit arising from it. Ib.

Upon obtaining the report of good title, it is the duty of the purchaser to bring in the remainder of his purchase money; and if he is afterwards discharged on account of defect of title, he will be entitled to interest thereupon: he is therefore properly chargeable with interest from that time. Ib.

9. Where purchaser has an advantage by dropping in of lives, the Court will direct an inquiry what interest he should pay on that account. Davy v. Barber, 2 Atk. 489. See quære. And see White v. Nutt, 1 P. W. 61.

If purchaser by private contract does not pay the purchase money at a time fixed he will be chargeable with interest; as he must bear any loss, so, likewise, will he be entitled to any profits that may arise from the estate. Ib.

10. The advantage a purchaser receives from the extinction of lives has never been considered in equity as a reason for his paying interest on his purchase money. It is not a general rule that a purchaser of estates, under a private agreement, or a decree for a sale, shall, from the time of possession, pay interest. The Court, in awarding interest, never regards the purchase, but the time of executing the conveyances; and even then the purchaser shall pay interest only from the time the possession is delivered. Where lives drop in after a man is reported the best bidder, the Court will direct the purchaser to make some compensation in respect to the estates being bettered. Blount v. Blount, 3 Atk. 636, 638.

1. A reversion expectant on an estate for life is decreed to be sold; B. is confirmed the best purchaser, and the order made absolute 1st January. 1724; in January 1726 B. is ordered to bring his money into the bank; the life drops; if the life had dropped the next day after the report of B.'s being the best purchaser made absolute, the purchase must have stood, and as for that time the life was wearing, so from that time the purchaser ought to pay interest. Exp. Manning, 2 P. W. 410.

2. A purchaser of a reversion must pay interest on his purchase money from the time of his purchase. Trefusis v. Clinton (Lord), 2 Sim. 359.

3. Upon the sale of a reversion, interest is payable from the time appointed for completion. Bailey v. Collett, 18 Beav. 179; 23 L. J., Ch., 230; 2 W. R. 216.

4. The purchaser of a reversion, expectant on a lease for lives, must pay interest on the purchase money from the day on which the Master reports that a good title could have been made by the vendor to the time of payment. Enraght v. Fitzgerald, 2 Dr. & War. 43; 1 Con. & L. 181.

5. The purchaser of a reversion must pay interest from the time at which the contract ought to have been completed. Williams v. Glenton, 84 Beav. 528; 11 Jur., N. S., 801; 13 W. R. 1030; 13 L. T., N. S., 10. Affirmed 12 Jur., N. S., 175; 35 L. J., Ch., 284; 14 W. R. 294; 13 L. T., N. S., 727.

6. Real estate, including property in possession and in reversion, was put up for sale by auction in lots, under a condition that the vendors should confirm the Master's report of purchases on or before the 25th December 1849, and that, on or before that day, each purchaser should pay his purchase money into court, and be entitled to the rents of his lot from that day; and that if, from any cause whatever, the purchase money should not be so paid, he should pay interest on it at 5l. per cent. from that day. A. purchased a reversion in fee, being one of the lots. Through the default of the vendors, the Master's report was not confirmed until August 1851. Motion, that A. should pay his purchase money into court, with interest from the 25th December 1849:—Held, that interest was payable from that day at 4l. per cent. Wallis v. Sarel, 21 L. J., Ch., 717.

5. Right of Purchaser to Interest. In General.

7. On a bill by a purchaser for specific performance of a contract for the sale of an estate, a vendor, who during fifteen years had retained possession of the whole estate, and of one-third of the purchase money, was, under the circumstances, charged with interest on one-third of the rents and profits. Burton v. Todd, 1 Swan. 255.

8. A sum not exceeding the interest of the purchase money, or the rents of the estate, paid to the purchaser when the money had been lodged three years, but the title was not yet completed. Piers v. Piers, 11 Ir. Eq. R. 358.

9. Purchaser is entitled to interest on his deposit, and to costs at law and in equity, until the vendor has made his title good; but vendor is entitled to subsequent costs, and may enforce the contract if his title be good when the report is made. The rents belong to the vendor till his title is made good, and afterwards the purchaser must take to the rents and pay interest on his purchase money till the principal is discharged. Pincke v. Curteis, 4 Bro. C. C. 329. And see Id. 333. n.

10. The amount of deterioration of an estate pending a suit for specific performance having been ascertained by an issue, the purchaser was allowed it out of his purchase money, which he had paid into court under an order, with interest from the time when he paid in his money. Ferguson v. Tadmam, 1 Sim. 530.

11. Where sale by trustee to purchaser with notice of trust is set aside, neither purchaser nor trustee pays interest on the rents. Macartney v. Blackwood, 1 Ridgw. L. & S. 602.

On Return of Deposit.] See I. 1 supra.

6. Right of Vendor to Interest. In General.

12. Where vendor has improperly delayed performance of contract, and refused to give possession, he is not entitled to benefit of general rule as to interest on purchase money. Paton v. Rogers, 6 Madd. 257.

13. Purchaser not to pay interest on the deposit even where he has rendered a suit necessary by refusing to perform the contract on the ground of an objection to the title which could not be supported. Bridges v. Robinson, 3 Meriv. 694.

14. A purchaser, complaining that his conveyance did not comprise the whole of the property which he had contracted for, filed his bill for a conveyance of the remainder, and obtained an injunction, restraining the vendor from suing him for the purchase money, part of which was afterwards ordered to be paid into court to abide the event of the suit. The bill was dismissed:—Held, that the vendor was entitled to the residue of the purchase money, and the interest upon it, to the time of payment, although the purchase money in court had not been laid out; and no interest therefore had accrued thereon. Humphries v. Horne, 3 Hare 276.

15. Though a purchaser has the benefit of the increased value of ornamental timber, by reason of its growth during the years that have intervened between his agreement and the time from which he is considered as in possession of the land, he will not, in respect of that benefit, be charged with interest on any part of the purchase money. Boehm v. Wood, 1 L. J., Ch. 234.

16. Where in the contract the word "produce" a good title is used, the vendor is only entitled to interest from the day on which he has verified the title. Parr v. Lovegrove, 6 W. R. 201, 709; 4 Drew. 170; 4 Jur., N. S., 600.

1. A purchaser taking possession without a conveyance was compelled to pay interest, though the money was to be paid at a particular day, on the execution of the conveyance. Fludyer v. Cocker, 12 Ves. 25.

2. Interest against a purchaser for delaying payment. Court will not make purchaser appoint a clerk in court, which is only necessary where the party is to appear. Child v. Abingdon (Lord), 1 Ves. J. 94.

3. Specific performance of an agreement for sale of an estate decreed, notwithstanding a variance from the description, with compensation for the deficiency in value, though a minute examination might have discovered the defects, as in the state of the house, etc., but not for a variance from the description, as lying within a ring fence; the premises consisting of leasehold farm, and three years having expired pending the suit, interest was given to the vendor, and a rent set upon it in respect of his possession. Dyer v. Hargrave, 10 Ves. 505.

4. Where sale by trustee to purchaser, with notice of trust, is set aside, neither purchaser nor trustee pays interest on rents. Macartney v. Blackwood, 1 Ridgw. L. & S. 602.

5. On a sale of real estate by a trustee under a will, open to suspicion, as having been obtained by an undue influence, the title was approved; but before the actual completion of the contract the heir-at-law gave notice that he intended to dispute the will, and brought an action against the tenant for rent; the purchaser thereupon refused to complete, and a bill for specific performance was filed, but before it came to a hearing the action brought by the heir was tried, and a verdict given against the heir; a reference as to title was then directed, and the Master having reported in favour of the title, a decree was made for specific performance. On appeal, however, by the purchaser, the Lord Chancellor ordered the case to stand over generally, with liberty for the vendor to take such proceedings for establishing the will as he should be advised. The vendor then instituted a suit against the heir, which resulted in the will being established. The Lord Chancellor thereupon confirmed the decree for specific performance, and directed the purchaser to pay interest from the time when under the contract the sale ought to have been completed, and also to pay the costs of the suit subsequently to the hearing, when the reference as to title was directed. His Lordship held, that at that time there had been such reasonable inquiry into the title as ought to have satisfied the purchaser; and that, therefore, the consequences of the further proceedings by which the will was established, both in reference to the costs of the suit for specific performance, and the payment of interest, must fall on the purchaser. The judgment of Lord Cottenham in this case (3 Ph. 619; 17 L. J., N. S., Ch., 351; 12 Jur. 385) observed upon. Grove v. Bastard, 1 De G. M. & G. 69. And see Grove v. Young, 5 De G. & Sm. 38; 21 L. J., N. S., Ch., 95; 15 Jur. 1099.

6. Where conditions of sale provide that interest shall be paid from a certain day, if purchase not then completed, purchaser cannot relieve himself therefrom, though vendor caused delay. Esdaile v. Stephenson, 1 Sim. & S. 122.

Otherwise where no stipulation. Id.

7. Under a contract to take together with a mill the machinery in it at a valuation, the purchaser was held not liable to pay interest on the amount of the estimate down to the time at which a good title to the mill was first shown. Carrodus v. Sharp, 20 Beav. 56.

8. In a suit by purchasers of certain mines to set aside a sale, it was ordered at the hearing as a condition of obtaining an injunction to stay proceedings at law, that the plaintiff should pay into court from time to time interest on the balance of purchase money, under which order five instalments were paid in and invested in stock, which, upon judgment being given for the plaintiff, were transferred to him with the accumulations and sold out by him. The payment of interest, however, had been suspended before the hearing in consideration of some indulgence to the defendant. The House of Lords reversed the decree, and remitted the cause to the Court below, and that Court directed re-payment to the defendant, without interest, of the produce of the sale of the stock; also the instalments of interest which became due between the order for suspension and the original decree, but no interest thereon. But as to the interest on balance of purchase money between the decree and judgment of reversal, the Court had no jurisdiction. Small v. Attwood, 3 Y. & Coll. 105.

9. The plaintiff, having purchased the defendant's interest in two leases, was allowed by the defendant to go into possession without completing the contract by paying the purchase money, and was afterwards dispossessed by force by the defendant. The plaintiff filed a bill for specific performance, and prayed a direction for an assessment of the damages sustained by him by reason of the non-performance of the contract, including the entry upon, and the detention of, the premises from him, and that the defendant should be decreed to pay to him those damages:—Held, that, once possession was taken by the defendant, it should be treated not as that of a trespasser, but as the ordinary possession of a vendor; that the plaintiff should be charged with interest on the purchase money during the time of his possession; and that, from the date when possession was resumed by the defendant, interest on the unpaid purchase money should not be charged against the plaintiff, nor should the rents, profits, or damages be charged against the defendant. Johnston v. Johnston, 3 Ir. R., Eq., 328.

10. The putting up of a notice board for the purpose of selling or letting building land by a purchaser:—Held, to render him liable to pay interest on the purchase money. Ballard v. Shutt, 15 L. R., Ch. D., 122; 49 L. J., Ch., 618; 43 L. T. 173; 29 W. R. 73.

11. A railway company having agreed to let its line to another, which had taken possession under the agreement, filed a specific performance bill against the other, which thereupon gave notice that it would pay the rent into court. The plaintiffs then gave the defendants notice, that, unless the rent were paid to the plaintiffs, interest would be claimed on it under the 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 42, s. 28. The defendants obtained ex parte an order that they might be at liberty to pay the rent into court, and paid it accordingly:—Held, that they thereby obstructed the recovery of interest at law, and that the Court had jurisdiction to order payment of interest. Hull & Selby Railway Co. v. North Eastern Railway Co., 5 De G. M. & G. 872.

7 Right of Vendor to Interest under Express Conditions.

1. Where conditions of sale provide that interest shall be paid from a certain day, if purchase not then completed, purchaser cannot relieve himself therefrom, though vendor caused delay. Esdaile v. Stephenson, 1 Sim. & S. 122. But see 4 Russ. 121. n.

Otherwise in case of no stipulation. Id.

2. By conditions of sale the purchase money was to carry interest; a deposit of 20*l.* per cent. was to be paid, and the auction duty was to be borne equally by the purchaser and the vendor; the purchaser paid only the amount of the deposit, and out of it the auctioneer paid the whole of the auction duty:—Held, that the portion of the deposit applied in discharge of the purchaser's moiety of the auction duty was to be considered as an unpaid part of the purchase money, and that the vendor was entitled to interest on it. Townshend v. Townshend, 2 Russ. 303.

3. A contract of purchase contained a stipulation, that if, by reason of any unforeseen or unavoidable obstacles, the conveyance could not be perfected for execution before the day fixed for the completion of the purchase, the purchaser should from that day pay interest at 5 per cent. on his purchase money, and be entitled to the rents and profits of the premises: the vendor did not show a good title till long after the specified day:—Held, that he was not entitled to interest, except from the time when a good title was first shown. Monck v. Huskisson, 4 Russ. 121. n.; 5 L. J., Ch., 163.

4. If parties stipulate that interest shall be paid from a certain time, and the rents and profits shall belong to the other party from that time, that contract must be carried into effect, notwithstanding the delay that may arise in the completion of the contract. Portman v. Mill, 8 L. J., N. S., Ch., 161.

5. On the sale of an estate, subject to mortgages by trustees, one of the conditions was, that the purchaser should pay a deposit, and agree to pay the remainder of the purchase money on or before the 11th October 1840; and, on payment thereof, the purchaser should be entitled to the rents from that day, up to which time all outgoings, including interest to the mortgagees, were to be borne by the vendors; but if, from any circumstances, the money should not be paid at the time fixed, the purchaser should pay interest at 5 per cent. until the time of payment. The purchaser was ready with his money on the day appointed to complete his purchase, and also to pay off the mortgagees, to whom he had given the usual notices; but the contract for sale could not be carried into effect on that day, in consequence of an order of the Court made subsequently to the contract, and which was not contemplated at the time the contract was entered into, subjecting all contracts entered into by the trustees to the approbation of the Court:—Held, that, under the above condition, the purchaser was bound to pay interest on his purchase money at 5 per cent. from the 11th October 1840, and not from the time when the Court ordered the contract to be carried into execution; and also to the mortgagees, at 5 per cent., the rate payable on their mortgages; and that he was not entitled to be relieved in these respects as against the vendors and the trust estate, although he had only made 3*½* per cent. by his money pending the delay in procuring the approbation of the Court to the contract, and would be obliged to give some of the mortgagees fresh notices. Matson v. Swift, 5 Jur. 645.

6. On a sale under the Court in June 1839, it was provided by the conditions that the abstract should be delivered in twenty-one days; that the purchaser should be entitled to the rents from October, and pay his purchase money in November; and if, "from any cause whatever," it should not be paid at that time, he should pay interest at 5 per cent. The vendors were unable to deliver the abstract within the time, and there was great delay and difficulty on their part in making out their title, which was not complete till 1845. The purchaser had entered into possession. On a motion made in 1845 to pay the purchase money and interest into court:—Held, that the purchaser would not be relieved from payment of interest, but the order to pay was made without prejudice to any application for compensation. Greenwood v. Churchill, 8 Beav. 413; 14 L. J., N. S., Ch., 143; 9 Jur. 196.

7. Agreement that purchase money of certain property taken by a railway company should remain in their hands until completion of the purchase, and should then, with interest at 5 per cent. per annum, be handed over to vendor:—Held, under the circumstances, that the words "completion of the purchase" meant completion on the part of a purchaser by payment of the purchase money to the vendor. Lewis v. South Wales Railway Co., 1 W. R. 45; 10 Hare 113; 22 L. J., Ch., 209; 16 Jur. 1149.

8. A purchaser covenants with his vendor to pay interest at 5 per cent. upon the unpaid portion of his purchase money; but the vendor covenanted that, if interest at the rate of 4 per cent. was regularly paid, he would accept that in lieu of the larger rate. The purchaser did not pay the 4*½* per cent., but alleged that an agreement had been entered into between him and the vendor for the payment of 2*½* per cent. only. The vendor being dead, and an administration suit having been instituted, and the purchaser not having paid even the 2*½* per cent., an action was brought on the covenant against the purchaser. The purchaser thereupon filed a bill for an injunction to restrain the action. On motion for injunction:—Held, that the agreement as to the 2*½* per cent. not having been satisfactorily proved, there was in that respect no equity for an injunction; but that as the non-payment of the 2*½* per cent. had been, to a certain extent, condoned, execution in the action would be restrained upon terms. Houghton v. Crawford, 23 L. T. 340.

1. In conditions of sale a time was fixed for the delivery of the abstract, and also for the payment of the purchase money, or for interest to run, if the money were not paid at that time, "from whatever cause the delay might have arisen." The vendor did not deliver the abstract at the time stipulated:—Held, that the purchaser was only liable to pay interest from the time a good title was shown. De Visne v. De Visne, 1 Macn. & G. 336; 1 H. & Tw. 408; 19 L. J., N. S., Ch., 52; 13 Jur. 1037. Reversing 18 L. J., N. S., Ch., 159; 13 Jur. 205.

2. The case of De Visne v. De Visne (1 Macn. & G. 336) must be acted on with some caution; and it is not in every case of delay in the delivering of a sufficient abstract that a vendor is to lose the interest which he has stipulated for. Rowley v. Adams, 12 Beav. 476.

Upon a sale under the Court, on the 14th September, there was a condition that the purchaser should confirm the report, and before the 10th November pay his purchase money and interest from the 29th September, and be entitled to the rents from that time; and "under no circumstances" was he to be excused paying interest from that time. The purchaser was unable to obtain and serve the order of confirmation until the 29th November. The abstract was delivered on the 6th December, and the requisition finally answered on the 17th January:—Held, that there was no such delay on the part of the vendor as to release the purchaser from payment of interest. Id.

3. A condition that if from any cause whatever the purchase money shall not be paid by a particular day, the purchaser making defaults shall pay interest from that day, does not render the purchaser liable to pay interest where he has given notice (according to the fact) that his money is lying unproductive, and the delay arises from the state of the title. Denning v. Henderson, 1 De G. & Sm. 689; 17 L. J., N. S., Ch., 8; 12 Jur. 89.

4. By conditions of sale, interest was payable from November 1846, if, "from any cause whatever," the purchase should not be then completed. The vendors did not make out their title until March 1849:—Held, that interest was payable only from the last-mentioned period. Robertson v. Shelton, 12 Beav. 363; 19 L. J., N. S., Ch., 140.

5. It is a general rule of equity, that if a purchaser is in possession of an estate, receiving the rents, he is liable to pay the purchase money, and that the purchase money being retained by him will carry interest, to be paid by him to the seller. An agreement, which appears to prevent the application of this rule, will be examined in a court of equity by its aid, and will or will not be enforced according to circumstances. Birch v. Joy, 3 H. L. Ca. 565.

B., in March 1812, contracted for the purchase of an estate from C., for 90,000*l.* The estate was very much incumbered, and C. was to make a title free from all incumbrances, except one mortgage of 12,000*l.* B., on being put into possession of part of the estates, was to pay 16,000*l.* on the 24th June 1812, "and a further sum of 4,000*l.* at Michaelmas next, on C. putting B. into the actual possession of the remainder, free from all incumbrances, except the mortgage for 12,000*l.*; the further sum of 25,000*l.* in March 1813; 16,500*l.* in March 1816; and 16,500*l.* in March 1818." B. was to grant C. a mortgage of all the estates for securing these three sums at the respective times aforesaid, "with legal interest from Michaelmas next." The 20,000*l.* thus agreed to be paid in two sums within the first year not having been paid by B., nor any of the incumbrances cleared off by C., a new agreement was entered into in October 1812. B. was forthwith to advance 10,000*l.* to pay off certain incumbrances, he was to be let into immediate possession, to be entitled to the rents and profits "from Michaelmas last," and to be at liberty to cut timber, etc. The conveyances were to be executed as soon as existing difficulties could be removed; and every possible exertion was to be made to that end. It was further agreed that "the interest of the remainder of the purchase money shall not commence till Lady-day next, in case the title shall be perfected, and the conveyances and other assurances executed at that time; and if not, then to commence on the execution of such assurances." B. was let into possession, but the business was not completed. In a suit by B. for specific performance, an account having been directed:—Held, first, that under the clause in the second agreement, exempting "the remainder of the purchase money" from the payment of interest, the sum remaining unpaid of the 20,000*l.*, and the three sums constituting the 58,000*l.*, must be taken to come under that description; secondly, that the exemption of a purchaser in possession of the estate from liability to interest on the purchase money, though permissible if the agreement had been speedily executed, would not be enforced by any court of equity where that state of things continued for many years; and, thirdly, that the second contract must be taken to have failed by circumstances, and that the first contract must be decreed to be executed so far as it had remained unexecuted; and the House of Lords ordered the accounts to be settled on these principles. No costs were given. Id.

6. A purchase was to be completed on a given day, when the purchaser was to have possession, and it was provided, "that if from any cause whatever" the purchase money should not be then paid, the purchaser should pay interest. A delay of six months occurred, from the default of the vendor in not furnishing proper abstracts:—Held, that the purchaser must pay interest, unless he gave up the rent, during that period. Cowpe v. Bakerell, 13 Beav. 421.

7. Where conditions of sale provide that interest shall be paid by the purchaser from a fixed time, if the completion should be delayed by any cause whatever, delay merely occasioned by the state of the title, and not wilful on the part of the vendor, falls within the provision. Sherwin v. Shakspear, 5 De G. M. & G. 517; 18 Jur. 843; 23 L. J., Ch., 898; 1 W. R. 460; 2 W. R. 668; 2 Eq. Rep. 957.

Where, in addition to such a provision, there were stipulations that the vendor might rescind on the title being objected to, and that if a good title should not be made to a definite proportion of the property, compensation should be allowed:—Held, that the non-delivery of a complete abstract, at a time fixed by the conditions, would not of itself exempt the purchaser from payment of interest. Id.

Where the execution of an agreement fixing a time for completion, and requiring payment of interest in case of delay, was intercepted by negotiations, ending in an alteration of the agreement, but not of the time of completion:—Held, that in fixing the period for the payment of interest this circumstance ought to be regarded. Id.

By a contract for sale dated the 30th November 1843, it was stipulated that the abstract of title should be delivered within two months (i.e., before the 25th January 1844), and that, if, from any cause whatever, the purchase was not completed on the 25th April, the purchaser should pay interest on the purchase money from that day. The vendors delivered an abstract within the two months, but it did not embrace the whole of the property by about seven acres. A supplemental abstract relating to the seven acres was accordingly delivered on the 30th November 1844. Various objections were taken to the title, and a good title was not completely made out till July 1847. The vendor continued in possession of the property:—Held, on a bill for specific performance of the contract for sale, that the delay having been caused by the state of the title, and not by wilful default on the part of the vendor, the purchaser was not discharged on account of the delay from paying interest from the time stipulated in contract. But the Court, under the circumstances, decreed that interest was payable from the 1st March 1845, allowing the same period from the delivery of the second abstract as the original contract had allowed from the delivery of the first abstract. Id.

1. By a contract for the sale of an estate, it was stipulated, "that if, from any cause whatsoever, the purchase should not be completed" on a day named, the purchaser should pay interest on his purchase money from that day to the completion. It became necessary to institute a suit to rectify the power under which the vendors sold, in order to make a good title, and a delay occurred in completing. There being no wilful default on the part of the vendor:—Held, that the purchaser was bound to pay interest, and was entitled to the corresponding rents. Palmerston (Lord) v. Turner, 33 Beav. 524; 10 Jur., N. S., 577; 33 L. J., Ch., 457; 12 W. R. 816; 10 L. T., N. S., 364.

The principle of Sherrin v. Shakespear (5 De G. M. & G. 517) applies as well to an actual defect of title as to imperfections in the abstracts delivered. 8 C. 4 N. R. 46.

2. Where the condition is that interest on the purchase money is to be paid from a certain day, "if from any cause whatever" the purchase money be not then paid, the vendor will be entitled to interest where the delay in perfecting the title has arisen from circumstances under which no blame could attach to him, though the purchaser also was not to blame. Exp. Durham (Dean and Chapter), Temart v. Lawson, Temart v. Tewart, 4 W. R. 419; 2 Jur., N. S., 345.

Real estate having been ordered by the Court to be sold, the particulars and conditions of sale, as well as the abstract of the vendor's title, were settled by the chief clerk, and were afterwards approved by the conveyancing counsel of the Court. By the fifth condition of sale the purchaser of each lot was, at his own expense, to obtain the necessary order for paying, and should pay, his purchase money into the Bank of England on or before the 2nd January 1854, on which day the purchases should be completed, and the purchasers let into the receipt of the rents and profits; but if from any cause whatever the purchase money should not be paid, the purchasers should pay interest from the 2nd January 1854; and by the sixth condition of sale the vendors undertook that they would, at their own expense, within fourteen days from the day of the date of the certificate certifying the result of sale, deliver an abstract of title. At the auction no sale took place, but on the 12th October 1853 the petitioners entered into a contract for the purchase of part of the estate, but subject in every respect to the conditions of sale, and subject also to such sale and purchase and the title being approved of, on the part of both parties, by the Court of Chancery. The abstract was not delivered by the time fixed, and when it was delivered the conveyancing counsel did not approve of the title, and great delay was consequently occasioned by the necessary inquiries. The certificate of the chief clerk, that a good title could be made, was not given until the 31st January 1856, and it was approved by the Vice-Chancellor on the 6th February 1856. The purchase money had remained unproductive, and the petitioners submitted that they ought not to be ordered to pay interest on the purchase money, but that under the circumstances the vendors ought to be ordered to accept the rents and profits, which would not amount at 5l. per cent. to the interest on the purchase money by the sum of 578l. :—Held, that the stipulations contained in the fifth condition of sale were the substantial terms of the agreement, which must be treated as having their full force and effect; and that as neither the vendors nor the purchasers were in fault, the former were entitled to interest, and the latter to the rents and profits. Id.

3. One of the conditions at an attempted sale by auction under a decree provided that the purchase should be completed on a day named, and that if from any cause whatever the purchase money should not then be paid, interest should be paid from that date. The purchase was by private contract, subject to the conditions of sale, and also subject to the purchase being approved by the Court. The purchase money was a fund in court, and after a long delay the conveyancing counsel approved of the title for the purchasers:—Held, that neither party being to blame for the delay, the purchasers could not be relieved from their obligation to pay interest. Stewart v. Lamson, 3 Sm. & G. 307.

4. Where conditions of sale fix periods for the delivery of the abstract and the completion of the purchase, and provide that interest shall run, "if, from any cause whatever," the purchase should not be completed, the purchaser must pay interest from the time fixed, though the completion is delayed beyond the time specified in consequence of the state of the title, if there be no fraud or wilful delay on the part of the vendor. Vickers v. Hand, 26 Beav. 630.

By conditions of sale, the abstract was to be delivered before the 18th February. The purchaser was to take the rents from the 25th March, and the purchase was to be completed on the 24th June. And if, from any cause whatever, the completion should be delayed after that time, the purchaser was to pay interest at 5l. per cent. Imperfect abstracts were delivered, and a complete abstract was not delivered until the 17th June. Further delay having occurred in completing, the vendor deposited the purchase money at a banker's, and gave notice, in August, that he would pay no interest:—Held, that as there was no fraud or wilful delay on the part of the vendor, and as the delivery of an imperfect abstract arose simply from the state of the title, the purchaser must pay interest. Ib.

1. A contract was entered into for the sale of property, and it was stipulated that the purchaser should pay 10l. per cent. deposit on the purchase money, and the purchase was to be completed on the 11th October, when the rest of the purchase money was to be paid, and the purchaser was to be entitled to the rents from that day; and if, from any cause whatsoever, the purchase should not then be completed, the purchaser was to pay interest at the rate of 5l. per cent. per annum from that period, until the purchase should be completed. The conveyance was ready for signature when the vendor died, two days before the time fixed for the completion of the contract. The vendor, by will, left the property to an infant; and a suit for specific performance was thereby rendered necessary. The purchaser paid the purchase money into court:—Held, that interest upon the purchase money must be paid by the purchaser from the time fixed for completing the contract; held, also, that payment into court was not a payment to the purchaser. Bannerman v. Clarke, 26 L. J., Ch., 77; 3 Drew. 632; 5 W. R. 37.

2. By a contract for purchase, interest was to be paid on the purchase money from the 26th December 1852, if the purchase was not then completed. Certain objections and requisitions were made with regard to the title. The purchaser declining to complete until these were satisfactorily answered, the vendor filed a claim for specific performance on the 2nd May 1853, and in the following month sent copies of certain deeds, upon receiving which the purchaser, in November, accepted the title. The claim came on to be heard, when the Court, considering that these deeds were not essential to the title, decreed specific performance, with costs, and interest to be paid by the purchaser from the 26th December 1852. Litchfield v. Brown, 23 L. J., Ch., 176.

3. S. entered into a negotiation with the plaintiff for the purchase and transfer to him of the plaintiff's business and property, and the terms of the agreement were, by a son of S., reduced into writing, in the form of a letter from the plaintiff to S. By that letter the plaintiff agreed to the terms proposed as to certain houses and rents, and agreed to give up to S. all deeds, etc., which he might require to carry on, and that might be necessary for him to take to, the whole of his business as a common brewer, and to sign and hand over all the necessary leases that might enable S. to have and possess the whole and sole control over the freehold, leasehold, and copyhold property of which the plaintiff was possessed or interested in, or about to become interested in, save the right of sale of his freehold property. The plaintiff was to use his best endeavours to secure to S. the whole of his trade, on the understanding that S. paid him 100l., or such sum as should make up the deficiency between the two sums of 800l. and 900l. (the latter being the amount which the plaintiff considered his brewhouse and brewing utensils to be worth). If the brewhouse and utensils should not fetch 900l., and if the brewhouse should not be sold within six months, S. agreed to pay interest at 4l. per cent. on the 550l., being the value of that property without the utensils. The document contained a stipulation empowering S. to receive the rents; and at the foot of it a son of S., and on his behalf, signed his name, agreeing to the terms, but it was not signed by the plaintiff, nor did it contain his name. A duplicate copy was, however, signed by him and given to S., who subsequently took possession of some part of the property comprised in the agreement, including the brewery, and received the rents of other parts of the property, and was introduced to the plaintiff's customers. S. also took possession of some of the utensils and casks, and others were sold, both by him and the plaintiff on S.'s behalf. S. afterwards died, having bequeathed all his estate to the defendant, who refused to complete the purchase of the brewhouse and utensils. But, on a bill for specific performance, the Court declared that, according to the true construction of the agreement, the defendant was the purchaser of the brewhouse and utensils at the price of 900l.; that she, upon 550l., part thereof, must pay interest at 4l. per cent.; and that she must account for and pay 350l. for the utensils, without interest, to the date of the decree; and ordered a general account to be taken. Deller v. Simonds, 5 Jur., N. S., 997.

Held, also, that the right to an investigation of the title of the brewery had been waived by the purchaser. Ib.

4. On a sale under the decree of the Court, in October 1849, of a reversion in fee, subject to a term of ninety-nine years, determinable on the death of the survivor of two lives at a small chief rent, it was provided by one of the conditions that the vendors should procure and confirm the Master's report, and obtain an order for the purchaser to pay his purchase money into court on or before the 25th December 1849, when the purchaser was to pay his purchase money, and be entitled to the receipt of the rents; "but if from any cause whatever the purchase money should not be so paid in" on or before that day, the purchaser should pay interest at the rate of 5 per cent. from that day to the time of payment. The vendors delivered their abstract of title in September 1851, but did not make out a good title till March 1852. On a motion then made, that the purchaser might pay his purchase money into court with interest, according to the condition:—Held, that the condition did not apply, but that, as the purchaser had had the benefit of the wearing out of the lives, he must pay interest at the rate of 4l. per cent. Wallis v. Sarel, 5 De G. & Sm. 429; 21 L. J., Ch., 717.

1. On the sale of an advowson, the purchase money was to be paid on a fixed day, and the conveyances to be executed; but, in default of payment, the purchaser was to pay interest. The purchase was not completed, through the default of the vendor:—Held, that no interest was payable. Weddall v. Nixon, 17 Beav. 160; 17 Jur. 642; 22 L. J., Ch., 939.

2. An estate was mortgaged in 1841 for 2,000l., with interest at 5l. per cent. In 1842 the mortgagor died, and in the same year the devisees of the equity of redemption sold by auction the mortgaged premises, together with other lands of the mortgagors, for 2,700l., to the mortgagee. The usual deposit was paid at the time of the sale, and by the conditions of sale 4l. per cent. was payable on the balance of the purchase money. The mortgagee entered into possession in 1842, and remained in such possession until her death in 1847, when her devisees entered into possession. Upon a claim filed by the devisees of the mortgagor against the devisees and executors of the mortgagee for specific performance of the contract to purchase, eleven years after the sale, no demand having been made during that period either for the payment of the residue of the purchase money into court, or for interest on the mortgage:—Held, under the circumstances, that a set-off pro tanto was to be inferred at the date when possession was taken by the mortgagee, and that, from that period, interest at 4l. per cent. only was payable upon the balance of the purchase money. Wallis v. Bastard, 4 De G. M. & G. 251; 17 Jur. 1107.

3. Where a purchaser agrees that if, "from any cause whatever," the purchase is not completed by a certain day, he will pay interest on the purchase money, there must be something amounting almost to serious misconduct on the part of the vendor to disentitle him to the payment of interest. Williams v. Glenton, 12 Jur., N. S., 175; 35 L. J., Ch., 284; 14 W. R. 294; 13 L. T., N. S., 727. Affirming 34 Beav. 528; 11 Jur., N. S., 801; 13 W. R. 1030; 13 L. T., N. S., 10.

The mere existence of difficulties in making out the title is not sufficient. Id.

Therefore, where several years elapsed before the vendor succeeded in making out his title, by reason of adverse claims being set up, such delay, in the absence of misconduct on the part of the vendor, is not sufficient to disentitle him to the payment of interest. Id.

Upon a bill by the vendor against the purchaser to compel specific performance, the purchaser was ordered to pay the costs of the suit, except so far as they had been increased by reason of the vendor having to get in an outstanding legal estate which had become vested in an infant by devise. Id.

4. Where a purchaser knowingly enters into a definite contract to pay interest on his purchase money, and in certain events a higher rate of interest, and those events occur, it is not open to him afterwards, and in the absence of fraud, to complain of the contract into which he has so entered. Herbert (Lady) v. Salisbury & Yeovil Railway Co., 14 L. T., N. S., 507.

A contract for sale of land provided that the purchaser should pay interest on the purchase money, at 4l. per cent., from the time of taking possession until the 1st July 1858, the day appointed by the contract for the payment of the purchase money, and after that day at 5l. per cent., if the purchase money should not be then paid, and after the 1st January 1859 at 8l. per cent., with a proviso, that this should not give the purchaser the right to delay the payment of the purchase money on paying such higher rate of interest. The purchaser took possession of the land in 1857, but owing to circumstances not caused by the misconduct or negligence of the vendor, the purchase was not completed until 1865:—Held, that the stipulation for payment of a higher rate of interest was not in the nature of a penalty to secure the punctual payment of the purchase money, against which the purchaser was entitled to be relieved, but a separate and distinct contract, which he was bound to perform. S. C. 2 L. R., Eq., 221; 14 W. R. 706.

I. FORM OF.

5. In a suit between the vendor and purchaser of an estate where the only question related to the form of the conveyance:—Held, that the purchaser had a right to choose the form of the conveyance, but no costs given on either side. Clark v. May, 1 W. R. 69; 22 L. J., Ch., 302.

6. A vendor of land may be required by the purchaser to convey the land in parcels by separate conveyances at the same time on tender of the entire purchase-money and the additional costs thereby occasioned; but, semble, he cannot be required by the purchaser to convey the land in parcels by separate conveyances at intervals of time, without an express stipulation that he shall be bound to do so. Egmont (Earl) v. Smith, 46 L. J., Ch., 356; 6 L. R., Ch. D., 462.

7. Where, on a conveyance of building land, put up for sale in lots, the vendor takes a separate deed of covenant, the object of so doing is not to keep the notice of the covenant off the face of the title, but to obviate the necessity of executing the conveyance in duplicate. Sydney v. Clarkson, 13 L. T., N. S., 659.

Where building land was put up for sale in several lots, two of which were purchased, the vendor was, having regard to the conditions of sale, entitled to have it stated in the conveyances to the purchasers that they were bound, but that he was not bound, by certain building covenants affecting the unsold, as well as the purchased, lots. Ib.

1. Trustees for sale who sell under a condition that "the property is sold and will be conveyed subject to all free rents, quit rents, and incidents of tenure, and to all rights of way, water, and other easements, if any, without any obligation on the vendors to define any such rights or claims," are entitled to have a saving in general terms inserted in the habendum of the conveyance, although it was not shown or asserted that the property was subject to any of the liabilities so specified. Gale v. Squier, 5 L. R., Ch. D., 625; 46 L. J., Ch., 672. Affirming 4 L. R., Ch. D., 226; 46 L. J., Ch., 373; 25 W. R. 226; 36 L. T., N. S., 632.

II. EXECUTION OF.

2. Semble, that there is no rule that the purchaser may in all cases require the purchase deed to be executed in the presence of himself or his agent, and the purchase-money paid directly to the vendor, but that he may so require in the absence of special circumstances rendering a different course proper. Viney v. Chaplin, 2 De G. & J. 468; 4 Jur., N. S., 619; 27 L. J., Ch., 434; 6 W. R. 302, 562; 4 Drew. 237.

Where a purchaser requires the deed of conveyance to him to be executed by the vendor in the presence of, and to be attested by, his (the purchaser's) solicitor, that requisition ought not to be refused unless there are special circumstances justifying the refusal. Ib.

Where a purchaser requires the vendor to execute the conveyance in the presence of the purchaser or his solicitor, the onus of justifying the refusal is on the vendor. Ib.

3. Form of order in a suit for specific performance where the draft conveyance had been approved of by the vendor and purchaser, but retained by the latter. Hirst v. Stokehill, 1 W. R. 479.

4. Conveyance of an estate to which defendant is entitled in equity suspended till an account of the rest of the estate should be taken in the original suit, from the danger of the plaintiff's losing his demand. Shish v. Foster, 1 Ves. 88.

III. CONSTRUCTION OF.

5. In June 1870 an agreement was entered into by a railway company for the purchase, at a price named, of land for the purpose of carrying a road over the line at an incline, and the agreement contained a proviso that the vendor, etc., should have a right of access to other lands belonging to him by and over any of the slopes which the company might arrange on their intended works, and through, over, and upon any occupation roads which they might form adjacent to the said lands. This agreement was executed by the secretary of the company, but was not under seal.

Possession was taken by the company, and a bridge was constructed over the line which was reached by a road carried over the land purchased at a steep incline. In April 1871 the land, with all ways, rights of pre-emption, and other rights, members, easements, and appurtenances, was, in consideration of the price named in the agreement, which was stated to include the value of the mines and also all right of pre-emption and compensation for damage sustained by vendor in the execution of the works, conveyed to the company without reserving any right of access to the vendor, or in any way referring to the proviso contained in the agreement of June 1870:—Held, in an action by the vendor to restrain the company from obstructing, by fences and retaining walls rendered necessary by a widening of the road, the right of access stipulated for by the proviso in the preliminary agreement, but not claiming a rectification of the subsequent conveyance, that as the vendor by the terms of the conveyance had absolutely conveyed to the company every interest which he possessed in the land, any right of access previously stipulated for was thereby absolutely extinguished. Teebay v. Manchester, Sheffield, & Lincolnshire Railway Co., 24 L. R., Ch. D., 672; 52 L. J., Ch., 613; 48 L. T. 808; 31 W. R. 739.

6. Lands were vested in trustees for a term of years without impeachment of waste, the trusts of the term being by sale, assignment, demise, or mortgage, to raise a sum of money. In execution of the trust the trustees sold the land for the term, and in the deed of conveyance the words "without impeachment of waste" were omitted:—Held, that the estate of the purchaser was unimpeachable of waste. Beaumont v. Salisbury (Marquis), 19 Beav. 198; 24 L. J., Ch., 94; 1 Jur., N. S., 458; 3 Eq. Rep. 369.

7. Mere knowledge of the manner in which property conveyed was used by a vendor for the convenience of an adjoining tenement will not affect the purchaser, if the property is conveyed without reservation. He was not entitled to an injunction. Suffield v. Brown, 10 Jur., N. S., 111; 33 L. J., Ch., 249; 12 W. R. 356; 9 L. T., N. S., 627.

A grantor cannot claim rights over property absolutely granted even if such rights were, at the time of the grant, continuous and apparent easements enjoyed in respect of an adjoining tenement which remains the property of the grantor. Ib.

If an owner of two adjoining tenements conveys one of them to a purchaser absolutely, the tenement so sold is discharged from any quasi-servitudes to which it was subjected by the vendor during his ownership of both properties, and the purchaser is not bound to take notice of the manner in which the tenement purchased has been used for the convenience of the adjoining and unsold tenement. Ib.

IV. COVENANTS.

8. In a contract for a purchase of land, there is a stipulation that the conveyance shall be made subject to certain conditions and restrictions as to building upon the land, and to a covenant for their observance, and proper provisions for securing the due performance thereof:—Held, that this contract entitled the vendor to have a power of entry inserted in the conveyance in case of a breach of the covenant, but not to have a term of years or a rent charge limited to a trustee. Form of the power of entry, which the vendor is entitled to have. Whether such covenants as the above run with the land, quare. Eesp. Ralph, Re Dobbs, 1 De G. 219.

1. A vendor of freehold property, who, on his own purchase of it, had entered into a covenant to observe the covenants entered into with a former vendor, and which prohibited building on the land, put it up for sale, pursuant to particulars and conditions, noticing the existence of the covenant, but not stipulating that the purchaser should enter into any covenant on the subject. On a bill for specific performance, filed by the purchaser:—Held, that the plaintiff was not entitled to a conveyance, unless on the terms of giving or providing for the vendor a sufficient indemnity against any breach of the covenant on the part of the plaintiff, his heirs, appointees, or assigns. Mozhay v. Inderwick, 1 De G. & Sm. 708.

Held, also, that a covenant on the part of the plaintiff, his heirs, executors, administrators, appointees, and assigns, with the defendant, his heirs, executors, and administrators, to the same effect, mutatis mutandis, as the covenant entered into by the vendor on his own purchase, ought to be considered as a sufficient indemnity. Id.

2. Where, by a memorandum of agreement, the defendant agreed to sell certain cottages and gardens lately purchased by him to the plaintiff, for an annuity payable to the defendant during his life, which was to be charged on the premises, and the defendant was empowered to sell for the purpose of raising any arrears:—Held, that the vendor was entitled not only to the security of the charge, but also of the covenant of the purchaser, for payment. Boner v. Cooper, 2 Hare 408; 11 L. J., N. S., Ch., 287; 6 Jur. 681.

3. A purchaser contracted to purchase a piece of land. On the abstract it appeared that the land was subject to covenants. The purchaser tendered a draft conveyance, to which the vendors added similar covenants on the part of the purchaser. The purchaser refused to execute these covenants. The vendors thereupon filed a bill for specific performance:—Held, that the purchaser could elect either to take a conveyance with the covenants or to rescind the contract. Lukey v. Higgs, 1 Jur., N. S., 200; 24 L. J., Ch., 495; 3 W. R. 306; 3 Eq. Rep. 510.

4. Building land was sold in a number of lots, subject to certain conditions as to fencing, repairing the roads, and to restrictions as to the class of houses to be built. The conditions also provided, that statements to this effect should be inserted in the conveyances. By the 15th condition the vendor reserved the right of selling the unsold lots under different arrangements, "and either subject to or not subject to the stipulations as to fencing and other stipulations contained in the particulars or the conditions":—Held, first, that as to the unsold lots the vendor was subject to none of the restrictions; secondly, that the purchasers were bound to have not only the restrictive conditions stated on their conveyances, but also the 15th in favour of the vendor; and thirdly, that a separate deed of covenant by a purchaser as to the restrictions was a sufficient compliance with the provision as to the statement on the conveyances. Sidney v. Clarkson, 35 Beav. 118.

5. In a sale by the Court the particulars of sale contained certain reservations and stipulations as to the property, and one of the conditions of sale provided that the conveyances should contain covenants by the purchasers for securing the liabilities and rights under such reservations and stipulations, the form of such covenants, in case of dispute, to be settled by the judge. A dispute having arisen between a purchaser and the vendor concerning the form of the covenant, the judge settled the covenant, adding a proviso that if the purchaser assigned his purchase, and the assignee entered into a similar covenant, the purchaser should be freed from further liability:—Held, that the vendor was entitled to an unqualified covenant, and that the proviso must be struck out. Pollock v. Rabbits, 21 L. R., Ch. D., 466; 47 L. T. 637; 31 W. R. 150.

The order of a judge settling the form of a conveyance is subject to appeal. Id.

6. D. in 1824 agreed with S. for the purchase of an estate, and that the purchase deed should contain a covenant by D. that he, his heirs, and assigns would pay to S., his executors, administrators, and assigns the sum of 6s. for each chaldron of coals gotten out of the estate and shipped for sale. The purchase deed was subsequently executed by S., but not by D. D., however, entered upon the land, and he and his devisees and their assigns enjoyed the property. Coal was also got and shipped for sale:—Held, that the execution by D. of a counterpart of the deed containing the covenant could not be presumed, and that although the persons who had taken and enjoyed the coal with notice of the covenant might be liable, there was no liability in D. or his representative under the covenant. Witham v. Vane, 41 L. T. 718.

7. It being one of the terms of a contract between vendor and purchaser, that certain parties were to join in the conveyance, the Court would not enter into the question whether they were necessary or proper parties. Benson v. Lamb, 9 Beav. 502; 15 L. J., N. S., Ch., 218.

8. In a decree for specific performance, a direction that the vendor shall convey has the same effect as a direction that the vendor and all other necessary parties shall convey. Min- ton v. Kirkwood, 37 L. J., Ch., 606; 18 L. T., N. S., 781; 3 L. R., Ch., 614; 16 W. R. 991.

1. Where a bill stated a contract by the defendant to purchase parts of the plaintiff's estate subject to a mortgage, which contract was afterwards partially varied by a parol agreement without the consent of the mortgagee; that the sale of the property was made with the sanction and concurrence of the mortgagee, and that the purchase-moneys were to be paid to him, but that, owing to incapacity through age and infirmity, he was then incompetent to execute the deed of conveyance; the Court, on a prayer for specific performance, overruled, with costs, a demurrer to the bill, which was made on the grounds that a variation had been made in the contract, and that the plaintiff had stated in his bill his inability to procure the execution of the deed by a necessary party thereto, but who was not a party to the suit. Beaufort (Duke) v. Glynn, 1 Jur., N. S., 888.

2. R.'s wife was owner of a remainder in fee, and had issue by R. R. took the benefit of the Insolvent Debtors Act in 1850, and a vesting order was made. The remainder came into possession in 1853. In 1854 R. and his wife made an equitable mortgage of the estate to C., who had notice of the insolvency. In 1855 the wife died, and R. became tenant by the curtesy. No further proceedings having been taken to perfect the title of the assignees:—Held, in a suit by the assignees for specific performance, that the question whether C. had not a valid charge on the estate by the curtesy was sufficiently doubtful to entitle the purchaser to require C.'s concurrence, although a decree for a conveyance to the assignees had been made in another suit, to which C. was a party, in which, however, this point did not appear to have been distinctly put in issue. Murrell v. Goodyear, 1 De G. F. & J. 432.

3. Where property was devised to trustees for A. for life, for her sole and separate use, and after her decease for such person as she should appoint; and A. conveyed to B.:—Held, on a conveyance to a third person, C. (A. being still living), that the trustees were necessary parties. Hall v. London, Chatham, & Dover Railway Co., 14 L. T., N. S., 351.

4. A. devised the residue of his property to his wife, in trust to divide it among their children in such manner as they should deserve: one of the seven children sold her share, and covenanted to make it up a full seventh; this is good, and on a specific performance she can make a good conveyance without the mother joining. Musprat v. Gordon, 1 Anstr. 34.

5. A copyhold was devised to trustees for certain persons, who, after the testatrix's death, sold it, and the purchaser was admitted on the surrender of the customary heir:—Held, that although the purchaser had thus obtained both the legal and equitable title, still, to make a good title, there must be a release from the trustees of their bare right to be admitted. Steele v. Waller, 28 Beav. 466.

2. Dower Trustee.

6. A vendor being entitled under a limitation to uses to bar dower without a power of appointment, the purchaser insisted on the concurrence of the dower trustee. The trustee being abroad, the vendor filed a bill to enforce specific performance without his being a party to the conveyance. The Vice-Chancellor held that the objection was well founded, and made a decree for specific performance with an order vesting the estate of the dower trustee in the purchaser upon the execution of the conveyance by the vendor, but considering the objection, though tenable, to be frivolous and vexatious, he gave no costs to either party:—Held, on appeal by the purchaser, that the objection was frivolous and vexatious, and ought not to have been insisted on, and that costs ought not to be given to the purchaser. Collard v. Roe, 4 De G. & J. 525; 28 L. J., Ch., 560. Reversing 27 L. J., Ch., 295; 4 Jur., N. S., 295; 6 W. R. 348; 1 L. T., N. S., 148.

Dower. In General.] See DOWER.

3. Heir-at-Law.

7. A. articles to sell lands, and dies before a conveyance made; the heir decreed to convey, and the purchase money to be paid to the executors. Baden v. Pembroke (Countess), 2 Vern. 215.

8. A purchaser of real property, the title to which is derived under a will, is not entitled to have the will established, or to have the concurrence of the testator's heir in the conveyance to him, unless some reasonable ground exists for doubting the validity of the will. McCulloch v. Gregory, 3 Kay & J. 12.

9. The vendor of real estate, which was subject to a mortgage in fee, died before completion of the contract for sale, intestate as to his real estate; his heir-at-law is a necessary party to the conveyance, in addition to his executor and the mortgagee. Duly v. Nalder, 11 Jur., N. S., 921; 35 L. J., Ch., 52; 13 W. R. 269; 14 W. R. 45.

10. The fact that an heir-at-law may, at some future stage of the proceedings, turn out to be a necessary party to the conveyance, is not a ground for refusing a specific performance of a contract to purchase lands where the heir-at-law has no arguable or reasonable claim to any beneficial interest in the premises, and his concurrence is matter merely of conveyance, not of title. Minton v. Kirkwood, 37 L. J., Ch., 606; 18 L. T., N. S., 781; 3 L. R., Ch., 614; 16 W. R. 991.

11. A., having made a will devising all his property to his wife, and having contracted to sell the land, and afterwards died:—Held, in a suit for specific performance by the purchaser, that the heir-at-law of A. was not a necessary party to the conveyance, as he had no legal estate in the lands, and no equitable estate, and no right to institute a suit to set aside the contract, having regard to the will of A., devising all his property to his wife, who, if the contract was set aside, would be entitled to the lands, and if the contract was not set aside, would be entitled to the purchase money. Fowler v. Lightburn, 11 Ir. Ch. R. 495.

Infant.] 1. No objection to sale in court under a will, that infants interested in will cannot join in conveyance. Powell v. Powell, 6 Madd. 53.

2. In a suit for partition, it appeared that the estate was vested as to one moiety in A. in fee and as to the other moiety in B. in fee, but in trust for infants:—Held, that a conveyance from B., and a decree of the Court, would give A. a good title to the tenements allotted to him, and, therefore, that it was not necessary to order the infants to convey when they came of age. Cole v. Sewell, 17 Sim. 40.

3. Defendant being in possession, and having exercised acts of ownership, payment of the money ordered, although an infant heir was a necessary party to the conveyance. Bradshaw v. Bradshaw, 2 Meriv. 492.

4. Where confirmed purchaser of estate under a decree died before conveyance made, having in meantime devised his interests therein to trustees, Court ordered conveyance to be made to them without consent of testator's heir-at-law, he being an infant. King v. Gregory, 4 Price 380.

5. The vendor dying intestate, and leaving an infant heir, the purchase-money being paid into court in a suit for a specific performance instituted after his death, will be retained till the heir attains twenty-one, and conveys. Bullock v. Bullock, 1 Jac. & Walk. 603.

4. Judgment Creditors.

6. A. devised his estate at H. to his second son, who survived him and afterwards died intestate, whereupon the estate descended to N., his elder brother. Pending a suit instituted by A.'s creditors, judgments were entered up against N., which remained unsatisfied when the estate at H., together with the testator's other estates, was sold under the decree in the suit for payment of his debts:—Held, that N.'s judgment creditors were necessary parties to the conveyance of the estate at H., and, as they could not be compelled to join in the conveyance, because they were not parties to the suit, that a good title could not be made to the estate. Craddock v. Piper, 14 Sim. 310.

7. A judgment was obtained against a party under a warrant of attorney. He afterwards took the benefit of the Insolvent Debtors Act:—Held, that the judgment creditor was a necessary party to the conveyance of the insolvent's real estate to a purchaser, notwithstanding the 1 & 2 Vict., c. 110, s. 61. Hotham v. Somerville, 9 Beav. 63; 14 L. J., N. S., Ch., 385; 9 Jur. 702.

8. A mortgagee took, on the execution of his mortgage in 1844, an assignment of a term to a trustee, and, relying on it, forbore to search for judgments. A judgment had been registered in November 1843. The mortgagee sold in 1846, under a power of sale in his mortgage; and, on the purchaser objecting to complete without the concurrence of the judgment creditor, the mortgagee and his solicitor, and the mortgagor, to obviate the objection, made a statutory declaration that, at the time of the mortgage, neither the mortgagee nor the solicitor had any notice of the judgment. The purchaser still insisted on his requisition, and, in March 1848, the vendor filed a bill for specific performance. During the proceedings in the Master's office, the five years from the registration of the judgment expired, and it was not re-registered till 1850:—Held, that, at the hearing on further directions, in 1853 the purchaser could not be compelled to complete without the concurrence of the judgment creditor. And, semble, that a title depending on the fact of the vendor having been a purchaser, without notice of a registered judgment, cannot be forced upon a purchaser. Freer v. Hesse, 4 De G. M. & G. 495; 17 Jur. 703; 22 L. J., Ch., 597; 23 L. J., Ch., 338; 1 W. R. 242, 487.

Held, also, that though the question was one of conveyance, yet, as it had occasioned the suit, the vendor, submitting to obtain the concurrence required, must pay the costs. Id.

9. A. agreed to sell land to B., who accepted the title, paid part of his purchase-money, and was let into possession, but took no conveyance. A. subsequently obtained a decree against B. for sale of the property, and payment of the balance of purchase-money out of the proceeds:—Held, that a purchaser, under the decree, could not be compelled to complete without the concurrence of the registered judgment creditors of B., whose judgments were prior to the decree, and who were not parties to the suit. Grey Coat Hospital v. Westminster Improvement Commissioners, 1 De G. & J. 531; 3 Jur., N. S., 188; 26 L. J., Ch., 843; 5 W. R. 855.

I. LOSS OF AND RIGHT TO PRODUCTION OF.

10. Purchaser not bound to complete purchase without title deeds, unless he has legal covenant to produce them. Barclay v. Raine, 1 Sim. & S. 449.

11. A purchaser objected to a title for want of a deed which had been inrolled, but could not be found. A copy of it, taken in 1632, attested by five witnesses, was produced in court:—Held, that this copy would have been sufficient even without an attestation. Sed acus, if the original deed has been in a private hand. Harvey v. Philips, 2 Atk. 541.

12. Vendor, having lost title deeds, agrees to give real security for title:—Held, personal security not sufficient, and that he must purchase real estates for that purpose. Walker v. Barnes, 3 Madd. 247.

13. Where, in title deed, there is a recital of prior deeds which are lost, and presumption is in favour of the title, purchaser cannot object to title on the ground of the absence of those deeds. Prosser v. Watts, 6 Madd. 59.

1. If after contract for sale of an estate before the title is accepted the title deeds be destroyed by fire, this Court will not compel the specific performance of the contract, unless the vendor can furnish the purchaser with the means of showing what were the contents of the destroyed deeds, and of proving that such deeds were duly executed and delivered. Bryant v. Rush, 4 Russ. 1.

2. Right of the purchaser to the production and to an abstract of all the documents relating to the property in the vendor's possession, whether a good title is made without them or not. Sparrow v. Hilton, 1 W. R. 87.

3. If counsel for the purchaser waive the production of a particular document stated in the abstract to be lost, and the purchaser adopt the opinion and deal with the seller upon that view, he will not be permitted to repudiate the opinion of his counsel. Alexander v. Crosby, 1 J. & L. 666; 7 Ir. Eq. R. 445. Affirming 6 Ir. Eq. R. 513.

An abstract of title stated a deed of March 1814, making a tenant to the præcipe, which recited articles of February 1814, between a father, tenant for life, and his son, tenant in tail, empowering them to revoke the uses thereby declared, and the recovery was declared to enure to the uses in the articles. In 1815 the father and son revoked the uses and resettled the estates, and possession had gone accordingly. The abstract stated that the articles had been lost, and it appeared that search had been made for them:—Held, that their non-production was not an objection to the title. Ib.

In 1745 I. executed a settlement of lands, reserving power, with the consent of A., to revoke the uses. The abstract of title set forth a will of I., dated in 1761, whereby he, with the consent of A., revoked the uses; and it referred to a copy of the will. P., the son and heir of I., by indenture of 1763, reciting the will of his father, resettled the estates, and possession had since gone accordingly. The will was not forthcoming:—Held, that its non-production was not an objection to the title. Ib.

J. C. conveyed his real estate to trustees, to whom he was indebted, in trust to sell and pay themselves, and to pay the surplus arising from the sale to J. C., and to convey to him the residue of the lands (if any remained unsold), the receipt of the trustees to be sufficient discharge to a purchaser. The deed contained covenants for the repayment of the money by a certain day, for good title and quiet enjoyment. On a sale of the estate, under a decree to execute the trusts of the deed:—Held, that judgments confessed by J. C., subsequently to the execution of the deed, and still outstanding, were not objections to the title. Ib.

4. By conditions of sale it was stipulated that the vendor of an estate, which was sold in lots, should deliver an abstract of the title to the purchasers, and deduce a good title; but that as to a part of the estate, acquired under an inclosure Act, he should not be bound to show any title thereto prior to the award; and it was further stipulated, that the vendor should deliver up to the largest purchaser in value all the title deeds and other documents in his custody, but should not be required to produce any original deed or other documents than those in his possession, and set forth in the abstract:—Held, that the construction of these conditions did not excuse the vendor from verifying the title shown upon the abstract by producing the deeds, or, if any of them were not in his possession, by other satisfactory evidence. Southby v. Hutt, 2 M. & C. 207; 1 Jur. 100.

5. A mortgagee, who was a party to the suit, consented to a sale of the mortgaged property:—Held, that he must produce, and leave in the Master's office, the title deeds which were necessary in order to complete such sale. Livesey v. Harding, 1 Beav. 343.

6. A purchaser objected to complete, alleging a bad title, because three deeds were not produced, and there were covenants for the production of only two. The deeds were collateral only to the title; as to two, the purchaser had had their production, and attested copies; and as to the third, an opportunity of inspecting it, with an undertaking to have an attested copy of it:—Held, that the purchaser must complete his contract. Offen v. Harman, 6 Jur., N. S., 487; 29 L. J., Ch., 307.

7. By the terms of an auction the title deeds were to be produced by a certain day; they were not then ready; but the purchaser received them afterwards without objection: he cannot afterwards, on disliking the title, object to the delay. Smith v. Barnam, 2 Anstr. 527.

8. In an abstract of title was contained a conveyance in 1797, in which were recitals of earlier deeds. Neither the conveyance nor the deeds mentioned in the recitals were produced, but secondary evidence was given, consisting of a draft of the release, which was produced, and proved to have been ingrossed; and extracts of entries in the books of a deceased solicitor of charges for preparing and attesting the execution of the deeds were also furnished:—Held, that as a sixty years' title was shown, the purchaser was not bound to verify the recitals contained in the earlier deeds. Moulton v. Edmonds, 6 Jur., N. S., 305; 29 L. J., Ch., 1818; 6 W. R. 153; 1 De G. F. & J. 246.

The proper test in such a case is, whether the recited deeds cast reasonable suspicion on the title. Ib.

Held, also, that the affidavit of a solicitor verifying the entries in the books of the deceased solicitor was sufficient, and that the purchaser was not entitled to have such books delivered up to him. Ib.

A., evidence of whose seisin in 1797 was furnished, became bankrupt, and in 1815 his assignees, and certain persons claiming as mortgagees, conveyed the property. This deed also contained recitals of several other deeds, which were stated to be lost. An old abstract was produced of the missing deeds, which was not verified, from which it was stated that the deed of 1815 was drawn:—Held, that the recitals and the abstract together were sufficient secondary evidence of the missing deeds. Ib.

II. COVENANTS FOR PRODUCTION OF.

1. Right to, 7281.
2. Rights of Third Parties, 7281.
3. Costs of, 7282.

1. Right to.

1. The vendor of a piece of copyhold land enfranchised in 1799 delivered to the purchaser two abstracts commencing in 1736: one of the title to the land, the other of that of the manor. The deed of 1799 was forty years old, and recited that the then lord and the then owner of the land were respectively seised in fee, and several of the deeds relating to the lord's title were bargains, and sales inrolled; and, therefore, copies of them, as well as of the surrenders and admittances, which would be good evidence, might be procured by the purchaser at any time. The vendor was unable to deliver to the purchaser the deed of 1799, or any of the prior instruments, but was willing to covenant to produce that deed:—Held, that he was bound to give the purchaser covenants for production not only of that deed, but of all the prior instruments noticed in the abstracts. Cooper v. Emory, 10 Sim. 609. This was varied on appeal as to the copyholds, but affirmed as to the rest. S. C. 1 Ph. 388; 13 L. J., N. S., Ch., 275.

The period for which a good title is required to be shown is sixty years, notwithstanding the 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 27:—Held, also, that the right to a covenant for production of documents, etc., does not extend to copies of court rolls, nor indentures of bargains and sale inrolled, unless in the possession or power of the vendor, and the purchaser cannot, as of course, require a covenant for the production of any others than such as are necessary to make out a sixty years' title, and not of such as are contained in the abstract, but not delivered to him. S. C. on appeal, 1 Ph. 388; 13 L. J., N. S., Ch., 275; 8 Jur. 181.

2. A. conveys lands to trustees in trust to sell if the unsatisfied debts of a partnership in which he had been concerned should at a given time exceed 40,000*l.*; the trustees sell, and convey to the purchaser by a deed, which recites that the debts of the partnership exceeded the specified amount, and that A. had died intestate as to his real estates; and the heir-at-law of A. joins in that deed, and enters into a covenant for the title of the trustees, a covenant against all acts done by him or his father, and a covenant for further assurance. It afterwards appears to be uncertain whether A. had not devised his real estate, and the purchaser files a bill to have protection against or remedy for the alleged defect in his title which this discovery created:—Held, that he is not entitled to a covenant either from the heir or from any other person for the production of the partnership books and papers. Hallett v. Middleton, 1 Russ. 243.

3. Purchaser not bound to complete purchase without the title deeds, unless he has legal covenant to produce them. Barclay v. Raine, 1 Sim. & S. 449.

4. If vendor retains title deeds, and covenants for further assurance only, the purchaser may, under that covenant, compel him to enter into a covenant for production of deeds. Fain v. Ayres, 2 Sim. & S. 533; 4 L. J., Ch., 166.

5. An agreement on the sale of an estate, that the title deeds should be delivered to the purchasers on the completion of the contract; but, as the deeds related also to other property belonging to the vendors, the purchasers should enter into, or procure to be entered into, one or more proper and sufficient covenant or covenants with the vendors for the production and delivery of copies of such deeds. The purchasers were trustees, and entered into the contract in pursuance of the directions in the will of their testator for the investment of his personal estate in the purchase of lands, to be settled to certain uses creating estates for life, with remainder over in strict settlement. The estate was conveyed by the vendors to the purchasers to the uses declared by the will of their testator:—Held, that the agreement to enter into a proper and sufficient covenant for the production of the deeds did not mean that the vendors should be entitled to a covenant which would secure to them their production at all times and under all circumstances; that the word "sufficient" was connected with the word "proper"; that the extent and sufficiency of the covenant must in a great degree depend on the mode in which the conveyance was taken; that releasees to uses do not stand in worse position than trustees, who, according to the ordinary rule of the Court, are required to covenant for their own acts only; and that the Court would not compel the purchasers, who were only releasees to uses, especially after the uses were executed by the statute, to enter into such covenants. Onslow v. Lonsborough (Lord), 10 Hare 67.

6. Where a manor is sold subject to the existing copyhold tenancies, the vendor must covenant for the production of the Court rolls anterior to the time of sale. Poulett v. Hood, 37 L. J., Ch., 224; 5 L. R., Eq., 115; 16 W. R. 323; 17 L. T., N. S., 486.

2. Rights of Third Parties.

7. Covenant to produce title deeds remains with lands for benefit of purchasers, but not for benefit of vendors. Barclay v. Raine, 1 Sim. & S. 449.

8. A defendant entitled to the benefit of a covenant to produce deeds for the "maintenance, manifestation, or justification" of his own title, is not compellable to inspect and discover the contents of such deeds, or procure their production in a hostile suit to which the covenantor is not a party. Semble, a defendant required to produce or obtain information respecting deeds not in his possession is entitled to have his expenses of obtaining such production or information tendered to him before doing so. Bethell v. Casson, 3 N. R. 29; 9 L. T., N. S., 321; 12 W. R. 200.

Where a defendant holds a covenant for the production of deeds for the maintenance and manifestation of his title, he is not bound, in answer to interrogatories, to set out such deeds in a suit, the object of which is to show that a disputed piece of land is not comprised in the defendant's title. 8 C. 1 Hem. & M. 806.

1. A title deed of the defendant was ordered to be produced where it contained a recital that might affect him with constructive notice of the plaintiff's interest in the estate. Neesom v. Clarkson, 2 Haro 166. n.; C. P. C. 93; 12 L. J., N. S., Ch., 99; 6 Jur. 1055.

3. Costs of.

2. The costs of covenants to produce title deeds which cannot be delivered up fall, by the practice of conveyancers, on vendors; yet where, by the conditions of sale of property, in lots, under an order of the Court, provision was made for the largest purchaser to have the deeds, and to covenant to produce them, or give copies thereof to the purchasers of smaller lots, without reference to the manner in which the costs were to be paid, each purchaser, and not the estate, was ordered to bear his own costs of such covenants. Strong v. Strong, 4 Jur., N. S., 943; 6 W. R. 455.

III. SALE IN LOTS. PURCHASER OF LARGEST LOT.

3. Where an estate is sold under a decree in several lots, and there is no condition of sale as to the title deeds, the purchaser of the largest lot is to have the custody of the title deeds common to all the lots, on the terms of giving to the purchasers of the smaller lots attested and compared copies, and a covenant for the safe custody and the production of them when necessary. Cunningham v. Hume, 1 Ir. Eq. R. 150.

4. By conditions of sale, the title deeds were to be delivered to "the purchaser of the largest lot." A. purchased the largest lot in value and extent, but B. purchased several lots whose aggregate value and extent exceeded those of A.'s lot:—Held, that A. was entitled to the custody of the deeds. Scott v. Jackman, 21 Beav. 110.

5. Ground-rents and building sites were put up for sale at the same time, in different lots. The conditions of sale stipulated that counterparts of the ground-rent leases would be delivered to the respective purchasers, but that the deeds relating to the remainder of the property would be retained till the whole property should have been sold, when the purchaser of "the largest lot" should be entitled to possession of the deeds:—Held, that "largest lot" had reference to quantity, and not to price. Griffiths v. Hatchard, 2 W. R. 672; 18 Jur. 649; 1 Kay & J. 17; 23 L. J., Ch., 957.

Costs. 6. Although, by the practice of conveyancers, the costs of covenants to produce title deeds which cannot be delivered up fall on the vendors, yet where, by the conditions of sale of property in lots, provision is made for the largest purchaser to have the deeds, and to covenant to produce them to the purchaser of smaller lots, without reference to the manner in which the costs are to be paid, each purchaser, and not the vendor, is bound to bear his own costs of such covenants. A purchaser is entitled to his costs of appearing upon a petition for paying his purchase-money out of court, although he is informed in the notice of the petition that he is not required to appear, and that the petitioner will object to his costs of appearance. Strong v. Strong, 6 W. R. 455; 4 Jur., N. S., 943.

IV. COSTS OF ATTESTED COPIES.

7. Purchaser who cannot have the original title deeds, the estate being sold in number of lots, is entitled to attested copies at expense of vendor. Dars v. Tucker, 6 Ves. 460.

8. Where title deeds cannot be delivered, assignees must, like any other vendor, give attested copies of them at the expense of the estate; but their covenant, for the production of the deeds, should be confined to the time of their continuance as assignees. Exp. Stuart, 2 Rose 215.

9. Purchaser of small lots entitled to attested copies of the title deeds, accompanying the principal purchase, at the expense of the vendor, no stipulation having been made upon the subject. Boughton v. Jewell, 15 Ves. 176.

10. A. agreed to sell to B. certain lands, and the following was one of the conditions of sale: "As the title deeds of the property comprised in this particular of sale relate to other property of greater value, the vendor shall retain the custody thereof; and a covenant will be entered into for the production of such of them as are not inrolled, and for giving attested or other copies thereof to the respective purchasers at their expense":—Held, that B. could not on completion compel A. to deliver to B. attested copies of the deeds at the expense of A. Cotton v. Soudamore, 1 Kay & J. 321.

11. One of the conditions of a sale by public auction stated that the purchaser should not require the production of any title deeds which were not in the possession of the vendors, and all recitals of births, etc., or other facts contained in any deed dated thirty years since, should be deemed conclusive evidence thereof; and all attested copies of or extracts from deeds, and all other evidence as to deaths, etc., which might be required by the purchaser for the purpose of examination with the abstract, should be respectively sought for and procured at the expense of the purchaser. A. became the purchaser of two lots. After the title had been approved, and a deed of conveyance prepared, a question arose as to whether or not the purchaser was entitled to attested copies of the title deeds at the expense of the vendors; and thereupon the vendors, under the power contained in the fourth condition, annulled the sale. On a bill filed for the specific performance of the contract:—Held, that the purchaser was not entitled to attested copies of the title deeds at the expense of the vendors and dismissed the bill, with costs. Abbott v. Darnell, 2 Jur., N. S., 631; 4 W. R. 314.

12. In a sale under the order of the Court, the purchaser of the largest lot in extent and value is, in the absence of express condition, entitled to the deeds relating as well to the lot bought by him as to other lots of less extent and value; and in the absence of express condition, the purchaser of a smaller lot is entitled, at the expense of the estate, to attested copies of all such deeds. A condition which provided that all attested copies of deeds, "whether required for the verification of the abstract or delivery to the purchaser, or for any other purpose, shall be procured at the expense of the purchaser"—Held, not sufficiently express to vary the rule, and to throw on the purchaser of the smaller lot the expense of attested copies of deeds handed over to the purchaser of the larger lot. Peterson v. Elmes, 6 W. R. 611.

V. INSPECTION OF.

1. Where a title commenced by a general devise and seisin, and only proved by a deed more than sixty years old, reciting the seisin, and there was ground to assume that the vendor had deeds earlier than those on the abstract:—Held, the purchaser was entitled to inspection of those deeds, if in the vendor's possession, but not to have them in the abstract. Parr v. Longgrove, 4 Drew. 170; 4 Jur., N. S., 600; 6 W. R. 709, 201.

Quære, whether a purchaser is generally entitled to inspection of deeds earlier than a sixty years' title. Ib.

It is generally admitted that a purchaser may inspect the earlier deeds in the vendor's possession, but cannot require to have them abstracted. Ib.

2. A purchaser who agrees not to require an abstract of title has nevertheless a right to inspect the deeds which constitute the vendor's title. Harding v. —, 4 L. J., Ch., 213.

I. GENERAL PRINCIPLES.

3. It was said in this case to be a rule among conveyancers, that where an estate had been long in a family, the vendor's covenant must go as far back as the first purchaser of the estate; but where the vendor claims immediately under the person who first bought the estate, there he need not covenant any further back than from that person, because whoever buys the estate has the benefit of the covenants in the deed to the vendor's purchaser. Lord Hardwicke said, he never heard of such a rule; yet, where conveyances are to be made by a decree of the Court, they should be settled by such rule as learned conveyancers would direct. There are many cases where a person covenants no further than his own acts; as, where an estate is decreed to be sold for payment of debts, and no surplus remains, the Court will not require the heir to covenant beyond his own acts; so as to a devisee; but where, after such sale, the surplus is considerable, the heir or devisee in many cases has been directed to covenant that neither he (the heir), nor his immediate ancestor, nor the devisee, nor his devisor, has done any act to incumber. Lloyd v. Griffith, 3 Atk. 287.

4. Implied covenant by vendor of a freehold estate for the title, though an assignee in bankruptcy, selling by a general description, not restrained to his actual interest. Deverell v. Bolton (Lord), 18 Ves. 512.

5. Covenants for title are merely a bargain by the covenantor to pay damages if he has no such title. General Finance, Mortgage, & Discount Co. v. Liberator Permanent Building Society, 27 W. R. 210; 39 L. T. 600; 10 L. R., Ch. D., 15.

II. FOR QUIET ENJOYMENT.

6. A. sold some building land to B., and he covenanted for title. After some houses had been built on the land, the purchaser was evicted:—Held, that the purchaser was entitled to recover upon the covenants, not only the value of the land, but also that of the houses subsequently built thereon. Bunny v. Hopkinson, 27 Beav. 565; 6 Jur., N. S., 187; 29 L. J., Ch., 93; 1 L. T., N. S., 53.

Held, also, that the estate of the vendor was liable to make good the amount, and the legatees under his will must contribute to make up the requisite sum. Ib.

7. In the absence of fraud, a purchaser is not entitled, on the ground of want of title, to a decree for delivering up the contract to be cancelled without prejudice to an action. An agreement was entered into to take and grant a lease, by indenture, of property, for a short term of years, and that covenants should be inserted by the lessees to repair, and by the lessor for quiet enjoyment. The lessees being in possession under the agreement put the premises in repair, but damage having accrued, as they alleged from mining operations, they filed a bill for specific performance. No title could be shown to the minerals:—Held, nevertheless, that the lessees were entitled, upon their electing to take the property, to a decree for the execution of a lease by deed containing an absolute covenant for quiet enjoyment. Onions v. Cohen, 2 Hem. & M. 354; 11 Jur., N. S., 198; 34 L. J., Ch., 338; 13 W. R. 426; 12 L. T., N. S., 15.

Secus, if the case had been that of an agreement to sell an estate in fee simple. Ib.

8. N., the mother of A., was seised in tail, ex provisione viri, reversion in fee to her husband. A. and W., her husband, created a mortgage term on this estate, and joined in levying a fine to the mortgagee; remainder to such uses as W. should appoint. W., before levying the fine, on sale of an estate, covenanted with I., the purchaser, for quiet enjoyment, and afterwards made an appointment to trustees for paying off the mortgage, and other purposes, of the wife's estate. I., being evicted of the lands he purchased, brought his bill against A. and her children, to subject her estate to his demand, under the covenant of W. It being doubtful whether plaintiffs' debt accrued by breach of covenant till after the appointment of W., the bill was dismissed. White v. Sansum, 3 Atk. 410.

1. Covenants for title and quiet enjoyment do not extend to protect a purchaser against defects of title, which the recitals in his own purchase deed are sufficient to disclose. Hunt v. White, 37 L. J., Ch., 326; 16 W. R. 478; 19 L. T., N. S., 141.

Therefore, where a vendor who, under a will, had only a fee subject to an executory devise over, which ultimately took effect, sold and conveyed to a purchaser as if absolutely entitled, though the covenant for quiet enjoyment by the vendor extended to meet adverse claims by persons claiming under the vendor's testator, and incumbrances, estates, etc., created by such testator, yet as the will was recited in the purchaser's conveyance:—Held, that there was no breach of the covenant, which could not protect the purchaser against his own misconstruction of the written instrument under which he took. Id.

2. Under a settlement A. had power to charge estates; he did so charge them, but in excess of his powers: he then assigned 5,000*l.* of the sums charged to the plaintiff, which was also beyond his powers. The assignment to the plaintiff contained a covenant by A. for the quiet enjoyment of the premises assigned against "any person or persons there or thereafter having or possessing any title or interest in, out of, or respecting the same":—Held, that the right of the owners of the estate not to have the 5,000*l.* raised was a right respecting it, and that A.'s estate was liable on the covenant to make good the plaintiff's purchase-money. Henty v. Wrey, 19 L. R., Ch. D., 492; 45 L. T. 752; 30 W. R. 317.

3. The plaintiff, in April 1842, purchased for 180*l.* of the defendant a freehold property, and took a conveyance thereof, in which there were no covenants for title, but which contained a covenant for quiet enjoyment by the vendor. In the same month the plaintiff mortgaged the property to secure 200*l.* and interest, and in 1846, after defending an action of ejectment, was evicted by the verdict of the jury. The plaintiff then brought an action for damages upon the covenant against the defendant, but was stopped in such action by a plea, on the part of the defendant, that at the date of the eviction the legal estate in the premises was not in the plaintiff, but in the mortgagee. Shortly afterwards the defendant paid off the mortgagee, taking from him the mortgage deed, and an acknowledgment, by indorsement thereon, of the receipt of the mortgage money and interest from the defendant, and that the same was in full satisfaction and discharge of the mortgage debt, and of all right of action or demand on the part of the mortgagee against the defendant, under the covenant contained in the deed of conveyance to the plaintiff. Upon a bill being then filed by the plaintiff against the defendant, praying that the plaintiff might be declared entitled to the benefit of the covenant for quiet enjoyment, and for a reference to the Master to assess the damage sustained by the plaintiff in consequence of the breach of such covenant, the Court held, upon appeal, reversing the decision of the Court below, that the plaintiff had clearly a right to have such damages assessed, and gave him leave to bring an action upon the covenant within a time limited in the order, at the same time restraining the defendant from setting up the mortgage deed, or the indorsement thereon, by way of defence to such action. Thornlon v. Court, 17 Jur. 151; 22 L. J., Ch., 361.

4. A deed contained a covenant for quiet enjoyment, free from quit-rent and crown-rent; and, by a contemporaneous deed of indemnity, lands were conveyed to a trustee and his heirs, upon trust to permit and suffer the vendors and their heirs to take the rents and profits, until the purchaser and his heirs, or any person deriving title under him, should be molested, disturbed, or damaged, by reason of certain judgments and incumbrances, or any judgment or incumbrance affecting the lands, or any of them, or until some suit at law or in equity should be commenced or proceeded on against the purchaser, his heirs, or assigns, or the purchased lands and premises or any part thereof, for the recovery of or on account of the said or any other incumbrance or incumbrances; and immediately after any such disturbance, molestation, or injury, out of the rents and profits of the indemnity lands, by sale, demise, or mortgage of a competent part, to raise and levy from time to time such sums as might be sufficient to pay off and discharge the incumbrances affecting, or that might affect the lands. In 1827 quit-rent and crown-rent were claimed and paid out of the purchased lands. In 1828 the indemnity lands were mortgaged by persons claiming under the vendors. In 1839 a report, finding that there were no incumbrances except those named in the report on the indemnity lands, was made, and confirmed by a decree in a suit in which the sums then paid for quit-rent and crown-rent might have been, but were not claimed. In 1858 an order was made giving leave to the owner of the purchased lands to go before the Master, and file a charge in respect of his demand for quit-rent and crown-rent accrued since the date of the report and decree:—Held, first, that the claimant was not precluded by the finding in the report and decree from proving his demand. Massy v. O'Dell, 10 Ir. Ch. R. 22.

Held, secondly, that the demand was not barred by the Statute of Limitations. Id.

Held, thirdly, that the trust in the indemnity deed to indemnify the purchaser was not void for remoteness. Id.

5. In a conveyance of land by the defendant to the plaintiff, the defendant covenanted for title and quiet enjoyment notwithstanding any act or thing done or suffered by him or by any of his ancestors or predecessors in title. After the conveyance a decree was made in a suit in Chancery in which the plaintiff, though not a party, was represented as being one of a class of persons against whom the suit was brought, and by the decree the land so conveyed by the defendant was declared to be subject to a general right of common over it:—Held, that the decree alone, without any entry or actual disturbance of the plaintiff in his possession, was no breach of the defendant's covenant for quiet enjoyment. Howard v. Maitland, 11 L. R., Q. B. D., 695.

Held, also, that the Court, in the absence of evidence of a grant of such right of common by some predecessor in title of the defendant, would not infer that there must have been such grant so as to be a breach of his covenant for title within the meaning of the covenant. Id.

See also LANDLORD AND TENANT, I. VII. 5—XII. VI.

III. FOR FREEDOM FROM INCUMBRANCES.

1. J. bought an estate of A., who gave him a bond to suffer a recovery within three years, or to return him his money upon a reconveyance. A. tendered a recovery, but, before it was suffered, a third person made a title to the land, whereupon J. brought his bill for the purchase-money; but the Court could not relieve him, for having consented to take the bond, he must resort to A.'s covenant against incumbrances. Maynard's case, 2 Freem. 42.

2. In articles, there was to be a covenant in the conveyance that certain lands were free from incumbrances. Lord Chancellor said, this is not a covenant that the lands are free; and if any incumbrance is discovered between the execution of the articles and sealing the conveyance whereof the party had no notice that incumbrance shall be discharged before the sealing of the conveyance, as the concealment of it would be a fraud, though, against all incumbrances discovered afterwards, there is only the party's own covenant to protect a purchaser. Vane v. Bernard (Lord), Gilb. Eq. Rep. 6.

3. The plaintiff sold two leasehold houses, one to the defendant and another to L. The conveyance to the defendant contained by mistake a part of the property intended to be sold to L., but which the defendant believed he was purchasing. Upon a bill filed against the defendant by L., he was directed to reconvey to L. that portion which by mistake was included in the assignment to him. The defendant then brought an action against the plaintiff, the vendor, for damages made under his covenant against incumbrances. An equitable plea was put in by the plaintiff, who filed a bill for an injunction to restrain the action, but the injunction was refused. Wild v. Hillas, 28 L. J., Ch., 170; 7 W. R. 82; 32 L. T. 116.

IV. FOR FURTHER ASSURANCE.

4. A purchaser of Crown lands, during the late wars, sold part to plaintiff, with a covenant for further assurance: on the restoration he obtained a lease from the Crown. He shall assign to the plaintiff his term in the part he sold him. Taylor v. Debar, 1 Ch. Ca. 270; 2 Ch. Ca. 212.

5. If vendor retains title deeds, and covenants for further assurance only, the purchaser may, under that covenant, compel him to enter into a covenant for production of deeds. Fain v. Ayres, 2 Sim. & S. 533; 4 L. J., Ch., 166.

V. FOR LAWFUL SEISIN.

6. S. purchased church lands in fee, under the usurper's title, and sold them to defendant's testator, covenanting that he was lawfully seised. The church being restored, S. was relieved from his covenant, upon proof that at the time of the sale he undertook for his own acts only. Caldecot v. Hill, 1 Ch. Ca. 13.

VI. BY WHOM.

7. Estates were devised to A. for life, remainder to his sons successively in tail male. A. and B., during the infancy of B.'s eldest son, obtained an Act of Parliament vesting the estates in trustees in trust to sell:—Held, that A. and B. must covenant with the purchaser for the title. If settled estates are sold under a power to sell them, with the consent of the tenant for life, he must covenant for the title. Re London Bridge Acts, 13 Sim. 176.

8. A testator devised real estate upon trust for sale, and to divide the proceeds among his children equally. A sale of such real estate having been made under a decree of the Court of Chancery, not for the payment of the testator's debts, but for the division of the proceeds among the parties beneficially entitled thereto:—Held, that the purchaser was not entitled to covenants for title from those parties. Cottrell v. Cottrell, 2 L. R., Eq., 330; 12 Jur., N. S., 285; 35 L. J., Ch., 466; 14 W. R. 572; 14 L. T., N. S., 220.

9. An estate was being sold, with the approbation of the Court, by trustees of a settlement under a power of sale and exchange contained in the settlement to raise a sum to which, in the events which had happened, the tenant for life was entitled:—Held, that the tenant for life must enter into covenants for title. Poulett v. Hood, 37 L. J., Ch., 224; 5 L. R., Eq., 115; 16 W. R. 323; 17 L. T., N. S., 486.

I. CONSTRUCTION OF AND BREACH OF.

1. Building Covenants, 7286.
2. Covenants as to User of Premises and Trade, 7287.

1. Building Covenants.

1. In 1808 the plaintiff was the owner in fee simple of a piece of ground forming a public square in London, and also of several houses in the same square. He conveyed the piece of ground to E. in fee simple, and E. covenanted for himself, his heirs, executors, administrators, and assigns, with the plaintiff, his heirs, executors, and administrators, to keep the piece of ground and the iron railing round the same in its then present form and in proper repair, as a pleasure ground, in an open state, uncovered with any buildings, in neat and ornamental order; and that the plaintiff and his tenants might have keys at their own expense, and the privilege of admission therewith into the pleasure ground. The neighbourhood of the square had become thickly populated, and a thoroughfare had been made through it by Act of Parliament. The piece of ground had become greatly neglected, and was in a ruinous condition, and for many years neither the plaintiff nor his tenants had used or claimed to use it as a pleasure garden. The defendant, who claimed by purchase under E., removed some of the iron railings, and intended to make footpaths across the ground, and claimed the right of building thereon:—Held, that this was a breach of the covenant, and he was restrained by injunction, although the plaintiff had not established the validity of the covenant at law as binding upon the assignee of the land. Tulk v. Moxhay, 2 Ph. 774; 1 H. & Tw. 105; 18 L. J., N. S., Ch., 83; 13 Jur. 89. Affirming 11 Beav. 571; 18 L. J., N. S., Ch., 83; 13 Jur. 26.

2. A vendor conveyed to a purchaser a piece of land with a house, being No. 7 in a particular row of houses called Windsor Terrace, on the west side of a road, and covenanted with the purchaser that no building, excepting monuments and tombs, should be erected on any part of the land belonging to the vendor "lying on the east side of the said terrace, and opposite to the plot of land thereby conveyed":—Held, affirming the decision of one of the Vice-Chancellors, that the covenant applied only to that part of the vendor's land which was opposite to, and of the same width as the piece conveyed. Patching v. Dubbings, 23 L. J., Ch., 45; 2 Eq. Rep. 71. Affirming 1 Kay 1; 2 W. R. 2.

Held, also, that the Vice-Chancellor was right in dismissing, with costs, a bill filed to restrain the erection of a building not immediately opposite to any part of the premises comprised in the purchase deed. Ib.

3. An owner of building ground upon which houses of uniform height and depth had been built sold it in plots, and conveyed each plot in fee, subject to a perpetual rent-charge; and each purchaser covenanted with the grantor that there should be no trees or any building whatever in the garden that should exceed the level of the parlour floor:—Held (affirming 1 L. R., Eq. 499; 12 Jur., N. S., 366; 35 L. J., Ch., 190), that it was a breach of the covenant to erect any building above the prescribed height extending beyond the back of the house, though the ground upon which such building was erected had never been used as a garden. Western v. M'Dermot, 3 L. J., Ch., 76; 15 W. R. 265; 16 L. T., N. S., 641; 2 L. R., Ch., 72.

Upon a covenant not to build or allow trees to grow above a certain height, the object of which was to prevent obstruction of the view from certain houses:—Held, that substantial injury was not requisite in order to enable the Court to interfere and restrain a breach of covenant. Ib.

4. A railway company, in purchasing land covenanted with the owner not to build upon it above a certain height. They afterwards obtained an Act of Parliament empowering them to widen their line:—Held, first, that it would prevent them from building so as to widen the line. Lloyd v. London, Chatham, & Dover Railway Co., 11 Jur., N. S., 380.

Held, secondly, that if the covenant was not invalid at law, as being against public policy, the Court would not be prevented from interfering on that ground, and that when the Court refuses to enforce a covenant, because the damage would be inappreciable, the case must be perfectly clear. Ib.

5. A covenant by a purchaser of land not to build above a certain height does not amount to a reservation to the vendors of a right to use the upper surface of light and air for their own purposes, as for building, or throwing any covering thereover. Pinchin v. London & Blackwall Railway Co., 2 Eq. Rep. 1172; 2 W. R. 696; 1 Jur., N. S., 241; 21 L. J., Ch., 417.

6. Land having been laid out for building, and streets projected across it, the defendant bought one plot with a right of way over the projected streets, the vendors reserving a similar privilege over the street in front of the plot sold, and the defendant covenanted with the vendors that he would not erect any building on the same plot within the distance of six feet from the intended streets:—Held, that the erection of a wall fifteen feet high at right angles to the principal street, and extending quite up to it, was an infringement of this covenant, but that it was not broken by the projection a few inches too far of the lower part of the wall of a house, nor by a brick porch which came forward one foot within the limit. Child v. Douglas, 1 Kay 560. And see S. C. 1 Kay 575; 2 Jur., N. S., 350, 950; 2 W. R. 461, 701; 5 De G. M. & G. 739.

7. A covenant to the effect that private houses only, of a certain minimum value, are to be built on certain plots of land, is not broken by the erection on one of them of a stable with a bedroom over it of such dimensions and in such a position that it would still be possible to build a house of the stipulated value upon the plot. Russell v. Baber, 18 W. R. 1021.

8. A. purchased a building plot of G., and covenanted to build on it a dwelling-house of the value of 250*l.* at least, under the inspection and to the satisfaction of C.'s architect, in twelve months. The twelve months expired, and A. proceeded to build a house of the required value, but as to situation contrary to the opinion of the architect:—Held, that it was a breach of the covenant, and an injunction was granted. Goolden v. Antee, 18 L. T., N. S., 898.

9. Land was sold subject to a covenant entered into with a neighbouring landowner, that "no buildings, except dwelling-houses," to front a certain road, should be built thereon. The purchaser threw the land into his garden, and inclosed it, by erecting thereon, along the side of the road, a wall, eight feet six inches high for the greater part, but carried up in one part to the height of eleven feet six inches for the purpose of forming the back of vineries and a greenhouse. In suit for an injunction to restrain the wall from continuing:—Held, that the boundary garden wall eight feet six inches high was no breach of covenant, but the raising it for the purposes of the vineries was; but no substantial injury being caused, the Court awarded damages instead of granting an injunction in respect of the breach. Bones v. Law, 39 L. J., Ch., 483; 9 L. R., Eq., 636; 18 W. R. 640; 23 L. T., N. S., 267.

1. The purchaser of a plot of land, part of an estate laid out for building, covenanted with the vendors, who were the mortgagees in fee in possession of the estate, their heirs and assigns, not to erect any building on his plot nearer to the road in which it was situate than the line of frontage of the then present houses in that road, which houses were about forty feet apart, and about eighty feet from the road. He then erected two houses on his plot, each of which had a bay window projecting three feet beyond the line of the existing houses, and carried from the foundation up to the roof. Upon a bill for an injunction by the transferee from the mortgagees, and by a subsequent purchaser from them of a contiguous plot, who had entered into similar covenants:—Held, first, that the bay windows were buildings within the meaning of the covenant, and the erection of them a violation of it. Manners (Lord) v. Johnson, 1 L. R., Ch. D., 673; 45 L. J., Ch., 404; 24 W. R. 481.

Held, secondly, that there being a clear breach of covenant, the covenantees were entitled to the injunction without the necessity of showing damage. Id.

Held, thirdly, that invasion of privacy constituted damage. Id.

Held, fourthly, that the covenant being not to do an act the doing of which caused an invasion of privacy, it was not necessary for the covenant in terms to purport to preserve privacy. Id.

Held, fifthly, that both the plaintiffs had material interests sufficient to support the suit. Id.

2. Covenants as to User of Premises and Trade.

2. The owner of an estate covered it with houses, and sold some of them subject to a covenant not to carry on any trade, business, or calling therein, or to otherwise use, or suffer the same to be used, to the annoyance, nuisance, or injury of any of the houses on the estate:—Held, that the carrying on of a girls' school in one of the houses was a breach of the covenant. Aemp v. Sober, 1 Sim., N. S., 517; 20 L. J., N. S., Ch., 602; 16 Jur. 458.

3. On a sale of an estate as building land in 309 plots each purchaser executed a covenant with trustees to observe certain conditions as to the user of the land. The conditions stated that certain plots were reserved for two taverns; that "no houses, other than detached or semi-detached," were to be erected except on the portion on which shops were permitted to be built; and that shops would be allowed to be built on sixty specified plots. A purchaser of one of the plots set apart for shops was restrained from building a public-house on it. Hall v. Box, 18 W. R. 820.

4. A person who has covenanted not to use a building for certain purposes will not be restrained from erecting a building seemingly adapted only for such purposes. Worsley v. Swann, 61 L. J., Ch., 576.

5. A grantee in fee of a piece of building land covenanted by a separate deed with the grantor that the piece of land should not for the space of twenty years be used "as a site for any hotel, tavern, public-house, or beer-house," nor should "the trade or calling of an hotel or tavern keeper, publican or beer-shop keeper, or seller by retail of wine, beer, spirits, or spirituous liquors, be used, exercised, or carried on, at or upon" the same:—Held, that the sale of wine and spirits in bottle by a grocer in the course of his trade was not such a breach of the covenant as the Court of Chancery would restrain. Jones v. Bone, 9 L. R., Eq., 674; 39 L. J., Ch., 405; 18 W. R. 489; 23 L. T., N. S., 304.

6. The erection of a building to be used for the education and lodging of 100 girls in connection with a charitable institution for the daughters of missionaries, supported by voluntary contributions:—Held, to be a breach of a covenant entered into by the purchaser that "no house or other building to be erected or built upon the land shall be used or occupied otherwise than as and for a private residence only, and not for any purpose of trade." German v. Chapman, 26 W. R. 149; 7 L. R., Ch. D., 271; 47 L. J., Ch., 250; 37 L. T., N. S., 686. Reversing 25 W. R. 802; 37 L. T., N. S., 265.

7. C. being entitled to a conveyance of a piece of land subject to a covenant by him with E., his vendor, not to do or suffer anything to be done which should be a nuisance to E. or his tenants, etc., the occupiers of the adjoining property put up for sale and sold the land in lots subject to a condition in the terms of the covenant, and the purchaser of each lot entered into a covenant with C. not to do or suffer anything to be done which should be a "nuisance" to E. or any of the tenants or the occupiers "of the adjoining property or the houses to be built thereon." Upon a bill filed by several of the owners of the lots to restrain the establishment of a national parochial school on one of the lots:—Held, first, that the words "adjoining property" in the last-mentioned covenant meant the property adjoining the lots purchased, and accordingly the owner of any lot was entitled to enforce the covenant against the owner of any other lot. Harrison v. Good, 40 L. J., Ch., 294; 11 L. R., Eq., 338; 24 L. T., N. S., 263; 19 W. R. 346.

Held, secondly, that the word "nuisance" meant only a legal nuisance for which an action would lie, and that the establishment of a national school, although it would injure and depreciate the adjoining property, was not a nuisance within the meaning of the covenant, but the bill was dismissed without costs, on the ground that another site might have been chosen so as to avoid annoyance. Id.

1. By a deed of partition of a freehold estate between S. and P., portions of the estates, which were laid out for roads, were conveyed to S. in fee, and he covenanted with P., his heirs and assigns, that P., his heirs and assigns, and all owners and occupiers for the time being of all or any parts of the lands limited to P., and of the houses to be built thereon, should at all times for ever thereafter have right of passage over the roads, which was given in the most ample terms, and also the full use and enjoyment of the roads in as full, free, complete, and absolute manner to all intents and purposes whatsoever as if they were public roads. Thirty years afterwards, the occupiers of houses on these lands of P. applied to a gas company to supply them with gas, and the company proceeded to lay down pipes for the purpose in the above roads. It was admitted under the Companies Act this would have been lawful if the roads had been public roads. The devisees of S. filed a bill in equity to restrain the company from interfering with the roads. The Master of the Rolls having dismissed the bill:—Held, that the bill had rightly been dismissed, for that the covenant entitled the occupiers to the same use of the roads for the purpose of obtaining gas as if they had been public roads. Selby v. Crystal Palace Gas Co., 4 De G. F. & J. 246; 8 Jur., N. S., 830; 31 L. J., Ch., 595; 10 W. R. 636; 6 L. T., N. S., 790. Affirming 30 Beav. 606; 8 Jur., N. S., 422; 10 W. R. 432.

2. A deed contained a covenant by the grantee of a piece of land that no building to be erected on the land should be used as a public-house, tavern, or beer-shop. A lessee of the grantee obtained an off-licence, authorising him to sell at his shop, on the land, beer not to be drunk on the premises, and sold beer there accordingly:—Held, that this was a breach of the covenant. Bishop of St. Albans v. Battersby (3 L. R., Q. B. D., 359) approved. London & Suburban Land and Building Co. v. Field, 16 L. R., Ch. D., 645; 50 L. J., Ch., 549; 44 L. T. 444.

II. COVENANTS RUNNING WITH THE LAND.

3. A conveyance of an estate to a purchaser and his heirs to the use that certain trades should not be carried on upon the premises is a stipulation in the nature of a covenant running with the land. Hodgson v. Coppard, 30 L. J., Ch., 20; 29 Beav. 4; 9 W. R. 9.

The grantee had let the property to a tenant who had committed and was committing the breaches complained of, but who was not made a party to the suit:—Held, that an injunction might be granted to restrain the grantee, his agents or servants, from carrying on such a trade, but that the injunction could not be extended to his tenants. Id.

4. A covenant by a purchaser of land not naming assigns that no building on the land should be used for the sale of beer does not run with the land. Wilson v. Hart, 2 Hem. & M. 551. Affirmed 1 L. R., Ch., 463; 12 Jur. N. S., 460; 33 L. J., Ch., 569; 14 W. R. 748; 14 L. T., N. S., 499.

5. A purchaser of a piece of land with a well or spring upon it covenanted with the vendor, who retained land adjoining intended to be disposed of for building sites, to erect a pump and reservoir, and to supply water from the well to all houses built on the vendor's land:—Held, first, that both the benefit and the burden of the covenant ran with the land, and that the case was not within the second resolution in Spencer's case (5 Rep. 16a; 1 Sm. L. C. 60), but if not, a sub-purchaser with notice of the covenant was bound by it. Cooke v. Chilcott, 3 L. R., Ch. D., 694; 34 L. T., N. S. 207.

Held, secondly, that, though the covenant was not one of which the Court would decree specific performance directly, as being for the construction of works which the Court could not superintend, it could be enforced indirectly by an injunction restraining the defendant from allowing the work to remain unperformed. Id.

6. Covenant upon a conveyance in fee with the grantors, lessees of the waterworks, not to sell or dispose of water from a well to the injury of the proprietors of the said waterworks, their heirs, executors, administrators, and assigns. Whether the covenant runs with the land so as to bind and be enforced by assignees, whether it is contrary to the policy of the law, and as to the effect of a renewal of the lease, quære. The parties left to law, and a demurrer allowed, from the inconvenience of enforcing such a covenant by injunction. Collins v. Plumb, 16 Ves. 454.

7. A. being the owner of a building estate, sold a plot of it to B., who, by the conveyance, entered into restrictive covenants with A. as to the mode of using the land. A. afterwards contracted for the repurchase, and the land was conveyed by B. to C. as mortgagee of A. During the interval, A. sold several other plots of the estate to various persons, but it did not appear whether he entered into any or what arrangement with them as to the use of the land. The mortgagee foreclosed:—Held, that the land was not bound by the restrictive covenants entered into by B.; and the land being sold without any condition as to these covenants, the title was forced upon the purchaser. Keates v. Lyon, 38 L. J., Ch., 357.

8. Land was granted in fee in consideration of a rent-charge, and the deed of grant contained a covenant to build houses on the land, the rent of which should be double the value of the rent reserved by the deed without limiting any time within which such building was to be required:—Held, that such covenant was unusually restrictive. Andrew v. Aitken, 22 L. R., Ch. D., 218; 52 L. J., Ch., 294; 48 L. T. 148; 31 W. R. 425.

Semble, that although the assignee of the grantee of the land was not liable affirmatively on such covenant, he might be called on to allow the house to be built in accordance with the covenant. Id.

9. Where there are mutual covenants by owners of land, their heirs and assigns, with the owners of adjoining land, their heirs and assigns, to comply with certain stipulations, the subsequent lessee of one of the owners is entitled to the benefit of the covenants as an assign, and can sue to restrain a breach. Taito v. Gosling, 11 L. R., Ch. D., 273; 48 L. J., Ch., 397; 27 W. R. 394; 40 L. T. 251.

III. COVENANTS BINDING ON AN ASSIGNEE WITH NOTICE.

1. A. being seised of the centre garden and some houses in Leicester Square, conveyed the garden to B. in fee, and B. covenanted for himself and his assigns to keep the garden unbuilt upon, etc.:—Held, that a purchaser from B., with notice of the covenant, was bound by it in equity, whether he was bound at law or not, and an injunction was granted to restrain him from infringing the covenant. Tulk v. Moxhay, 11 Beav. 571. Affirmed 2 Ph. 774; 1 H. & Tw. 105; 18 L. J., N. S., Ch., 83; 13 Jur. 89.

A covenant between vendor and purchaser, on the sale of land, that the purchaser and his assigns shall use, or abstain from using, the land in a particular way, will be enforced in equity against all subsequent purchasers, with notice, independently of the question whether it be one which runs with the land, so as to be binding upon subsequent purchasers at law. Id.

2. Where land was intended to be sold by lots, on the sale of the two lots first sold an indenture was executed between the owner of the one part and the two purchasers and all others who should subsequently execute the indenture whereby, after declaring that it should be an indispensable condition of the sale of any part of the land that the proprietors for the time being should observe the covenants and restrictions of the indenture, the parties thereto covenanted, among other things, that none of the proprietors for the time being should ever use as an hotel a house erected on any of the lots. The purchasers of two other lots afterwards executed the deed, and then sold their lots, the one to A., the other to B., neither of whom executed the deed, but both had notice of it; B. and his tenant were restrained by injunction from using the house built on B.'s lot as an hotel. Whatman v. Gibson, 9 Sim. 196; 7 L. J., N. S., Ch., 160; 2 Jur. 273.

3. According to Tulk v. Moxhay (2 Ph. 774), if parties purchase land with notice of a covenant concerning it, but which does not run with the land so as to bind them at law, equity will not permit them to do anything contrary to the true meaning of that covenant. Patching v. Dubbins, 1 Kay 1; 17 Jur. 1113; 2 W. R. 2; 23 L. J., Ch., 45. Affirmed 2 Eq. Rep. 71.

4. Where a purchaser in fee covenanted that no building whatever should at any time thereafter be erected on a certain portion, which latter was afterwards, and after one mesne conveyance, vested in the defendant, who before the conveyance to him had notice of the covenant, the Court, at the instance of the plaintiff, who had afterwards divers mesne conveyances of the other portions, restrained the defendant from continuing a building begun by him. Mann v. Stephens, 15 Sim. 377; 10 Jur. 660.

5. Each of the original owners of houses in a row entered into covenants with the original owner of all the land on which they stood as to what should be done in the garden attached to each house:—Held, that whether the covenants did or did not run with the land, a purchaser of one of the houses, with notice of the covenants, was bound by them in equity. Western v. MacDermott, 2 L. R., Ch., 72; 15 W. R. 265; 15 L. T., N. S., 641.

6. The purchaser of a plot of ground agreed that no building erected on it should be used as a public-house during twelve years and a half. The agreement did not appear on the conveyance. The purchaser's assignee built a public-house on the plot, and let it to a yearly tenant. The assignee had notice, but the tenant had not. On a bill against the assignee and his tenant, an injunction was granted to restrain the assignee from allowing the premises to be used as a public-house; the injunction to be suspended during the existing tenancy. Carter v. Williams, 39 L. J., Ch., 560; 9 L. R., Eq., 678; 18 W. R. 593; 23 L. T., N. S., 183.

7. A vendor entered into agreements, by deed, to sell to A., B., and C., certain land, in lots, for building purposes, reserving to himself a portion. Each deed of agreement contained covenants between the vendor and purchasers respectively, and among others that the purchasers should, within a certain time, erect dwelling-houses upon their respective lots, in a uniform row, in a certain specified position, and that no building should be erected on the piece of ground in front of each house, which was to be laid out as a garden, and that the vendor would dispose of all the lots subject to the same conditions as to building; and that in case the vendor should build upon the portion reserved by him, he would build in a line with the other houses, and would keep a similar piece of land in front for a garden. Before the contracts were completed by conveyance, the vendor sold and conveyed the reserved land to J., and the deed of conveyance recited the said sales, and contained a covenant by the vendor, that in the conveyances to A., B., and C., he would require them to enter into covenants with J. similar to their covenants in the agreements. J. also thereby covenanted with the vendor, that, if he should build on the land purchased by him, he would build within the line, and would keep the said piece of ground in front as garden. Subsequently the land purchased by A. was conveyed to him by a deed, in which A. entered into the same covenants as he had entered into in the deed of agreement. After divers mesne assignments, the land purchased by J. became vested in the defendants, with notice of the agreements and of J.'s covenants in his purchase deed, and the land of A. came in like manner to the plaintiff:—Held, that, whether the covenants run with the land or not, as the defendants had notice of them, the plaintiff might have an injunction to restrain the defendants from building in a manner contrary to the general scheme for the benefit of all the original parties. Coles v. Sims, 1 Kay 56; 23 L. J., Ch., 37; 2 W. R. 48. Affirmed 18 Jur. 683; 6 De G. M. & G. 1; 23 L. J., Ch., 258; 2 Eq. Rep. 951.

1. A covenant relating to but not running with land is binding on an assign with notice. Luker v. Dennis, 47 L. J., Ch., 174; 7 L. R., Ch. D., 227; 37 L. T., N. S., 827; 26 W. R. 167.

2. The owners of a freehold property, on a sale of a plot of land to the plaintiff, covenanted with him not to allow any house built on the adjoining land to be used for the sale of liquor. They afterwards sold another plot to a person who granted a lease to the defendant, such lease purporting to allow the defendant to carry on the trade of a vendor of wines and spirits and bottled ale. The defendant at the date of his lease knew the existence of the former covenant. The defendant having commenced to carry on the sale of wines, etc.:—Held, that an assign with notice was in the same position as a party to the covenant, and that, therefore, the Court will not require substantial damages to be shown before granting an injunction to restrain a breach. Richards v. Revitt, 26 W. R. 166; 7 L. R., Ch. D., 224; 37 L. T., N. S., 632; 47 L. J., Ch., 472.

An assignee of land with notice of a covenant is subject in the same measure of relief as if he had been party to the covenant, and the covenantee suing on breach of the covenant is no more bound to prove substantial damage in one case than in the other. Ib.

3. A demised a plot of land for a term of forty years for the erection of a hotel, with a covenant that he, his heirs, or assigns, would not, during the term, let any house, building, or land for the erection of a hotel or inn, or for the sale of ale or beer or spirits, within a quarter of a mile of the plot of land so leased. A demised another plot of land to S., who covenanted that he would not allow any building to be erected thereon to be used for the sale of beer without the written authority of A., his heirs, or assigns. R., with notice of the covenants, purchased the reversion in S.'s lot, and afterwards bought up his lease. He afterwards commenced building a hotel thereon. Upon a bill by the owner of the hotel, a perpetual injunction was granted, during the continuance of his lease, to restrain R. from using the building as a hotel, or for the sale of beer. Jay v. Richardson, 8 Jur., N. S., 689; 31 L. J., Ch., 398; 10 W. R. 412; 6 L. T., N. S., 177; 30 Beav. 563.

4. A sub-tenant is liable to a restrictive covenant entered into by the purchaser of the freehold for himself and his assigns, though neither the sub-tenant nor his lessor has actual notice of it, and in spite of the provision of s. 2 of the Vendor and Purchaser Act, 1874, preventing the examination of the title to the freehold. In the conveyance in 1875 to F. of part of a building estate purchased by him, F. covenanted for himself, his heirs, executors, administrators, and assigns, with the owner or owners for the time being of the remainder of the property, not to carry on the trade of retailer of wine, spirits, or beer, on the land purchased. F. leased to D., who sub-leased to J., neither D. nor J. having actual notice of the restriction. J. opened a shop for the sale of wine and beer to be consumed off the premises. Upon a motion for an injunction by T., the purchaser of another part of the building estate:—Held, that J. was liable for breach of the covenant. Thornewell v. Johnson, 50 L. J., Ch., 641; 44 L. T. 768; 29 W. R. 677.

5. In 1867 the plaintiffs conveyed to a purchaser in fee simple certain hereditaments and appurtenances adjoining their railway, and by the deed of conveyance the purchaser covenanted "for himself, his heirs, executors, administrators, and assigns, that he (the said purchaser) would not erect or build any erection or buildings of any kind whatsoever within ten feet of the roadway or viaduct of the plaintiffs without their permission in writing first had and obtained." In the following year the said purchaser conveyed the said hereditaments and appurtenances to a person since dead, the testator of the defendant B., and the said testator took and accepted the said conveyance without notice or knowledge of the said covenant other than such constructive notice (if any), as he might be deemed to have had by reason of the said deed of 1867, being a title deed of the premises. In 1869 the testator rebuilt the said hereditaments, and erected on the premises a hotel, part of which stood within ten feet of the roadway or viaduct of the plaintiffs, and he demised the said hotel and premises for fifty years upon a certain rent to a woman, who assigned the lease to the second defendant F. A covenant was contained in the lease to the effect that the lessee should not make any alteration in the premises without the lessor's consent in writing, but neither the lessee nor the defendants had any notice of the covenant in the conveyance of 1867 other than such constructive notice (if any) as before mentioned in the case of the testator. In 1881 the defendant F. increased the height of that part of the erection, which was within ten feet of the plaintiffs roadway or viaduct, having previously, in consideration of the payment of a sum of money, obtained the written authority of the defendant B. for so doing. The plaintiffs had no knowledge of this erection by the defendant B., or the alteration by the defendant F., until they were both completed in 1881:—Held, upon a special case, that the plaintiffs were entitled to an injunction to both the defendants requiring them to pull down the said erections; and that the defendant F. was not entitled to be indemnified by the defendant B. London, Chatham, & Dover Railway Co. v. Bull, 47 L. T. 413.

6. The former owners in fee of a residential estate and adjoining lands sold part of the adjoining lands to the defendant's predecessors in title, who entered into covenants with the vendors and their assigns restricting their right to build on and use the purchased land. The same vendors afterwards sold the residential estate to the plaintiffs' predecessors in title. The conveyance contained no reference to the restrictive covenants, nor was there any contract or representation that the purchasers of the residential estate were to have the benefit of them; there was, moreover, in the plaintiffs' conveyance a covenant limiting their use of the purchased property, but such covenant was not co-extensive with the covenants above mentioned. In an action by the plaintiffs to restrain the defendants, who had purchased the land first sold as above mentioned, with notice of the first-mentioned restrictive covenants, from building in contravention of those covenants:—Held, that, although the plaintiffs were “assigns” of the original covenantees, they were not entitled to sue upon the original covenants. Renals v. Cowlishaw, 9 L. R., Ch. D., 125; 38 L. T., N. S., 503; 26 W. R. 754. Affirmed 11 L. R., Ch. D., 866; 48 L. J., Ch., 830.

1. The vendors of an estate sold part of it in 1863 to C., as a site for a public-house, and entered into a covenant with him that they would not sell any other portion of it without requiring the purchaser to enter into a covenant with them “not to erect thereon, or use, or permit to be used, any building erected thereon as a tavern, public-house, or beer-shop.” C. erected a public-house on his part, which he demised to N. In 1869 other portions of the estate were sold to a company, who afterwards sold to P., his conveyance containing a covenant with his vendors in the above terms. P. erected a house on one plot and leased it to F., who obtained a retail licence for the sale of beer off the premises:—Held, that, from the date of the sale to C., the rest of the property was subject to the restrictive covenant; that F. must be taken to have had constructive notice of it; that a beer-shop was a shop where beer was sold, independently of any other circumstance; that F. had broken the covenant; and that N. was entitled to sue in respect of such breach. Nicoll v. Fenning, 30 W. R. 95.

2. By a deed which recited that the plaintiff company were seised in fee of certain land not required for the purposes of their railway, the company conveyed the land to G. P. in fee, and G. P. covenanted that he, his heirs, and assigns would at any time thereafter, whenever the land might be required for the railway, and whenever thereunto requested by the company on a six months' notice, reconvey on receiving the same sum as that paid by G. P. Fourteen years afterwards the defendant purchased the lands from G. P.'s heir, with notice of the above covenant. The company then gave notice to the defendant to reconvey, and on his refusing brought an action against him for specific performance:—Held, by Kay, J., that in the present case the covenant did not create any estate or interest in land, and therefore was not obnoxious to the rule against perpetuities, and that specific performance must be decreed, the covenant being binding on an alienee with notice on the principle of Tulk v. Moshay (2 Ph. 774). But held, by the court of appeal, that as the covenant gave to the company an executory interest in land to arise on an event which might occur after the period allowed by the rules as to remoteness, it was invalid on the ground of remoteness. The doctrine of Tulk v. Moshay (2 Ph. 774) only applies to restrictive covenants, and not to covenants to do acts relating to the land. London & South-Western Railway Co. v. Gomm, 20 L. R., Ch. D., 562; 51 L. J., Ch., 530; 46 L. T. 449; 30 W. R. 620. Reversing 45 L. T. 505.

3. A purchaser of a piece of land with a well or spring upon it covenanted with the vendor, who retained land adjoining intended to be disposed of for building sites, to erect a pump and reservoir, and to supply water from the well to all houses built on the vendor's land:—Held, that both the benefit and the burden of the covenant ran with the land, and that the case was not within the second resolution in Spencer's case (5 Rep. 16a; 1 Sm. L. C. 60), but if not, a sub-purchaser with notice of the covenant was bound by it. Cooke v. Chilcott, 3 L. R., Ch. D., 694; 24 L. T., N. S., 207.

4. Land was granted to J. in fee subject to a rent-charge. The grantee covenanted for himself, his heirs, executors, and administrators, that he, his heirs and assigns, would pay the rent, would erect buildings on the land, and would thereafter keep them in repair. The grantor afterwards assigned the rent-charge with the benefit of all covenants to the plaintiff, and the land and the buildings which had been erected came by assignment to A., who mortgaged them, subject to the covenants, to the defendants, who afterwards entered into possession. In an action on the covenant to repair:—Held, that the defendants were not liable, that the covenant did not run with the land, that it was a collateral affirmative covenant, and did not impose a burden on the land, so that the defendants could not, as assignees with notice, be compelled to perform it. Haywood v. Brunswick Permanent Benefit Building Society, 8 L. R., Q. B. D., 403; 51 L. J., Q. B., 73; 45 L. T. 699; 30 W. R. 299.

IV. EFFECT OF ALTERATION OF CHARACTER OF PROPERTY.

5. Where land is conveyed in fee by deed of feoffment, subject to a perpetual ground-rent, and the feoffee covenants for himself, his heirs, and assigns with the feoffor, the owner of adjoining lands, his heirs, executors, administrators, and assigns, not to use the land in a particular manner, with a view to the more ample enjoyment by the feoffor of such adjoining lands, and the subsequent acts of the feoffor, or of those claiming under him, have so altered the character and condition of the adjoining lands, that, with reference to the land conveyed, the restriction in the covenant ceases to be applicable according to the intent and spirit of the contract, a court of equity will not interpose to enforce the covenant, but will leave the parties to law. Whether upon such a covenant there could be any remedy at law against the assignees of the covenantor, quære. Bedford (Duke) v. British Museum (Trustees of), 2 Myl. & K. 525; 2 L. J., N. S., Ch., 129.

6. A building estate was laid out in lots, which were sold by the owners of the estate to different purchasers, each of whom covenanted with the vendors, and with the owners of the other lots entitled to the benefit of the covenant, not to build a shop on his land, or to use his house as a shop, or to carry on any trade therein. The purchaser of one of the lots, who occupied his house as a private residence, brought an action against the purchaser of another lot, who was using his house as a beer-shop with an “off” licence, to restrain him from breaking his covenant, and for damages.

The defendant had, to the knowledge of the plaintiff, so used his house for three years before the action was commenced. There was evidence that several other houses built on others of the lots (one of them immediately opposite the plaintiff's house) had been for some time used as shops, notwithstanding the covenant, and that many of the houses adjoining the plaintiff's house were occupied, not each by a single tenant, but each by two families at weekly rents:—Held, that the character of the property had become so changed that the original purpose—the keeping the estate as a residential property—for which the covenant had been entered into had failed, and that it would not, under the circumstances, be equitable to enforce specific performance of the covenant. The principle of Bedford (Duke) v. British Museum (Trustees of) (2 Myl. & K. 552) applied. And the plaintiff not having proved any substantial damage, the action was dismissed with costs. Sayers v. Collyer, 24 L. R., Ch. D., 180; 52 L. J., Ch., 770; 48 L. T. 939; 32 W. R. 200.

1. A., by indenture, covenanted to lay out and preserve land in an ornamental manner, according to a certain plan, subject to such alteration as should be made or approved of by him, his heirs, or assigns, and as should not destroy the general beauty of the design, and, upon selling any part thereof, to require purchasers to enter into a covenant not to erect any messuage thereon so as to lessen the value of those already erected. B. agreed to purchase and build certain messuages on a line with each other on part of the land. After B. had built and taken a conveyance of two of such messuages, the agreement as to the remainder was cancelled, and the rest of the land conveyed to A., who had sold part of it to C., who commenced building several feet in advance of the line in which B. had built:—Held, that A. had power to vary the details of the plan, and that a purchaser from B. of one of the messuages built by him was not entitled to relief by injunction restraining C. from building in such manner. Schreiber v. Creed, 10 Sim. 9; 8 L. J., N. S., Ch., 346; 3 Jur. 625.

V. SALE IN LOTS. RIGHTS OF PURCHASERS INTER SE.

2. Where an estate is vested in trustees, who sell plots for building subject to restrictive covenants, each purchaser has an equity against the other purchasers to compel the observance of the covenants. Eastwood v. Lever, 12 W. R. 195.

In a suit to enforce such an equity the trustees are necessary parties, and the remaining purchasers ought to be represented on the record. Id.

Each allottee or purchaser from a building society entered into restrictive covenants with the trustees to whom the estate was conveyed, and who were the conveying parties to him, and it was covenanted that these covenants were to enure for the benefit of those entitled under conveyance to be made by the trustees, and that the trustees should be deemed trustees of the covenants for the benefit of those claiming under conveyances already made by them. Every allottee or purchaser had notice of the scheme of the society, and of the regulations, provisions, and restrictions under which alone he could build upon his lot. With this notice the plaintiff and the defendant became allottees or purchasers. The defendant soon after built a large hotel, which was completed before the bill was filed, but later he began erecting stables with a large midden, or receptacle for manure, in front of the plaintiff's lots. The bill alleged the breaches of covenants complained of, and prayed for the plaintiff the benefit of the covenants entered into by the defendant with the trustees, or their allottees or purchasers; for an injunction against building in violation of those covenants and the plan; that the buildings already so erected might be pulled down, and damages might be awarded to the plaintiff. The Vice-Chancellor of the County Palatine of Lancaster at the hearing decreed that the only proper buildings were such as had been approved by the covenantees; he directed the demolition of buildings raised after the filing of the bill, and restrained the defendant from using the stables otherwise than as general outbuildings. The defendant appealed, and it was alleged that the trustees had sanctioned deviations from the general plan, and that the plaintiff had himself not strictly observed it:—Held, that, even if the defendant was not bound by the general plan, the plaintiff had an equity against him by force of the covenants he entered into with the trustees in the conveyance to him; that a deviation sanctioned by the trustees in breach of their duty could not displace the plaintiff's equity under that covenant; and that the plaintiff must be taken to have acquiesced, inasmuch as the hotel itself was built before the bill was filed, and he must have known that the stables were an indispensable adjunct to it, and the decree directing demolition was discharged. S. C. non. Eastwood v. Levers, 33 L. J., Ch., 355; 9 L. T., N. S., 615.

3. When houses were set out in a regular plan and each purchaser of a house covenanted with the former owners of the whole not to erect any building in advance of the general line of frontage:—Held, that a purchaser of one of such houses, to whom the benefit of such covenants was assigned, was entitled to a mandatory injunction to compel the purchaser of another house to pull down a bay window built in breach of such covenant, even without showing material damage. Manners v. Johnson, 45 L. J., Ch., 404; 1 L. R., Ch. D., 673; 24 W. R. 481.

4. A vendor of a piece of land took from the purchaser a covenant that he would not do, or suffer to be done, on the premises, anything which should be a nuisance to the vendor or his tenants, or the occupiers or owners of the adjoining property, or the houses to be built thereon. The purchaser, immediately after the sale, put up the piece of land again for sale by auction in lots, under conditions which required each purchaser to enter into a covenant in similar terms; and each of the purchasers did enter into a covenant with his vendor that he would not do, or suffer to be done, on any of the premises, anything which should, would, or might be deemed a nuisance to the original vendor, or the occupiers or proprietors for the time being of the adjoining property or the houses to be built thereon:—Held, that by the word "adjoining" in the last-mentioned covenant was meant the property adjoining each lot, and not merely the property adjoining the whole piece of land originally sold; and that the owner of any lot was entitled to enforce the covenant against the owner of any other lot. Harrison v. Good, 11 L. R., Eq., 338; 40 L. J., Ch., 294; 24 L. T., N. S., 263; 19 W. R. 346.

The owner of one of the lots having made a free gift of the same to the committee of a district national school, for the purpose of having a national school erected thereon:—Held, that the word "nuisance" in the covenant must be restricted to its technical meaning; that the establishment of a national school is not a legal nuisance; and that the establishment of such a school on one of the above lots could not be restrained by the owner of a dwelling-house built on an adjoining lot, though his property would be depreciated thereby. Id.

1. Where the owner of one of a number of houses purchased for the same owner for building purposes conveyed them to separate alienees in such manner that the benefit of a covenant (entered into originally with the grantor) passed to each alienee; upon a breach injurious to one only of these alienees:—Held, that the party injured might sue alone, without joining the others. Western v. McDermott, 2 L. R., Ch., 72; 15 W. R. 265; 15 L. T., N. S., 641; 36 L. J., Ch., 76. Affirming 1 L. R., Eq., 499; 12 Jur., N. S., 366; 35 L. J., Ch., 190.

2. Covenant not to build within — feet of H. Street:—Held, on the evidence, that the omission of the number was accidental, not intentional, and that the covenantees might have had the covenant reformed on a bill. Child v. Douglas, 2 Jur., N. S., 950. And see S. C. 1 Kay 575, 560; 2 W. R. 461, 701; 2 Jur., N. S., 360; 5 De G. M. & G. 739.

The covenant was in a conveyance by vendors who retained other land adjoining to that conveyed, and afterwards sold part of it:—Held, that the second purchaser could assert all the rights which the vendors could have asserted, and could therefore have had the covenant reformed, and that no objection to this right arose from the doctrines of maintenance or champerty. Id.

In a proper case the Court would interfere on behalf of the second purchaser to restrain a breach of the covenant, whether in point of legal form the second purchaser could sue at law or not, and without regard to any difficulty arising on the exact form of the conveyance to him. Id.

The benefit of the covenant passes to the second purchaser without special mention. Id.

But quære, whether the second purchaser is entitled to enforce the covenant where there is no reciprocity between the vendors and the covenantee, the former having entered into no covenant as to not building, and having retained land which they might deal with so as to defeat the object of the covenant. Id.

And quære, generally, what are the rights of parties inter se each of whom has covenanted with the landlord, but who have neither cove-nanted with each other, nor taken any covenant from the landlord to themselves. Id.

In consequence of the doubts on the last two points, the second purchaser's bill to enforce observance of the covenant dismissed without costs. Id.

3. A vendor, about to sell his estate in lots, entered into covenants by a deed (dated in 1827) with several purchasers whereby certain provisions were made as to the mode of building upon and laying out the estate according to a plan annexed, subject to such alterations as the vendor might make "as should not destroy the general beauty of the design." In 1833 S. entered into an agreement for the purchase of several lots, by which certain stipulations were made for the building of three houses, which were consistent with the terms of the deed of 1827. He built two of the houses, and obtained a conveyance to him, in which he entered into covenants as to those two similar to those in his agreement. S. sold those houses and abandoned his contract as to the remainder of his lots, which the vendor re-sold. The sub-purchaser from S. of the two houses was:—Held, not entitled to restrain the purchaser of the re-sold lot from building inconsistently with the terms mentioned in the agreement and covenant into which S. had entered. Schreiber v. Creed, 10 Sim. 9; 8 L. J., N. S., Ch., 346; 3 Jur. 625.

4. The plaintiffs, the trustees of a chapel, were the owners in fee of a piece of land, and the defendant was the owner in fee of an adjoining piece of land, which together formed part of an estate that had been laid out for building under a general scheme. The conveyances of the pieces of land respectively contained a covenant that certain stipulations would be observed and performed, one of which stipulations was that "nothing is to be erected within fifteen feet of the high-road, or within ten feet from any other road, except fences, and those not more than six feet high, and no house or part of a house is to be erected at a greater distance than fifty feet from the front building line." Before the plaintiffs' chapel was erected, a house was built on the defendant's land, the front of which was fifteen feet from the high-road. Afterwards the defendant began building a shop on his land in advance of the front of his house. The plaintiffs objected on the ground of the covenant, but the defendant built his shop and brought forward the walls seven feet in advance of his house, so as to be only eight feet from the high-road. The view of the plaintiffs' chapel was obstructed by the defendant's shop. The plaintiffs claimed an injunction to restrain the defendant, and damages. It appeared, however, that the plaintiffs' chapel was in advance of the lines mentioned in the above stipulation in some trifling respects, and that they had violated the stipulation that no house, or part of a house, was to be erected at a greater distance than fifty feet from the front building line, by carrying their chapel to a greater distance than fifty feet from the high-road, and by erecting an iron building at the rear of their chapel, so as to occupy the entire space between the chapel and the extent in depth of their ground. The defendant contended that, under the circumstances, the plaintiffs were not entitled to the relief claimed by them:—Held, that the two covenants were essentially different (the one to observe the line of frontage being of a more important, and the other, as to building in the rear, being of a less important, character), and could be treated as separate covenants; that the plaintiffs were not prevented in equity from enforcing the covenant as to the frontage line, which they themselves had substantially observed; and that the injunction claimed must be granted, and the defendant's building removed. Chitty v. Bray, 48 L. T. 860.

1. Upon the sale in 1863 to A., for the purposes of a public-house, of part of an estate intended to be laid out for building, the trustees of the estate covenanted with A., his heirs and assigns, that they, their heirs and assigns, would not therefore sell any portions of the estate without requiring the purchaser to enter into a covenant "not to erect thereon or use or permit to be used any building to be erected thereon as a tavern, public-house, or beer-shop." Further portions of the estate were sold in 1870 by the then trustees to G., who covenanted with the vendors not to use or permit to be used any building erected on the land and premises intended to be thereby assured as a tavern, public-house, or beer-shop. The rest of the estate was sold to other persons. In 1879 H. purchased from G. part of the land comprised in G.'s purchase of 1870, and entered into a covenant with G., in terms similar to those of the covenant in the deed of 1870. I., a yearly tenant under H. of one of the houses, having obtained an "off licence," sold under it beer which was not drunk upon the premises:—Held, that the property was bound by the restrictive covenant entered into by the vendors in 1863, and that B., an assign of A., was entitled to an injunction and damages against H. and I. in respect of the breach of covenant in selling beer under an "off licence." Nicoll v. Fenning, 19 L. R., Ch. D., 258; 51 L. J., Ch., 166; 45 L. T. 738; 30 W. R. 95.

VI. WAIVER AND ACQUIESCENCE.

2. Distinction between the hearing of a cause and of interlocutory applications as to the amount of acquiescence which will preclude a plaintiff from obtaining the assistance of the Court. Distinction between the effect of a single waiver of a restrictive covenant by a landlord in favour of one of several tenants, as against the others, and a prior waiver of a right under such a covenant by the tenant as against himself. Patching v. Dubbins, 2 W. R. 2; 1 Kay 1; 23 L. J., Ch., 45; 17 Jur. 1113; 22 L. T. 116. Affirmed on appeal, 23 L. J., Ch., 45; 2 Eq. Rep. 71.

3. A party was entitled to the benefit of a covenant not to build more than eight feet high in the garden next door to his house, and not to allow trees or buildings over that height upon land lying in view of his house. In process of time tall trees were allowed to grow up, and cottages were built upon the latter land, and he, or those through whom he claimed, never interfered:—Held, that this non-interference could not operate to prevent his enforcing the covenant to restrain a building in the garden. Western v. Macdermot,

An injunction was granted at the suit of the owner of one of the houses restraining a breach of the covenants by the owner of another house, notwithstanding that small breaches of the covenants by other owners had not been interfered with, and that he himself had committed a small breach. Id.

4. Acquiescence in a trivial breach of covenant does not preclude a plaintiff from relief in respect of a breach of an important character. Richards v. Revitt, 7 L. R., Ch. D., 224; 37 L. T., N. S., 632; 47 L. J., Ch., 472; 26 W. R. 166.

When the vendors of land have covenanted with the purchaser against the carrying on of certain trades upon other parts of the land, the purchaser is not prevented from obtaining an injunction against an assignee of other part of the land because he has not attempted to prevent previous unimportant breaches of the covenant. Id.

5. On a conveyance by S. to T. of land in 1845, T. covenanted not to carry on trade of a licensed victualler or beer-shop-keeper on the premises. In March 1852 T. commenced to carry on the business of a beer-shop-keeper, and in May of the same year S. gave notice to T. to discontinue such business. The business was, however, carried on, and T. applied on two occasions for a spirit licence. In 1853 T. sold the business to H. In 1854 S. filed a bill to restrain T. and H. from carrying on either of the prohibited trades:—Held, that T. having before bill filed parted with her interest, no injunction could be granted against her; and delay and acquiescence having taken place, no injunction would be granted against H. as to the trade of beer-shop-keeper. But injunction as to commencing or carrying on trade of licensed victualler granted against H. Scarabrick v. Tunbridge, 3 Eq. Rep. 240.

6. Acquiescence in the violation of a covenant to a certain extent:—Held, a sufficient objection to an interlocutory application for an injunction against a greater violation of it. Child v. Douglas, 5 De G. M. & G. 739. And see S. C. 1 Kay 560, 575; 2 W. R. 461, 701; 2 Jur., N. S., 350, 950.

Where on a motion for an injunction to restrain an alleged breach of covenant the question in dispute appeared doubtful:—Held, that the burden of proof was on the plaintiff to show that the balance of convenience was in favour of granting the injunction. Id.

Sale in Lots. 7. The owner of an estate covered it with houses, and sold some of them, subject to a covenant not to carry on any trade, business, or calling therein, or to otherwise use, or suffer the same to be used, to the annoyance, nuisance, or injury of any of the houses on the estate:—Held, that the carrying on of a girls' school in one of the houses was a breach of the covenant, and that the covenantee had not waived the benefit of the covenant, though he had permitted other houses, held under the like covenant, to be used as schools. Kemp v. Sober, 1 Sim., N. S., 517; 20 L. J., N. S., Ch., 602; 15 Jur. 458.

8. An estate was sold in lots, each lot consisting of a house and some adjacent land.

The fee was conveyed to the purchasers, who covenanted respectively with the vendors that the front or elevation of the houses should not be altered without the vendors' consent in writing, and that the premises should not be used as a public-house, beershop, temperance hotel, etc.:—Held, that the vendors had not waived their right to insist upon the observance of this covenant by forbearing for periods of six and nine months respectively from taking proceedings against two of the purchasers who sold beer upon their premises, but in such a way that the sale was not visible to the occupants of the other houses. Mitchell v. Steward, 1 L. R., Eq., 541; 35 L. J., Ch., 393; 14 W. R. 453.

1. Where an estate is vested in trustees, who sell plots for building subject to restrictive covenants, each purchaser has an equity against the other purchaser to compel the observance of the covenants. Eastwood v. Lever, 12 W. R. 195. S. C. nom. Eastwood v. Levers, 33 L. J., Ch., 355; 9 L. T., N. S., 615.

Such equity may be lost by acquiescence. Ib.

2. Where a vendor, having taken from each of several purchasers of plots of building land, formerly the same estate, a covenant to build only in a specified manner, has permitted, without interference, material breaches of the covenant to be committed by some of the purchasers, he cannot obtain an injunction to compel another purchaser to observe the same covenant; and there is no difference in the case where the covenant is not only a covenant by each purchaser with the vendor, but also a covenant by each purchaser with all the others, nor in the case where the breaches have been committed before the defendant became a purchaser, and executed the deed of covenant. Peck v. Matthews, 3 L. R., Eq., 515; 16 L. T., N. S., 991; 15 W. R. 689.

3. On the sale of an estate in building plots, purchasers were required to enter into a covenant with the vendors and with each other that plans of all buildings to be erected on the estate should be submitted for approval to the vendors or to a committee, and that no building should be erected the plan of which had not been approved. And it was provided, that within seven days after the submission of such plan, the approval or disapproval should be signified in writing to the party submitting the plan; and that such approval should not be withheld unless for the sake of preserving uniformity of building or other good causes or considerations. On 23rd June, 1869, a purchaser of one plot began, without submitting a plan, to erect buildings the plan of which would not have been approved had it been submitted. Remonstrances were made and notices served on him during July and August, and on 3rd September the vendors filed a bill on behalf of themselves and all other persons entitled to benefit of covenants (except the defendant) praying for mandatory injunction and damages:—Held, that the erection of a temporary hovel on another part of the estate, which had not been interfered with by the plaintiffs, was not a waiver of the covenant; and that the vendors were not bound to obtain the consent of all the parties entitled to the benefit of the covenant in order to file such a bill. Kilbey v. Haviland, 24 L. T., N. S., 353; 19 W. R. 698.

A mandatory injunction was, however, refused, but the Court considering that he had done damage by his building, and that he had broken his covenant, ordered him to pay 10*l.* for the damages, and the costs of the suit. Ib.

4. Where all the purchasers of an estate were bound by restrictive covenants not to use their houses otherwise than as private residences, and the vendor had given permission to one of the purchasers to open a school in his house, this was held not to be a waiver of the covenant as to another purchaser whose house was at some distance. German v. Chapman, 7 L. R., Ch. D., 271; 47 L. J., Ch., 250; 37 L. T., N. S., 685; 26 W. R. 149. Reversing 25 W. R. 802; 37 L. T., N. S., 265.

5. On a sale of part of the C. estate, the purchasers entered into a covenant with the vendors, "their and each of their heirs and assigns, and also separately with the owners and owner, lessors and lessees, for the time being, or other the persons or person for the time being entitled to the receipt of the rents and profits of any part of" the C. estate, against (inter alia) keeping a beershop on any part of the premises sold. In an action brought by subsequent purchasers of the C. estate to restrain a breach of this covenant:—Held, on the evidence adduced, that they had lost their right to bring an action by long-continued acquiescence in breaches of the covenant both by the defendant and other similar covenantors, and consequently were not entitled either to an injunction or to any damages. Kelsey v. Dodd, 52 L. J., Ch., 34.

Semble, also, that they were not entitled to sue on the covenant at law, even for nominal damages. Ib.

6. On the sale of an estate in plots for building purposes, a deed of covenant was executed by all the purchasers whereby they covenanted with the trustees, each purchaser covenanting with regard to the plot purchased by him, to observe certain stipulations as to the number of houses to be built on the plots, the building lines, and other similar matters. The plaintiff was owner of certain of these plots, on which a house had been erected and grounds laid out. The defendant had contracted for the purchase of some adjoining plots, on which he was commencing to build more houses than were allowed by the deed of covenant, and in a position at variance with the building line therein laid down. The houses so built would overlook the plaintiff's grounds somewhat more than if built within the building line. The plaintiff claimed an injunction, and the defendant pleaded that in several other instances the original vendors, who were trustees under the deed of covenant for all the purchasers, had allowed considerable breaches of the covenants to be committed without interference, that they were therefore disentitled to enforce the covenants against the defendant, and that the plaintiff, as claiming under them, could not be in any better position. It also appeared that the plaintiff's own house was built two feet in advance of the building line:—Held, that as the breaches of covenant allowed by the trustees were committed in relation to other portions of the property not affecting the plaintiff's enjoyment of his plots, they could not be set up against him, and that the deviation with regard to his own house was too trifling to affect his right. Jackson v. Winniffrith, 47 L. T. 243.

1. Land having been laid out for building, and streets projected across it, the defendant bought one plot with a right of way over the projected streets, the vendors reserving a similar privilege over the street in front of the plot sold; and the defendant covenanted with the vendors that he would not erect any building on the said plot within the distance of six feet from the intended streets. The original vendors, or their assigns, not having taken proceedings against the first purchaser, who had built upon his land in such manner that it was very doubtful whether or not he had thereby broken his covenant:—Held, that this was not such an acquiescence as would prejudice their right to restrain a breach of his covenant. Child v. Douglas, 1 Kay 560. And see S. C. 1 Kay 575; 2 W. R. 461, 701; 2 Jur., N. S., 350, 950; 5 De G. M. & G. 739.

2. An estate was laid out for building and sold in lots, and the purchasers of the different lots executed a deed by which they covenanted with the vendor not to erect any buildings beyond a certain line, the covenant being subject to a proviso that it should not be personally binding on any one except in respect of breaches committed during his sole or joint seisin of the lot to which it related. In 1872 the purchaser of Lot B built upon it a bakehouse beyond the line. The plaintiff about the same time bought the opposite Lot A. No complaint appeared to have been made by any one of the erection of the bakehouse until his action was commenced. In 1876 the defendant purchased the residue of a mortgage term in Lot B, and in 1877 commenced building upon that plot a wooden stable beyond the line. The plaintiff, as soon as he heard of this, wrote to complain on the 17th March 1877, at which time the stable was built up to the eaves. The defendant proceeded to complete the stable, which was finished on the day on which the plaintiff commenced an action for an injunction to restrain the defendant from allowing any buildings to continue on his land beyond the line:—Held, by Bacon, V.-Ch., that a mandatory injunction ought to be granted to compel the removal of all the erections on the defendant's plot beyond the line. Gaskin v. Balls, 13 L. R., Ch., 324; 28 W. R. 552.

Held, on appeal, that the injunction ought not to extend to the building which had been allowed to remain for five years without complaint, but must be confined to buildings erected since the defendant acquired his title. Ib.

The Judicature Act, 1873, s. 26, sub-s. 8, has not altered the principles on which the Court acts in granting injunctions. Ib.

VII. OTHER CASES.

3. A purchaser in fee of a piece of land cannot, by the purchase of a lease granted of the same land, avoid covenants which his vendor had taken from his tenants over a wide area, in aid of covenants which he had entered into with third parties. Jay v. Richardson, 8 Jur.,

N. S., 689; 31 L. J., Ch., 398; 10 W. R. 412; 6 L. T., N. S., 177; 30 Beav. 563.

4. Where property put up for sale is described merely as held by the vendor as assignee under a lease, the purchaser cannot object to complete on the ground that the lease contains a covenant not to carry on obnoxious trades. Grosvenor v. Green, 5 Jur., N. S., 117; 28 L. J., Ch., 173.

5. The rule that a purchaser who does not inquire into his vendor's title is affected with notice of what appears upon it, applies equally to a yearly tenant as to the purchaser of a greater interest. Wilson v. Hart, 1 L. R., Ch., 463; 12 Jur., N. S., 460; 35 L. J., Ch., 569; 14 W. R. 748; 14 L. T., N. S., 499. Affirming 2 Hem. & M. 551.

6. The owner of land sold a part of it and entered into an agreement with the purchaser that an adjoining plot of land "should never be hereafter sold, but left for the common benefit of both parties and their successors":—Held, that this was merely an agreement that the plot of land should be left open, in the state in which it then was, for the common advantage of both parties, and that such an agreement did not contravene any rule of law, but gave the person who might hold the vendee's land the right to enforce the obligation against the person who might hold the vendor's land. Thus the former might apply to a court of equity to order the removal of a structure that had been placed on the plot in violation of the agreement. McLean v. McKay, 5 L. R., P. C., 327.

7. On an agreement to sell part of a vendor's land, the vendor and purchaser entered into mutual covenants prohibiting building, except in a specified manner, on the sold and unsold parts, with a stipulation for payment of liquidated damages in case of breach of covenant:—Held, first, that the subsequent owner of the unsold part, claiming through the grantor by means of deeds, one of which referred to the deed containing the prohibitory clause, but not to that clause, was bound by the prohibition in equity. Secondly, that the circumstance of the grantor not having performed a covenant to obtain for the grantee a direct covenant from the former purchaser did not constitute a defence, it not appearing that any application had been made to the grantor for that purpose. Thirdly, that notice of a right to prevent building, and of an intention to enforce it, given before any expense was incurred, followed by a bill for an injunction, though not filed till four months afterwards, was sufficient to exclude a defence on the ground of laches, it appearing that the plaintiff could not sooner establish his right to enforce the prohibition. Fourthly, that the clause as to liquidated damages did not exclude the interference of the Court by interlocutory injunction. Coles v. Sims, 5 De G. M. & G. 1; 18 Jur. 683; 23 L. J., Ch., 258; 2 Eq. Rep. 951. Affirming 1 Kay 56; 23 L. J., Ch., 37; 2 W. R. 48.

8. The owners in fee of a residential estate and adjoining lands sold part of the adjoining lands to the defendant's predecessors in title, who entered into covenants with their vendors, their heirs and assigns, restricting their right to build on and use the purchased land. The same vendors afterwards sold the residential estate to the plaintiff's predecessors in title. The conveyance contained no reference to the restrictive covenants, nor was there any contract or representation that the purchasers were to have the benefit of them:—Held, that the plaintiffs were not entitled to restrain the defendants from building in contravention of the restrictive covenants entered into by their predecessors in title. Renals v. Cowlishaw, 11 L. R., Ch. D., 866; 48 L. J., Ch., 830. Affirming 9 L. R., Ch. D., 125; 38 L. T., N. S., 503; 26 W. R. 754.

1. A., the owner of land which it was intended to let for building, with ornamental grounds, enters into an agreement with B. for selling to him the lots 2, 3, 4, and 5, subject to a certain condition as to the distance from the boundary of the land sold at which the houses should be built. He afterwards conveys to B. lots 2 and 3, the covenants in the conveyance being according to the terms of the agreement. Shortly after B. surrenders up the agreement to A. as to lots 4 and 5, and these lots are afterwards sold to C., who builds upon them at a less distance from the boundary than was stipulated in the original agreement between A. and B. B., in the meanwhile, had sold the house on lot 3 to D.:—Held, that the latter had no right against C. under the agreement originally entered into between A. and B. as to the mode of using the lots 2, 3, 4, and 5 when sold together. The case was also rested in some measure upon a general deed entered into by A. for the laying out and management of the property, and particularly a clause binding him to exact from the purchaser of every lot a covenant so to use his lot as not to deteriorate the value of those contiguous, and to this deed a plan was annexed. This deed was not signed by B., the plaintiff, and it was held with reference to this part of the case, that the plan was not intended to be binding in all its details, and that the provision against deterioration of value was of too vague and uncertain a nature to afford itself a ground of suit. Schreiber v. Creed, 10 Sim. 9; 8 L. J., N. S., Ch., 346; 3 Jur. 625.

2. In a sale by the Court the particulars of sale contained certain reservations and stipulations as to the property, and one of the conditions of sale provided that the conveyances should contain covenants by the purchasers for securing the liabilities and rights under such reservations and stipulations, the form of such covenants, in case of dispute, to be settled by the judge. A dispute having arisen between a purchaser and the vendor concerning the form of the covenant, the judge settled the covenant, adding a proviso that if the purchaser assigned his purchase, and the assignee entered into a similar covenant, the purchaser should be freed from further liability:—Held, that the vendor was entitled to an unqualified covenant, and that the proviso must be struck out. Pollock v. Rabbits, 21 L. R., Ch. D., 466; 31 W. R. 150.

The order of a judge settling the form of a conveyance is subject to appeal. Id.

XIX. Indemnity.

See also IX. ante—XV. iv. ante—XXII. i. 9 post.

3. The Court will not compel a vendor to give an indemnity unless vendor and purchaser have contracted for it. Aylett v. Ashton, 1 Myl. & C. 105; 5 L. J., N. S., Ch., 71.

4. Upon supersedeas by consent, a purchaser is entitled to be indemnified against judgments outstanding before the bankruptcy. Exp. Lardour, Mont. & Bli. 89; 2 L. J., N. S., Bky., 15.

5. Purchaser not entitled to compensation where the misdescription consists in stating that the premises sold were in the joint occupation of A. and B. as lessees, the fact being that the premises had been demised to C., and by C. assigned to A., who was, together with B., in the occupation of them at the time of sale. The purchaser could not, in this case, be compelled to accept an indemnity. Ridgway v. Gray, 1 Macn. & G. 109; 1 H. & Tw. 195.

6. A. seised in fee of premises subject to quit-rent, in 1793 sold a portion, then in possession of B., his attorney; and by the deed of conveyance, which recited that A. was seised of other premises, which, with those conveyed, were subject to a quit-rent, and that B. had agreed to indemnify A. and the other premises therefrom, B. covenanted to pay the quit-rent of all the premises, and indemnify A., etc.:—Held, in a suit by the assignee of the unsold lands against a volunteer claimant under B., that the sold lands were specifically bound to indemnify the unsold lands against the payment of the quit-rent. Hatton v. Waddy, 2 Jones 541.

Semble, the proper form of indemnity is a grant of a rent-charge in fee, equal in amount to the quit-rent, and to be issuing out of the sold lands. Id.

7. Estates being sold by auction in lots under conditions, one of which expressed that they were subject to the perpetual payment of 120*l.* a-year to the curate of N., but that the same and the perpetual annual payment of 20*l.* to the hospital of C. were in future to be charged upon, and paid by, the purchaser of lot 1 only, the purchaser of the other lots are entitled, not to an absolute exoneration, but to an indemnity from the purchaser of lot 1. Nature of the indemnity which they may require. Casamajor v. Strade, 2 Swan. 347; 1 Wils. 428. See also Jac. 630.

8. A tenant for life of a real estate, the trustees of which were empowered to sell it at his request and by his direction, entered into a contract to sell it. The estate was subject, with others, to a charge for younger children. The tenant for life died without issue, and the fee of the estate passed under his will:—Held, that the purchaser, on waiving the objection as to the charge, was entitled to a specific performance against the representatives of the vendor, but he was not entitled either to an indemnity against the charge or to compensation. Bainbridge v. Kinnaird, 32 Beav. 346; 9 Jur., N. S., 862; 11 W. R. 608; 8 L. T., N. S., 447.

9. A vendor of freehold property, who, on his own purchase of it, had entered into a covenant to observe the covenants entered into with a former vendor, and which prohibited building on the land, put it up for sale, pursuant to particulars and conditions, noticing the existence of the covenant, but not stipulating that the purchaser should enter into any covenant on the subject. On a bill for specific performance, filed by the purchaser:—Held, that the plaintiff was not entitled to a conveyance, unless on the terms of giving or providing for the vendor a sufficient indemnity against any breach of the covenant on the part of the plaintiff, his heirs, appointees, or assigns. Mozhay v. Inderwick, 1 De G. & Sm. 708.

Held, also, that a covenant on the part of the plaintiff, his heirs, executors, administrators, appointees, and assigns, with the defendant, his heirs, executors, and administrators, to the same effect, mutatis mutandis, as the covenant entered into by the vendor on his own purchase, ought to be considered as a sufficient indemnity. Ib.

1. A. contracted to sell to B. the fee simple, clear of incumbrances. B., aware that on a former occasion an attempted sale had gone off in consequence of A.'s wife refusing to bar her dower, asked as to this, and was informed that she would join. Afterwards she refused to join:—Held, that B. was entitled to compel a specific performance, with a compensation and an indemnity against the right to dower. Wilson v. Williams, 3 Jur., N. S., 810.

Semble, a proper indemnity would be to retain in court a third part of the purchase-money, the dividends to be paid to A. and his assigns during the joint lives of himself and wife; and if she survived A., to B. during her life; and upon her decease, the capital so retained in court to be paid to the husband. Ib.

2. Vendor, having lost title deeds, agrees to give real security for title:—Held, that personal security is not sufficient, and that he must purchase real estate for that purpose. Walker v. Barnes, 3 Madd. 247.

I. COSTS OF INVESTIGATION OF AND REFERENCE AS TO TITLE.

3. Costs of perpetuating testimony of will allowed to purchaser. Mackrell v. Hunt, cited 2 Madd. 37.

4. In the case of purchasers from the assignees of a bankrupt, the rule as to the costs of investigating the title is similar to that governing sales under decrees of courts of equity. Re Page, 1 Dr. & Wal. 31.

5. Where title deeds are in the hands of persons residing in the country, the vendor must bear the expense of the purchaser's solicitor sending a clerk to compare the abstract with the deeds. Hughes v. Wynne, 8 Sim. 85. Affirmed 1 Jur. 720.

6. Construction of a contract, that a reference of the expenses was confined to the expense of the conveyance; but the evidence of the attorney was admitted for the defendant to prove the intention of both parties, according to verbal instructions, that the plaintiff, the purchaser, should also pay the expenses of making out the defendant's title. Ramsbottom v. Gosden, 1 Ves. & B. 165.

7. Words construed so as to have some meaning taken rather than rejected: therefore, vendor proposing a price clear of all expenses, construed that the purchaser should bear the expense of making out the title, the law imposing on him the expense of the conveyance. Stratford v. Bosworth, 2 Ves. & B. 341.

8. Upon a bill praying a specific performance, "if a good title could be made," and the decree accordingly, the Master reported that such title could not be made, and the plaintiff then consented to waive all objections to title:—Held, that he might do so, but, being aware at the hearing of the objections, he must pay the costs of going on to investigate the title. Bennett v. Fowler, 2 Beav. 302.

9. When plaintiff neglects to make out title to purchaser, the latter will be allowed to make it out himself, and deduct expense from purchase-money. Harding v. Middleton, 1 Hog. 80.

10. By the same instrument, the plaintiff agreed to sell an estate to the defendant, and the defendant agreed to sell another estate to the plaintiff. The defendant being unable to make a good title to his estate, resisted the performance of his agreement to purchase the plaintiff's estate, on the ground that the agreement was intended to take effect only on the basis of a mutual exchange, and he failed in that defence (2 Myl. & K. 251). On a reference to inquire as to the plaintiff's title, the Master found that the plaintiff could make a good title; but he did not find that he could make such title before the filing of the bill, the consideration of the time at which the plaintiff's title could be made having been expressly excluded, at the hearing, from the terms of the reference:—Held, that the defendant was liable to the costs of investigating the title in the Master's office. Croome v. Lediard, 2 Myl. & K. 293; 3 L. J., N. S., Ch., 98.

11. Bill by a purchaser praying specific performance upon the terms of the vendor deducing a good title, at her own expense, in the ordinary way, dismissed, the Court being of opinion, upon the construction of a series of letters, and upon the fact of the abstract of title having been delivered to the purchaser in the first instance, that the vendor entered into the negotiation only upon this footing, namely, that she should deliver an abstract of title, and verify it so far as she had the means in her possession at her own expense, but that the purchaser, if upon perusal of the abstract he were satisfied with the title, should be at the expense of completing its verification. Thomas v. Blackman, 1 Colly. 301.

12. A purchaser, discharged by reason of bad

title, is entitled to the cost of counsel's opinion on the title, and of the preparation of the case for counsel. Barton v. Dornes, Fl. & K. 633; 4 Ir. Eq. R. 607.

1. The conditions of sale requiring purchaser to pay the expenses of all assignments and surrenders of terms, etc.:—Held, that the purchaser must pay the expenses of perusal and execution. Johnson v. George, 2 Jur. 886.

2. Title established before Master, not being clear on abstract, vendor pays costs. — v. Collinge, cited 3 Ves. & B. 143. n.

3. Costs to a purchaser; the vendor having established his title before the Master after contest, upon a different ground from that in the abstract delivered. Fielder v. Higginson, 3 Ves. & B. 142

4. Where a vendor has not furnished a complete abstract until after a general reference as to title, he will have to pay the costs of the reference, although no defect of title is discovered upon the inquiry, except such as was already known to the purchaser. Wilson v. Williams, 3 Jur., N. S., 810.

5. A. entered into a written contract for the sale of an estate to B. B. declined to perform the contract, on the ground of inadequacy of value. In a suit by A. against B. for a specific performance, by a decree, dated in April 1851, it was declared that A. was entitled to a specific performance of the agreement, and a reference was made to the Master to inquire whether A. could make a good title; and if so, to state when such good title was first shown, and costs were reserved. The Master found that a good title was made, and that it was first shown in April 1852:—Held, that A. was entitled to the costs of the reference to the Master. Abbott v. Swoorder, 22 L. J., Ch., 236.

6. A decree for specific performance of a contract to purchase with a reference as to title having been made against the purchaser:—Held, that he was bound to pay the costs of having the title investigated in chambers. McNichol v. Kay, 4 W. R. 801.

II. COSTS OF AND INCIDENT TO CONVEYANCE.

7. Expense of conveyance falls on the purchaser if no particular stipulation. Bolton (Duke) v. Williams, 2 Ves. J. 155; 4 Bro. C. C. 297.

8. Construction of a contract, that a reference of the expenses was confined to the expense of the conveyance; but the evidence of the attorney was admitted for the defendant to prove the intention of both parties, according to verbal instructions, that the plaintiff, the purchaser, should also pay the expense of making out the defendant's title. Ramsbottom v. Goaden, 1 Ves. & B. 165.

9. The conditions of sale requiring purchaser to pay the expenses of all assignments and surrenders of terms, etc.:—Held, that the purchaser must pay the expenses of perusal and execution. Johnson v. George, 2 Jur. 886.

10. A vendor agreed to surrender, or procure some person to surrender, and the costs of the surrender were to be paid by the purchaser. It was found necessary to procure a surrender under the Trustee Act:—Held, that the costs of the proceedings ought to be paid by the vendor. Bradley v. Muntion, 16 Beav. 294.

11. A condition of sale, which stated that "the purchasers should have proper surrenders, conveyances, and assignments of the premises at their own expense," did not bind them to bear the expense of procuring the concurrence of all proper parties. Where, therefore, it was necessary for the heir of a trustee to be admitted on the court rolls, the fine and fees on that admission were ordered to be paid by the vendors. Paramore v. Greenslade, 17 Jur. 1064.

12. On the sale of an estate under an order of court, one of the conditions provided, that if the purchaser should require a conveyance of any outstanding legal estate which should not have been referred to or noticed in any of the abstracted deeds or other documents dated within the last thirty years, or any of outstanding term, all the expenses attending the getting in and conveyance of such estate should be borne by the purchaser. The estate was in 1823 conveyed to trustees for a term of 1,000 years, to secure the payment of a sum of money, the payment of which was under orders of court provided for. The purchaser of the estate required an assignment of the term from the representative of the surviving trustee, on the ground that it was not satisfied, but he refused to pay the costs of such assignment:—Held, that the purchaser was entitled to an assignment of the term, the costs of which, not having been provided for by the conditions of sale, must be borne by the vendors. Stronge v. Hanks, 2 Jur., N. S., 388.

13. A. and B., tenants for life in possession and remainder, with remainder to the first and other sons of B. in tail male; the first son of B., being then an infant, agreed to sell the premises to C. for a certain sum, and C. agreed to buy the same if they could obtain an Act of Parliament so to enable them, C. agreeing also to bear all the expenses incident to and consequent on his proposal to purchase, and the negotiations consequent thereon and the obtaining the Act of Parliament, etc., "and all other expenses whatsoever of A. and B., in consequence of the sale, or arising out of or in anywise relating thereto." The Act of Parliament was obtained, vesting the estate in trustees for sale, upon trust to convey according to the terms of the agreement, reciting the words thereof; and directing that the purchase-money should, in the first instance, be invested in the purchase of stock until it could be invested in the purchase of real estate, to be held upon the original trusts:—Held, that the expenses of reinvesting the purchase-money in real estates were not such expenses as C. was, under the agreement, bound to pay, as being incidental, etc., to the sale:—Held, also, that though the estate was vested in trustees for sale, yet that A. and B. were necessary parties to the conveyance, and that they should enter into covenants for title, notwithstanding the exceptions from the saving clause of the Act of Parliament, which it was held did not extend to the acts of the testator, but only to the acts of his devisees and heir-at-law, etc. Esop. Wills, 6 Jur. 936.

14. A. being tenant for life of an estate, with remainder to his sons successively in tail male, with a former vendor, and which prohibited building on the land, put it up for sale, pursuant to particulars and conditions, noticing the existence of the covenant, but not stipulating that the purchaser should enter into any covenant on the subject. On a bill for specific performance, filed by the purchaser:—Held, that the plaintiff was not entitled to a conveyance, unless on the terms of giving or providing for the vendor a sufficient indemnity against any breach of the covenant on the part of the plaintiff, his heirs, appointees, or assigns. Mozhay v. Inderwick, 1 De G. & Sm. 708.

Held, also, that a covenant on the part of the plaintiff, his heirs, executors, administrators, appointees, and assigns, with the defendant, his heirs, executors, and administrators, to the same effect, mutatis mutandis, as the covenant entered into by the vendor on his own purchase, ought to be considered as a sufficient indemnity. Ib.

1. A. contracted to sell to B. the fee simple, clear of incumbrances. B., aware that on a former occasion an attempted sale had gone off in consequence of A.'s wife refusing to bar her dower, asked as to this, and was informed that she would join. Afterwards she refused to join:—Held, that B. was entitled to compel a specific performance, with a compensation and an indemnity against the right to dower. Wilson v. Williams, 3 Jur., N. Semble, a proper indemnity would be to retain in court a third part of the purchase-money, the dividends to be paid to A. and his assigns during the joint lives of himself and wife; and if she survived A., to B. during her life; and upon her decease, the capital so retained in court to be paid to the husband. Ib.

2. Vendor, having lost title deeds, agrees to give real security for title:—Held, that personal security is not sufficient, and that he must purchase real estate for that purpose. Walker v. Barnes, 3 Madd. 247.

9. When plaintiff neglects to make out title to purchaser, the latter will be allowed to make it out himself, and deduct expense from purchase-money. Harding v. Middleton, 1 Hog. 80.

10. By the same instrument, the plaintiff agreed to sell an estate to the defendant, and the defendant agreed to sell another estate to the plaintiff. The defendant being unable to make a good title to his estate, resisted the performance of his agreement to purchase the plaintiff's estate, on the ground that the agreement was intended to take effect only on the basis of a mutual exchange, and he failed in that defence (2 Myl. & K. 251). On a reference to inquire as to the plaintiff's title, the Master found that the plaintiff could make a good title; but he did not find that he could make such title before the filing of the bill, the consideration of the time at which the plaintiff's title could be made having been expressly excluded, at the hearing, from the terms of the reference:—Held, that the defendant was liable to the costs of investigating the title in the Master's office. Croome v. Lediard, 2 Myl. & K. 293; 3 L. J., N. S., Ch., 98.

11. Bill by a purchaser praying specific performance upon the terms of the vendor deducting a good title, at her own expense, in the ordinary way, dismissed, the Court being of opinion, upon the construction of a series of letters, and upon the fact of the abstract of title having been delivered to the purchaser in the first instance, that the vendor entered into the negotiation only upon this footing, namely, that she should deliver an abstract of title, and verify it so far as she had the means in her possession at her own expense, but that the purchaser, if upon perusal of the abstract he were satisfied with the title, should be at the expense of completing its verification. Thomas v. Blackman, 1 Colly. 301.

12. A purchaser, discharged by reason of bad

title, is entitled to the cost of counsel's opinion on the title, and of the preparation of the case for counsel. Barton v. Downes, Fl. & K. 633; 4 Ir. Eq. R. 607.

1. The conditions of sale requiring purchaser to pay the expenses of all assignments and surrenders of terms, etc.:—Held, that the purchaser must pay the expenses of perusal and execution. Johnson v. George, 2 Jur. 886.

2. Title established before Master, not being clear on abstract, vendor pays costs. — v. Collinge, cited 3 Ves. & B. 143. n.

3. Costs to a purchaser; the vendor having established his title before the Master after contest, upon a different ground from that in the abstract delivered. Fielder v. Higginson, 3 Ves. & B. 142

4. Where a vendor has not furnished a complete abstract until after a general reference as to title, he will have to pay the costs of the reference, although no defect of title is discovered upon the inquiry, except such as was already known to the purchaser. Wilson v. Williams, 3 Jur., N. S., 810.

5. A. entered into a written contract for the sale of an estate to B. B. declined to perform the contract, on the ground of inadequacy of value. In a suit by A. against B. for a specific performance, by a decree, dated in April 1851, it was declared that A. was entitled to a specific performance of the agreement, and a reference was made to the Master to inquire whether A. could make a good title; and if so, to state when such good title was first shown, and costs were reserved. The Master found that a good title was made, and that it was first shown in April 1852:—Held, that A. was entitled to the costs of the reference to the Master. Abbott v. Swoorder, 22 L. J., Ch., 235.

6. A decree for specific performance of a contract to purchase with a reference as to title having been made against the purchaser:—Held, that he was bound to pay the costs of having the title investigated in chambers. McNichol v. Kay, 4 W. R. 801.

II. COSTS OF AND INCIDENT TO CONVEYANCE.

7. Expense of conveyance falls on the purchaser if no particular stipulation. Bolton (Duke) v. Williams, 2 Ves. J. 155; 4 Bro. C. C. 297.

8. Construction of a contract, that a reference of the expenses was confined to the expense of the conveyance; but the evidence of the attorney was admitted for the defendant to prove the intention of both parties, according to verbal instructions, that the plaintiff, the purchaser, should also pay the expense of making out the defendant's title. Ramsbottom v. Godden, 1 Ves. & B. 165.

9. The conditions of sale requiring purchaser to pay the expenses of all assignments and surrenders of terms, etc.:—Held, that the purchaser must pay the expenses of perusal and execution. Johnson v. George, 2 Jur. 886.

10. A vendor agreed to surrender, or procure some person to surrender, and the costs of the surrender were to be paid by the purchaser. It was found necessary to procure a surrender under the Trustee Act:—Held, that the costs of the proceedings ought to be paid by the vendor. Bradley v. Muntion, 16 Beav. 294.

11. A condition of sale, which stated that "the purchasers should have proper surrenders, conveyances, and assignments of the premises at their own expense," did not bind them to bear the expense of procuring the concurrence of all proper parties. Where, therefore, it was necessary for the heir of a trustee to be admitted on the court rolls, the fine and fees on that admission were ordered to be paid by the vendors. Paramore v. Greenstade, 17 Jur. 1064.

12. On the sale of an estate under an order of court, one of the conditions provided, that if the purchaser should require a conveyance of any outstanding legal estate which should not have been referred to or noticed in any of the abstracted deeds or other documents dated within the last thirty years, or any of outstanding term, all the expenses attending the getting in and conveyance of such estate should be borne by the purchaser. The estate was in 1823 conveyed to trustees for a term of 1,000 years, to secure the payment of a sum of money, the payment of which was under orders of court provided for. The purchaser of the estate required an assignment of the term from the representative of the surviving trustee, on the ground that it was not satisfied, but he refused to pay the costs of such assignment:—Held, that the purchaser was entitled to an assignment of the term, the costs of which, not having been provided for by the conditions of sale, must be borne by the vendors. Stronge v. Hawkes, 2 Jur., N. S., 388.

13. A. and B., tenants for life in possession and remainder, with remainder to the first and other sons of B. in tail male; the first son of B., being then an infant, agreed to sell the premises to C. for a certain sum, and C. agreed to buy the same if they could obtain an Act of Parliament so to enable them, C. agreeing also to bear all the expenses incident to and consequent on his proposal to purchase, and the negotiations consequent thereon and the obtaining the Act of Parliament, etc., "and all other expenses whatsoever of A. and B., in consequence of the sale, or arising out of or in anywise relating thereto." The Act of Parliament was obtained, vesting the estate in trustees for sale, upon trust to convey according to the terms of the agreement, reciting the words thereof; and directing that the purchase-money should, in the first instance, be invested in the purchase of stock until it could be invested in the purchase of real estate, to be held upon the original trusts:—Held, that the expenses of reinvesting the purchase-money in real estates were not such expenses as C. was, under the agreement, bound to pay, as being incidental, etc., to the sale:—Held, also, that though the estate was vested in trustees for sale, yet that A. and B. were necessary parties to the conveyance, and that they should enter into covenants for title, notwithstanding the exceptions from the saving clause of the Act of Parliament, which it was held did not extend to the acts of the testator, but only to the acts of his devisees and heir-at-law, etc. Exp. Witts, 6 Jur. 936.

14. A. being tenant for life of an estate, with remainder to his sons successively in tail male, entered into an agreement with B., by which it was stipulated that A. should procure an Act of Parliament to enable him to sell the estate to B.; and B. should bear all the expenses incident to and consequent upon his proposal to purchase the estate, together with the expense of obtaining the Act, of preparing the abstract, and showing a title to the estate, and of and about making and completing the sale and conveyance to him, together with the expense of the agreement, and all other expenses whatsoever of A., in consequence of the sale, or arising out of or in anywise relating thereto, or to the proposal of B. A. accordingly obtained an Act for the sale of the estate to B., which directed the purchase money to be invested in lands to be settled to the same uses as the estate stood limited to:—Held, that B. was not bound to pay the expenses of the investment. Re London Bridge Acts, 13 Sim. 180.

1. Upon a sale by auction of real estate by an official manager of a company in the process of being wound up, it was provided by one of the conditions of sale, that the vendor should deliver to the purchaser an abstract of the documents affecting the respective shares into which the company was divided, but that he should nevertheless accept a conveyance of the entire property from the official manager, under the powers contained in the Winding-up Acts, without requiring the concurrence of any of the shareholders, or of any other person, for any purpose whatsoever: also, that if the purchaser should consider the legal state to be outstanding, and should require a conveyance thereof, he should bear the expense of obtaining such conveyance, and all other expenses incidental thereto:—Held, that, under the latter part of the condition, it was incumbent upon the purchaser, and not the official manager, to find out and specify the person in whom the legal estate was outstanding, and that then the official manager was, at the expense of the purchaser, to get such conveyance or conveyances of the legal estate as the purchaser should require, and the official manager could obtain. Sheerness Wall or Waterworks Co. (Official Manager) v. Polson, 29 Beav. 70; 7 Jur., N. S., 12; 30 L. J., Ch., 326; 4 L. T., N. S., 568; 9 W. R. 113; 3 De G. F. & J. 36.

III. STAMPS.

2. Contract to sell a freehold ground-rent of 20*l.*, arising from a wharf, "subject to an agreement for a lease for a term" of years. The agreement mentioned was unstamped. On a bill for specific performance by the purchaser:—Held, that the agreement was part of the subject of the contract, and that the vendor was bound to perfect it by having it properly stamped. Smith v. Wyley, 16 Jur. 1136.

3. A ten shilling deed stamp on a mortgage deed is insufficient, therefore a purchaser is entitled on a contract for sale with a mortgagor to require the mortgage deed, when so stamped, to be stamped before completion to the full ad valorem duty at the vendor's expense, notwithstanding the mortgagee may have consented to join in the conveyance. Whiting to Loomes, 17 L. R., Ch. D., 10; 50

L. J., Ch., 463; 44 L. T. 721; 29 W. R. 433; 14 L. R., Ch. D., 822; 49 L. J., Ch., 617; 43 L. T. 83; 28 W. R. 822.

4. A freehold land society in 1871 purchased some land in Epping Forest, which was conveyed to them in fee. They conveyed it in allotments to various members of the society, who respectively paid for their allotments. Afterwards the Epping Forest Act 1878 was passed, and it provided that the land (together with other lands) should be thrown open to the public, certain compensation, the amount of which was to be ascertained by an arbitrator, being paid by the conservators appointed by the Act to the owner of the soil of any land thrown open. With the Act were incorporated the provisions of the Lands Clauses Act 1845, with respect to the purchase-money or compensation coming to parties having limited interests, or prevented from treating, or not making title, and with respect to the conveyances of lands. After the passing of the Act the land society repurchased the allotments from the allottees, repaying them their purchase-moneys. The allottees reconveyed the plots to the trustees of the society, the reconveyances being indorsed on the original conveyances, but the reconveyances were not stamped within the proper time after execution. This arbitrator determined the amount of compensation to be paid by the conservators to the society, and the society furnished an abstract of title to the conservators. The conservators made no objection to the title, except that the reconveyances ought to be stamped, and they required the society to have them stamped at their own expense. The society declined to do this, but offered that the allottees should join with the trustees of the society in a conveyance to the conservators. The conservators would not accept this offer, but paid the compensation money into court, and, under s. 75 of the Lands Clauses Act, executed a deed-poll vesting the land in themselves in fee. The society petitioned for payment of the money to them:—Held, that it was not necessary that the reconveyances should be stamped; that the conservators ought to have been satisfied with the conveyance offered them by the society; and that the conservators must pay the costs of the petition. Whiting to Loomes (14 L. R., Ch. D., 822; 17 L. R., Ch. D., 10) distinguished. Exp. Birkbeck Freehold Land Society, 24 L. R., Ch. D., 119; 52 L. J., Ch., 777; 49 L. T. 265; 31 W. R. 716.

VI. 1 ante.

I. SALE OF ENFRANCHISED COPYHOLDS.

5. Copyholder in fee takes an enfranchisement of his copyhold in the name of a trustee, and devises the lands to his younger son, who sells to A.; the heir-at-law of the copyhold recovers in ejectment, and A. brings his bill, and is decreed to hold and enjoy against the heir. Dancer v. Evelt, 1 Vern. 392. S. P. Parker v. Turner, ib.

1. It is no sufficient objection to the title of a vendor of an enfranchised copyhold, that a mortgagee to whom a surrender had been made had not been admitted before the enfranchisement, the deed of enfranchisement having conveyed to the vendor all the rights of the lord. Minton v. Kirwood, 1 L. R., Eq., 449; 12 Jur., N. S., 86; 35 L. J., Ch., 393; 14 W. R. 274; 13 L. T., N. S., 751. Affirmed 12 Jur., N. S., 970; 15 W. R. 116.

A copyholder surrendered to certain uses, and died before any admittance had been made in pursuance of the surrender. Subsequently the copyholds were enfranchised to a person not entitled to be admitted under that surrender, who afterwards entered into a contract for sale of the property. The purchaser refused to complete, on the ground that the legal estate had remained in the deceased surrenderor, and was outstanding in the hands of her customary heir:—Held, that the outstanding interest was not correctly described as the "legal estate," and that it was a mere shadowy right; that the objection was not sufficient to show the property to be unmarketable; and that, consequently, specific performance must be decreed. Id.

2. The vendor of a copyhold estate enfranchised under the 15 & 16 Vict., c. 51, is not bound to show the lord's title. Kerr v. Parnon, 25 Beav. 394; 4 Jur., N. S., 425; 27 L. J., Ch., 594; 6 W. R. 447; 1 L. T., N. S., 224.

After the passing of the 4 & 5 Vict., c. 35, and the 15 & 16 Vict., c. 51, but before 21 & 22 Vict., c. 94, an agreement was entered into for the sale of a copyhold estate, together with the timber, and all appurtenances to the same hereditaments belonging, as soon as the same should become freehold, under an agreement of the vendor to use his best endeavours to enfranchise; an enfranchisement was made under the second Act, reserving the minerals to the lord:—Held, that the contract had reference to the provisions in those Acts relative to minerals, and that the purchaser must complete, notwithstanding this reservation. Id.

Held, also, upon an enfranchisement under the 15 & 16 Vict., c. 51, and under an agreement to purchase a freehold, that it was not incumbent upon the vendor to produce the title of the lord of the manor. Id.

3. Land was described in a contract for sale as freehold, but it was shown by the abstract that it was formerly copyhold, and had been enfranchised. A decree was afterwards made at the suit of the vendor for specific performance, and a general inquiry directed as to title; in the course of which the purchaser for the first time objected that the minerals were reserved to the lord of the manor under the enfranchisement:—Held, that the objection was fatal to the title; but as the purchaser had taken the objection so late, he was not allowed his costs. Upperton v. Nicholson, 6 L. R., Ch., 436; 40 L. J., Ch., 401; 25 L. T., N. S., 4; 19 W. R. 733.

II. OBJECTIONS TO TITLE.

4. A woman seised of a copyhold executed a surrender jointly with her husband to such uses as her husband should appoint, and in default of appointment to him in fee, but no admittance was entered under the surrender. The husband then executed a conveyance of the copyholds to a purchaser, but still no admittance was entered. The plaintiff, who claimed under the purchaser, filed a bill to restrain an action of ejectment by the copyhold heir of the wife, and to compel a surrender to complete his title:—Held, that the husband of the copyholder had no power to make perfect that title which he, as a volunteer and without consideration, took imperfectly, and no person claiming under him could ask that his defective title should be made complete; and the bill was dismissed with costs. Somerby v. Gutteridge, 18 L. J., N. S., Ch., 9.

5. An inclosure Act, reciting that S. was entitled as lord of a manor to the soil and royalties, and as lay rector to all tithes within the manor, and that he claimed right of common on the waste in respect of the soil and royalties, directed certain allotments to be made to him in compensation for his right to the soil of the waste and to the tithes, and that the residue of the waste should be divided among S. and the other persons having right of common upon such waste, in proportion to their respective claims; and it reserved to the lord the seignory and royalties. The Act made no mention of any right of warren existing in the lord; but there was some evidence that S. had used part of the waste as a rabbit warren. The award gave an allotment to S. for his right of warren, and also three allotments, which purported to be made for his right to the soil, his right to the tithes, and his right of common, and other rights and interests in the waste respectively; which allotments were declared to be a full compensation for all his right and interest in the lands directed to be inclosed:—Held, that S.'s title of the warren allotment was not such as a purchaser could be compelled to take. Casamajor v. Strobe, 2 Myl. & K. 706; Coop. temp. Brough. 248. Reversing 5 Sim. 87.

6. Objection by purchaser of allotments under an Inclosure Act, that the award of the commissioners was not made, overruled, the Act containing a clause enabling a sale, and declaring the conveyance valid before the award, not supposing the possibility of the commissioners barring the allotments, the purchaser having full notice of all the circumstances. Kingsley v. Young, 17 Ves. 468. Affirmed 18 Ves. 207.

7. A testator devised copyholds to such uses as A. and B., or the survivors of them, his executors or administrators, should appoint, and subject thereto to the use of A. and B., their heirs and assigns for ever, upon certain trusts; and he directed his said trustees to sell the copyholds as soon as conveniently might be:—Held, that the trustees could make a good title to a purchaser without being admitted. Glass v. Richardson, 2 De G. M. & G. 658; 17 Jur. 926; 22 L. J., Ch., 105.

Devise of a copyhold to such uses as A. and B., or the survivor of them, or the executors or administrators of the survivor or the trustees or trustee of the will for the time being, should by deed appoint, and subject thereto, to the use of A. and B., their heirs and assigns for ever; with a direction to sell and stand possessed of the proceeds upon certain trusts. After the death of the testator, A. and B. sold the copyhold estate in pursuance of the trusts. The lord of the manor required that A. and B., the devisees, should be admitted before the admission of the purchaser. On the bill by A. and B., the vendors, against the purchaser, to compel a specific performance of the contract, the Court held, that the copyhold tenant might direct the lord to admit into the tenancy either such person as A. should nominate, or A. himself; that it was the exercise of the right of the tenant to nominate alternatively in favour of A., or the nominee of A., and not a double exercise of his right to nominate, first, in favour of A., and then in favour of the nominee of A.; and that the purchaser was bound specifically to perform the contract. 8 C. 9 Hare 698.

1. Where copyhold is sold under commission, good title is made by bargain and sale from commissioners to the purchaser direct. Exp. Holland, 4 Madd. 483.

2. Semble, that in copyhold land, although the lord's title may be barred by adverse possession for twenty years, yet the commoner's title could not. And quare, what is a proper case for compensation and what for avoiding a contract. Perkins v. Ede, 1 W. R. 10.

3. A copyholder contracted with a railway company for the sale of his tenement, which was subject to a heriot and to quit-rents and fines. The heriot was supplied by severance of the copyhold:—Held, on the construction of the contract, that the vendor was not entitled to have the remaining part of his copyhold discharged from the heriot; and that he could not refuse to execute the conveyance on the ground that the company had not apportioned the rents and fines, but must proceed himself under the Railway Consolidation Act. Parker v. South-Eastern Railway Co., 1 W. R. 316.

4. The generality and vagueness of descriptions of copyhold property on the court rolls are so well known, that a vendor is not bound to show how the description on the court roll is to be applied to the present state of the property, if he prove that the property has actually been enjoyed, and passed under that description, for upwards of sixty years. Long v. Collier, 4 Russ. 267.

See also Preceding Subdivision.

III. DEEDS AND VERIFICATION OF TITLE.

5. A lord of a manor selling freehold lands of the manor subject to leases for lives granted by copy of court roll must covenant to produce the court rolls up to the date of the conveyance. Poulett (Earl) v. Hood, 5 L. R., Eq., 115; 37 L. J., Ch., 224; 16 W. R. 323; 17 L. T., N. S., 486.

6. An equitable mortgage may be created of copyholds by the mere deposit of the copy of court roll. It is therefore not sufficient for the protection of a purchaser or mortgagee of copyholds that he should search the court rolls for incumbrances; he ought to require the vendor or mortgagor to produce an abstract of his title and the copy of his admission to the copyhold premises; and if the latter document is not forthcoming, its non-production must be reasonably accounted for. Whitbread v. Jordan, 1 Y. & Coll. 303; 4 L. J., N. S., Exch. Eq., 38.

7. The presumption is, that a surrender will bar an estate tail in copyholds, until a contrary custom is shown. Gould v. White, 1 Kay 683.

Copyholds having been sold, subject to a condition that all statements and recitals in any of the title deeds or muniments of title should be considered as satisfactory evidence of the facts stated or recited; and in case any purchaser should not within fourteen days from the delivery of the abstract declare his dissatisfaction with the title, and point out some valid objection thereto, the same should be considered as accepted. The purchaser objected, that the first surrender on the abstract was by A., and J., his wife, which said J., it was therein stated, "had then lately been admitted there tenant in tail, according to the custom of that manor," and that there was nothing to show how the estate tail had been barred. Afterwards the purchaser required evidence that the custom of the manor warranted estates tail. The first surrender was dated in 1801, and was conditional only. In 1815 the same parties made an absolute surrender in fee, under which the possession had been enjoyed ever since:—Held, that the recital was conclusive evidence, under the conditions of sale, of the fact that J. had been admitted tenant in tail, but not that this was according to the custom of the manor, for this was not a single fact, but a deduction from a series of facts. But held, that the recital, coupled with the conditional surrender of 1801, the absolute surrender of 1815, and the subsequent possession, consistently with that title, was sufficient evidence that the custom of the manor did warrant estates tail. Id.

8. The lord of a manor contracted to sell part of the waste, and furnished a statutory declaration that to the best of his information and belief no copyholder or free tenant had exercised any right of common for forty years and upwards, and that he did not know or believe that any copyholder or free tenant existed, and that no quit-rents had been paid or services rendered or court baron held for forty, or, as the declarant believed, for sixty years and upwards. The means of knowledge of the declarant were not questioned; and he offered to add to his statutory declaration a statement negating the existence of and commonable rights over the waste:—Held, that the title could be forced on the purchaser. Re Bridges and McRae's contract, 30 W. R. 539.

IV. COVENANTS FOR TITLE.

9. A sold copyholds in fee simple to B., and covenanted to surrender, which he did the next day, and entered into the usual covenants for title. Shortly afterwards, the copyholds were again sold:—Held, that the covenants for title either ran with the land for the benefit of the second purchaser, or that he was entitled to sue on them in the name of the first. Riddell v. Riddell, 7 Sim. 529; 5 L. J., N. S., Ch., 132.

Quere, whether covenants for the title of copyholds run with the land. Ib.

V. SURRENDER.

1. Upon a sale in court of copyhold, vendor coming for aid is compelled to surrender in person if it can be done conveniently. Noel v. Weston, 6 Madd. 50.

2. Purchaser of copyhold not obliged to accept of surrender by letter of attorney. A custom that it must be in person is not contrary to law. Mitchel v. Neal, 2 Ves. 679.

3. Assignees in bankruptcy must surrender copyhold to purchaser. Drury v. Man, 1 Atk. 95.

4. Copyholder contracts, for valuable consideration, to sell to his son, and dies before actual surrender; the son held entitled to performance, and to compel the widow to surrender free bench. Hinton v. Hinton, 2 Ves. 631; Ambl. 277.

5. A testator devised his copyhold estate to his wife for life, with remainder to his two sons as tenants in common in fee; the eldest son and customary heir was, by an arrangement between himself, his mother, and brother, admitted to the copyhold in fee, and executed by deed a declaration of trust to the uses of his father's will. The brothers became bankrupts, and their assignees sold their reversion to the plaintiff:—Held, that the plaintiff, though, as against the assignees, a purchaser of a legal reversion, was not, as against the tenant for life, entitled to compel such a surrender as would give him the legal reversion. White v. Stook, 6 Madd. 327.

6. It is no sufficient objection to the title of a vendor of an enfranchised copyhold, that a mortgagee to whom a surrender had been made had not been admitted before the enfranchisement, the deed of enfranchisement having conveyed to the vendor all the rights of the lord. Minton v. Kirwood, 1 L. R., Eq., 449; 12 Jur., N. S., 86; 35 L. J., Ch., 393; 14 W. R. 274; 13 L. T., N. S., 751. Affirmed 12 Jur., N. S., 970; 15 W. R. 116.

Semble, the non-admittance of a surrenderee leaves in the surrenderor an interest which exists only for the benefit of the lord, and does not leave any beneficial interest in the surrenderor or his heir. Ib.

7. Injunction to restrain the vendor of copyhold premises, after delivery of possession and receipt of part of the purchase-money, from surrendering them to persons other than the purchasers. Spiller v. Spiller, 3 Swan. 556.

VI. EXPENSES, FINES, AND HERIOTS.

8. A copyholder contracted with a railway company for the sale of his tenement, which was subject to a heriot and to quit-rent and fines. The heriot was supplied by severance of the copyhold:—Held, on the construction of the contract, that the vendor was not entitled to have the remaining part of his copyhold discharged from the heriot; and that he could not refuse to execute the conveyance on the ground that the company had not apportioned the rents and fines, but must proceed himself under the Railway Consolidation Act. Parker v. South-Eastern Railway Co., 1 W. R. 316.

9. Copyholds ordered to be sold by the Court were put up for sale in lots, and purchased by different purchasers. After some delay in complying with the conditions of sale, other purchasers were, by order, substituted, and ultimately all the lots were purchased by the same parties. After the sale, and before the completion of the conveyance by surrender, the tenant on the court rolls, who was the surviving trustee, died, and thereupon it became necessary for his heir to be admitted, and a fine and fees paid:—Held, that as there had been no improper delay or neglect on the part of either the trustee or purchasers, the fine and fees must be paid out of the fund belonging to the cestuis que trustent. Paramore v. Grenslade, 17 Jur. 1064; 1 Sm. & Giff. 541; 23 L. J., Ch., 34.

A condition of sale, which stated that "the purchasers should have proper surrenders, conveyances, and assignments of the premises at their own expense, did not bind them to bear the expense of procuring the concurrence of all proper parties. Where, therefore, it was necessary for the heir of a trustee to be admitted on the court rolls, the fine and fees on that admission were ordered to be paid by the vendors. Ib.

10. The purchaser of a copyhold estate (devised, subject to payment of debts, in trust for sale, and sold during the infancy of the heir, under the usual decree), is not entitled to have a portion of the purchase-money retained in court, as a provision for defraying the expense of the fine, which would become payable on the death of the heir before a conveyance. Morris v. Clarkson, 3 Swan. 558.

11. A vendor of a manor is entitled to the fines paid for the admission of any new tenants in the room of the tenants described in the particulars of sale who may happen to die after the contract, but before the day fixed for the completion of the purchase, although the fines are not in fact paid till after that day. Cuddon v. Tite, 1 Giff. 395.

12. A manor was sold under the decree of the Court as part of the real estate of the testator, and an order was made on the 13th March that the purchaser should, on or before the 17th May, pay his purchase-money into court, and be let into possession of the profits from Lady-day; several deaths and admissions took place prior to Lady-day, but the fines due thereon had not been paid or assessed until after that time, no court having been holden; these fines belong to the vendors, and not to the purchaser. Garrick v. Camden (Earl), 2 Cox 221.

13. Bill to have execution of articles for the sale of some copyhold lands to plaintiff, on payment of 538*l.* to defendant B., a guinea being paid in part, and to compel the lord of the manor to admit plaintiff in fee, according to the agreement, which was decreed; but there being no tender of a surrender to the lord, and consequently no refusal, he was to have his costs. Sayle v. Reeves, Gilb. Eq. Rep. 188.

1. Parol agreement for the sale of copyhold lands, carried into execution. Borrett v. Gomeserra, Bunb. 94.

2. A contract for the purchase of copyhold land at a certain price, and the timber upon it at a specified valuation, enforced as one entire contract, although the vendor could not show any custom in the manor, or license from the lord, enabling the tenants of the manor, or himself, or his assigns, to fell the timber. Crosse v. Keene, 9 Hare 469; 16 Jur. 142; 21 L. J., Ch., 892.

3. Tenant for life of a copyhold sold his estate, and surrendered it that the lord might admit A., the purchaser; the copyholder in reversion entered and recovered at law; A. was relieved in equity. Anon., 2 Freem. 118.

4. Lord of manor (his tenants refusing to renew) makes a lease of the premises to his daughter for ninety-nine years, and afterwards sells the manor to J. S., who has notice of the lease, but has security that the daughter, when at age, should surrender; daughter decreed to have the benefit of the lease. Jennings v. Sellock, 1 Vern. 467.

5. A. agrees with B., lord of the manor, to purchase a copyhold for two lives, such as A. shall name. A. pays 200*l.*, part of the purchase-money, and was to pay the rest in three months; a court is held; three months pass; B. died suddenly, and the manor came to one who was not bound by the contract. The executor of B. to refund 200*l.* Ambry v. Keen, 1 Vern. 472.

6. A. purchases copyhold estate, and takes the surrender to himself and his wife and daughter, and their heirs: the husband and wife (as one person) take a moiety by entireties, and the daughter the other moiety: the husband mortgages it and dies: void for the whole, and no relief in equity. *Back v. 7. On a suit for specific performance by vendor against purchaser of leasehold property under an agreement, general as to title, the Master cannot report a good title in vendor, unless he sets forth a good title in his lessor; bill therefore dismissed, but without costs. Purvis v. Rayer, 9 Price 488.

8. If the vendor of a leasehold interest means to sell, without producing his lessor's title, he ought to declare it. Ogilvie v. Foljambe, 3 Meriv. 53.

9. On a bill by vendor for specific performance of an agreement to take a lease for twenty-one years, at rack-rent, the Master having reported in favour of the title shown by the abstract, and an exception being taken to the report, the question was, whether, where the agreement is silent, the vendor of a leasehold interest is not bound to produce the title of his lessor; and the exception was allowed. Fildes v. Hooker, 2 Meriv. 424.

Objection to title between vendor and purchaser on the ground of non-production of lessor's title, overruled in the case of a bishop's lease. S. C. 2 Meriv. 430.

10. Exceptions to Master's report in favour of title of vendor of bishop's lease, on ground of non-production of bishop's title, overruled. Fane v. Spencer, 2 Madd. 438.

11. A contract for sale of the lessee's interest in a lease does not exonerate the vendor from the necessity of proving the lessor's title to grant the lease. Fennelly v. Anderson, 1 Ir. Ch. R. 706.

12. An agreement to sell the interest of A. B. in the lands of Whiteacre does not absolve A. B., the vendor, from the necessity of proving his lessor's title. Nor is there any waiver of that necessity by the mere fact of the vendee having taken possession of the lands before production of the lessor's title. Wright v. Griffith, 1 Ir. Ch. R. 695.

Where an agreement for sale of a leasehold is silent as to the production of the lessor's title, parol testimony is admissible in proof of facts and circumstances constituting a waiver by the vendee of production of the lessor's title. Id.

Semble, that if such a waiver be proved, the Court will declare it to be established, although the bill contains no prayer to that effect. Id.

lessee can compel such production, quære. The lessee's bill for a specific performance dismissed; his interest described as forty years, the residue of a term free from incumbrances, being a few years only of an old term, and a reversionary term from another lessor, and old incumbrances not shown to be discharged. White v. Foljambe, 11 Ves. 337.

1. Contract for sale of an existing and a reversionary lease not specifically performed without a production of the titles of the lessors. The objection not waived by a premature conditional approbation of the title, by the purchaser's counsel; but the expense incurred in making out the title before this objection was taken, repaid. Deverell v. Bolton (Lord), 18 Ves. 505.

Approbation of counsel not a waiver of all reasonable objections to the title. Id. 514.

2. A party who had contracted for the purchase of the benefit of an agreement for a lease, and who before the lease was granted entered into possession and paid part of the purchase-money, the remainder being left a charge on the property, and who after the lease had been granted assigned his interest in it as a security for money lent; on a bill being filed against him by the lessee for specific performance and payment of the residue of the purchase-money, or otherwise that the property might be sold:—Held, to have waived all objections on the score of title. Haydon v. Bell, 1 Beav. 337; 2 Jur. 1008.

3. In a suit for specific performance of an agreement to accept a lease, the Court, considering the defendant (the intended lessee), by his conduct, to have waived all objections to the vendor's title, decreed a specific performance of the agreement, and referred it to the Master to settle the lease. In settling the lease, it became necessary, for identifying the premises, to produce before the Master the original lease under which the plaintiff was entitled to the property, and from which lease it appeared that the property in question was held, with other property, at one entire rent, and under some special covenants, no provision with respect to which was made in the agreement between the plaintiff and the defendant. On hearing, for further directions, these facts being brought before the Court in the shape of exceptions to the report, it was held, that though the defendant had, by his conduct, waived his right to the production of the lessor's title, yet, as in the course of the proceeding it had become necessary to produce that title, and that production showed that a sufficient lease could not be made to the defendant according to the agreement, the Court would not enforce a specific performance, and the bill was dismissed, but without costs. The form of the decree in this case was followed in Simpson v. Sadd (4 De G. M. & G. 665), Warren v. Richardson, Younger 1.

4. It is not so universally the custom to call for the lessor's title as for that of the vendor of a fee simple, and therefore smaller circumstances will satisfy the Court that the right to call for the lessor's title was waived. Simpson v. Sadd, 3 W. R. 118; 1 Jur., N. S., 457; 3 Eq. Rep. 263; 4 De G. M. & G. 665; 24 L. J., Ch., 562. Affirming 2 Eq. Rep. 798; 2 W. R. 578.

An agreement for the sale of leaseholds fixed the date for purchaser entering into possession, but contained no stipulation as to title. Purchaser got possession before the day fixed, and exercised acts of ownership; after which (four months from entry) he claimed to investigate the title, having previously asked vendor to delay in preparing the underlease or assignment for the purpose of including an intended partner:—Held, that vendor was entitled to specific performance of agreement, without showing the lessor's title. Semble, where the time fixed for taking possession is antecedent to that for delivering abstract of title, the ordinary rule, that taking possession without investigating the title is a waiver of the right to do so, does not apply, for then the terms of the contract would be inconsistent. S. C. 2 W. R. 578.

5. Memorandum of agreement signed by both parties for sale and purchase of fixtures, etc., in a leasehold house, and for purchaser to take an assignment of the vendor's interest in the premises:—Held, to be a contract on the part of the purchaser to take an assignment of the lease of the premises. The purchaser requested the vendor to prepare the assignment by indorsement totidem verbis with that to himself (the vendor):—Held, that the purchaser could not afterwards require the production of the original lessor's title. Smith v. Capron, 19 L. J., N. S., Ch., 322; 7 Hare 185; 14 Jur. 686.

6. An agreement by the vendors, to let to the vendors for the term of sixty-one years the premises then occupied by the vendors as held under A. B., does not absolve the vendors from the duty of proving the title of their lessor, A. B. And on its appearing that A. B. was himself only a lessee for three lives with a covenant for perpetual renewal:—Held, that the fact of other premises (besides those proposed to be let by the vendors) being comprised in the lease to A. B. was a fatal objection to the title. Leatham v. Allen, 1 Ir. Ch. R. 683.

Where there is an agreement by a vendor, having a derivative estate in lands, to let them for a term of years, and such an agreement, if carried into execution, would operate, not as a lease, but as an assignment of the vendor's estate, quære, whether specific performance of the agreement will be decreed against the vendee. Id.

7. Semble, that where the purchaser, after transmission to him of the original lease, prepares a draft assignment, and makes various objections as to repairs and other matters, but does not require production of the landlord's title, he will be considered to have waived its production. Semble, that a decree for specific performance should not declare that the agreement ought to be performed, if a good title can be made. Clive v. Beaumont, 1 De G. & Sm. 397.

8. Upon the sale of a leasehold for lives, expressed to have been granted by a corporation in consideration of the surrender of a prior lease, the title to the surrendered lease must be shown. Hodgkinson v. Cooper, 9 Beav. 304; 15 L. J., N. S., Ch., 160; 10 Jur. 39.

9. If a lessee for a term of years underlet for a less term, and the under-lessee sell by auction the lesser term, describing it as a lease, and one of the conditions of sale is that the lessor's title shall not be inquired into, the vendor's title being good, quære, whether the purchaser can refuse to complete, because there is a term imposed between the vendor's interest and the freehold. Darlington v. Hamilton, 1 Kay 550; 23 L. J., Ch., 1000; 2 Eq. Rep. 906.

But in such a case, where the property was included in the original lease, together with other hereditaments, subject to general covenants, and a power of re-entry for breach of any of them, and the purchaser had discovered these facts aliunde:—Held, that he was entitled to refuse to perform his contract, notwithstanding that the original lease contained provisions for the apportionment of the rent, and of the power of re-entry. Ib.

It is a formidable objection to the title of a vendor of leasehold property, that he has underlet it by a lease which does not contain similar covenants to those by which he is bound to his own lessor; for example, covenants to build, or to paint at certain periods; for the vendor may thus have put it out of his power, during the under-lease, to perform covenants for the breach of which the original lessor can re-enter. Ib.

1. When the plaintiff and defendant claim leaseholds under the same instrument, and the defendant purchases the plaintiff's share, he cannot object that the lessor's title is not shown. Phipps v. Child, 3 Drew. 709.

A defendant admitting by his answer that at the date of the contract the plaintiff was entitled, cannot at the hearing object that no abstract was delivered, and no title shown. Ib.

2. Although under ordinary circumstances, upon the sale of leaseholds, the production of the last receipt for ground rent, without proof of the title of the person giving the receipt, is sufficient, yet where such title is bonâ fide in question, the Court will not compel specific performance without proof of the reversioner's title. The usual inquiry in chambers as to title having been waived by consent, the cause was ordered to stand over to enable the vendors to establish the title of the reversioner, or to obtain the consent to the sale of the various claimants. Pegler v. White, 10 Jur., N. S., 330; 33 L. J., Ch., 569; 12 W. R. 455; 10 L. T., N. S., 84.

2. Special Conditions as to Title.

3. The subject of sale was described in the conditions "as a leasehold ground-rent of 23l.," reserved by a mesne lease in 1812, for ninety-eight years wanting seven days, and assigned apart from the reversion by an indenture of 1817, and one of the conditions was, that no title prior to the assignment, or the title of any ground or mesne landlord, was to be produced. From a recital in the deed of 1817, it appeared that the land out of which the rent issued had been demised, with other lands, to the original lessee at a rent of 10l., and subject to certain covenants and conditions:—Held, that the purchaser might take an objection on this ground, the conditions of sale not excluding such an objection with sufficient clearness. Taylor v. Martindale, 1 Y. & Coll. C. C. 658.

4. The Court will not make it a condition of sale of an interest under a lease that a purchaser shall not be at liberty to object to the title of the lessor to make the lease. But it will direct that a purchaser shall not require the plaintiff to show that the lessor had such power, leaving the purchaser at liberty to object aliunde. Willes v. Latham, Sen. & Sc. 441.

5. A condition of sale, that the purchaser shall not be at liberty to investigate the right of the lessor in a lease for lives renewable for ever, which was decreed to be sold, to grant the same, will not be granted. But the Court will refer it to the remembrancer to settle a condition of sale, that the purchaser shall not require the production of the title of the lessor by the vendors. Lahey v. Bell, 6 Ir. Eq. R. 122.

A vendor will only be relieved from the liability of verifying the abstract of title by proper evidence, by stipulations expressed in plain, clear, and unambiguous language. Ib.

6. Under a contract to make out a good title to a lease for lives renewable for ever, a vendor must show who are the lives in existence at the time of the contract. Anderson v. Higgins, 1 J. & L. 718.

7. A condition, on the sale of leasehold property, that the title of the lessor would not be shown, and should not be inquired into:—Held, to be binding, and the purchaser compelled to perform his contract, although in the investigation before the Master a serious defect in the lessor's title was discovered. Hume v. Bentley, 16 Jur. 1109; 21 L. J., Ch., 760.

Upon a sale by auction of leasehold premises, one of the conditions was as follows, "The lessors' title will not be shown, and shall not be inquired into." In a suit to enforce specific performance by the vendor against the purchaser, the latter objected, that the lessors' title appeared by Acts of Parliament produced by the purchaser, which showed that the lessors had no power to lease the premises:—Held, that the condition provided that the title should not be shown, and also precluded inquiry for every purpose, and specific performance was decreed. In a suit by the owner of leasehold premises against a purchaser to enforce the specific performance of a contract to purchase, it appeared that the original lessee had, in 1835, covenanted with the lessors, in or before 1836, to build two houses on the property, worth 400l., to the satisfaction of the lessors' surveyor. The lessee, instead of so doing, built, with the sanction of the lessors' surveyor, five houses, worth, in the aggregate, more than 400l., but no two being worth that sum. The lessors thenoforth received the rents yearly accruing due on the premises:—Held, though the covenant had not been performed modo et formâ, yet that it had been substantially performed, and the Court decreed specific performance. S. C. 5 De G. & Sm. 520.

8. On the sale of leasehold premises, one of the conditions stated that the premises "were mortgaged by the late Mr. H. to Messrs. H. and M., the trustees of his wife's marriage settlement, to secure part of the trust funds; and the lease of the 26th December 1816 was granted to them, subject to such redemption as the said Mr. H. was entitled to under the said mortgage. Upon the death of Mr. H., Mrs. H., his widow, executrix, and universal legatee, became beneficially entitled to both the mortgage-money and the premises; and the vendors, her executors, are also the legal personal representatives of Mr. H. They will, within seven days from the day of sale, deliver to the purchasers an abstract of the said lease and the wills of Mr. and Mrs. H.; but they are not to be called upon to deduce the lessor's or any earlier title, nor shall the subsistence of the lease be questioned, and the purchaser shall be satisfied with an assignment from them of the beneficial interest".—Held, that the purchaser was, under this condition, entitled to an assignment of the legal estate which was outstanding in H. and M., and not merely to the assignment of such beneficial interest as the vendors had vested in them. Smith v. Ellis, 14 Jur. 682.

1. Two houses, held under one lease, were sold separately to A. and B. The lease was produced, and inspected at the sale by the purchasers' solicitors. The conditions of sale provided for the apportionment of the rent between the two purchasers, but did not notice covenants to insure, etc., and a proviso for re-entry on non-performance contained in the lease.—Held, that though A. might be evicted by the default of B., still he was, under the circumstances, bound to complete. Paterson v. Long, 6 Beav. 590; 13 L. J., N. S., Ch., 1; 7 Jur. 1049.

2. A vendor stipulated that he would show title under an agreement for a lease. There was no agreement signed by the lessor and lessee, but a draft or paper, signed only by the lessee, and which document came out of the lessee's possession, was produced. He (the lessee and vendor) alleged that he had taken possession under this agreement.—Held, that this was not sufficient. The purchaser could not be compelled to take an equitable title under the agreement, coupled with possession, but was entitled to strict evidence that such an agreement had been entered into. Houghton v. Bankart, 5 L. T., N. S., 307.

3. Particulars of a sale by auction described the subject as a plot of ground held for a term of one hundred and eleven years from the 23rd April 1853, subject to the annual rent of 5*l.* One of the conditions of sale was, that the vendor should deliver to the purchaser, or his agent, an abstract of title, and deduce a good title to the premises sold, down from the 23rd April 1853 to the time of the sale; nor should the title of the lessor be questioned, nor the vendor be bound to go behind the same; that compared copies of registry searches against the vendor's lessor should be handed to the purchaser, as also of judgments from June 1845 to June 1853; and also a compared copy of his abstract of title, as also common searches by vendor, from the date of his lease to the time of sale in the registry and judgment offices, and not further or otherwise. The plot of ground was part of two properties, held under two distinct leases, made in 1845 to the vendor's lessor, by which leases rents of 3*l.* and 9*l.* were respectively reserved. The interest sold was under a lease made to the vendor, of portions of both properties, on the 25th July 1853, subject to a rent of 5*l.*:—Held, first, that the title was bad. Geohagan v. Connolly, 8 Ir. Ch. R. 598.

Held, secondly, that the condition of sale was so ambiguous and uncertain as not to preclude the purchaser from objecting to the title. Id.

Held, thirdly, that there had been a suppression of facts in the particulars of sale, which amounted to misrepresentation, and disentitled the vendor to a decree for specific performance. Id.

4. A condition provided that the purchaser shall not be at liberty to require any evidence of the title of lessors in said lease, or any of of them; or object by reason of incumbrances, if any, affecting the title of such lessors; nor require the production of any title deeds connected with the premises prior to, or of previous date to, the lease, but shall admit that the lease has been duly executed and acknowledged by all the parties thereto, and be satisfied with same being handed over to them, and the title deduced therefrom to the owners.—Held, that this condition did not preclude the purchaser rejecting the title on the ground of objections to the lessor's title. Musgrave v. M'Cullagh, 14 Ir. Ch. R. 496.

Lessee for lives renewable for ever granted to L., his heirs and assigns, at a rent. L.'s estate did not answer the description of a lease for ever. Id.

5. Leasehold hereditaments were agreed to be sold, and the vendor stipulated that he would produce a good and marketable title, commencing from the freeholder, but that no title should be called for prior to the lease granted D. S. to the vendor. The lease having been granted pursuant to a prior contract, which contract had been mortgaged, the purchaser refused to complete, and the vendor filed a claim for specific performance.—Held, that the words of the contract were ambiguous, and that the purchaser was entitled to construe them most favourably to himself, and therefore that if the vendor insisted on specific performance the disputed stipulation must be construed as if the words "but no title shall be called for prior to the lease granted by D. S. to the vendor" were omitted. Rhodes v. Ibbetson, 23 L. J., Ch., 459; 4 De G. M. & G. 787; 2 Eq. Rep. 76.

6. Where an under-lessee described his property in the particulars and conditions of sale as held under a lease, and stipulated that the purchaser should not require proof of his, the vendor's, title.—Held, upon a suit for specific performance, that the purchaser having discovered, alivunde, a material objection to the vendor's title (vis., that the estate in question was included with other property in a former lease, under which there was a possibility of the vendor's being ousted at some time or other on account of some breach of covenant in respect of such other property), he could not be compelled to complete his purchase. It has never been decided that, if a person, having a clear title as lessee for eighty years, makes another lease for sixty years, and the under-lessee sells his under-lease by auction, describing it as a lease, and subject to a condition of sale that the vendor's title is not to be inquired into (such title being, in fact, perfectly good, but not a freehold), this alone would be a reason for resisting specific performance. Darlington v. Hamilton, 1 Kay 550; 2 Eq. Rep. 906; 23 L. J., Ch., 1000.

Conditions as to Performance of Covenant to Insure.] 1. Leasehold property was sold, subject to a condition that possession under the lease should be deemed conclusive evidence of the due performance or sufficient waiver of any breach of the covenants in the lease up to the completion of the sale. A covenant to keep the premises insured was broken on two occasions, one before and one subsequently to the sale:—Held, that the condition precluded any objection on the ground of the former breach of covenant, but not of the latter, and that the purchaser was not bound to take the title. Howell v. Kightley, 21 Beav. 381; 2 Jur., N. S., 455; 25 L. J., Ch., 868.

Quare, even as to a breach before the contract, whether the purchaser could have been compelled to complete if the lessor had, on being applied to, threatened eviction. Id.

3. Notice of Title.

2. Purchaser of a lease, though not considered a purchaser for valuable consideration without notice, to the extent of not being bound to know from whom the lessor derived his title, is not to take notice of all the circumstances under which it is derived. Therefore, understood to have notice, that the lessors were trustees for a charity, not that the lease was bad, that depending on circumstances dehors. Att.-Gen. v. Backhouse, 17 Ves. 293.

3. A party claiming title under a lease or any other instrument is presumed to know the title under which he takes and the circumstances connected with it, unless he can show the contrary. Butler v. Portarlington (Earl), 1 Dr. & War. 20; 1 Con. & L. 1; 4 Ir. Eq. R. 1.

4. The rule, that a purchaser is bound to inquire into the title of his vendor, and is affected with notice with that which appears upon the title if he does not so inquire, applies to the case of a lessee who neglects to inquire into his lessor's title. Fielden v. Slater, 17 W. R. 485; 20 L. T., N. S., 112; 7 L. R., Eq., 523; 38 L. J., Ch., 379.

5. The doctrine of purchase for value without notice, does not apply to a purchase of a leasehold interest without notice of the lessor's title, if it turns out that the lessor had no power to grant the lease. Robson v. Flight, 10 Jur., N. S., 1228.

6. Notice of a lease is not notice that the reversion remained vested in the lessor until his death. Prigler v. White, 12 W. R. 455; 10 Jur., N. S., 300; 33 L. J., Ch., 569; 10 L. T., N. S., 84.

4. Objections. In General and Doubtful Title.

7. An under-lessee of premises bequeathed them to P. his lessor (whom he also appointed executor), in trust for L.; P. afterwards executed a deed, purporting to be an assignment of them to L., and by his will bequeathed the premises to his executors on certain trusts; on his death his executors demised the premises to L. for the then residue of the term. On a bill for specific performance:—Held, that L. could make no title, the legal estate being merged in the bequest to P., and the assignment by him, therefore, inoperative; and the demise by the executor being a breach of trust. Law v. Urrwin, 16 Sim. 377; 12 Jur. 1012.

8. An estate, described as a freehold estate for three lives, with covenant for perpetual renewal, was sold under a decree. In the original lease, bearing date the 21st July 1777, there was not any express covenant for perpetual renewal; but the habendum was to the lessee, his heirs and assigns, "for and during the natural lives of J. and C., or the longest liver of them, or whatever life or lives should for ever thereafter be nominated or appointed, added or inserted on the back of said indenture, or a label affixed thereto, yielding and paying unto R. L., the lessor, his heirs and assigns, the yearly rent of" etc. In 1836 the son and devisee of the original lessor executed to the assignee of the original lessee a renewal for three lives, in which the original lease of the 21st July 1777 was recited as containing a covenant for perpetual renewal, and the renewal was expressly made "in pursuance and performance of said covenants;" it did not contain any covenant for renewal, but the habendum was similar to that in the original lease, with the exception that the word "and" was used instead of "or." The Master having reported that the title was not such as the purchaser could be compelled to take, the report was excepted to:—Held, that the report should be confirmed, and the exception to it overruled, with costs. Sheppard v. Doolan, 4 Ir. Eq. R. 654; Fl. & K. 598.

But, on appeal, the Lord Chancellor seemed to be of opinion that the habendum amounted to a covenant for perpetual renewal, and at all events that the purchaser's conduct disentitled him to take advantage of the rule as to doubtful titles. Ultimately, the purchaser accepted the title, being allowed his costs. S. C. 3 Dr. & War. 1; 5 Ir. Eq. R. 6.

9. On a sale, in lots, of premises, the particulars of which state them to be held under one lease, receiving rent, and that the purchaser of one lot is to be exclusively subject to the rent, the other purchasers cannot object to the title, on the ground of a clause of re-entry on non-payment, contained in the lease. Walter v. Maunde, 1 Jac. & Walk. 181.

Landlord contracting to sell part of the demised estate, with an apportionment for a specific amount of part of the rent reserved for the whole estate, can make a good title to it without the consent of the tenant. Id.

10. Leasehold property was underlet by the lessee to A., for twenty-one years from 1861, and was in 1864 again underlet by the lessee to B. for twenty-one years, but A. never attorned to B., and subsequently surrendered his interest to the lessee:—Held, as against a purchaser of the original lease subject only to B.'s interest, that the surrender was valid, and a good title shown. Edwards v. Wickwar, 1 L. R., Eq., 403; 12 Jur., N. S., 158; 35 L. J., Ch., 309; 14 W. R. 863.

1. On an agreement to purchase a leasehold interest, the purchasers, who had previously bought the reversion, subject to the vendor's lease, from the lessor, the freeholder, investigated and accepted the vendor's title, and prepared and engrossed the surrender. They subsequently delayed completion upon the discovery of an ancient lease which they alleged to be still outstanding, and to override the lessor's title. Specific performance decreed, and reference as to title refused. Corbett v. Commissioners of Her Majesty's Works and Public Buildings, 16 W. R. 889; 18 L. T., N. S., 548.

2. S., being in the occupation of a public-house, contracted with W. to sell to him the residue of the lease, of which twelve and a half years at least were unexpired. W., the day after signing the contract, by which he agreed to take possession on the 15th April 1878, paid a sum as a deposit to S.'s agent. The abstract of title showed that S.'s lessors had a right of option to determine the lease at the end of five years, and W. at once rescinded the contract, and required the return of the deposit money. S. refused to repay the money, and W. issued a writ in his action on the 10th April to recover it.—Held, that W.'s objection to the title was valid; that he was not bound to wait till the 15th April before issuing the writ; and that he was entitled to repayment of the deposit money with interest. Weston v. Savage, 10 L. R., Ch. D., 736; 48 L. J., Ch., 229; 27 W. R. 654.

5. Objections for Non-performance of Covenants.

3. On granting a building lease for ninety-two and three-quarter years, the lessee covenanted that he would, within the first five years of the term, build thirty-four additional houses, of the dimensions therein mentioned, and keep the same in repair, and at the end or other sooner determination of the term, deliver up the same, so repaired, to the lessor or his assigns. Some only of the thirty-four houses were built; but the lessor, notwithstanding, received the rent, payable under the lease, for forty-six years afterwards.—Held, on a sale of the property by public auction, by the assignees in bankruptcy of the lessee, that, although there had been a waiver by the lessor of the covenant to build, still the covenant to deliver up the houses, at the end or sooner determination of the term, continued in force, and was a valid objection to the title; and that the purchaser could not be required to accept compensation or indemnity; the circumstance that the purchaser could at any time rid himself of all liability, in respect of the breach of the covenant, by assigning the premises to a pauper, was considered no reason for compelling the purchaser to accept the title. Nouaille v. Flight, 7 Beav. 521; 13 L. J., N. S., Ch., 414; 8 Jur. 838.

4. A lessee of land covenanted to build thereon two houses, with the approbation and under the inspection of the lessor's surveyor, and to expend in such building 400*l.* With the surveyor's approbation he built five houses on the land, no two of which were worth so much as 400*l.*, though all together were worth much more.—Held, that the covenant was substantially performed, and that there was no objection, on the ground of the deviation from its terms, under the circumstances, to the lessor's title. Hume v. Bentley, 16 Jur. 1109; 21 L. J., Ch., 761.

Covenant to Insure.] 5. The vendors of an interest in a leasehold house, subject to a covenant to insure it against fire, contracted for the sale of the house to a purchaser within a given time. The contract was not completed by the specified time. There was no default on the part of the purchaser, but the vendors did not keep up the insurance after the time at which the contract should have been completed.—Held, that the purchaser ought to be discharged from his contract. Palmer v. Goren, 25 L. J., Ch., 841.

6. Leasehold property was sold by auction on the 8th June 1858, with a condition for completion on the 20th June following. The title was accepted by the purchaser on the 16th July, but owing to disputes as to the value of the fixtures, the meeting for completion did not take place till the 20th August. The purchaser then discovered that the vendors had renewed the insurance, which expired on the 24th June, for one month only, so that the property became uninsured on the 24th July, and thereupon became forfeited to the lessors. On the 7th September the purchaser absolutely repudiated the contract. The vendors subsequently renewed the insurance, and obtained a waiver of the forfeiture from the lessors, and the purchaser refusing to complete, they filed a bill for specific performance.—Held, that, although the vendors were not bound to renew the insurance, yet having done so in so unusual a manner, the Court would not decree specific performance, and the bill was dismissed, but without costs. Domson v. Solomon, 1 Dr. & Sm. 1; 29 L. J., Ch., 129.

Held, also, that the insurance ought to have been continued at the expense of the purchaser, and that it was not the duty of the vendors to inform the purchaser of the expiration of the insurance. 8 C. 6 Jur., N. S., 33.

6. Condition as to Receipt of Rent being Evidence of Performance of Covenants.

7. By the conditions of sale relating to the leaseholds, it was stipulated that the production of the last receipt should be conclusive evidence that all the covenants had been performed.—Held, that the production of such a receipt prevented the purchaser from taking the objection that the lease had been forfeited by reason of the dilapidated state of the premises. Bull v. Hutchens, 32 Beav. 615.

8. A leasehold public-house was sold subject to a condition that the production of the last receipt for rent paid should be taken as conclusive evidence of the due performance of the lessee's covenants or the waiver of any breaches up to the time of completion, whether the lessor should be cognizant of such breaches or not. The lease contained a covenant to use the premises for the business of a public-house only, and not to permit any other trade to be carried on on any part of the premises without the lessor's written consent. The particulars on which the contract of purchase was indorsed showed that parts of the premises were underlet to persons who carried on other trades there. From the answers to objections to title, it appeared that the lessors had received rent with knowledge of the underlettings, and the last receipt for rent was produced. Specific performance of the contract having been decreed, and a reference as to title directed by an order which was not appealed from:—Held, that whether the breach of covenant was or was not a continuing breach such as to render the purchaser liable to be ejected after the completion of the purchase, and whether this would or would not have furnished a valid reason for not decreeing specific performance, the vendor had made a good title in accordance with the contract which the purchaser was bound to accept, the decree for specific performance having been made and not appealed from. Lamrie v. Lees, 7 L. R., App. Cas., 19; 51 L. J., Ch., 209; 46 L. T. 210; 80 W. R. 185. Affirming 14 L. R., Ch. D., 249; 49 L. J., Ch., 636; 42 L. T. 485; 28 W. R. 779.

Whether the decision in Walrond v. Hawkins (10 L. R., C. P., 342) is applicable to a case where the covenant is simply not to permit the property to be used in a particular way, quære. Ib.

7. Proof of Performance of Covenants. Open Contract.

1. Upon an open contract for the sale of a lease of a house the vendor, in answer to a requisition by the purchaser as to the performance of repairing covenants in the lease, produced a receipt for rent down to a year previously, but could not produce the last receipt, the lessor having refused to receive his rent, on the ground of alleged breaches of covenant. The lessor had commenced an action of ejectment on the same ground against the vendor, but the action had been stayed on account of the plaintiff having failed to comply with an order for delivery of particulars of claim. The vendor deposed that to the best of his knowledge and belief the whole of the covenants in the lease had been duly performed, and proved the execution of various specific repairs, and the purchaser, though he had had an opportunity given him of inspecting the premises, offered no evidence to show that anything was wanting to complete the performance of the covenants:—Held, that, notwithstanding the failure to produce the receipt for rent, there was such prima facie evidence of the performance of the covenants as to constitute a sufficient answer to the requisition in that behalf. Ringer to Thompson, 51 L. J., Ch., 42; 45 L. T. 580.

8. Notice of Covenants.

2. A person contracting to purchase leasehold property, is held to contract with notice of the clauses of the lease. Walter v. Maunde, 1 Jac. & Walk. 181.

3. A purchaser of a leasehold sold under a decree is bound by notice of all clauses and covenants in the lease, whether unusual or not, without their being specially mentioned in the rental or conditions. Vaughan v. Magill, 12 Ir. Eq. R. 207. Affirming id. 200.

An annuity being mentioned in the rental to be charged on the premises sold, is sufficient notice of the legal estate being outstanding to secure it in the usual way; and the principle equally applies where the interest sold is a renewable leasehold, and the annuity deed contains a toties quoties covenant, though the effect is, that the purchaser cannot acquire the reversion of the tenancies on the lands. Ib.

4. During a treaty for an assignment of a lease, the plaintiff produced the lease to the defendant, and the defendant looked at the lease and the indorsement by which the original lessee had assigned the lease to the plaintiff, and in which it was stated that the assignment was made with the licence of the lessor. The defendant afterwards requested the plaintiff to cause the proposed assignment to be indorsed on the lease totidem verbis with the assignment thereon to himself. The defendant denied he had seen the covenant against assignment without licence; but held to have had notice of it. Smith v. Capron, 7 Hare 189; 19 L. J., N. S., Ch., 322; 14 Jur. 686.

5. Quære, whether the doctrine, that a purchaser of leaseholds, or of freeholds subject to a lease, has notice of the covenants in the lease, can be extended to fix him with notice of collateral facts stated in such covenant. If such facts disclose a defect in the vendor's title, the Court will not compel the purchaser to perform his contract, whether he had notice or not. Darlington v. Hamilton, 1 Kay 550; 23 L. J., Ch., 1000; 2 Eq. Rep. 906.

6. Upon the sale of leasehold property, it is the duty of the purchaser to inquire into the contracts and stipulations of the original lease; therefore, where leasehold property about to be sold was described in the particulars of sale as being held at a ground-rent of 86*l.* per annum, and it appeared from the lease that the ground-rent was 80*l.*, and one-third of the improved yearly rent or value, and there were other stringent covenants in the lease, not noticed in the particulars, such as that no fine should be taken for an under-lease or assignment, except with the consent of the reversioner, etc.:—Held, nevertheless, that the purchaser must be held to his contract. Pope v. Garland, 4 Y. & Coll. 394; 10 L. J., N. S., Exch. Eq., 13.

7. The purchaser of property has notice of the interests of a tenant in possession, and the purchaser of leaseholds has notice of what it is he purports to buy, and that he must be bound by all the covenants in the lease; but one who contracts for a lease from a party, with knowledge that he holds under a leasehold title, has notice of ordinary but not of unusual covenants in the original lease. Wilbraham v. Livezey, 18 Beav. 206.

Covenants in restraint of trade in a trading locality are not considered usual covenants. Ib.

The defendant agreed with the plaintiff to take a house in the Strand to be used for the business of printing. Nothing was said as to covenants. The plaintiff was a lessee under a lease containing covenants against "obnoxious trades," and the defendant was told that the premises were leasehold. A reference as to title was directed, having regard to the covenants in the lease, and the purposes for which the premises were taken. Id.

1. A purchaser of leasehold property is bound to inform himself of the contents of the lease, and cannot avoid specific performance, on the ground that it contains an unusual covenant, which was not mentioned in the particulars or at the sale. Grosvenor v. Green, 5 Jur., N. S., 117; 28 L. J., Ch., 173.

2. Particulars of sale described the thing to be sold as an improved ground-rent, amply secured, and stated the property to be held under a sub-lease of the full term of the ground lease. The conditions of sale provided that no objection should be taken by reason of the sub-lease being in excess of the superior lease, and offered previous inspection of the leases, and provided that the purchaser should be held to have notice of the leases, and their effect, whether he inspected or not:—Held, that the particulars disclosing the facts, and the conditions referring to the facts, the purchaser was bound, though the particulars and conditions did not particularly state the legal effect; particularly having regard to the circumstance that inspection was offered. Smith v. Watts, 4 Drew. 331; 28 L. J., Ch., 220.

3. The original conveyance in fee of land contained a covenant by the purchaser, for himself, his heirs, executors, and administrators, with the vendors, their heirs and assigns, that no building to be erected on the premises should be used for the sale of ale, beer, wine, or spirits, or any other intoxicating liquor. A house was built on the land, and a tenant from year to year, holding under a purchaser of the fee, but not having actual notice of the covenant, opened a beer-shop on the premises:—Held, that it was the duty of the tenant to have inquired into the title of his lessor, and as he had not made out a case which relieved him from such obligation, an injunction was granted. Wilson v. Hart, 1 L. R., Ch., 463; 35 L. J., Ch., 569; 14 W. R. 748.

The rule, that a purchaser is bound to inquire into the title of his vendor, applies equally to a tenant from year to year in relation to the title of his lessor. Id.

4. A purchaser or lessee having notice of a deed forming part of the chain of title of his vendor or lessor, has constructive notice of the contents of such deed, and is not protected from the consequences of not looking at the deed, even by the most express representation on the part of the vendor or lessor that it contains no restrictive covenants, nor anything in any way affecting the title. The rule that a lessee has constructive notice of his lessor's title has not been altered by s. 2, sub-s. 1 of the Vendor and Purchaser Act 1874, but a lessee is now in the same position with regard to notice as if he had, before the Act, stipulated not to inquire into his lessor's title. Wilson v. Hart (1 L. R., Ch., 463) observed upon. Patman v. Harland, 17 L. R., Ch. D., 363; 50 L. J., Ch., 642; 44 L. T. 728; 29 W. R. 707.

5. The rule, that a purchaser is bound to inquire into the title of his vendor, and is affected with notice with that which appears upon the title if he does not so inquire, applies to the case of the lessee who neglects to inquire into his lessor's title. Frieden v. Slater, 17 W. R. 485; 20 L. T., N. S., 112; 7 L. R., Eq., 523; 38 L. J., Ch., 379.

[What are Usual Covenants.] See LANDLORD AND TENANT.

9. Indemnity by Vendor.

6. Lessee subject to covenants cannot compel specific performance of agreement to purchase the premises of him, though he offers to indemnify purchaser against performance of covenants. Fildes v. Hooker, 3 Madd. 193.

7. A., lessee of iron works, etc., subject to payment of rent and performance of covenants, assigns to B., as a security for sums advanced, and to be advanced, reserving to himself a mere equity of redemption. A. becomes bankrupt, and his assigns agree to convey to B. the equity of redemption in the demised premises. The assignees have no right to enforce against B. a specific performance of this agreement, by accepting an assignment with a covenant for indemnity against payment of the rent and performance of the covenants reserved by the original lease. Wilkins v. Fry, 1 Meriv. 244; 2 Rose 371.

8. A court of equity will not decree the specific performance of a contract for the purchase of a lease, where, from pending and threatened litigation, it is impossible to ascertain to whom the ground-rent is payable, and the purchaser must be involved in immediate litigation. Pegler v. White, 23 Beav. 403.

The vendors under an agreement for sale of leaseholds produced the last receipt for the ground-rent, signed by agents; but it did not clearly appear on whose behalf it was so signed. On inquiry the title to the reversion was found to be uncertain:—Held, that the Court would not compel the purchaser to accept the title, although the vendors offered to indemnify him against six years' ground-rent. As the usual inquiry in chambers as to title had been waived by consent, the cause was ordered to stand over to give the plaintiff an opportunity of making a good title by procuring the consent of all the claimants of the reversion. S. C. 3 N. R. 557.

10. Covenant for Indemnity by Purchaser.

9. Under a contract for assignment of a term, whether from the original lessee or a mesne assignee, the purchaser must covenant for indemnity against payment of rent and performance of the covenants, though he cannot have a covenant for title from the assignor, as being an executor, and also by express stipulation. Staines v. Morris, 1 Ves. & B. 8.

10. Under the usual condition on sales by auction of leaseholds, that the largest purchaser shall take an assignment of the lease and execute under-leases to the other purchasers, he is bound to covenant to indemnify the other purchasers against any breach of covenants contained in the original lease relating to any part of the property. Brown v. Paull, 2 Jur., N. S., 317.

carried on on any part of the premises without the lessor's written consent. The particulars on which the contract of purchase was indorsed showed that parts of the premises were underlet to persons who carried on other trades there. 1. An owner of leasehold premises covenanted to assign them to trustees, or as they should direct, upon trust to sell, and apply the proceeds for the benefit of his creditors. Upon a sale by the trustees:—Held, that the owner was entitled to a covenant of the purchaser for payment of the rent and performance of the covenants during the continuance of the lease. Morley v. Clavering, 29 Beav. 84; 7 Jur. N. S., 904.

The draft assignment having been settled in chambers, and signed by the vendor, a time and place were appointed for the purchaser to attend and pay the balance of the purchase-money on delivery of the assignment executed by the vendor. Id.

11. Other Cases.

2. Leaseholds were sold under the Court, described as "a bonded sugar refinery," and the lease was referred to, which contained no such restriction. The abstract showed a prior agreement for the lease of the premises, to be used "for refining sugar in bond." The purchaser accepted the title, paid his purchase-money into court, and was let into possession. The lessors afterwards instituted a suit to rectify the lease, by introducing the restriction. The Court refused to compel the final completion of the purchase, or part with the purchase-money, until the result of the suit was known. Bentley v. Craven, 17 Beav. 204.

3. A slight and immaterial misdescription of the term in the agreement for the sale of a lease will not relieve a purchaser from the obligation of completing his purchase. Jennings v. Brunt, 19 L. T., N. S., 705.

4. Conditions of sale of leasehold property provided that the vendors should pay all outgoings up to the half-quarter day, when the purchase was to be completed:—Held, that under the term "outgoings," the half-quarter's rent was payable by the vendors. Laves v. Gibson, 35 L. J., Ch., 148.

5. A person agreeing to purchase the right and interest of another, under a contract for a lease, with full notice of the nature of it, cannot object to the payment of the consideration, either on the ground that such contract is not binding on the other party to it, or for want of title. Baxter v. Conolly, 1 Jac. & Walk. 576.

6. A party who takes an assignment of a lease from the agent of the lessor, with notice of the assignor's character as agent, has the same liability of sustaining the lease cast upon him that the agent has, and if the lease cannot be upheld by the agent neither can it be supported by the purchaser from the agent. Molony v. Kernan, 2 Dr. & War. 31.

7. The vendor of leaseholds held under an ecclesiastical corporation, previously to his contract for sale, was in treaty with the lessors for a renewal of the lease, and continued such treaty after the contract:—Held, that this did not throw upon him the obligation of procuring such renewal for the benefit of the purchaser. Monro v. Taylor, 3 Macn. & G. 713; 21 L. J., N. S., Ch., 525. Affirming 8 Hare 51.

8. After a purchase, the tenant holds of the purchaser on the same terms as he previously held of the vendor, and the holding continues until the tenancy has been regularly determined, either by the landlord or tenant. Greenwood v. Bairton, 5 L. J., N. S., Ch., 179.

9. To a suit for specific performance, by the purchaser against the vendor of a leasehold interest, it is not a defence that the lease contains a covenant against alienation without the consent of the landlord, and that it does not appear that the consent of the landlord has been obtained. Leitch v. Simpson, 5 Ir. R., Eq., 613.

10. "Occupation under a lease" means occupation of all that passed under the lease, whether in actual enjoyment and use or not, and whether known to exist at the time of the lease or not; and therefore a cellar under certain demised premises was held to be in the "occupation of the lessee under the lease," although the tenant of the neighbouring tenement was in the actual use of such cellar. Whittington v. Corder, 16 Jur. 1034.

11. Agreement for the sale of a lease, "with possession on the 1st December, the rent to commence at Christmas." Possession was not given until the 31st January, through the default of the vendor:—Held, that the purchaser was entitled to compensation, and an inquiry was directed. Gedye v. Montross (Duke), 26 Beav. 45.

12. Premises held under a demise, containing a proviso, that lessees shall not assign without the license of landlord in writing, are sold under a decree to a purchaser, who pays his purchase-money into court, and is let into possession; the landlord having refused to concur in the assignment, the representatives of the lessee filed a bill against him, alleging that his conduct with respect to the sale had been such as to deprive him in equity of any right to act on the legal construction of the covenant and proviso against assignment, and praying that he might be decreed to give his license in writing for the transfer of the interest. The purchasers are necessary parties to such a bill. Maule v. Beaufort (Duke), 1 Russ. 349.

II. SALE OF UNDER-LEASES.

1. Objections to Title, 7312.

2. Notice of Covenants in Original Lease, 7313.

1. Objections to Title.

13. Upon a contract for a sale of the sub-lease, the objection to the title, arising from the possibility of a future breach of the covenant by the representative of the original lessee, may be cured, either by an insurance, in the name of that representative, for the whole residue of the term created by the sub-lease, or by making that representative join in a covenant, that the purchaser shall be at liberty to insure in his name, and to deduct the annual premiums out of the rent. Montresor v. Williams, 1 L. J., Ch., 151.

14. Where upon the sale of a leasehold ground-rent by the mesne lessee, a part of the term assigned (seven days) being reserved, and by the conditions, no title prior to the assignment or title of any ground or mesne landlord was to be produced, and, by recital in the original lease, it appeared that the property out of which the rent issued had been originally demised with other premises at a rent, subject to the covenants, etc., in the original demise:—Held, that a good title could not be made to the ground-rent in question, as upon failure of payment of the original rent it might become subject to forfeiture or diminution. Where conditions are so obscurely worded as to mislead a purchaser, semble, the Court would discharge him from his purchase, on the assignment of exceptions to the title, without putting him to the necessity of a motion to be so discharged. Taylor v. Martindale, 1 Y. & Coll. C. C. 658.

1. On the purchase of an under-lease it is not a valid objection to the title, that the under-lease may become forfeited by the non-performance of the covenants in the original lease. Hayford v. Criddle, 22 Beav. 477.

2. Where the original lease contains covenants, the breach of any one of which would incur a forfeiture, and an under-lease is made of a portion of the property containing no similar covenant on the part of the under-lessee, and the latter sells his under-lease, describing it as a lease, but that the lessor's title shall not be inquired into, the Court will not compel a purchaser who has discovered the true state of the title abundè to complete, notwithstanding in the original lease the rents and right of re-entry are apportioned. Darlington v. Hamilton, 2 Eq. Rep. 906; 1 Kay 550; 23 L. J., Ch., 1000.

Under-lessee of a term describing it as a lease, and selling subject to a condition that the lessee's title shall not be inquired into, but is nevertheless good, and it turns out that the title is of leasehold only, and not freehold:—Quære, whether such a misdescription as would entitle a purchaser to resist a specific performance. Ib.

Covenant to repair and amend, with power of entry to inspect the state of the premises, does not include a covenant to paint. Ib.

Under-lease Sold as a Lease.] See VI. VI. 3 ante.

Non-performance of Covenant to Insure.]

3. A covenant by the lessee to insure the demised premises in the names of himself and the lessor, although not performed literally by an insurance in the name of the lessor only, is yet so far substantially performed for the benefit of the lessor, and he could not recover for a breach of the covenant, the stipulation for the insurance in the name of the lessee being for the exclusive benefit of the latter, and which he is at liberty to dispense with:—Held, therefore, that the circumstance that the original lessee could not be found, and that no insurance could be effected in his name, was not an objection to the title of an under-lessee. Havens v. Middleton, 10 Hare 641; 47 Jur. 271; 22 L. J., Ch., 746.

2. Notice of Covenants in Original Lease.

4. It is the duty of a person contracting for an under-lease to inform himself of the covenants contained in the original lease, and if he enters and takes possession of the property, he will be bound by those covenants. Where the original lease contained unusual covenants, and the defendant entered into an agreement with the plaintiff for an under-lease, and took possession of the premises, no reference to covenants being made in the agreement, but the defendant's solicitor having had an opportunity of inspecting the original lease, it was held that the defendant was bound to accept a lease with the unusual covenants contained in the original lease. Cosser v. Collinge, 3 Myl. & K. 283; 1 L. J., N. S., Ch., 130.

5. A party who enters into an agreement for an under-lease, without inquiring into the covenants of the original lease, has constructive notice of all usual covenants in the original lease. Quære, whether he has such notice of unusual covenants. But where a party entered into an agreement with a lessee for an under-lease, and informed him of the nature of the business which he meant to carry on in the premises, and the lessee did not apprise him that there was a covenant in the original lease prohibiting such business, the silence of the lessee was equivalent to representation that there was no such prohibiting covenant. Flight v. Barton, 9 Myl. & K. 282.

VI. In Case of Superfluous Lands taken under Compulsory Powers. See LANDS CLAUSES ACT, XIV.

VII. Conditional Sale or Mortgage. See MORTGAGE, I. II.

I. WHO MAY EXERCISE.

6. Equity will not, after a sale, enforce a covenant for pre-emption against mortgagor in favour of mortgagee. Orby v. Trigg, 9 Mod. 2.

7. B. and C., being the sole proprietors of a newspaper, by indenture divide the concern into a certain number of shares, and confirm certain rights of pre-emption, according to fixed rates of price, and in a certain order, on each other mutually, and on all future holders of shares. Having all along continued to be, and still being, the sole proprietors, they afterwards assign certain shares, with their appurtenances, and all their right, title, and interest in these shares to A.; and various new conditions, with respect to A.'s interest, are introduced into the deeds of assignment, but nothing is said as to the right of pre-emption:—Held, that A. is entitled to the rights of pre-emption annexed by the first-mentioned indenture to his shares. Stewart v. Stuart, 1 L. J., Ch., 61.

8. Certain lands were demised for three lives, renewable for ever, subject to a condition of pre-emption, by the lessor, his heirs, or assigns, in case the tenant, his heirs, or assigns, should dispose thereof; and if such preference should not be given, then the lease to cease. The lessor assigned his interest, and the assignee purchased a portion of the tenant's interest:—Held, that the condition could not be taken advantage of by the assignee of the reversion; and the lands having been sold under a decree without such preference having been given, an exception to the title on that ground was overruled. Sparrow v. Cooper, Hay. & J. 404.

1. A lease of land contained a covenant by the lessor with the lessee, his executors, administrators, and assigns, that if the lessee, his executors, administrators, or assigns, should at any time thereafter be desirous of purchasing the fee simple of the demised land, and should give notice in writing to the lessor, his heirs and assigns, then the lessor, his heirs or assigns, would accept 1,200*l.* for the purchase of the fee simple, and on receipt thereof would convey the fee simple to the lessee, his heirs or assigns, or as he or they should direct. The lessee died intestate, and nearly twenty years after his death, his heir, who was also administrator of his personal estate, called on the devisee of the lessor to convey the fee simple to him in accordance with the covenant, and a conveyance was executed accordingly. The heir afterwards contracted to sell part of the property thus conveyed to him:—Held, that the option to purchase was attached to the lease and passed with it; that it consequently passed as part of the lessee's personal estate to the administrator, and that the administrator could not make a good title to the purchaser, unless the next-of-kin of the lessee would concur in the sale. Re Adams and Kensington Vestry, 24 L. R., Ch. D., 199; 52 L. J., Ch., 758; 48 L. T. 958; 32 W. R. 120. Affirmed 27 L. R., Ch. D., 394; 54 L. J., Ch., 87; 51 L. T. 382; 32 W. R. 883.

II. TIME FOR AND DELAY.

2. A right of pre-emption held limited to the life of the owner of the property. Stocker v. Dean, 16 Beav. 161.

Semble, that a right of pre-emption "at all times thereafter cannot be enforced after the death of the owner of the property. Ib.

3. A lessor covenanted with the lessee that if he should be desirous, at the expiration of the term, of purchasing the fee of the hereditaments, and should give unto or leave at the last known or most usual place of abode of the lessor six calendar months' notice in writing of such his desire, and should pay unto the lessor 2,000*l.*, and also all arrears of rent, the lessor would, at the expense of the lessee, convey the premises, free from incumbrances. The expense of preparing an abstract of the title of the lessor, and charges incidental thereto, and of any copies of deeds, and the charges of the solicitor of the lessor for perusing and procuring the execution of the conveyance, were to be borne and paid by the lessee. The lessee, by the deed, accepted and approved the title of the lessor:—Held, that the payment of purchase-money was a precedent condition to the delivery of the abstract of title, and that as the lessee had not performed the condition, the contract was not binding on the lessor. Weston v. Collins, 11 Jur., N. S., 190; 13 W. R. 510; 34 L. J., Ch., 345; 5 N. R. 345.

4. A tenant was to have a purchasing clause, at any time within nine years, by giving three months' notice. He gave the notice at the end of four years, and delays occurring, the three months elapsed. Afterwards the landlord threatened hostile measures to compel a completion, but subsequently gave notice that unless the purchase should be completed within six weeks, he should treat the notice as void, and the right of purchasing as forfeited. The purchase was not completed within the six weeks:—Held, first, that though a conditional right to purchase must be strictly complied with, yet time was not, in this case, of the essence of the contract; secondly, that if it had been, it was waived by the landlord's insisting on the contract after the expiration of the three months; thirdly, that time was not made of the essence of the contract by the notice; and, fourthly, that six weeks was not, under the circumstances, a reasonable time. Pegg v. Wisden, 16 Beav. 239; 16 Jur. 1105; 1 W. R. 43.

5. Articles of agreement for a lease contained a proviso, that if at any time within a certain period the lessees should desire to purchase the fee simple, and should give three months' notice of such their desire, and should, "at the expiration of such notice, pay unto him, the lessor, 210*l.* in respect of such plot, etc., then the lessor shall and will convey the freehold to the lessee." Notice to purchase was given in due course, but the three months after the notice having been allowed to elapse without the money being paid, the lessor refused to carry out the agreement for sale. Upon a bill by the lessee for specific performance:—Held, that "at the expiration" meant the precise day on which the notice expired; that until the condition of paying the money was performed, the relation of vendor and purchaser did not arise; that time was of the essence of the contract, and that the money not being paid at the fixed time, the lessee lost his right to purchase, and the Court refused specific performance and dismissed the bill, with costs. Ranelagh (Lord) v. Melton, 2 Dr. & Sm. 278; 10 Jur., N. S., 1141; 13 W. R. 150; 34 L. J., Ch., 227; 11 L. T., N. S., 409; 5 N. R. 101.

6. By a clause at the end of a lease, the lessees on notice given on or before a fixed date had the option of purchasing the fee simple of the premises comprised in the lease, together with certain machinery thereon. The term was under the lease determined absolutely by an event which happened, viz., by a fire which partly destroyed the premises demised, and which occurred before the exercise of the option:—Held, that the option to purchase was independent of the duration of the term. Edwards v. West, 26 W. R. 507; 38 L. T., N. S., 481; 7 L. R., Ch. D., 858; 47 L. J., Ch., 463.

7. A person entitled to leasehold premises for a long term of years agreed to underlet them to a tenant for three years, and, whenever called upon to do so by the tenant, to grant him a lease for three years, seven years, or the remainder of the term that he had it in his power to grant, such lease to contain all the usual covenants for protecting the interests of the grantor. The three years expired without the option being exercised. The tenant, however, continued in possession until he became bankrupt, and his interest in the premises was sold by his assignee to a purchaser, who entered into possession and filed a bill for specific performance of the agreement:—Held, first, that the option might be exercised at any time during the tenancy. Buckland v. Papillon, 36 L. J., Ch., 81; 2 L. R., Ch., 67; 12 Jur., N. S., 992; 15 W. R. 92; 15 L. T., N. S., 378. Affirming 1 L. R., Eq., 477; 12 W. R. 380; 13 L. T., N. S., 736.

Held, secondly, that the bankrupt had such an interest in lands as passed to his assignee either under 12 & 13 Vict., c. 106, s. 142, or under s. 145. Ib.

Held, thirdly, that such interest was not prevented from so passing by the absence of the word "assigns" in the agreement. Ib.

1. M. became tenant to A. of leasehold property for ten years from December 1861, "M. to have the option at any time during the term to purchase the premises for 3,500*l.*, and upon payment to A. the term of ten years and the rent shall thereupon cease, and M. shall thereupon be entitled to an assignment." M. entered into possession, and afterwards A. made a mortgage to G. In July 1867 M. gave written notice to A. and to G. that he elected to purchase. A draft assignment was prepared, which could not be settled, since neither A nor G. would assent to the purchase-money being paid to the other of them. A correspondence took place, which ended in March 1868. G. having given notice to M. to pay his rent to him, M. made to him various irregular payments, for the most of which receipts were given expressing them to be on account of rent, and this went on after the end of the term of the ten years. In November 1872 A. became bankrupt. On the 1st May 1873 the solicitor of his trustee called on M., and stated that the trustee was going to sell, and wished to give him the refusal. M. desired time to consider, and did not say that he had already agreed to purchase. On the next day the solicitor discussed the matter with the trustee's solicitor, but did not set up any claim as having purchased. On the 13th May, however, he wrote to the trustee's solicitor insisting on M.'s right under the agreement of 1861 and the notice of July 1867, and the trustee disputing this right, M. filed a bill for specific performance:—Held, that the option in the agreement of 1861 and the notice of July 1867 made a binding contract, although the purchase-money was not paid within the term. Mills v. Haywood, 6 L. R., Ch. D., 196.

Held, that M.'s right to specific performance was lost by the delay from March 1868 to May 1873, which was not excused by his having been in possession; for that possession, in order to have that effect, must be a possession under the contract, and such that the vendor must know, or be taken to know, that the purchaser claims to be in possession under the contract; and in this case the plaintiff did not, from March 1868 to May 1873, claim possession under the contract, nor did it appear that the vendors recognize him, as claiming possession under it. Ib.

III. OTHER CASES.

2. A person who contracts to sell an agreement for a lease must, in the absence of anything to show a contrary intention at the time of the contract, show that the agreement is valid. A contract was entered into for the sale of an agreement for a lease. The agreement was at that time voidable at the will of a third person, as also subsequently, when the purchaser, on discovering that to be the case, repudiated the contract. The third person had not avoided the agreement, but offered to renew it conditionally on the vendor's doing a certain thing:—Held, that the purchaser was entitled to repudiate the contract, and was not obliged to wait and see whether the condition would be performed. Brewer v. Broadwood, 22 L. R., Ch. D., 105; 47 L. T. 508; 31 W. R. 115; 52 L. J., Ch., 136.

3. A yearly tenant with the option of purchasing, having filed his bill for a specific performance against the landlord, the latter, after notice to quit, brought an action of ejectment against him, whereupon the tenant applied for an injunction to restrain the action, which the Court only granted upon the terms of the tenant continuing to pay the rent without prejudice. Pyke v. Northwood, 1 Beav. 152.

4. The defendant agreed, in consideration of the plaintiff erecting a house and premises upon a plot of ground belonging to the defendant, to grant a lease of the same when completed, according to the terms of the agreement; and the plaintiff agreed to insure the house and premises in the County Fire Office in the joint names of the plaintiff and the defendant; provided that if the plaintiff should not fully perform his agreement, then that the agreement by the defendant for executing a lease should be void, and the defendant should have power to re-enter; and the defendant further agreed that the plaintiff should, within two years from the date of the agreement, have the option to purchase for a stipulated sum. The plaintiff erected the house and premises in accordance with the terms of agreement, but insured them in the Royal Exchange Insurance Office, and in his own name only. The plaintiff within the time limited signified his intention to purchase. The defendant refused to sell on the ground of the breach of covenant, and commenced an ejectment against the plaintiff. Upon a bill filed by the plaintiff:—Held, that the contract to sell was a distinct and separate part of the agreement; and a decree was made restraining the ejectment, and for the specific performance of the agreement for purchase. Green v. Low, 2 Jur., N. S., 848.

5. A lease for twenty-one years contained a proviso, that if the lessees should be desirous of purchasing the fee, and should give to the lessor, his heirs or assigns, notice of such desire, they should be entitled to become the purchasers of the premises at the price named, and the lessor, his appointees, heirs, or assigns would, on payment of the purchase-money, do all acts for conveying the premises to the use of the purchasers. The lessor died, having devised all his real estate to trustees, who disclaimed, and leaving an infant heir. The lessees having served on the infant and his guardian notice of their election to purchase:

—Held, that such notice was effectually served, and constituted a valid and binding contract, which the Court would not refuse to carry out on the ground that the infant could not give a discharge for the purchase-money. Woods v. Hyde, 31 L. J., Ch., 295.

1. An agreement was entered into between two water companies, by which Company A. should take over the works, provide for a mortgage debt, and pay interest upon the shares of Company B. This agreement was sanctioned by Act of Parliament, and the transaction was carried into effect by a deed of January 1857, which provided that if company A. (or their intended assignees, the corporation or local board of health), being desirous of becoming the absolute and unrestricted owners of the works of Company B., subject only to the mortgage debt, should, "on or before any 25th December, after having given to Company B. six months' previous notice of their desire to avail themselves of the option thereby given, pay unto the Company B." 46,246l., the amount of their share capital, the party so paying should become absolutely entitled to the works. In June 1870 the corporation, who had acquired the interest of Company A., gave notice to Company B. of their intention to pay this sum on the 25th December following, but they were unable from want of funds to carry out the purchase. In June 1871 they again gave notice that they would pay the money on the 25th December 1871.—Held, that the corporation, by giving the first notice and failing to act upon it, had not lost the right given to them by the deed of January 1857, of purchasing after six months' notice, on or before any 25th day of December. Ward v. Wolverhampton Waterworks Co., 13 L. R., Eq., 243; 41 L. J., Ch., 308.

2. By an agreement between the plaintiff and the defendant, the latter agreed with the former to grant him a lease for a term of ninety-nine years, subject to a yearly rent and certain covenants to be inserted in the lease. The agreement contained an option on the part of the plaintiff to purchase the premises within three years. The plaintiff having elected to purchase, the defendant refused to produce his title to the premises.—Held, that the right of the plaintiff was that of an ordinary purchaser, who was entitled to have a good title produced, in the absence of any condition to the contrary, and that the onus was upon the defendant to show that that right had been waived. Welshman v. Spinks, 5 L. T., N. S., 385.

3. B. leased lands to H., giving him an option to purchase the fee, having previously devised the land so leased. After B.'s decease, H. desired to exercise the option, for which purpose a suit was necessary.—Held, that the decree must be without costs. Hall v. Bushill, 14 W. R. 495; 14 L. T., N. S., 246.

4. Where a vendor is entitled to repurchase on payment of a sum of money by a given day, and such sum of money can only be ascertained by accounts to be rendered by the purchaser in possession, such purchaser cannot, by rendering such account so late as to preclude the possibility of a settlement within the time, deprive the vendor of his right to repurchase. Ponsford v. Hackney, 9 W. R. 510.

A contract provided for repurchase by the plaintiff from the defendant of hereditaments, upon payment to him of a stipulated sum within a certain time, but deducting the net proceeds of all sales, if any, which should have been previously made by him, including all moneys laid out in repairs or improvements of the property. The right to purchase was in no case to be exercised after the time fixed. Several proceedings were had between the parties on the footing of the contract, but the defendant never furnished to the plaintiff any proper account of the property. A bill was accordingly filed to obtain the benefit of the contract, for an account, an injunction, and a receiver. The defendant demurred to the bill.—Held, that the terms of the contract threw on him the obligation of rendering an account to the plaintiff, and that the demurrer must be overruled. S. C. 2 Giff. 604; 7 Jur., N. S., 938. Affirmed 7 Jur., N. S., 929; 5 L. T., N. S., 226.

5. Under a will which empowered the trustees thereby appointed to grant building leases for ninety-nine years at increasing rentals, and ordinary leases for twenty-one years at the best rents which could be obtained, and provided that a lease granted under either power might contain an option of purchase by the lessee, the trustees demised to C. a piece of freehold and a piece of leasehold land for thirty-five years, at a nominal rent as to both for the first quarter, and afterwards, as to the freehold at an increasing rent, and as to the leasehold at a fixed rent. The lessee did not covenant to build, but only to repair all buildings erected or to be erected on the land, and to insure; and the lease gave him an option of purchase as to any part of the premises during the first twenty-one years. In exercise of this option, C. purchased the leasehold portion of the land, which was accordingly assigned to him. Doubts having afterwards arisen as to the validity of the lease, a notice was indorsed upon it, pursuant to 12 & 13 Vict., c. 26, and signed by C. and the trustees of the will, declaring that the lease should be considered in equity as a contract to grant a valid lease under the power to grant ordinary leases. Upon the sale by C. of the leasehold land purchased by him, objection was taken to the title on the ground that the lease, not being a building lease, and being granted for more than twenty-one years, was an invalid exercise of the power.—Held, that, inasmuch as the lease did not contain any covenant to build, it was invalid as a building lease; that the defect could not be remedied under 12 & 13 Vict., c. 26, by turning that which was a lease of one kind into a contract for a lease of another kind; and that, even if that could be done, the lease would still be invalid in consequence of the rent reserved in respect of the freehold portion being an increasing rent, which was not in accordance with the power to grant leases other than building leases. Hallett to Martin, 52 L. J., Ch., 804; 48 L. T. 894.

Held, also, that the lease being bad, the option of purchase was ineffectual and could not be exercised. Id.

I. ORDER FOR SALE.

1. Hearing for further directions. Decree for a sale pronounced. Simpson v. O'Sullivan, Dr. 89.
2. By the decree, the plaintiff's demand was declared a charge upon the lands, and liberty was given to all parties to apply as occasion might require. The Court, subsequently, on motion, directed a sale. Watson v. Pm, Dr. 90.
3. Real estate ordered to be sold pending inquiries before the Master. Martin v. Hadlow, 1 W. R. 101.
4. Court refused to make an order under Act of Parliament for sale of estate upon opinion of conveyancer merely approving the conveyance, without reference to the Master. Exp. Newcastle (Duke), 6 Ves. 454.
5. The decree being for sale of a term, the Court, on the application of the inheritor, superadded a direction to the Master at the same time to sell the fee, taking care not to prejudice the plaintiff, but not requiring his consent. If the decree is inrolled, such a collateral order being for the benefit of one party, and without prejudice to any, may be appended without affecting the inrolment. Sheppard v. Murdoch, 1 Moll. 130.
6. The Master will not be ordered to sell an estate until a statement of title is made out and lodged in his office. How to proceed when defendant refuses to give statement of his title. Roberts v. Roberts, 1 Hog. 124.
7. Though the Court will not, in general, give a decree for a sale of an equitable estate in lands; yet if the plaintiff is not entitled to call for a conveyance of the legal estate, it will make such decree. Tremble v. Simpson, 6 Ir. Eq. R. 98.

8. Two of four co-heiresses-at-law residing out of the jurisdiction, sale of the inheritance decreed in their absence, at the suit of judgment creditor of ancestor. The heir-at-law being absent from the jurisdiction, sale of real estate may be effectuated under the decree of the Court, the particular of sale stating the fact, and the purchaser buying with notice. It is a principle not to foreclose an absent mortgagor; but there is not, in the case of absent heir, any principle by which the Court is precluded from selling a deceased debtor's real estate. Leahy v. Dancer, 3 Moll. 108.

9. In an action to enforce a charge on real estate, the plaintiff is, under ordinary circumstances, entitled to an order for sale before the trial on showing a case upon which such an order would be made at the trial. A creditor in respect of a debt secured upon the real estate of a company in liquidation brought an action for an account and sale. Upon an interlocutory application, under s. 55 of the Chancery Procedure Act 1852, 15 & 16 Vict., c. 86, the Court ordered an immediate sale, without waiting until the hearing of the action. Davis v. Ashwin, Re Brynmawr Coal and Iron Co., 26 W. R. 139; 47 L. J., Ch., 70.

II. MODE AND CONDUCT OF SALE.

- I. Mode and Place of Sale, 7317.
- II. Sale by Private Contract, 7318.
- III. Conduct of Sale, 7318.
- IV. Reserved Biddings, 7319.
- V. Conditions, 7319.

1. Mode and Place of Sale.

10. The Masters are personally to superintend sales under decrees, and a sale had in the Master's office, before his clerk, but in his absence, will be set aside for irregularity. Ellis v. Molloy, 2 Hog. 255.

11. Auctioneer in the country appointed to conduct the sale under a decree, to avoid the expense of sending the Master's clerk. Thompson v. Hodgson, 2 Y. & Coll. 311; 6 L. J., N. S., Exch. Eq., 80.

12. Sales ought to be ordered to be made at chambers, not by parties with the approbation of the judge at chambers. Nash v. Worcester Improvement Commissioners, 19 Jur. 973.

13. Shares in joint-stock and other companies, directed to be sold, should be sold out of court. Cobden v. Maynard, 1 N. R. 354.

14. Premises held under distinct leases ordered to be sold in one lot upon the speculative probability, arising from the nature of the property, that a higher price would be obtained by that mode of sale, than if they were put in distinct lots. Cook v. Collingridge, 3 Russ. 520.

15. If lands be leased by the inheritor after a decree to account has been pronounced against him, they will be set up in the first instance subject to the lease; and if they do not produce sufficient to pay the incumbrances, decreed with costs, they will then be set up discharged of the lease. Barrett v. Bermingham, Sau. & Sc. 678.

1. Property was put up for sale by auction under the order of the Court, and it was knocked down as unsold, there being no bid up to the reserved price. Before the auctioneer had left the desk, C. agreed to purchase the property at the reserved bidding, and signed the contract and paid the deposit:—Held, that he was estopped from disputing the sale as not being a sale by auction, and that he could not repudiate his purchase. Else v. Barnard, 6 Jur., N. S., 621; 29 L. J., Ch., 729; 28 Beav. 228.

2. The Court has jurisdiction to direct an estate to be sold by auction by the chief clerk, without the employment of an auctioneer. And this jurisdiction will be exercised, if all parties interested are before the Court, and concur in desiring the sale so to be made. Pemberton v. Barnes, 41 L. J., Ch., 209; 13 L. R., Eq., 349; 26 L. T., N. S., 389.

3. The Court of Appeal, though it may be of opinion that a sale of real estate forming part of an estate being administered by the Court would more conveniently take place in the district registry where the administration action was commenced, will not interfere with an order of the judge of the Court directing the sale to take place in his own chambers, that being a matter for the discretion of the judge. Macdonald v. Foster, 37 L. T., N. S., 296; 6 L. R., Ch. D., 193; 25 W. R. 687.

2. Sale by Private Contract.

4. Where sale before Master is directed to take place by decree, a contract for private sale by trustee will not be enforced. Raymond v. Webb, Loft. 66.

5. Suits were compromised with the sanction of the Court (infants being interested), and it was agreed that the estate should be sold by auction, for the purpose of division, and that A. should have the conduct of the sale. At the auction, the property could not be sold, and it was afterwards sold by private contract at the reserve bidding:—Held, that this was a valid sale, and the purchaser was decreed specifically to perform his contract. Bousfield v. Hodges, 33 Beav. 90.

6. A property ordered by the Court to be sold by auction was bought in. After which, and before the auctioneer had left the rostrum, A. signed a contract to purchase it, at the reserved price, which was divulged contrary to the express instructions given to the auctioneer:—Held, that there was a valid binding contract. Else v. Barnard, 28 Beav. 228; 6 Jur., N. S., 621; 29 L. J., Ch., 729.

7. Although in pursuance of an order of Court directing a sale of real estate by public auction, an attempt has been made to sell by public auction and has failed, the property cannot be sold otherwise than by public auction until a proper order for the purpose has been obtained, and any prevailing practice at chambers to the contrary is irregular. Berry v. Gibbons, Ex p. Lee, 15 L. R., Eq., 150; 42 L. J., Ch., 231.

When the Court has made an order for the sale of property by public auction, and the sale has proved to be abortive, the parties cannot make a valid contract for sale of the property under the order by private tender without the personal sanction of the judge who made the order; it is not sufficient for them to have obtained the sanction of the chief clerk. Ib.

3. Conduct of Sale.

8. Where a plaintiff obtains liberty to bid, the management of the sale will be taken from his solicitor. Drought v. Jones, Fl. & K. 316; Ennis v. Casey, id. 319. n.

9. In a sale under a decree, the solicitor of the plaintiffs having the management of the sale is to be considered, as between the vendors and the purchaser, to be the agent of all the parties to the suit. Dalby v. Pullen, 1 Russ. & M. 296; 8 L. J., Ch., 74.

10. Under a decree, directing the sale of an estate, but not directing by whom the sale shall be conducted, the Master is not bound to give the conduct of the sale to the plaintiff, but may in his discretion, if he considers it more beneficial to the estate, give the conduct of the sale to other parties. Dixon v. Fyner, 7 Hare 331; 19 L. J., N. S., Ch., 402; 14 Jur. 217.

Grounds on which the conduct of a sale, under the decree of the Court, may properly be given to parties other than the plaintiff. Ib.

11. The plaintiff in a cause held entitled to the conduct of the sale of partnership property, although, according to the contract, if performed without suit, he might not have been entitled to interfere in the sale. Dale v. Hamilton, 10 Hare (App.) vii.

12. Where a sale is made by the Court, and the purchasers pay their money into court, the plaintiffs are entitled to the conduct of the sale: but where a sale, directed by decree, is made out of court, the trustee or executor is the proper person to conduct it. Cobden v. Maynard, 1 N. R. 354.

13. After the estate had been sold by auction under a decree of Court, the purchaser's title is not to be attacked merely on the ground that the holder of the decree had not complied with all the statutory formalities for the conduct of such sale; as, for example, the want of due notice of sale; and the burden of proof of such compliance is not on the purchaser. Singh v. Singh, 9 L. T., N. S., 129.

In selling by auction under a decree of the Court, if a person bids for others, and his bidding is refused on account of his not giving a deposit or any satisfactory references, the sale cannot be afterwards impugned, on the ground that the estate was sold under its value. Ib.

14. Ordinarily, the conduct of a sale directed by the Court is committed to the plaintiff; but when it appears for the benefit of the parties, it will be given to a defendant. This right does not, however, depend on the extent of the interest of the parties in the property. Knott v. Cottle, 27 Beav. 33.

When a sale is directed, every party to the suit having the title deeds is bound to facilitate the sale. Ib.

15. When a sale has been decreed in one of two concurrent suits, the fact of the party to whom has been given the conduct of the cause being an entire stranger to the family and to the property is a sufficient reason for taking away from him the conduct of the sale, and giving it to the trustee and testamentary guardian of the infants. Re Garmeson, Garmeson v. Sharrod, 21 W. R. 98.

1. When a sale has been directed by the Court, and the conduct of it given to one party, no other party has a right to interfere in any way in the sale without the leave of the Court. Thus, where the Court directed a sale and gave the conduct of it to an independent solicitor, both plaintiff and defendant having liberty to bid, the plaintiff was restrained by injunction from issuing and circulating advertisements that the sale was about to take place. Dean v. Wilson, 10 L. R., Ch. D., 136; 48 L. J., Ch., 148; 27 W. R. 377.

4. Reserved Biddings.

2. A direction for a reserved bidding ought not to be inserted in a decree for sale, but ought to be the subject of a separate order. Brooker v. Collier, 3 Russ. 369.

3. At a sale by order of the Court, a reserved bidding allowed to be made one of the conditions, the Master to fix the amount, and to use his discretion in communicating it to the parties or their solicitors. Jervoise v. Clarke, 1 Jac. & Walk. 889.

4. An estate being directed to be sold by a decree, the conditions of sale fixed a reserved bidding, under which the auctioneer announced a sum, and there being two bidders and an uncertainty as to who had the bid, the estate was bought in at another sum. Upon a petition by a person claiming to be the purchaser that he might be declared the highest bidder, or for a re-sale:—Held, that the auctioneer had no right to fix more than one reserved bidding, nor could a bidder claim a re-sale if the parties interested did not desire it. Notley v. Salmon, 1 W. R. 240.

5. Although in sales directed by the Court it is usual to fix the reserved price at the amount at which the estate has been valued, an exception will be made where a mortgagee, who, being also a trustee, is incapable of bidding, is desirous of having it fixed at an amount sufficient to cover his debt. Tennant v. Trenchard, 41 L. J., Ch., 779; 20 W. R. 785.

A trustee, who had a charge on the estate of greater amount than its value, as fixed by the cestui que trust for the reserved bidding, was allowed to fix the reserved bidding at the amount of his charge, he having, on a previous occasion, been refused leave to bid at the instance of the cestui que trust. Id.

As a general rule, when a party applies for a sale and not foreclosure, the reserved bidding will be fixed at the amount of the value of the estate, the person applying for the sale being able, on giving up the conduct of the sale, to protect himself by bidding. Id.

See also 2 supra—III. III. 3 ante.

5. Conditions.

6. The Court in proper cases will refer it to the remembrancer to settle conditions of sale.

Bennett v. Beamish, Jon. & C. 178. And see Cooke v. Campbell, id. 183. n.; Mackay v. Orr, Barrington v. Blake, id. 184. n.; Johnson v. Auchinleck, id. 185. n.

7. Where there was a decree for the sale of the whole lands, a reference to settle conditions of a sale of a moiety was refused, on the ground that where a good title can be made only as to a moiety, the Court cannot on motion direct that moiety only to be sold, when such a decree for the sale of the whole has been made; the proper course being to set down the cause for further directions. The Court will not set up lands for sale knowing the title to be bad. Piers v. Piers, Sau. & Sc. 414. Affirmed 1 Dr. & Wal. 265.

8. The Court will not set up a title, knowing it to be bad; therefore, when the Court is apprised of a defect of such a nature, that if of any importance it must render the title not merely defective, but absolutely bad, though the Court may not deem it important, it will not, by a condition of sale, preclude objection to such a defect. Bennett v. Wheeler, 1 Ir. Eq. R. 18.

9. The Court will not make it a condition of sale of an interest under a lease, that a purchaser shall not be at liberty to object to the title of the lessor to make the lease; but it will direct that a purchaser shall not require the plaintiff to show that the lessor had such power, leaving the purchaser at liberty to object alimunde. Willes v. Latham, Sau. & Sc. 441.

10. Where an estate was set up for sale in two lots and one of them was sold, but no bidder appearing for the other the sale was adjourned as to it, the Court approved of the following condition of sale to the remaining lot: that the purchaser should not require original searches for judgments against any person against whom such searches had been already made at the instance of the purchaser of the lot already sold, but should be satisfied with compared and certified copies of such searches. Fitzgerald v. Lane, 2 Ir. Eq. R. 447.

11. On a sale in court, the Court refused, on an adjourned summons, to alter the conditions under which the property had been sold, so as to substitute the word "grantees" for the word "grantors," although the Court thought that probably there had been a clerical error; and though the effect of the change would be to make the language in unison with that in ordinary use in such cases. Observations on conditions of sale of leaseholds as to the position of the purchaser of the largest lot. Brown v. Paull, 2 Jur., N. S., 317.

Form of and Construction of Particular Conditions.] See VI. ante.—XI. IV. ante.

III. WHO MAY PURCHASE AND LEAVE TO BID.

12. A testator's estate was directed to be sold by an order of the Court. The executor applied for leave to bid, alleging that such bidding would be for the benefit of the estate; but the Court refused to grant the application. Geldard v. Randall, 9 Jur. 1085.

1. Sales under a decree in trust as to part for the receiver to set aside after confirmation. Aiken v. Bond, Fl. & K. 196; 3 Ir. Eq. R. 365.

2. Whether the defendant who has not the carriage of the decree may bid at the sale in the Master's office, without an order permitting him so to do, quære. Munns v. Ferris, 11 Ir. Eq. R. 253.

3. Where lands decreed to be sold for payment of the plaintiff's demand were of insufficient value, and no bond fide bidders could be procured, the Court permitted the plaintiff to bid without taking from him the carriage of the decree. Spaight v. Patterson, 9 Ir. Eq. R. 149.

4. If the plaintiff, or a person standing in the situation of a plaintiff, purchases under the decree, the transaction is to be examined with the utmost strictness; and if the decree be reversed for ever, the sale cannot be upheld. Talbot v. Minnett, 6 Ir. Eq. R. 83.

5. It is irregular for a party in the cause to bid at the sale of lands set up under the decree, without having previously obtained the permission of the Court so to do. And the Court will not, in such case, on a certificate of his being the highest bidder, declare him the purchaser, unless special circumstances are shown to excuse this irregularity. Byrne v. Lafferty, 8 Ir. Eq. R. 47.

6. Where the defendant had bid for property sold under a decree without leave of the Court, the Court refused to enforce its rule in the same manner as it does against assignees in bankruptcy, who have the conduct of the sale; and a motion by another defendant that the estate might be again put up for sale, and that he might be held to his biddings, unless a higher sum was offered, and that he should pay the expenses of re-sale, refused, but without costs. Elworthy v. Billing, 10 Sim. 98; 10 L. J., N. S., Ch., 176. And see Wilson v. Greenwood, 10 Sim. 101. n.

7. Residuary legatee, tenant for life, or reversioner, may become the purchaser of an estate sold in the Master's office. Williams v. Attenborough, T. & R. 76.

8. A party to a suit, who was also a solicitor and had the conduct of sale decreed by the Court, purchased at the sale under a feigned name. The Court, after the purchase had been confirmed, ordered the estate to be again offered for sale at the price at which the party had purchased it, and if there should be no higher bidder the party to be held to his purchase. Sidney v. Ranger, 12 Sm. 118.

9. The Court, when it has directed the sale of a trust estate, will not, in opposition to the declared wishes of adult cestuis que trustent, and prior to any attempt to sell, grant leave to the trustee to bid, notwithstanding that, besides being trustee, he is entitled to a charge on the estate, and that the sale has in fact been ordered with a view to the payment of such charge. Tennant v. Trenchard, 38 L. J., Ch., 661.

10. A term of two hundred years, of which only nine months remained unexpired, was vested in trustees, upon trust to sell. It was not known who was entitled to the reversion expectant on the determination of the term. Upon a bill by one of the cestuis que trustent, the Court declared a sale, giving all the cestuis quo trustent liberty to bid, and directing advertisements to be issued for the representatives of the original lessor, who were to be at liberty to come in under the suit. Edmunds v. Foley (Lord), 7 Jur., N. S., 1268; 30 L. J., Ch., 887; 9 W. R. 859.

11. The rule that, at the sale in a suit by an order of the Court, parties to the suit and their solicitors cannot become purchasers, will not be extended so as to embrace the case of a purchase by a person who, being the solicitor in another suit for persons interested in the proceeds of such sale, has obtained an order to attend the proceedings in the first suit on their behalf, and whose name, without his consent or knowledge, has been placed in the particulars of sale, as that of a person from whom copies and information could be obtained. Guest v. Smythe, 5 L. R., Ch., 551; 39 L. J., Ch., 536; 22 L. T. 563; 18 W. R. 742.

But if the purchaser's position had been brought within any of the well-established rules of equity, the Court would not have been precluded from opening the sale by reason of the 30 & 31 Vict., c. 48, s. 7. Id.

12. C. was the solicitor of an executor, the defendant in a creditor's administration action. A life interest, part of the estate, was put up for sale by the Court, and C. obtained leave to bid. The interest was sold, after an abortive auction, to C. by private contract:—Held, that the sale could not be set aside by reason of non-disclosure by C. of circumstances affecting the value of the life interest. Boswell v. Coaks, 23 L. R., Ch. D., 302; 52 L. J., Ch., 465; 48 L. T. 929; 31 W. R. 540.

Practice on Application. 13. Application that a party in the suit may bid at the sale must be on notice. Clarke v. Dobbin, 8 Ir. Eq. R. 111.

III. OPENING BIDDINGS AND ORDER FOR RE-SALE.

11. Costs of Applicant, 7326.
12. Costs of First Purchaser, 7326.
13. Order for Re-sale, 7326.
14. Other Cases, 7327.

1. General Principles.

14. Biddings are opened for the benefit of the suitor and estate, not of the purchaser, as where he was too late, and the over-bidding is small. Anon., 1 Ves. J. 453.

15. The Court has always discretion to open biddings, resting wholly on circumstances of the case. Ryder v. Gower, 6 Bro. P. C. 306.

1. Where applications to open biddings are frivolous or litigious, and grounded only on application of the owner, and especially where value of estate is but little more than will satisfy incumbrances, Court is well justified in refusing such applications. Baillie v. Chaigneau, 6 Bro. P. C. 313.

2. In opening biddings, this Court does not tie itself down to any precise rule as to the amount of the sum to be advanced, but looks substantially to that which is for the benefit of the parties, and to the circumstances of the particular case before it. Power v. Power, 3 Ir. Eq. R. 511.

2. Who may Apply. In General.

3. Quere, whether any party, except the plaintiff, in a creditor's suit can apply to open the biddings, or to set aside a sale made by order of the Court in that suit. Price v. North, 2 Y. & Coll. 620; 7 L. J., N. S., Exch. Eq., 9.

4. Biddings opened on advance of 5l. per cent. on 7,300l., on application of a mortgagee, but he was not allowed to conduct the sale. Domville v. Berrington, 2 Y. & Coll. 723; 7 L. J., N. S., Exch. Eq., 68.

5. One party having moved to open biddings, although he has not drawn up the order, nor paid his deposit, another person cannot open biddings without notice to the first. Gibbons v. Howell, 4 Madd. 52.

3. Application by Persons Present at Sale.

6. Biddings opened by a person who was present at the sales. Rigby v. M'Namara, 6 Ves. 117. S. P. Tait (Lord) v. Northwick, 5 Ves. 655.

7. Biddings opened on the application of a person who was present at the sale, though the advance offered was less than 5 per cent. on the price. Lefroy v. Lefroy, 2 Russ. 606.

8. Biddings for an estate allowed to be opened by a person who had attended the former sale by an agent, he offering an advance of 500l. in 8,950l., the best bidding reported. Pearson v. Collett, M'Clel. 82; 13 Price 213.

9. A person present at the sale allowed to open biddings, but a larger advance expected from him. Tyndale v. Warre, Jac. 525.

10. There is no general rule that a party present at the sale shall not open biddings; each case must depend on its own circumstances. A party who neglects to bid, in consequence of the auctioneer declaring that a person may open the bidding, if he comes within eight days after the report, cannot allege surprise as a ground for opening the biddings, if he does not come within that time. Thornhill v. Thornhill, 2 Jac. & Walk. 347.

11. Person present at sale not allowed to open biddings. Sed quere. M'Culloch v. Cotbath, 3 Madd. 314.

12. Biddings opened, under the circumstances of the case, on an advance of 20l. on 165l., upon the application of a person who had bid at the former sale. Whether the biddings will be opened or not is a question to be determined by the particular circumstances of each case. Mayne v. Macartney, 2 Ir. Eq. R. 324.

13. Biddings were opened at the instance of a party to the cause, who had had liberty given to bid at the former sale, and who was aware of the amount of the reserved bidding, on an advance of 150l. on 1,650l. Logan v. Dowbinson, 7 L. J., N. S., Ch., 130.

14. An advance of 300l. on 6,700l. is not sufficient to open biddings, though the fund was deficient. Semble, that when the applicant has been present at the former sale, a larger advance would be expected from him. Graham v. Gledstanes, 1 Jones 436.

15. Where an estate had been sold under the Court for 5,050l., the sale was opened upon an advance of 300l., and on the application of a person who had bid at the sale. Biggs v. Rowe, San. & Sc. 152.

16. Biddings opened on an advance of 250l. upon a sum of 8,500l., by a person who was present and had bid at the former sale. Gorman v. Browne, San. & Sc. 154. n.

17. Biddings opened on an advance of 400l. upon a sum of 6,200l. by a person who bid at the former sale. Langford v. Carroll, San. & Sc. 155. n.

18. The rule is not universal, that biddings shall not be opened in favour of parties present at the sale. Williams v. Attenborough, T. & R. 76; 1 L. J., Ch., 138.

19. The biddings having been opened upon an advance of 150l. on 2,500l., the Court refused the application of the first purchaser to open the second biddings upon an advance of 150l., it appearing that he had been present at and had bid at the second sale. Jackson v. Granard (Lord), 3 Ir. Eq. R. 513.

4. Where Sale in Lots.

20. Where a person is reported purchaser of several lots before the Master, if the biddings are opened as to one, he shall have an option to open them as to all, semble. Boye v. Blackwell, 3 Anstr. 657.

21. Where two lots are purchased together, biddings cannot be opened as to one lot only, unless the first purchaser choose to keep the one remaining lot alone. Eap. Tilsley, 4 Madd. 227. n.

22. Where several lots have been purchased by the same person, and the biddings are opened as to some of them, which were first purchased, the purchaser will be allowed option of opening biddings as to remainder. Price v. Price, 1 Sim. & S. 386; 1 L. J., Ch., 184.

23. In a similar case, upon an affidavit of the purchaser that he had bid for the lot in consequence of having been declared the best bidder for the prior lot, the bidding was opened. Fielder v. Fielder, cited 1 Sim. & S. 386.

24. A motion to open biddings for several lots, purchased by different purchasers, on an advance of a certain sum for each lot, is irregular. Goodall v. Pickford, 6 Sim. 379; 3 L. J., N. S., Ch., 23.

25. An estate was put up to sale in four lots, and the timber on each lot was to be paid for by the purchaser, according to a valuation which had been made. A. purchased lot 1; the other lots were not sold. B. opened the biddings, and, on the re-sale, purchased lots 1 and 2 for 2,140*l.*, and lot 3 at 380*l.* The Court refused to open the biddings for lots 1 and 2 on the application of A., unless he would advance 10*l.* per cent. on the price of the timber as well as the land, and would take lot 3 (in case B. should retire from it) at the price it had been sold for, in case it should not fetch the same price at the re-sale. Bates v. Bonnor, 6 Sim. 380.

5. On Sale by Private Contract or Sealed Tender.

1. The rule under which the Court permits a stranger to intervene for the purpose of opening biddings on a sale by auction before the Master, has no application to a sale before him by private contract. Millican v. Vanderplank, 11 Hare 136; 17 Jur. 986.

When the Master has in the presence of the parties approved of a sale by contract, whether under a special reference or under the 4th General Order of the 16th July 1851, no stranger can intervene to prevent the confirmation of the report; nor will the sale be disturbed by the Court on the mere ground that a larger price has been offered subsequently, and before such confirmation, unless there be some error or miscarriage in the proceedings, or the contract price be grossly inadequate. Id.

When there are grounds upon which the Court would refuse to confirm a sale by private contract approved by the Master, the fact that the purchaser has after the approval of his contract, and before the confirmation of the report, entered upon the property, and expended money thereon, or incurred liabilities with respect to it, will not afford any reason for supporting the sale, for such acts before the confirmation of the report are done at the purchaser's own risk or in his own wrong; but where all the parties interested in the estate have approved of or acquiesced in the contract, and concurred in and encouraged such acts of the purchaser, they may then constitute reasons for not disturbing the sale. Id.

An offer of 15,000*l.* for an estate ordered to be sold by the Master was discussed before him in the presence of the parties to the cause (one of whom had been for some years in the occupation of the estate, and was virtually the owner subject to the charges on it), and was with their assent approved of. B. signed the contract for his purchase, which was thereby agreed to be completed on the 25th March. After that date C. offered 1,000*l.* more. The Master's report had never been confirmed, but the purchaser had, with the knowledge of some of the parties interested, laid out money in improvement of the estate, and had entered into contracts for tenants, etc. The evidence proved that 15,000*l.* was a fair value, and it appeared that during the discussion of B.'s offer the Master had a letter before him to the effect that C. would be willing to give more than the market price. The Court refused to disturb the purchase by B. Under ordinary circumstances, if a purchaser does any act of ownership before the Master's report is confirmed, he must do so at his own risk. S. C. 1 W. R. 364; 1 Eq. Rep. 429.

Semble, the Court will not disturb a sale by private contract before the Master, unless the parties to the cause made objections to the sale before the purchaser entered into the contract, or unless there has been such a miscarriage in the sale, or it has been at such an undervalue that the Court would not allow such a contract for sale to be completed in case it had been entered into by trustees. Id.

An estate was, by the direction of the Court, advertised for sale by sealed tender, the form of tender expressing that the contract was subject to the approbation of the Court, and to certain conditions of sale: the condition of sale stated that the certificate of sale would in due course be signed and filed, and become binding, without any further notice or expense to the purchaser:—Held, that the Court had the same power of ordering a re-sale, on an advance of price, as in the case of a sale by auction. Id.

2. An estate was directed to be sold by the Court of Chancery by sealed tenders, and was advertised to be sold by private contract, subject to conditions of sale, and to the contract receiving the consent of the V.-Ch. By the third condition of sale it was stated, that on a certain day "the certificate of sale would be settled, and in due course he signed and filed, and become binding, without further notice or expense to the purchaser." On the opening of the tenders the chief clerk declared the offer of A. to be the highest, and certified him to be the purchaser. The certificate was signed by the chief clerk, approved by the judge, and duly filed. On the same day that the approval was signed by the judge a summons was taken out by H., to show cause why there should not be a re-sale on an advanced offer by him; and the V.-Ch. made the order, and that upon such re-sale B. should be the purchaser in case there were no higher biddings:—Held, that this was a case to which the ordinary rules of a sale by auction under the direction of the Court would attach, and that on the intervention of B. offering a higher price, the Court had the power to order a re-sale. Barlow v. Osborne, 6 H. L. Ca. 556; 4 Jur., N. S., 367; 27 L. J., Ch., 308; 6 W. R. 315. Affirming S. C. sub. nom. Osborne v. Foreman, 8 De G. M. & G. 122; 2 Jur., N. S., 361; 25 L. J., Ch., 340; 4 W. R. 396.

The case of Millican v. Vanderplank (11 Hare 136) distinguished. Id.

Suggestion that the practice of the Court of Chancery in respect to opening biddings should be amended by a general order. Id.

A sale of an estate upon sealed tenders must be treated as a sale by auction, and the biddings may be opened on application to the judge, within eight days after the certificate of the chief clerk, approved by the judge, has been filed. Id.

The word "party" in the 49th Order of 16th October 1852 must be taken to mean person. Id.

3. Where, after an unsuccessful sale by auction, the chief clerk arranged that, in lieu of a second auction, sealed tenders might be sent in:—Held, that this was a sale within the rules as to opening biddings, and the biddings opened accordingly on the offer of a large advance. Waterhouse v. Wilkinson, 1 Hem. & M. 636; 12 W. R. 336; 9 L. T., N. S., 799.

Where, after an ineffectual attempt to sell by auction, it was agreed that sealed tenders for the purchase of the estate should be sent in to the Chief Clerk, stating the highest sum to be given for the estate:—Held, that the biddings might be opened at the instance of a person who had not made the highest offer. S. C. 3 N. R. 869.

6. After Report of Purchase made or Certificate Signed.

1. No order will be made to open biddings until the report of the purchase has been made. Lovegrove v. Cooper, 9 Hare 279.

2. After the expiration of eight days from the filing of the certificate of a sale under a decree, the Court refused to open the biddings on a mere advance of price, though considerable. Ware v. Watson, 7 De G. M. & G. 739; 4 W. R. 233; 25 L. J., Ch., 199; 2 Jur., N. S., 129. Reversing 4 W. R. 36; 1 Jur., N. S., 1083.

After the expiration of eight days from the filing of the certificate of sale, the biddings will not be opened except under very special circumstances; and the offer of an advanced bidding will not be considered in itself sufficient for that purpose. Ib.

In calculating the eight days, the vacations are not excluded. Ib.

3. In a sale under decree of the Court the Vice-Chancellor had signed the certificate approving the purchase of a lot. On a motion to open the biddings, made within eight days after the signing of the certificate, with a substantial advance and an offer to pay the costs of the former purchase:—Held, that the biddings might be opened, the signing of the certificate by the Vice-Chancellor being only equivalent to the order nisi confirming the Master's report, and the 34th section of the Act 15 & 16 Vict., c. 80, and the 51st Order of 16th October 1852, allowing eight days within which the signature and filing of the certificate might be discharged. Bridger v. Penfold, 1 Kay & J. 28; 8 Eq. Rep. 141.

4. Before the certificate is signed approving of a purchaser at a sale under direction of the Court, the biddings will be opened in favour of a bidder who makes a substantial advance in the price; but after eight days have expired, and the certificate is signed, the Court will not disturb the first purchase, unless in an extraordinary case. Re Jones, 1 Giff. 284; 29 L. J., Ch., 139; 5 Jur., N. S., 1243; 1 L. T., N. S., 186.

7. After Confirmation of Report.

5. Increase of price offered is not alone a reason to open biddings after the report confirmed. Boyer v. Blackwell, 3 Anstr. 656.

6. Biddings opened after confirmation of the report on circumstances, as where the owner of the estate who joined in the motion was in prison at the time of the confirmation, and a fourth of the original price was offered in advance; but a deposit of the whole advance was required. Watton v. Birch, 2 Ves. J. 51; 4 Bro. C. C. 172.

7. The bidding on a lot sold in this court may be opened upon a proper offer, even a second time, if the Master's report has not been confirmed, but shall not be opened at all after confirmation. Scott v. Nesbit, 3 Bro. C. C. 475.

8. Biddings opened after confirmation of the Master's report, upon considerable advance, there having been a mistake made in a particular of the estate left with Master, and one of the parties who confirmed the report having been steward of the family, and knowing more than he communicated. Gomer (Countess) v. Gomer (Lord), 2 Eden 340.

9. When the eight days are passed and the sale confirmed, the purchaser's title is complete, and the sale cannot be opened; but until then, upon an advance of 5 per cent., making a deposit of it, and paying the former purchaser's costs, Court will always open the sale. Aubrey v. Denny, 2 Moll. 508.

10. Purchaser who has confirmed his report nisi cannot, after notice to open biddings, confirm absolutely. Vansittart v. Collier, 2 Sim. & S. 608.

11. General rule not to open biddings, after confirmation of the report, upon negligence, surprise, the circumstances of the estate, etc., without something unconscientious on the part of the purchaser. No rule fixing the advance on opening biddings at 10 per cent.; more or less will be required according to circumstances. White v. Wilson, 14 Ves. 151.

12. Biddings will not be opened after confirmation of the report, unless fraud is shown in purchaser, or fraudulent negligence in agent, etc., or other special circumstances. Mortice v. Durham (Bishop), 11 Ves. 57.

13. After a sale regularly confirmed, the Court cannot open the bidding, merely on the suggestion of there being persons ready to bid in advance, without first setting aside the order confirming the sale, and that order ought not to be set aside but on the grounds of fraud. Fergus (Executors of) v. Gore, 1 Sch. & Lef. 350.

14. Biddings opened after confirmation of a sale, under a decree, the plaintiff in the cause being the purchaser. It will always be a question with reference to the particular circumstances of each case, whether the jurisdiction of the Court in opening sales ought to be exercised or not. O'Connor v. Richards, 8au. & Sc. 246.

15. After confirmation of the sale, the biddings will not be opened upon a mere advance of price. Vincent v. Thwaites, 5 Ir. Eq. R. 526.

16. A party to a suit, who was also a solicitor and had the conduct of a sale decreed by the Court, purchased at the sale under a feigned name. The Court, after the purchase had been confirmed, ordered the estate to be again offered for sale at the price at which the party had purchased it, and, if there should be no higher bidder, the party to be held to his purchase. Sidny v. Ranger, 12 Sim. 118.

17. In bankruptcy, application to open biddings when deed executed, and purchaser put into possession, too late. Exp. Partington, 1 Ball & B. 209.

8. What Advances Sufficient.

1. Bidding opened on advance of 50*l.* on 380*l.*, and paying the expenses; 10 per cent. not sufficient on a small sum. Upton v. Ferrers (Lord), 4 Ves. 700.

2. Biddings opened after the report, confirmed simply upon an advance of 61*l.* on 305*l.*; 35*l.* not sufficient. Chetham v. Grugeon, 5 Ves. 86.

3. Biddings opened on advance of 200*l.* upon 3,200*l.*, but 100*l.* was held too little. Anon., 5 Ves. 148.

4. The rule that an advance of 10 per cent. entitles party to open biddings, not to prevail in future. Andrews v. Emmerson, 7 Ves. 420.

5. Biddings opened on advancing 100*l.* on 800*l.*, and 200*l.* on 1,200*l.* Anon., 2 Ves. & J. 487.

6. The biddings were opened on an advance of 500*l.* upon 13,500*l.* under the circumstances. Cockrane v. Cockrane, 2 Russ. & M. 684.

7. Biddings not opened whatever the rate per cent. of the advance offered, unless the total of the advance amounts to 40*l.* at least. Leland v. Griffith, 2 Moll. 510.

8. Bidding not opened, even in creditor's suit, upon an advance of 350*l.*, being less than 10 per cent. Garstone v. Edwards, 1 Sim. & S. 20.

Upon advance of 500*l.*, though less than 10 per cent., Court will act. Ib.

9. Biddings not opened under advance less than 40*l.* Brookfield v. Bradley, 1 Sim. & S. 23.

Two lots ordered to be re-sold in one, where advance on smaller lot under 40*l.* Ib.

10. Biddings not opened, unless advance of 40*l.* is offered. Farlow v. Weildon, 4 Madd. 460.

11. In a creditor's suit, bidding opened on an advance of 500*l.* upon 10,000*l.*, paying the advance into court, and the expenses of the discharged purchaser. Brooks v. Smith, 3 Ves. & B. 144.

12. The Court opened the biddings upon an advance of 75*l.* on 1,650*l.* There is no fixed rule in Ireland for the quantum of advance; therefore, the Court will always open the biddings where it is for the benefit of the estate to do so. Digby v. Broune, 1 Ir. Eq. R. 277.

13. Biddings opened on an advance of 1,000*l.* upon a sum of 33,000*l.* McClintock v. Know, Sau. & Sc. 155. n.

14. Biddings opened on an advance of 300*l.* upon a sum of 5,500*l.* Moloney v. Bernard, Sau. & Sc. 156. n.

15. Biddings opened on a sale of mortgaged premises on an advance of 190*l.* to 310*l.* Exp. Hutchinson, Re Hunt, 2 Mont. & A. 727.

16. Biddings opened on an advance of 300*l.* on 5,030*l.* Lawrence v. Halliday, 6 Sim. 296.

17. The Court refused to open the biddings on an advance of 20*l.*, the property having been sold for 430*l.* Gardiner v. Blessinton, 10 Ir. Eq. R. 220.

18. The Court declined to open biddings upon an advance under 10 per cent. Holroyd v. Wyatt, 2 Colly. 537.

19. Biddings opened on an advance of 60*l.* on 430*l.* Bourn v. Bourn, 13 Sim. 189.

20. Biddings were ordered to be opened on an advance of 80*l.* on 775*l.* Cannel v. Hardie, 3 Y. & Coll. 677.

21. The rules which regulate the practice of opening biddings upon a sale of landed estate, do not apply when a colliery is the subject of sale. Williams v. Attenborough, T. & R. 70; 1 L. J., Ch., 138.

Upon an offer to give 10,000*l.* for a colliery sold for 8,850*l.*, a motion to open the biddings refused. Ib.

22. Where part of an estate had been sold in four lots, at sums amounting together to 710*l.*, the biddings were ordered to be opened, and the lots re-sold in one lot, an advance being offered of 160*l.* on the whole amount of 710*l.* Ward v. Cooke, 9 Sim. 87; 7 L. J., N. S., Ch., 150.

23. The biddings allowed to be opened, as to an estate sold in eight lots for different sums, amounting to 300*l.*, on an advance of 120*l.* Humphreys v. Robinson, 11 L. J., N. S., Ch., 399.

24. A lot at a sale under the Court having been sold for 730*l.*, and an advance of 80*l.* having been offered, the biddings were opened on the usual terms, although the application was opposed. Terson v. Hamkins, 18 Jur. 721.

25. A mortgagee of West India estates sold under a fiat, had obtained an order to bid, and was the only bidder for them; they were sold subject to other large incumbrances, the particulars of which were not well ascertained. On a petition to open the biddings, offering more than twice the amount at which the equity of redemption had been knocked down, and payment of the former bidder's costs:—Held, a proper case for such an order, upon terms similar to those adopted in Chancery. Exp. Lee, 1 De G. 628; 12 Jur. 995; 18 L. J., Bk., 6.

Quære, whether the practice in Chancery generally, as to opening biddings, ought to be adopted in bankruptcy. Ib.

26. Where A. attended a sale by auction under the direction of the Court, and bid 2,580*l.* for an estate, which was ultimately knocked down to B. for 2,600*l.*, and the eight days had not elapsed, the Court, on the motion of A., opened the biddings to enable him to give 200*l.* more than B. had bid for the property. Re Jones, 5 Jur., N. S., 1243; 1 L. T., N. S., 186; 1 Giff. 284; 2 L. J., Ch., 139.

27. Order made opening the biddings upon an undertaking to abide by the order of the Court as to the expenses of the re-sale, where the advance was only 9*l.* more than the probable expenses of such re-sale. Bridger v. Penfold, 1 Kay & J. 28; 3 Eq. Rep. 141.

9. Deposit on Opening Biddings.

28. The Court refused to enlarge the time for payment of the deposit by a party applying to open biddings, after the day which had been fixed for such payment; or to make a second order for opening the biddings, on the application of the same party who had failed in paying the deposit under the first order, although the report of the sale had not been confirmed absolutely. Colebrook v. Clarke, 9 L. J., N. S., Ch., 130.

29. There is no invariable rule as to the sum to be paid into court on obtaining an order opening biddings made at a sale directed by the Court; but where a sum of 27,000*l.* was the last bidding made at a sale, a sum of 3,400*l.* was ordered to be paid into court by the applicant on his obtaining an order to open the bidding. Manners v. Furze, 17 L. J., N. S., Ch., 485.

1. Motion, that, on sale of an estate under an order of the Court, the Master might be at liberty to take a deposit on the purchase money to be paid into the hands of the Master's chief clerk, by him to be paid into the bank in the name of the accountant-general, to the credit of the cause, refused. But the Court, on the applicant's solicitor appearing by counsel, and undertaking to pay what he might receive according to the order of the Court, and the applicant himself undertaking to be bound by any order the Court might make in respect of any moneys his solicitor might receive, gave liberty to the Master to fix a deposit, and to direct the purchaser to pay the same to such solicitor, such solicitor to pay the same into court on or before a time appointed by the present order. Lyon v. Colvill, 6 Jur. 680.

2. There is no settled rule in Ireland to regulate the sum which a person must lodge to obtain an order to open a sale. Ford v. Head, 1 Hog. 93.

3. Where biddings have been re-opened, and party opening them does not become the purchaser, he cannot have his deposit re-paid, till report of re-sale is confirmed. Rea v. Hilton, M'Clel. 595.

4. On opening biddings, 10 per cent. to be deposited. Anon., 3 Madd. 494.

5. Upon opening biddings, the Court refused to dispense with deposit, or order a trifling one to be taken upon particular circumstances. Anon., 6 Ves. 513.

6. Where a person who has made a deposit, upon being declared the highest bidder at a sale under a decree, is outbid at a subsequent setting up of the lands to sale, he is entitled to have his deposit back immediately; but for his interests and costs he must wait until the same shall have been completed. Archdall v. Montgomery, Vern. & Scriv. 302.

7. A deposit made on opening a bidding having been laid out in the public funds, this deposit is considered as part of the purchase money paid, and therefore the depositor is not entitled to the dividends accruing between the time of the deposit and the completion of the purchase; but only interest on the deposit at 4 per cent. D'Oyley v. Powis (Countess), 1 Cox 206; 2 Bro. C. C. 33.

8. The deposit made upon opening a bidding is considered as part of the purchase money paid, although, in the event of the depositor not being reported the best bidder, it must be returned to him; and therefore, where the deposit is laid out in the public funds, which rise between the time of the deposit and the purchase being completed, the estate will have the benefit of the rise. Ambrose v. Ambrose, 1 Cox 194.

9. Purchaser who has applied to open the biddings, and upon a re-sale was outbid, allowed, under the special circumstances, interest on his deposit, as well as the costs of the re-sale and of his application to the Court. Filder v. Bellingham, 1 Colly. 526; 9 Jur. 8.

10. Interest must be paid by the new purchaser to the old one on the deposit made by him. Banks v. Banks, 1 W. R. 95, 511.

When biddings are opened, the purchaser is entitled to interest on his deposit at 4 per cent. S. C. 16 Beav. 380.

A party opening biddings must deposit the amount of his advance, but he is not required, in the first instance, to pay into court the amount of the original deposit. Upon his neglect to make the required payment, the order to open biddings will be discharged with costs, to be paid by him. Id.

10. Under the Sales of Land by Auction Act 1867 (30 & 31 Vict., c. 48).

11. In an administration suit an estate was ordered to be sold by auction, but the reserved price not having been reached the sale by auction became inoperative. A subsequent offer to purchase subject to the approval of the Court within ten days was carried in before the chief clerk, who approved of the offer and ordered the contract to be carried out, whereupon the deposit was paid and the abstract delivered. Before the order had been passed and entered, a much higher price was offered. Upon summons to vary the chief clerk's certificate by setting aside the sale and directing the offer for a larger amount to be accepted:—Held, that the certificate of the chief clerk, although not passed and entered, was tantamount to a confirmation of the contract, and that the principle of the Act 30 & 31 Vict., c. 48, s. 7, by which the old practice of opening biddings on a sale by auction was discontinued, except upon the ground of fraud or improper conduct, applied equally to a sale by private contract entered into under the sanction of the Court, and that such a contract could not be discharged, where no unfairness existed. The chief clerk's certificate was therefore confirmed. Re Bartlett, Newman v. Hook, 16 L. R., Ch. D., 561; 50 L. J., Ch., 205; 44 L. T. 17; 29 W. R. 279.

12. Neglect on the part of an auctioneer to ascertain the reserved price before the commencement of a sale is not such "improper conduct in the management of the sale" as will authorize the Court to open the bidding. Brown v. Oakshott, 38 L. J., Ch., 717.

13. In order to entitle parties to open the biddings after a sale by auction under the Court since the passing of the Sales of Land by Auction Act 1867, there must be either fraud or such misconduct as borders on fraud. Delves v. Delves, 20 L. R., Eq., 77; 23 W. R. 499.

On a sale under a decree in an administration suit, a trustee of the testator's will joined with the auctioneer in fixing 3,000*l.* as the reserved price of a lot; and this was the fair market value of the lot. The trustee was the agent of the person who was the only bidder, and purchased at the reserved price. Before the sale the trustee told his employer that he ought to buy the property, and that 3,000*l.* was a fair price; but he did not tell him that this was the reserved price. After the sale an adjoining proprietor offered 4,000*l.*:—Held, that the Court was not warranted in opening the biddings. Id.

14. The rule that, at a sale in a suit by an order of the Court, parties to the suit and their solicitors cannot become purchasers, will not be extended so as to embrace the case of a purchase by a person who, being the solicitor in another suit for persons interested in the proceeds of such sale, has obtained an order to attend the proceedings in the first suit on their behalf, and whose name, without his consent or knowledge, has been placed in the particulars of sale, as that of a person from whom copies and information could be obtained. Guest v. Smythe, 39 L. J., Ch., 536; 5 L. R., Ch., 551; 18 W. R. 742; 22 L. T., N. S., 563.

But if the purchaser's position had been brought within any of the well-established rules of equity, the Court would not have been precluded from opening the sale by reason of the 30 & 31 Vict., c. 48, s. 7. Id.

Employment of Puffer.] See III. III. 3 ante.

11. Costs of Applicant.

1. A re-sale on opening biddings producing considerable increase of price is no ground for giving party his costs of opening biddings. Trefusis v. Clinton, 1 Ves. & B. 361.

2. Person opening biddings, though not purchaser, is in no case entitled to costs. Rigby v. McNamara, 6 Ves. 466.

3. A person who opened biddings, but was not the purchaser, the estates upon the re-sale going considerably higher, cannot on that ground have his costs. Mawlesfield (Earl) v. Blake, 8 Ves. 214.

4. Person who opened biddings, but was not the purchaser, allowed his costs on the special circumstances, having opened them, not on his own account, but for the benefit of the family. Owen v. Foulks, 9 Ves. 348.

5. A person who opened biddings, not being the purchaser, allowed his expenses on the circumstances against the general rule, having interposed at the instance and for the benefit of the family. West v. Vincent, 12 Ves. 6.

6. A relation of the parties entitled to the residue of the estate, if any, obtained an order for opening biddings, but did not become the purchaser of the property on the re-sale. The property was sold at an advance beyond the first price added to the deposits. In the special circumstances of the case the Court allowed the person who opened the biddings his costs. Chapman v. Fowler, 3 Hare 577; 13 L. J., N. S., Ch., 464; 8 Jur. 613.

7. A person who opened a sale with the assent of the parties, for the purpose of preventing a sacrifice of the property, but was not the purchaser, being outbid, allowed the costs of opening the sale on the ground of having benefited the estate. Cuffe v. Young, 9 Ir. Eq. R. 475.

8. A purchaser, at whose application, made on behalf of certain of the parties interested in the subject matter of the suit, the biddings were opened, by which means a considerable advance of price was obtained, and himself outbid, was, under the circumstances, allowed his costs and charges, and interest on his deposit. Filder v. Bellingham, 9 Jur. 8. S. P. Gravenor v. Miles, 9 Jur. 838.

12. Costs of First Purchaser.

9. Bidding opened on terms of paying the former bidder all costs, charges, and expenses, to be settled by the Master. Watts v. Martin, 2 Bro. C. C. 113.

10. A person coming in to open biddings must pay the costs of the former purchaser, and is not entitled to any reimbursement in the event of his being outbid. Chester v. Gorges, 2 Moll. 505.

11. In sales judicial on opening biddings, as to costs of former purchaser. See Farlow v. Weildon, 4 Madd. 460.

12. A person who opens a sale under the decree of the Court, undertaking to pay the former purchaser his costs and interest, will not be released from his undertaking, though the estate be sold to another person at a greater advance of price. O'Beirne v. Macmahon, 2 Jones 589.

13. On opening biddings, the Court in the reference of costs of the purchaser will not give a particular direction for the specific expense. Anon., 2 Ves. J. 286.

14. Biddings were opened upon an advanced price on payment by the applicant of the costs properly incurred of the purchaser:—Held, that the costs of perusing the abstract and of the examination of the title, prior to the first purchase being confirmed, ought not to be allowed on taxation. Raymond v. Lakeman, 34 Beav. 584.

A company, who employed standing solicitors at a fixed salary, became the purchaser under the Court. The biddings were opened on payment by the applicant of the costs of the company:—Held, that the applicant was not, on the taxation, entitled to the benefit of the private arrangement between the company and their solicitors. Id.

13. Order for Re-sale.

15. An order for re-sale, made in consequence of purchaser's default in payment of his money, ought not to discharge him from his purchase, the re-sale being the realisation of a lien, leaving it to the purchaser to make up the deficiency, if any. Harding v. Harding, 4 Myl. & C. 514; 9 L. J., N. S., Ch., 124; 3 Jur. 1164. And see Saunders v. Gray, and Tanner v. Radford, 4 Myl. & C. 515. n.

16. A re-sale of property, sold under a decree, ordered, in case the purchaser did not pay his money into court within a given time; and the purchaser ordered, in that case, to make good the deficiency, and to pay the costs of all the proceedings. Gray v. Gray, 1 Beav. 199.

17. A purchaser under the Court of reversionary interest having made default in completing, a re-sale was ordered, and the purchaser was to make good any deficiency. Before such re-sale, it was discovered that the reversionary interest had previously fallen into possession; the Court gave the purchaser four days to complete his purchase. Robertson v. Shelton, 13 Beav. 91; 19 L. J., N. S., Ch., 561.

18. Nine lots ordered to be resold in one, where the advance offered on such lot was not sufficient to authorise the opening of the biddings for them separately. Humphries v. Roberts, 6 Jur. 680.

19. If, at a sale by auction under the order of the Court, a purchaser sell his purchase for an additional sum beyond his purchase money, the Court will order the property to be re-sold; and semble, that if upon such re-sale the property does not produce the improved price agreed to be given by the sub-purchaser, he will be responsible to the Court for the difference. Holroyd v. Wyatt, 2 Colly. 327.

1. The Master having, on reference, found against the title:—Held, that there must be an order for discharging the purchaser before the Court will give effect to re-sale. Williams v. Wace, C. P. C. 42.

2. Upon the purchase of several lots by the same party, the Court, although it allowed the biddings to be opened, refused to order the re-sale in one lot. Ward v. Cooke, 9 Sim. 87; 7 L. J., N. S., Ch., 150.

3. Where, upon a re-sale, the former purchaser has been over-bid, the Court will not pay him his own fourth until after the deposit by the new purchaser. Anon., Hay. & J. 719.

4. A purchased for B, but without authority, an estate sold under a decree; B died, without adopting the purchase; the order nisi was nevertheless obtained. The Court refused to order B's executor to pay the purchase money, and, on the heir declining the purchase, discharged the order nisi, and directed a re-sale. Lord v. Lord, 1 Sim. 503.

If the executors of a purchaser under a decree refuse to pay the purchase money, they cannot be compelled to pay it, unless a suit be instituted by the heir. Ib.

5. Estate sold before the Master for payment of debts, and A. reported the best bidder. Before the report was confirmed, it was discovered that A. was insane at the time of the bidding. It was moved on behalf of all the parties in the cause, that B., the next best bidder, might be reported the purchaser at the sum bidden by him, and B. consented; but the Court thought this was irregular, and directed the estate to be re-sold generally. Blackbeard v. Lindigren, 1 Cox 205.

6. An estate being directed to be sold by a decree, the conditions of sale fixed a reserved bidding, under which the auctioneer announced a sum, and there being two bidders and an uncertainty as to who had bid, the estate was bought in at another sum. Upon a petition by a person claiming to be the purchaser, that he might be declared the highest bidder, or for a re-sale:—Held, that the auctioneer had no right to fix more than one reserved bidding, nor could a bidder claim a re-sale if the parties interested did not desire it. Notley v. Salmon, 1 W. R. 240.

14. Other Cases.

7. On opening the biddings in the case of property held for lives, the Court imposed the condition that the party opening should be bound by his offer, if no better bidding could be enforced. Walond v. Walond, 8 Beav. 352; 9 Jur. 479.

8. The person who opens the biddings is discharged, if he is outbid at the re-sale. Williams v. Attenborough, T. & R. 70; 1 L. J., Ch., 138.

9. Person opening biddings setting up sham bidders, who are reported best bidders, ordered himself to be best bidder at price he opened biddings. Molesworth v. Optie, 2 Eden 289.

10. Consent of owner of property sold under decree is necessary to a motion to vacate a bidding. Rees v. Briekdale, 8 Price 630.

11. Biddings opened upon a second application by the same person, the purchaser not appearing upon notice. Preston v. Barker, 16 Ves. 140.

12. A purchaser under the Court died before the confirmation of the report:—Held, that it was not necessary to serve his heir with notice of an application to open the biddings. Templer v. Sweet, 8 Beav. 464; 14 L. J., N. S., Ch., 424.

13. An estate was sold in the country subject to a life annuity equal to the rent. After sale, but before the purchaser was declared by the Master, the annuity determined. The Court opened the sale on an advance. O'Hara v. Chains, 8 Ir. Eq. R. 365.

14. In order to set aside a sale under a decree, there must be an affidavit of a greater sum having been offered. Keogh v. Wood, Vern. & Scriv. 118.

15. Where, on an advanced offer being made, after a sale by order of the Court, the property was again put up for sale, and there was no bidding:—Held, that the biddings might be opened again, although an order had been made that the person at whose instance they had been opened before should be allowed to be the purchaser in case there should be no bidding higher than his offer. Erwings v. Waite, 1 L. R., Eq., 440; 12 Jur., N. S., 117; 13 L. T., N. S., 664.

16. On a sale under the Court, two persons agreed not to bid against each other, but that one should bid up to 1,500*l.*, and divide the lot between them. They bought it for 650*l.*:—Held, that this agreement furnished no ground for opening the biddings or annulling the sale. Re Carew, 26 Beav. 187; 38 L. J., Ch., 218.

V. PURCHASE MONEY AND DEPOSIT.

See also XIV. ante.

1. Duty of Auctioneer, 7327.
2. Forfeiture of Deposit, 7328.
3. Payment into Court and Promissory Note (Ireland), 7328.
4. Leave to Pay in, 7329.
5. Order to Pay in, 7330.
6. Payment out of Court, 7331.

1. Duty of Auctioneer.

17. It is the duty of an auctioneer who is nominated to conduct a sale by the Court, to pay any money received by him into court, at all events as between himself and the Court. After certificate, the ordinary course of business is for the solicitors to receive the money from the auctioneer, and themselves pay it into court. Biggs v. Bree, 51 L. J., Ch., 263; 46 L. T. 8; 30 W. R. 278. Affirming 51 L. J., Ch., 64; 45 L. T. 648; 30 W. R. 132.

The practice of the solicitors having the conduct of a sale to pay the deposits into court for the auctioneers is within the ordinary business of a solicitor. An auctioneer sent the deposits received on a sale to the solicitors of the plaintiff, who had the conduct of the sale, to be paid into court. This deposit was received by one of the members of the firm, and misappropriated. On the question whether the auctioneer should not have himself paid this deposit into court, and whether he was not therefore liable to pay it over again:—Held, that the receipt and payment into court of the auctioneer's deposit was within the ordinary business of the solicitors to the party having the conduct of the sale, and that the innocent members of the firm were therefore liable for the defalcation of their partner. Ib.

2. Forfeiture of Deposit.

1. At a sale under a decree by the Court, the conditions provided that, in case of non-payment of the purchase money or other default, there should be a re-sale, and the deficiency, if any, to be made good by the purchaser, but containing no stipulation as to the return or forfeiture of the deposit. The purchaser paid the deposit, and afterwards became bankrupt, and the assignees having declined to complete:—Held, that the deposit was forfeited. Depree v. Beadborough, 4 Giff. 479; 33 L. J., Ch., 134; 9 Jur., N. S., 1317; 12 W. R. 191; 9 L. T., N. S., 532; 3 N. R. 187.

The Court refused to make any order "without prejudice" to the right of the vendors against B. or his assignees, in the event of the re-sale being made at a less price than the original sum. Ib.

Semble, that where the purchaser makes default, no express stipulation is necessary to entitle the vendor to the deposit. Ib.

2. A solicitor who attends a sale and bids for his client, is responsible for the payment of the deposit, and will be attached if it is not paid. A purchaser who refuses to pay the remaining three-fourths of the purchase money on the title being declared good, will be ordered to do so on a certain day, or to forfeit his deposit. Hobhouse v. Hamilton, 1 Hog. 401.

3. Where a purchaser, having lodged the one-fourth of his purchase money, refused to lodge the three-fourths unless the abstract of title was first delivered to him, and no report of good title had been obtained; upon motion by the plaintiff that the lands should be re-sold and the one-fourth forfeited:—Held, first, that the purchaser was not entitled to the abstract. Held further, that no report of good title having been had, the one-fourth could not be forfeited. Warren v. Bateman, Fl. & K. 189.

Semble, if a report of good title had been had, the proper motion would have been that the lands should have been re-sold, the one-fourth to remain as a security to indemnify the estate from all loss and costs attending the re-sale. Ib.

3. Payment into Court and Promissory Note (Ireland).

(a) In General, 7328.

(b) Interest, 7329.

(a) In General.

4. The purchaser who has lodged his purchase money under an order, is entitled, in case the sale does not proceed, to have it back without incurring any risk of fall of the funds, with interest at 6 per cent. The vendor investing it in the funds runs the risk of a fall, whether he does it by order of the Court or not. If the investment is at the purchaser's instance, he may, if the sale goes off, be entitled to the stock in specie. Kirwan v. Blake, 2 Moll. 506.

The bidding at a sale under the Court binds the purchaser, but the Court may receive an outbidding, until the conditional order to confirm the sale is made absolute. The conditional order to confirm the sale cannot be obtained until the bidder has deposited one-fourth of the purchase money. The conditional order to confirm the sale cannot be made absolute till the remaining three-fourths of the purchase money have been paid. Should the title turn out bad, the purchaser will be paid back his purchase money with interest at 6 per cent. But should the purchaser prefer it, he may have the purchase money invested at his own risk expressly. A purchaser who pays in his purchase money is entitled to the rents from the gale day previous to the lodgment of the three-fourths, if the purchase be completed within the current gale from the bidding. S. C. 1 Hog. 151.

5. The purchaser of a reversionary interest under the decree of the Court, is bound to pay interest at the rate of 3l. 10s. per cent. on the three-fourths of his purchase money, from the date of the report of good title, he not having been guilty of any laches up to that period, to the date of the lodgment. Hutchinson v. Cathcart, Jon. & C. 260; 1 Ir. Eq. R. 452.

The rule is the same if the property be in its nature reversionary, though there be a small present profit arising from it. Ib.

Upon obtaining the report of good title it is the duty of the purchaser to bring in the remainder of his purchase money; and if he is afterwards discharged on account of defect of title, he will be entitled to interest thereupon: he is therefore properly chargeable with interest from that time. Ib.

6. A purchaser under the decree of this Court is not entitled to have his objections to the title disposed of before he brings in the whole of the purchase money, and has the sale absolutely confirmed. If, after lodging one-fourth of the purchase money, he delays to complete his purchase, the party having the carriage of the decree may obtain an order that he do bring in the remaining three-fourths within a limited time, or, in default of his so doing, that his one-fourth be forfeited, and that there be a re-sale. It is no objection to the application for such order that there has not been any report upon, or reference as to, the title. Newman v. Fitzgerald, 6 Ir. Eq. R. 258.

7. Where a creditor to the estate is declared the purchaser at a sum less than his demand, he must lodge his promissory note in lieu of the purchase money, in order that the sidebar rule to confirm the sale may be entered. Edwards v. Bachas, 8 Ir. Eq. R. 585.

8. Where lands decreed to be sold, subject to a charge, application on consent to lodge the sum in court refused. Anon., 8 Ir. Eq. R. 514.

9. The Court refused to allow a purchaser to lodge his promissory note in lieu of the three-fourths of his purchase money, upon the allegation that there would be a large surplus, and the inheritor consenting, notice not having been given to all the creditors. Gardiner v. Blesington, 11 Ir. Eq. R. 357.

1. A motion to invest the one-fourth of the purchase money in $3\frac{1}{4}$ per cent. stock, must be upon notice. Lee v. Poole, 2 Ir. Eq. R. 419.

2. In the Exchequer the three-fourths of the purchase money cannot be paid in until the sale is confirmed. Secus in Chancery. Vincent v. Thwaites, 2 Ir. Eq. R. 427.

3. Where a purchaser, having lodged the one-fourth of his purchase money, refused to lodge the three-fourths unless the abstracts of title were first delivered to him, and no report of good title had been obtained, upon motion by the plaintiff that the lands should be re-sold, and that the one-fourth should be forfeited:—Held, that the purchaser was not entitled to the abstract that no report of good title having been had, the one-fourth could not be forfeited. Warren v. Bateman, Fl. & K. 189.

Semble, if a report of good title had been had, the proper motion would have been, that the lands should be re-sold, the one-fourth to remain as a security to indemnify the estate from all loss and costs attending the re-sale. Id.

(b) Interest.

4. Where a purchaser moves on consent to lodge a promissory note in part payment of his purchase money, the consent and note should both specify the rate of interest payable on the note. O'Connor v. Richards, Sau. & Sc. 160.

5. Where a promissory note, payable with interest generally, has been lodged in court, in part payment of purchase money, it will be regarded as a contract between the parties out of court, and the word interest signifies legal interest, and not the court rate of interest. Gibbons v. Berry, Sau. & Sc. 158.

6. A purchaser's promissory note directed to bear interest at 6 per cent. where there were charges upon the estate at that rate of interest, although 5 per cent. was the rate of interest agreed upon. Ferguson v. Eyre, Sau. & Sc. 160. n.

7. Promissory note lodged by purchaser, for purchase money will bear 6 per cent. interest. Anon., 8 Ir. Eq. R. 158.

8. When a purchaser lodges his promissory note for his deposit of one-fourth of his purchase money, he must pay interest on the amount when he completes his purchase. The purchaser's deposit of one-fourth of his purchase money does not bear interest for him until the remaining three-fourths are lodged. Hill v. Kirwan, 1 Hog. 357.

9. The deposit of one-fourth of the purchase money does not bear interest for the purchaser, till the remaining three-fourths are lodged. Kirwan v. Blake, 1 Hog. 151.

10. The purchaser who has lodged his purchase money under an order, is entitled, in case the sale does not proceed, to have it back without incurring any risk of fall of the funds, with interest at 6 per cent. The vendor investing it in the funds runs the risk of a fall, whether he does it by order of the Court or not. If the investment is at the purchaser's instance, he may, if the sale goes off, be entitled to the stock in specie. Kirwan v. Blake, 2 Moll. 506.

11. The purchaser lodged his promissory note for 1,500*l.*, the amount of the purchase money, but was afterwards allowed 281*l.* 2*s.* 4*d.* compensation for a rent-charge to which the estate was found to be liable:—Held, he was chargeable for interest on his note for the difference only. Wilson v. Poe, 8 Ir. Eq. R. 139.

12. A purchaser discharged on a report of bad title is entitled in this court to interest on the one-fourth of the purchase money lodged from the date of the lodgment. Gower v. Hill, Hay. & J. 127.

13. A purchaser who has been discharged from his purchase on report of bad title, is entitled to interest on his one-fourth of the purchase money from the date of its lodgment up to the lodgment of the residue. Lincham v. Cotter, 8 Ir. Eq. R. 104.

14. A purchaser from the assignees of a bankrupt is entitled to receive interest upon his deposit, whether the purchase be proceeded with or not. Re Page, 1 Dr. & Wal. 31.

4. Leave to Pay in.

15. Order directing timber to be sold before Master and purchase money to be paid by instalments. Purchaser desirous of paying purchase money immediately on allowance of discount, the same ordered on consent of defendant. Sitwell v. Sitwell, 4 Madd. 183.

16. A purchaser having bought, under a decree of the Court, property described as tithe free, raised a question on the title, which remained to be decided in the cause, whether the tithe passed under the will of the testator, and applied in the cause for leave to pay the whole of his purchase money into court, and that he might thereupon be let into possession of the purchased property, without prejudice to any application he might thereafter make for compensation, in case a title could not ultimately be made to the *tithe*s. The Court, considering that as a claim to compensation only was asked to be reserved to the purchaser, made an order accordingly. Man v. Ricketts, 5 De G. & Sm. 116.

17. Where the Master's report of the purchase was confirmed absolute, and the purchaser was ready with his money, but the abstract not fully delivered, the Lord Chancellor allowed it to be paid into the bank, to the credit of the cause, and invested, and the accumulating dividend to be invested in like manner; and the accountant-general was to declare the trust thereof, subject to the further order of the Court, without prejudice to any question as to the rents, etc., and interest on the purchase money; the fund not to be transferred without notice to the purchaser. Hindle v. Dakins, C. P. C. 381.

1. Where two purchase one lot jointly, one party will not be permitted to pay into court his moiety of the purchase money. Darkin v. Marye, 1 Anstr. 22.

(b) Without Prejudice.

2. Purchaser, under circumstances, allowed to pay his purchase money into court, and to be let into possession and receipt of the rents and profits, without prejudice to any subsequent objection which he might make to the title. Marfell v. Rudge, 2 Y. & Coll. 566; 2 Jur. 78.

3. A purchaser under the Court will not be allowed to take possession, "without prejudice to objections to the title," even upon payment of his purchase money into court. Hutton v. Mansell, 2 Beav. 260.

4. Purchase money may be paid into court without prejudice to acceptance of title, but purchaser will not be let into possession. Morris v. Bull, 17 L. J., N. S., Ch., 9; 12 Jur. 4.

5. A purchaser under the decree of the Court is never let into possession till he has approved the title. Williams v. Shaw, 3 Russ. 178; 3 L. J., Ch., 157.

6. Applications of purchasers to pay purchase money into court, and to be let into possession, without prejudice to objections to the title, are always refused. Rutter v. Marriott, 10 Beav. 33.

7. A purchaser having bought under a decree of the Court property described as tithe free, raised a question on the title, which remained to be decided in the cause, whether the tithe passed under the will of the testator, and applied in the cause for leave to pay the whole of his purchase money into court, and that he might thereupon be let into possession of the purchased property, without prejudice to any application he might thereafter make for compensation, in case a title could not ultimately be made to the tithes. The Court, considering that a claim to compensation only was asked to be reserved to the purchaser, made an order accordingly. Man v. Ricketts, 5 De G. & Sm. 116.

8. In this case the purchaser, finding that the vendor had failed to deliver an abstract, set apart his purchase money, and gave notice to the vendor:—Held, that the purchaser did this in his own wrong, the conduct of the vendor having rendered it unnecessary for him to pay the purchase money until a good title was shown. De Visme v. De Visme, 1 Macn. & G. 336; 1 H. & Tw. 408; 19 L. J., N. S., Ch., 52; 13 Jur. 1037. Reversing 18 L. J., N. S., Ch., 159; 13 Jur. 205.

It is the rule of the Court, on a special case being made out, to receive from the purchaser his purchase money, without compelling him to accept the title. Id.

9. Notwithstanding the general rule, the Court may, under special circumstances, permit a purchaser to pay his purchase money into court before he has accepted the title; but in such cases express provision must be made against his taking possession, until he shall have accepted the title. Dempsey v. Dempsey, 1 De G. & Sm. 691.

10. Property was sold under a decree, subject to conditions, one of which was that the purchase money was to be paid into court on or before the 30th November, or that interest should be paid from that time at 5l. per cent. The abstract was not delivered till October 18th, and the deeds were in the hands of mortgagees, who declined producing them without payment. On the purchaser's application on the 15th December, the Court allowed him to pay in the principal and interest up to that day, without prejudice to any question and without acceptance of title. Rutley v. Gill, 3 De G. & Sm. 640.

11. Held, that a purchaser under a decree could not be permitted to pay his purchase money into court, without accepting the title, although all parties consent, and although the conditions provide that, if from any cause whatever the money shall not be paid by a particular day, the purchaser making default shall pay interest from that day. Denning v. Henderson, 1 De G. & Sm. 689; 16 L. J., N. S., Ch., 178; 11 Jur. 687.

12. In sales under a decree, it is irregular to pay the purchase money to the party; it ought to be paid into court. Bennett v. Hamill, 2 Sch. & Lef. 581.

13. Motion against purchasers in the Master's office, to pay in their purchase money, refused: the estate sold being copyhold limited for life, and then in remainder, and the remainderman being abroad, he not having surrendered. Noel v. Weston, Coop. 138.

14. Upon a sale under the Court, an order upon the purchaser to pay his purchase money into court cannot be obtained until the title has been accepted, or the Master's report obtained in its favour; and such an order, obtained before such acceptance or report upon affidavit of service of the notice of motion, was discharged with costs. Applications of purchasers to pay purchase money into court, and to be let into possession, without prejudice to objections to the title, are always refused. Rutter v. Marriott, 10 Beav. 33.

15. Where property was sold under an order of the Court, in which the plaintiff was interested to the extent of one-eighth part, and three of the defendants, who were interested in the other shares, and were in possession of the property, became the purchasers of part of the property, they were required to pay the whole amount of their purchase money into court; and that notwithstanding there were incumbrances upon the property, and the purchasers claimed to be entitled to allowances for improvements. Bulmer v. Allison, 15 L. J., N. S., Ch., 11. Affirming 8 Jur. 440.

16. A mortgage debt and securities were voluntarily assigned by W. to two trustees in strict settlement, but the trustees did not execute the deed, and they refused to act in the matter of the trusts. W., under a power contained in the settlement, appointed two other parties to be trustees, but the deed contained no assignment to them. One of the new trustees executed the deed, but the other did not, nor did he act in the trusts, except by signing a written consent to a sale of the property. Afterwards mortgagees instituted a suit, and obtained a decree for sale, but the executrix of W., the two new trustees, and the cestuis que trustent were not parties to the suit. The solicitor of the executrix and one of the trustees attended the proceedings in chambers, and counsel subsequently appeared for them in court, and the trustee, in writing, consented to a sale. B. was certified to be the purchaser of the estate, but he objected to pay the purchase money into court, on the ground that the cestuis que trustent were not sufficiently represented. The Court overruled the objection, and directed a conveyance to the purchaser by the trustees, it not being necessary that the cestuis que trustent should be parties to the conveyance. Watters v. Jones, 6 Jur., N. S., 530.

1. When the purchaser of property under an administration decree declined to complete his purchase upon the ground of non-concurrence in a previous sale of one of two persons' interest in the purchase money:—Held, that he must nevertheless bring the purchase money into court, the objection being one of conveyance and not of title. Matson v. Deanes, 4 De G. J. & S. 345.

(b) Order. How Obtained.

2. The usual order for the payment of purchase money into court (of property sold under the decree of the Court, where there is no question as to title), is an order to be obtained at chambers. Davenport v. Davenport, 1 W. R. 4, 12; 9 Hare (App.) i.; 22 L. J., Ch., 11; 16 Jur. 988.

3. The Court will not, under any circumstances, suffer money paid in by a purchaser of an estate sold under its order to be paid out to a mortgagee, until a proper conveyance shall have been executed to purchaser. Rees v. Adam, 9 Price 660.

4. In a suit for payment of creditors, the real estates of testator were ordered to be sold; A., being reported the purchaser of one of the estates for 14,480*l.*, entered in possession and accepted the title, and proper conveyances were executed; on application by the creditors to have the purchase money paid out, the purchaser stated, that the tenants of the estate had been served with a writ of right at the suit of a person who claimed the whole estate under an adverse title; but the Court thought, that the purchaser, having accepted the title, etc., could not prevent the money being paid out of court, and ordered it accordingly. Thomas v. Powell, 2 Cox 394.

5. An estate was sold to a party to a suit, for payment of the testator's debts, and which, by the disclaimer of a trustee, was vested in the heir pur autre vie, with legal remainder to the children of A. (who was living) as tenants in common. The purchase money was in court. The case appeared not to be within the 1 Will. 4, c. 47, so that no effective conveyance could be made until the death of A.:—Held, that the purchase money ought not to be distributed. Heming v. Archer, 9 Beav. 366; 10 Jur. 169.

6. Where an estate has been sold under the direction of the Court, and the purchasers have paid the money into court, no part of the purchase money will be ordered without the consent of the purchasers to be paid, even in the discharge of incumbrances affecting the estate, till conveyances to them have been executed, although the delay in executing the conveyances should have arisen from their own negligence. Beven v. Beven, 1 L. J., Ch., 159.

7. Whilst conditional orders for attachments are depending against plaintiff and defendant for not executing the deeds of conveyance to the purchaser, the creditors who came in under the decree cannot be paid out of the purchase money, though the purchaser has gone into possession, but the Court will give them leave to proceed on their security. Ormsby v. Nicholson, Vern. & Scriv. 115.

8. The plaintiff can draw out the purchase money only when he has delivered the deed executed by all necessary parties, or in their default by the Master, under an order for that purpose, to the purchaser, and an injunction with it to put him into possession. Therefore, Court refused this motion. Farrell v. Irwin, 2 Moll. 511. And see Massey v. Massey, id. 511.

9. A purchaser under a decree, who has gone into possession, cannot prevent the purchase money being paid out, by alleging that the landlord claims title to the premises because of a forfeiture, and threatens to bring an ejectment for them; the Court having previously overruled an exception, taken by the purchaser to the report of good title, founded upon that defect in the title. Sparrow v. Cooper, 1 Jones 72.

10. The Court having ordered certain small leaseholds to be sold and the proceeds distributed, together with a fund in court, among numerous parties, upon the certificate of the chief clerk, in order to save expense, directed the purchasers to be served with a summons to show cause at chambers why the proceeds should not be distributed pursuant to the order; and no cause having been shown, the proceeds were distributed by the chief clerk. Thorp v. Owen, 2 Sm. & G. (App.) i.

(b) Rights of Purchaser after Conveyance Executed.

1. Where a sale takes place under a decree and the purchase money is paid into court, and the purchaser discovering an incumbrance does not prosecute a requisition made in consequence, but executes the conveyance, he can stand in no better position than an ordinary purchaser, and cannot interfere with the distribution of the proceeds. Where certain defendants are dismissed with costs, and register the order dismissing them, they can claim no lien on the fund. Miller v. Pridden, 5 W. R. 171; 26 L. J., Ch., 183; 3 Jur., N. S., 78.

(c) To Incumbrancers.

2. A. having a lien on the testator's estate, established his debt under the decree, but his claim for interest was disallowed by the Master, whose report stood confirmed. The estate was sold, subject to A.'s lien; and A., having refused to accept from the purchaser his principal without interest, was not allowed to participate as a creditor in the purchase money. Hempstead v. Hempstead, 4 Beav. 423.

3. A judgment creditor not deprived of his lien on the estate in the hands of a purchaser under a decree, by not proving his debt before the Master, in pursuance of advertisements for that purpose, his legal right to enforce payment of the judgment not being in the least affected by the decree. Barrett v. Blake, 2 Ball & B. 354.

The only inconvenience to a judgment creditor not proving before the Master under a decree, is, that he loses the benefit of having his debt discharged out of the produce of the sale under the decree. Id. 357.

4. Where lands are sold under a decree, the purchaser is entitled to have all judgments paid out of the purchase money satisfied on record; but where a judgment creditor went in and filed a charge under a decree to which the plaintiff filed a discharge, and the Master's report did not find anything due on foot of the judgment, the purchaser, notwithstanding the death of the judgment creditor, was not entitled to have the judgment satisfied, nor lands released, as the filing of the charge made the creditor a quasi party. Fitzgerald v. Lane, 3 Ir. Eq. R. 339.

Where a judgment creditor comes in under a consent order, after the final decree, and the Master finds against the judgment as being barred by the Statute of Limitations, the Master's report must be made up and confirmed; otherwise, the purchaser under the decree will be entitled to have the judgment satisfied, or a release executed. Id.

5. Parties to the suit, and all persons coming in under the decree, will be enjoined from disturbing the purchaser. If fifty judgment creditors come in, and only a few can be paid, others are restrained. Where there is original jurisdiction (as in carrying a trust into execution), if the old judgment creditors will not come in, they are restrained from proceeding against those lands in future. Stackpoole v. Curtis, 2 Moll. 504.

6. Where a deficient fund is produced by a title under a decree, and judgment creditors having a lien upon the legal estate paise to the reported incumbrances, refuse to prove under the decree, or to release lands; if the purchaser, who relies on those judgments as objections to the title, will not consent to be discharged, the proper course is to apply for a reference as to title. Barrett v. Birmingham, Sau. & Sc. 419.

7. Prior judgment creditor, who neglected to come in and prove before final decree for a sale, directed to obtain a report, and then apply to extend the sale to cover his demand; a motion to amend the minutes being refused. Purchaser under the decree, after such a motion, could not plead want of notice, and, although he had the legal estate, would, it appears, be liable, if, having notice of such prior judgment creditor, he allowed the purchase money to be applied to subsequent incumbrances, contrary to the order of priority of charge. Leake v. Moore, 2 Moll. 127.

8. A judgment creditor, having obtained a decree for a sale in the Court of Chancery, the lands having been sold under a prior decree in the Exchequer, was allowed to file a charge under the decree to account in the Exchequer, on foot of his demand, as decreed in Chancery, and the remembrancer and registrar were directed to amend the report and final decree by inserting his demand, if it should be proved. Pidgeon v. D'Alton, Jon. & C. 276.

9. Though the purchaser objects that there are several outstanding judgments not proved in the cause, this Court will, at the instance of the party having the carriage of the decree, refer it to the Master to ascertain the sums due under the decree, and to allocate the purchase money without prejudice to the purchasers, insisting that the said purchase money shall not be paid out until a clear title shall have been made, and under peril of the costs of reference in default of such title. Greene v. Elliott, 1 Ir. Eq. R. 207.

(d) Of Surplus after Discharge of Incumbrances.

10. The surplus fund, after payment of the sums decreed, will not be paid to the defendant, unless it appears that he has not specifically pledged it. According to the mode of executing decrees for sales in the Master's office, the defendant is allowed to select the parts of his estate to be first sold. Lord Eldon's decision, that there must be a reference to the Master to inquire whether the parties interested in funds to be invested in land had in any manner incumbered their interests before the money can be paid to them, has always been followed in this country. St. Antonio v. Adderly, 2 Hog. 6.

11. Surplus arising from sale of real estate under a decree for payment of all incumbrances (notice to creditors to come in being given by advertisement), after payment of all charges proved thereunder paid out to the inheritor; Master of the Rolls holding that the surplus fund retaining the character of land is subject to the lien of creditors subsequent to the report, and being in custodiâ legis, that the Court will be active for the protection of the person who can show the right without reference to the parties in the case, and, therefore, directed a further advertisement for all persons having charges, judgments, or incumbrances, affecting the lands which produced the residue. Order varied on appeal, Lord Chancellor being clear, that the Court has no jurisdiction to go out of the record in favour of creditors, but inclining to sustain the order for the protection of the purchaser; but it appearing that, according to the practice, in respect of sales under decrees, bonâ fide purchaser is never liable to answer subsequent creditors, made the order to pay out the surplus upon an affidavit that no specific lien had been given upon the money without advertisement. St. Antonio v. Adderley, 2 Moll. 117.

(e) Retainer of Part.

1. The purchaser of a copyhold estate, devised, subject to payment of debts, in trust for sale, and sold, during the infancy of the heir, under the usual decree, is not entitled to have a portion of the purchase money retained in Court, as a provision for defraying the expense of the fine, which would become payable on the death of the heir before a conveyance. Morris v. Clarkson, 3 Swan. 558.

(f) Liability to see to Application of Purchase Money.

2. Purchaser or mortgagee under a decree, for sale or mortgage, and payment of creditors, answerable for the application of the money, if not paid into court. So, also, if the debts are specified in a schedule, etc., by the will. Lloyd v. Baldwin, 1 Ves. 173.

3. A purchaser, under a decree, is not affected by irregularities and defects in the decree by which the application of the money may not have been properly secured. Curtis v. Price, 12 Ves. 89.

4. A purchaser of lands sold under a decree is not bound to see to the application of the purchase money. Blake v. Blake, 5 Ir. Eq. R. 596.

5. Purchaser, under a decree, bound to see directions of decree observed. Colclough v. Sterum, 3 Bligh 181.

(g) Practice on.

6. The purchase money of an estate sold under decree in a suit paid into court to the credit of the cause, becomes the fund of all parties to the suit:—Held, therefore, that they were properly served with a petition respecting such purchase money. De Visme v. De Visme, 1 Maon. & G. 336; 1 H. & Tw. 408; 19 L. J., N. S., Ch., 52; 13 Jur. 1037. Reversing 18 L. J., N. S., Ch., 159; 13 Jur. 205.

7. Principles on which Court acts in suits to impeach purchases made under a decree. Thornhill v. Glover, 3 Dr. & War. 196.

8. A sale under a decree in a creditors' suit, subject to certain specified defects, deteriorating the value of the estates, but which the creditor had no means of getting rid of by any suit, not set aside. Fisher v. Barry, Beat. 139.

9. Under a decree directing the sale of an estate, which, as against T., one of the defendants, was only a decree nisi, and before the decree was made absolute, the estate was sold, and A. was reported the purchaser: afterwards, on the application of A., an order was made by the Vice-Chancellor, discharging him from the purchase on the ground that the decree was not absolute as against T.; the plaintiff immediately gave notice of a motion before the Lord Chancellor to discharge that order, and that motion having stood over a considerable time, the decree was made absolute as against T., before it was heard:—Held, that the purchaser was entitled to be discharged at the time when the application was made, and that he, having been once discharged by an order which was right at the time when it was pronounced, the contract could not be revived by the proceedings subsequently taken by the vendor to make the decree perfect. Coster v. Turner, 1 Russ. & M. 311; 8 L. J., Ch., 98.

10. A motion by a person, who, in consequence of a direction to his agent to bid one pound more than any other bidder, had been declared tenant at a very high rent, to be discharged from his bidding, was refused with costs. Mahon v. Hammond, Sau. & Sc. 689.

11. A solvent person, who had directed his agent to bid 1*l.* more than any other person at the letting under the Court, will not be discharged from his bidding, although it may be much above the real value. An option was given to the applicant to have the lands set up again, without discharging him from his bidding, and subject to his making compensation for any difference between the two lettings. Coote v. Coote, Sau. & Sc. 623; 2 Ir. Eq. R. 159.

Semble, if the applicant could have shown that the person who bid against him was employed merely to raise the rent, or had any ill will against him, or was in collusion with any of the parties, his application to be discharged might have been granted. Ib.

After inquiry by the solicitor of the inheritor, who was a minor, the rent was reduced, by consent, from 26*l.* to 20*l.* per annum. Ib.

12. A purchaser of two lots, as to one of which the biddings were opened, released from his bidding for the other lot, upon his undertaking to pay the costs of the re-sale. Gregg v. Glover, 1 Ir. Eq. R. 211.

1. Purchaser before a Master submitting to forfeit his deposit, not bound to proceed in the purchase. Savile v. Savile, 1 P. W. 745. But see id. 747.

2. The Court refused to discharge the solicitor in the cause from a purchase before the Master, with the view of preventing a sale at under-value. Neilthorpe v. Pennymann, 14 Ves. 517.

3. Where the vendor had no title to a small portion of the land contracted for, but such defect was not discovered till after the contract, the Court refused, with costs, a motion by the purchaser to be discharged from his contract, without giving the vendor an opportunity of acquiring a title to the portion. Chamberlain v. Lee, 10 Sim. 444.

4. When difficulties arise to delay the completion of a sale had under a decree, and during the interval of making out the title ordinary dilapidation takes place, that is a case for compensation; but if a destruction of ornamental timber, that is a ground for the purchaser to apply to be discharged. Magennis v. Fallon, 2 Moll. 585.

5. An estate having been sold, in which the petitioners were interested, it was represented to them that a good title could not be made; and they were induced to give a brief to counsel to consent to the purchaser being discharged; they subsequently discovered circumstances which led them to conclude they had been deceived, and that, in fact, a good title could be made, and thereupon petitioned the Court that the order might be discharged. The Court discharged the order, giving the purchaser his costs, and referring it to the Master to inquire whether a good title could be made. The solicitor for the petitioner to have the conduct of the inquiry. Butter v. O'maney, 1 Taml. 344.

6. Purchaser discharged on motion upon affidavit of imprisonment for debt and insolvency. Hodder v. Ruffin, 1 Ves. & B. 544.

7. Where a property was set up for sale, by an auctioneer in the country, first in lots, then part of it in batches of some lots together, then the whole together, the auctioneer, having stated that he would receive biddings, and that the Master would declare the purchaser, a person, who was the highest bidder for a batch of some lots, and afterwards for the whole, was held to his bidding for the lots, though he was misled by the mode of selling, and intended to bid for the whole. O'Grady v. Boady, 11 Ir. Eq. R. 400.

8. An estate having been sold under a decree for payment of incumbrances, part of the purchase money was applied in payment of interest accrued due during the possession of a tenant for life. There had been an agreement respecting the sale with the tenant for life, and he also obtained a lease of part of the property. On a bill filed by the next remainderman in tail, the Court refused to set aside the sale, but referred it to the Master to inquire if the sale was at an under-value, and if so, that the purchaser's representatives should pay the difference into court, and that the tenant for life should pay into court so much of the produce of the sale as the Master should find had been applied in discharge of interest accrued during the possession of the tenant for life. Townsend v. Warren, 6 Ir. Eq. R. 620; 1 J. & L. 221. n.

2. For Defects of Title. In General.

9. After the purchaser of an estate, sold under a decree, had approved of the title, a deed was discovered, which showed that the plaintiffs could not make a title to more than a moiety of the estate. The Court discharged the purchaser from his purchase. Ward v. Trathen, 14 Sim. 82; 8 Jur. 303.

10. The purchaser under a decree having objected to the title for want of parties to the suit, an application on behalf of the plaintiff that the purchaser might be discharged from his purchase, refused. Conyers v. Crosbie, 7 Ir. Eq. R. 401.

11. Where a Master had reported that a good title could not be made to certain lots which had been sold under a decree in the cause, a purchaser of other lots, which were held under the same title, but who had not obtained any order of reference of the title as to those lots, was discharged, upon motion, from his purchase, and his costs and expenses ordered to be paid out of the funds in court, without any reference as to the title; and that, although some of the parties to the suit were infants. Lewis v. Lewis, 9 L. J., N. S., Ch., 176.

12. A purchaser of real estate at a sale in the Court of Bankruptcy will not be discharged from his purchase on objections to title, where the abstract of title posted in the Court contains express notice of the defects objected to:—Held, also, that where title cannot be made out to small portions of the estate the purchaser will not be discharged, but will be entitled to compensation pro tanto only, unless he can show that the deficient portion was essential to the proper enjoyment of the whole, or that it constituted his main object in entering into the contract. Exp. Gethin, Re Smith, Ll. & G. temp. Plunk. 429.

Difference in practice between sales in bankruptcy and sales under decrees of courts of equity. Id.

13. A purchaser of lands, sold under the decree, and described in the rental as held under a lease that would expire on the 1st of June then next, discharged from his purchase, it subsequently appearing that the tenant of part of the lands was entitled, under an equitable article, to a reversionary lease for four lives. Linsahan v. Cotter, 7 Ir. Eq. R. 176.

14. Under a decree for sale, made in a suit for the administration of a testator's assets, A. became, in 1813, the purchaser of certain lots, and, after a long resistance to the title, was, in 1824, compelled to pay the purchase money into court, and was let into possession two years afterwards; and before the conveyances were executed, having discovered, by means of the information of third parties, a circumstance which constituted a material defect in the title, and which, there was reason to believe, had been long before known to the solicitor of the plaintiff, he obtained a reference back to the Master; the Master reported against the title; to the report exceptions were taken, and before the exceptions came on to be heard the vendors had cured the defect:—Held, that the purchaser had a right to be discharged from his contract, and that a further reference of title ought not to be directed. Dalby v. Pullen, 1 Russ. & M. 296; 8 L. J., Ch., 74; 8 Sim. 29.

1. M. purchases leaseholds at an auction under a decree in a suit in which a receiver has been appointed, and it is provided by the conditions that the receipt of rent up to the time fixed for completing the purchases shall be conclusive evidence of the fulfilment of the covenants by the lessee. There being no one to assign the lease by reason of the non-appointment of trustees, the vendors let a policy against fire drop (which is covenanted by the lease to be kept up) by non-payment of the premiums from the time fixed to complete the purchase. On motion by the purchaser to be discharged, order made, on the ground that up to the time of actual completion a vendor must preserve the title unimpeachable. Palmer v. Goren, 4 W. R. 688.

2. The plaintiff having obtained an order for sale in the suit, put up a lot described as being in the occupation of C., at a yearly rent of 42l. It appeared that C. was holding as tenant under another party, hostilely to the vendor. The Court discharged the purchaser, and directed the plaintiff to pay his costs, and refused to give time to the vendor to recover the premises by ejectment. Lauchlan v. Reynolds, 2 Eq. Rep. 713.

3. Purchaser under decree of two-sevenths of estate in one lot is not obliged to take one-seventh to which only title can be made. Roffey v. Shalloross, 4 Madd. 227.

4. In general, objection, on the part of a purchaser of two lots, to the completion of his agreement, on the ground that the title to one is bad, is not such as ought to be discussed upon motion. Casamajor v. Strode, Coop. temp. Brough. 510.

5. The doctrine of compensation ought not to be extended. Jurisdiction has been exercised in giving compensation founded on the minuteness of the object compared with the estate sold, and not upon any jurisdiction to find and adjust pecuniary equivalents, where essential parts of the contract cannot be performed. The Master's certificate of the sale and the printed rental are analogous to the minute of the contract on a private sale. The purchaser of several denominations in one lot will be discharged on motion, if the Master reports that a good title cannot be made to one of the denominations. Prendergast v. Byre, 2 Hog. 81.

6. Defendants in a cause, where there has been a sale under a decree, ought to be served with the petition of a purchaser to be discharged from his purchase. In September 1848 a purchaser bought under a decree, and by his requisitions on the title required a receipt to be given by a trustee having power to give receipts, but who was by mistake stated in the pleadings to have disclaimed, and was not a party to the cause. Afterwards the purchaser required that the trustee should be brought before the Court by supplemental bill. In the course of the discussion on these subjects, it was objected by the purchaser that an additional cestui que trust ought to have been brought before the Court. The plaintiff acceded to this, and promised that the defects complained of should be supplied and remedied by a proper supplemental suit, and petition of re-hearing, in which (as all parties were amicable) a decree might be obtained in three weeks.

This took place in March 1849. The purchaser, in answer to the proposal, declined waiting any longer, and demanded back his deposit and costs. He then presented a petition to be discharged from his purchase, but before the petition came on to be heard the defects in the suit had been supplied:—Held, not a case for discharging the purchaser. Sherwood v. Beveridge, 3 De G. & Sm. 425; 13 Jur. 1042.

7. A purchaser, under a decree, will be compelled to take a title which depends on adverse possession, under the Statute of Limitations, although the fact of such adverse possession is evidenced merely by affidavit in the Master's office, and was not at issue in the suit. Scott v. Nison, 2 Con. & L. 185; 3 Dr. & War. 388; 6 Ir. Eq. R. 8.

Held, that it was no objection to the title, that the facts constituting adverse possession were proved by affidavit, and in the absence of the heir. Id.

8. When the purchaser of an interest sold under a decree of the Court, acquires by that means a knowledge of a defect in the title to that interest, and afterwards buys up the estate of the person interested in taking advantage of that defect, the Court will not allow him to rely on the doctrine that a purchaser is not obliged to take a doubtful title, in support of an objection to the title founded on that defect. Sheppard v. Doolan, 5 Ir. Eq. R. 6; 3 Dr. & War. 1. And see S. C. Fl. & K. 598; 4 Ir. Eq. R. 654.

Quære, whether, if the objections were valid, the Court will allow him to rely on it. Id.

9. Lands were set up as held under a clear and indefeasible title in fee-simple, and it appeared that they had been conveyed forty years before, reserving a right to cut turf and quarry limestone to tenants of another estate, although the right had never been since exercised, and there were no turf bogs worked or quarries open on the estate; but it did not appear that there might not be turf, and there was no proof that there was not limestone:—Held, a good objection to the title, and the purchaser discharged. The rental at the sale contained an obscure statement, leaving it doubtful whether a tenant held for lives named in 1804 or 1843; it proved to be the latter, and the purchaser swore he had been misled:—Held, a sufficient ground for discharging the purchaser. Martin v. Cotter, 9 Ir. Eq. R. 351; 3 J. & L. 496. Affirming 9 Ir. Eq. R. 44.

10. A purchaser under a decree of leaseholds presented a petition to be discharged from his purchase, on the ground that a share in the property had been bequeathed upon trusts, and that the bequest appeared, by inference from the pleadings, to have been assented to; but that some of the cestuis que trustent were infants, and were not before the Court. The assent was disputed:—Held, that the purchaser was not entitled at once to be discharged, but only to a reference to the Master as to title. Whitfield v. Loqueutre, 3 De G. & Sm. 464.

11. If an account to be taken in a suit to be instituted is necessary to complete the title to lands sold under a decree, the purchaser, if he desires it, must be discharged. He cannot be held until a subsidiary cause is brought, however speedily, to a determination; but where the party had instituted such a suit, yielding to the suggestion of the Court, it was:—Held, that he was not shut out by his acquiescence from showing on appeal that it was unnecessary;—conforming to the opinion of the Court, not binding the party complying with it not to controvert it. Magenis v. Fallon, 2 Moll. 561.

1. A purchaser was discharged from his purchase on the ground of misrepresentation, the lands having been set up to be sold as held under written agreements for leases, and it appearing upon inquiry subsequent to the sale that the agreements were merely parol. Bessonnet v. Robins, Sau. & Sc. 142.

2. A purchaser bought the lease of certain premises under the decree of the Court, and entered into possession and paid the purchase money into court. Afterwards the lessors instituted a suit against the original lessee for the purpose of altering the lease in a material particular:—Held, that the Court would not compel the purchaser to complete the purchase until that suit was decided, although he had notice at the time of accepting the title that there were grounds for the lessor's claim. Bentley v. Craven, 1 W. R. 362, 401.

3. Trustees of copyholds vested in them by a private Act of Parliament take a surrender from the tenants for life, and sell under a decree subject to certain leases, and petition for payment of the purchase money into court. The purchaser objects that they had not the legal estate, having only taken a surrender from tenants for life, and the Court had therefore no jurisdiction. The leases also were void, and therefore the sale was at an undervalue:—Held, that the Act vesting the property in the trustees overrules the surrender, that the Court therefore had jurisdiction, and no one could object to the sale but the purchaser, who would gain by it. But as it was a fair question, the costs must come out of the estate. Dixon v. Wilkinson, 1 W. R. 513; 1 Eq. Rep. 566; 22 L. J., Ch., 981.

4. Conditions of sale, settled by the Court in 1871, provided that a conveyance on a sale made by B. in 1838 should be the root of title; that no objection or requisition should be made with respect to earlier title, and that recitals in deeds twenty years old should be conclusive evidence of the instruments recited. That conveyance purported to recite the will, but stopped short of the final gift over, thus showing a good title to the fee in B.:—Held, that a purchaser under the Court was not precluded from showing that B.'s title under the will was defective, and that he was entitled to be freed from his contract, and to get all his costs. Elae v. Elae, 13 L. R., Eq., 196; 41 L. J., Ch., 213; 25 L. T. 927; 20 W. R. 286.

5. Upon a sale under the order of the Court, the purchaser will not be compelled to accept an equitable title without the legal estate being got in, except, perhaps, in a case where a dry legal estate is outstanding in an infant. Freeland v. Pearson, 7 L. R., Eq., 246.

6. A purchaser cannot take an objection that the Court has miscarried in exercising its jurisdiction. Waters v. Waters, 15 W. R. 191; 15 L. T., N. S., 406; 36 L. J., Ch., 195.

Construction of Special Conditions. In General.] See VI. ante—XI. IV. ante.

3. Objections. Outstanding Incumbrances and Judgments.

7. A purchaser cannot be compelled to accept a title without having judgments against the person in whom the legal estate is vested satisfied. Semble, even where a purchaser can get a clear legal estate, he will not be compelled to accept the title without having judgments entered after the execution of a deed, conveying such legal estate, satisfied; he having notice of such judgments. Piers v. Piers, Sau. & Sc. 379. Affirmed Dr. & Wal. 265.

A purchaser under a decree will not be held to his purchase except all parties having judgments, etc., appearing on record against the vendor, whether prior or subsequent to the claim, for the raising of which the bill was filed, are brought before the Court so as to bind their rights. Id.

8. To make title under a decree for a sale of lands in a judgment creditor's suit, every incumbrancer whose demand is, prior to the last incumbrance, provided for by the decree, must be satisfied or be brought before the Court. Ponsonby v. Ponsonby, 2 Hog. 201.

This rule has now, by Piers v. Piers (Sau. & Sc. 379, and 1 Dr. & Wal. 264) been extended to every judgment creditor puisne to those provided for by the statute. Id.

9. When it is ascertained that there are prior judgment creditors who will not come in and prove their demands under a decree, they ought to be made parties to the suit by supplemental bill, that their rights may be bound by the decree for a sale. It is not the practice in Ireland to make subsequent judgment creditors parties to a bill for a sale. Johas v. French, 1 Hog. 450.

10. Where a deficient fund has been produced by a sale under a decree, and judgment creditors having a lien on the legal estate, puisne to the reported incumbrances, refuse to prove under the decree, or to release the lands; if the purchaser who relies on those judgments as objections to the title will not consent to be discharged, the proper course is to apply for a reference as to title. Barrett v. Birmingham, Sau. & Sc. 419.

11. There was a decree of the Court for the sale of a testator's estate for payment of his simple contract creditors. Lot 4 was sold, and the purchaser objected to the title, that there were unsatisfied judgments against the heir-at-law of the testator, upon whom lot 4 had descended:—Held, that this was a good objection, the judgment creditors of the heir-at-law not being parties to the suit, and although this Court might, upon the application of the purchaser, restrain the judgment creditors from extending their elegit. Parkinson v. Piper, 8 Jur. 1111.

12. The purchaser under a decree in a creditor's suit objected to the title, on the ground that there were certain outstanding judgments confessed by the defendant before the filing of the bill, which afterwards, pending the cause, were revived and re-docketed under Moore's Act, and that they were not bound by the decree. The Master overruled the objection, being of opinion that the judgments in sci. fa. were to be considered as new and original judgments, that the first were gone, and that the others, having been obtained pendente lite, did not affect the title to be conveyed to the purchaser. Upon exceptions to the report of good title:—Held, that they should be allowed, that the judgments in sci. fa. were not to be considered as creating new rights, but merely as revivals of rights under the original judgments, and that the purchaser's objection to the title should therefore be allowed. Newman v. Fitzgerald, 6 Ir. Eq. R. 260.

1. Purchaser under decree, with notice of judgments intervening between incumbrances ordered to be paid, is bound by them, unless persons in whom they are vested are parties to cause, or come in and prove under decree. Steele v. Phillips, 1 Hog. 49.

2. Lands were subject by a settlement to 1,800*l.*, secured by a term of one hundred, and by subsequent will to 4,200*l.*, secured by another term of ninety-nine, years, as portions for younger children, of whom the plaintiff and A. were two. By the will the lands were devised, subject to the two terms, after prior limitations, to A. for life, remainder to his first and other sons in tail. A. being in possession, a bill was filed to raise the two sums, to which a minor tenant in tail, born afterwards, was made a party by supplemental bill. The Master reported interest accrued on the two charges during the possession of A. The final decree confirmed the report, and declared the sums reported charges on the terms of one hundred years and ninety-nine years, and, in default of payment thereof, directed the Master to sell the several lands and premises comprised in the respective terms of one hundred years and ninety-nine years for payment of the respective demands decreed charges thereon. The lands were set up and sold for the residue of the two terms:—Held, on exceptions to the Master's report of good title, that as the minor tenant in tail was a party in the cause, the decree was not erroneous, though it directed a sale for the payment of interest accrued during the possession of A., nor because it omitted to set off the interest which ought to have been paid by A. against his share of the portion, and a sum which was reported to A. charged on other lands directed to be sold by the decree. But the Court directed the Master to allocate to the minor, out of the sum so reported to A., the amount of interest which he was liable to pay:—Held, also, that although the two charges affected the terms separately, and were not distinguished in the report or decree, as it was clearly for the benefit of the minor that the terms should be sold together, the title was not objectionable on that ground:—Held, also, that as the minor's estate was pious to the terms, the omission to give him a day to show cause would not affect the purchaser. Edgeworth v. Edgeworth, 12 Ir. Eq. R. 81.

3. A. devised his estate at H. to his second son, who survived him and afterwards died intestate, whereupon the estate descended to N., his elder brother. Pending a suit instituted by A.'s creditors, judgments were entered up against N., which remained unsatisfied when the estate at H., together with the testator's other estates, were sold under the decree in the suit for payment of his debts:—Held, that N.'s judgment creditors were necessary parties to the conveyance of the estate at H., and, as they could not be compelled to join in the conveyance, because they were not parties to the suit, that a good title could not be made to the estate. Craddock v. Piper, 14 Sim. 310.

4. Upon a loan of money, the borrower conveyed lands to the lenders and their heirs, upon trust to sell and repay themselves, and to pay the surplus and convey the unsold lands to the borrower. The lands having been sold under a decree in a suit to carry the trust into execution:—Held, that a good title might be made to the purchaser without the concurrence of the creditors of the borrower by judgment confessed after the execution of the trust deed. Alexander v. Crosby, 1 J. & L. 666; 7 Ir. Eq. R. 445.

5. Lands held under a lease for lives renewable for ever were, by marriage settlement, conveyed to trustees to the use of G. L., the husband, for life, remainder (subject to jointure and portions for younger children) to the first and other sons of the marriage in quasi tail. After the death of G. L., the younger children filed a bill to raise their portions. In 1838 there was a final decree for a sale, under which, in 1843, the lands were sold. In 1842 a renewal of the lease was executed to the defendant, the quasi tenant in tail, against whom, pending the suit, several judgments had been obtained, of which no notice had been taken. The purchaser objected to the title because of those judgments:—Held, on exception to the Master's report of good title, that the renewal of 1842 ought to have been to the trustees of the settlement, that its having been to the defendant made him a mere trustee of the legal estate upon the trusts of the settlement, and that the judgments in question did not constitute a valid objection to the title. Loake v. Loake, 5 Ir. Eq. R. 361.

6. A good title cannot be made to property sold under a decree of the Court as against judgment creditors who are not parties to the suit, although they are served with notice of the decree under the 15 & 16 Vict., c. 86; but if they afterwards come in under the decree, they will be bound. Knight v. Pocock, 4 Jur., N. S., 197; 27 L. J., Ch., 297.

7. A. agreed to sell land to B., who accepted the title, paid part of his purchase money, and was let into possession, but took no conveyance. A. subsequently obtained a decree against B. for sale of the property, and payment of the balance of purchase money out of the proceeds:—Held, that a purchaser under the decree could not be compelled to complete without the concurrence of the registered judgment creditors of B., whose judgments were prior to the decree, and who were not parties to the suit. Grey Coat Hospital v. Westminster Improvement Commissioners, 1 De G. & J. 531; 3 Jur., N. S., 1188; 26 L. J., Ch., 848; 5 W. R. 855.

8. A purchaser, after contracting for certain mines for a specified sum, to be paid partly by instalments, made default in payment, and under a suit by the vendor for specific performance, the property was directed to be resold. This was done, and the original vendor re-purchased the property. Judgment creditors claiming under judgments prior in date to the decree for sale, and one of them refusing to disclaim or release the premises, a bill was filed against them, praying that that suit might be taken as supplemental to the former, and that "the estate and premises directed to be sold might be declared freed and absolutely discharged from all rights, interests, claims, and demands of the defendants thereon or thereto." Decreed as prayed, with costs against the refusing defendant. Moscrop v. Sandeman, 9 L. T., N. S., 352.

4. For Errors and Irregularities.

1. It is no objection on the part of a purchaser of land sold by a Master, that more land is sold than is necessary for the purpose of the testator's will. Lutwyche v. Winford, 2 Bro. C. C. 248.

2. An estate being sold before a Master, where the purposes of the decree did not require it, the sale shall be set aside, although the reports of the several purchasers were confirmed; but the purchasers must be fully reimbursed all their expenses out of pocket. Prideaux v. Prideaux, 1 Cox 34. And see S. C. 1 Bro. C. C. 287, where stated to have been reversed.

3. Purchaser of estates sold under a decree discharged, on motion, from his purchase, upon error in the decree being shown, though the parties are proceeding to rectify it. Whether he is entitled to his costs, quære. Lechmere v. Brasier, 2 Jac. & Walk. 287.

4. Where property is sold under a decree, and there is jurisdiction to sell, mere irregularities and errors in the proceedings will not invalidate the sale, or prevent a good title from being made under the decree. Calvert v. Godfrey, 6 Beav. 97; 12 L. J., N. S., Ch., 305.

5. A purchaser under a decree shall not be affected by error in the decree, e.g., in its not having given a day to an infant defendant to show cause, or in decreeing a sale of lands to satisfy judgment debts, without an account of the personal estate. Bennett v. Hamill, 2 Sch. & Lef. 566.

A purchaser has a right to presume that the Court has taken the steps necessary to investigate the rights of the parties, and that on that investigation it has properly decreed a sale; but he ought to see that all proper parties to be bound are before the Court, and that he does not take a title which can be impeached aliunde. Ib.

6. A purchase under a decree, not impeachable when made, cannot become so from any irregularities in the subsequent conduct of the cause or errors in dealing with the purchase money. Boven v. Evans, 2 H. L. Ca. 257.

A bill was filed by a remainderman to set aside a sale made under the decree of the Court in a creditor's suit, for errors in the proceedings and fraud in the sale, the purchaser, G. E. B., having unwarily lent himself to acts whereby the estate was sold for payment of interest, properly payable by tenant for life. The tenant for life had been allowed to remain in receipt of the rents, and all interest on the incumbrances paid off by G. E. B. was permitted to remain in arrear with his consent, G. E. B. being allowed compound interest, and the entire amount of interest was allowed in the purchase money. The tenant for life died in 1837, and the bill was filed by the remainderman in 1843 to set aside the sale:—Held, that although the sale was the result of a pre-arrangement, and the suit was irregular in the above respects, yet, as in the opinion of the Court it was not fraudulent, and the purchaser intended no fraud, and the purchase was made at full value, the sale could not be set aside, especially after so long a time. S. C. 6 Ir. Eq. R. 569; 1 J. & L. 178. Affirmed 2 H. L. Ca. 257. And see Thomson v. Warren, 2 H. L. Ca. 221. n.

Held, also, that as the purchaser had lent himself to the transaction, whereby the arrear of interest was thrown on the inheritance, he should be made responsible for that amount, and an account accordingly was directed. S. C. Ir. Eq. R. 569.

The sale of the lands of B. took place in a similar manner, in a suit behind the back of the Court, but no conveyance of them was ever executed, and no final settlement of the accounts on foot of this purchase was ever made:—Held, that the sale of those lands, being still in fieri, should be set aside; and an account directed on foot of the sums paid towards the purchase, and of the rents received. Ib.

On the 15th December 1795, G. E. B. (the purchaser), on the marriage of his brother, granted a rent charge of 300*l.* a year for one thousand years out of the lands of K., which was settled on the issue of the marriage. The Court dismissed the bill with costs against the parties claiming under this settlement, but refused to give them any relief. Ib.

Principles on which the Court acts as to what shall, and what shall not, impeach a sale under a decree. Ib.

7. A decree for sale of lands did not direct them to be sold, subject to dower which one of the defendants had recovered at law, but the remembrancer himself set them up to sale so subject:—Held, sale not therefore irregular. Eyre v. Lynch, Hay. & J. 505.

Held, also, that remembrancer has a right to ascertain if a bidding be bonâ fide; and if he thinks it not so, to refuse to accept it. Ib.

8. A purchaser under a decree is not to be relieved from his purchase merely because there are irregularities in the decree, where there is no want of jurisdiction or parties. Baker v. Sowter, 10 Beav. 343; 16 L. J., N. S., Ch., 333.

Real estate was devised to and vested in trustees in trust for certain persons, amongst whom were an infant and person not in esse. In a suit for carrying the trusts into execution, the debts and legacies were paid out of the personal estate before any provision was made for payment of the costs of the suit. While there was personal estate remaining, and before the facts had been so ascertained as to make a sale of the real estate proper, a decree was made for the sale of the real estate for payment of the costs:—Held, that although the decree was not such as would have been pronounced on due consideration, and would have been varied upon re-hearing, yet a purchaser under it was not entitled to be discharged from his purchase on the ground of irregularity, there being no want of justification or parties. Ib.

1. A bidder at a sale under the decree of the Court, who is not a party to the cause, or interested in the estate which is the subject of the sale, has no right to apply to the Court to set aside a sale to another bidder, on the ground of irregularity, in that the latter, although reported the purchaser, was not in fact the highest bidder. Whether he may apply to be declared the purchaser in the place of the bidder reported to be the best purchaser, quære. Hughes v. Lipscombe, 6 Hare 142. See also Bass v. Wellsted, 12 Jur. 347.

2. A party, the highest bidder for a batch of some lots, and afterwards for the whole, was held to his bidding for the lots, though misled by the mode of selling. O'Grady v. Brady, 11 Ir. Eq. R. 400.

3. Lands in strict settlement, with power to grant leases, being subject to prior incumbrances, are, by decree in a suit instituted by incumbrancers, directed to be sold subject to charges prior to deed of settlement. Pending the suit, the tenant for life, under settlement, grants leases not authorised by the power, and raises money upon annuities for his life, which he charges upon the lands, and they are sold subject to those charges:—Held (reversing decree of Court below), on suit by remainderman in tail, that the sale, subject to charges not warranted by decree, is void. Colclough v. Sterum, 3 Bligh 181.

4. The purchaser of the estate of an insolvent debtor from his assignees, at a sale by auction, will not be affected by constructive notice of circumstances of negligence on the part of the assignees in conducting the sale, such circumstances being entirely collateral to any question of title. Borell v. Dann, 2 Hare 440.

A sale of the estate of an insolvent debtor, made bonâ fide at a public auction, is not, after conveyance to the purchaser, necessarily voidable in equity, only because the purchaser, after the sale, but before the conveyance, had notice of circumstances attending the conduct of the sale by the assignees amounting to negligence on their part. Ib.

5. Delay.

5. The Court is forbearing towards a party selling under a decree, and will not let off the purchaser unless the delay is grievous. Magennis v. Fallon, 2 Moll. 584.

6. An estate was sold in September 1848 under a decree of the Court. The purchaser objected, within time limited by the conditions, that the suit was defective as to parties. Counsel's opinion was communicated to plaintiff's solicitor on the 8th February 1849, and on the 22nd March the purchaser's solicitor was informed that steps were being taken to cure the defect, and it was hoped it would be done in three weeks. Four days after, the purchaser's solicitor claimed a return of the deposit, and the purchaser presented a petition, praying to be relieved from his purchase. On the 27th March the supplemental bill was filed. The Court refused to discharge the purchaser. Sherwood v. Beveridge, 13 Jur. 1042.

7. A sale under a decree, all necessary parties being before the Court, not set aside after a lapse of time, though the surplus of the purchase money was directed to be paid to the tenant for life, there being no surplus, and the sale appearing to be properly conducted. Lightburn v. Swift, 2 Ball & B. 207.

8. Where lands have been purchased under a decree in a creditors' suit, the Court, on the application of a creditor, who had for four years acquiesced in the purchase, and who was not supported in his objections by the other creditors, refused to set aside the purchase on the ground of misdescription of the land in the particulars of sale. Price v. North, 2 Y. & Coll. 620; 7 L. J., N. S., Exch. Eq., 9.

6. Right to Interest and Costs.

9. Whenever a purchaser is discharged, he must also get interest and his costs. Pleasants v. Roberts, 2 Moll. 507.

10. A purchaser discharged on a report of bad title is entitled in this court to interest on the one-fourth of the purchase money lodged from the date of the lodgment. Gover v. Hill, Hay & J. 127.

11. A purchaser under a decree, to whom a good title could not be made, discharged from his purchase, with his costs, charges, and expenses, including the costs of his petition to be discharged. Calvert v. Godfrey, 6 Beav. 97; 12 L. J., N. S., Ch., 305.

12. A purchaser under the decree of the Court was discharged upon a report of bad title, and it was ordered that his deposit be paid back to him, without prejudice to his applying for the interest thereon, and his costs, when there should be a fund in court. He died before either the costs were taxed, or a fund for their payment was realised:—Held, that on a fund being afterwards realised, his personal representative was entitled to be paid thereout the interest and costs. Mackay v. Orr, 3 Ir. Eq. R. 499.

13. A purchaser under a decree having accepted the title and paid his purchase money into court, discovered that a will had been mis-stated in the abstract in such a manner as to conceal an important defect in the title. Upon the petition before conveyance, he was discharged from his purchase, and his purchase money was ordered to be re-paid, but as his solicitor had neglected to examine the original will, although the abstract showed that it was of a very peculiar nature, and although reminded of the necessity of doing so by the counsel who advised upon the abstract:—Held, that he was not entitled to interest, and that he must pay the costs of all parties except the person who had the conduct of the sale. McCulloch v. Gregory, 1 Kay & J. 286; 24 L. J., Ch., 246; 3 W. R. 231; 3 Eq. Rep. 495.

A purchaser is not conclusively bound by the acceptance of the title by his counsel, but if he pays his purchase money into court he is bound. This rule, however, does not apply to a case where the counsel is misled by the abstract of title. Ib.

14. A sale in chambers under a decree in a partition suit having been declared invalid on the ground that the sale took place before the certificate in answer to the inquiries directed by the decree was made:—Held, that the vendors could not avail themselves of a condition enabling them, if unwilling, or unable for any reasonable cause to remove or comply with any objection or requisition by a purchaser, to rescind on repayment of the deposit without interest and without costs on either side; and that the discharged purchaser was entitled to the stock arising from his deposit, which had been paid into court and invested, with the dividends thereon, or the actual amount of deposit and the produce, with costs, charges, and expenses. Powell v. Powell, 19 L. R., Eq., 422; 44 L. J., Ch., 311; 32 L. T. 148; 23 W. R. 482.

See also as to Costs XIII. infra.

7. Practice on Application.

1. Rule as to serving purchaser on an application to set aside a sale made by assignees. Exp. Shepley, Re Wright, Mont. 353.

2. Defendants in a cause where there has been a sale under a decree ought to be served with the petition of a purchaser to be discharged from his purchase. Sherwood v. Beveridge, 3 De G. & Sm. 425; 13 Jur. 1042.

3. In general, objection, on the part of a purchaser of two lots, to the completion of his agreement, on the ground that the title to one is bad, is not such as ought to be discussed upon motion. Casamajor v. Strode, Coop. temp. Brough. 510.

4. A purchaser at a sale before the Master cannot move to be discharged from his purchase until the report has been confirmed, the report being the only evidence that the Court can receive as to the purchase having been made. M'Culloch v. Gregory, 2 W. R. 575; 2 Eq. Rep. 1088; 23 L. J., Ch., 636.

5. Where conditions of sale are so obscurely worded that, when taken in connection with the particulars of sale, they are likely to mislead an ordinary purchaser as to the nature of the property offered for sale, semble, that the Court will discharge the purchaser from his bargain on the argument of exceptions to the title, without putting him to the necessity of moving to be discharged from the purchase. Taylor v. Martindale, 1 Y. & Coll. C. C. 658.

VII. SUBSTITUTION OF PURCHASER.

1. Of New Purchaser, 7340.
2. Of Sub-purchaser, 7340.

1. Of New Purchaser.

6. One purchaser substituted for another upon motion with consent. Matthews v. Stubbs, 2 Bro. C. C. 391.

7. Upon a motion to substitute one purchaser for another, there must be an affidavit that no money has been paid for the substitution. Vincent v. Going, Fl. & K. 428.

8. Court will not discharge purchaser, and substitute another in his place, even upon paying in the money, without affidavit that there is no under-bargain. Rigby v. M'Nam- ara, 6 Ves. 515. S. P. Vale v. Davenport, 6 Ves. 615.

9. The Court will not set up lands for sale knowing the title to be bad; but, semble, if the owners and the creditors interested in the produce do not object, it will allow a party to apply to stand in the place of a purchaser discharged in consequence of bad title. Piers v. Piers, Sau. & Sc. 414. Affirmed 1 Dru. & Wal. 265.

10. Where the purchaser has been discharged upon a report of bad title, it is the right of the inheritor to have the estate again set up to be sold; and, therefore, the Court will not, against his desire, substitute in the place of the discharged purchaser a person who offers to take the estate at the same price, and not object to the title. O'Connor v. Bernard, 3 Ir. Eq. R. 496.

11. A farm was put up for sale under the direction of the Court by particulars accompanied by a plan, and was described as "a compact small farm containing 41A. 3R. 35P., divided as follows." Among the parcels was "490a, Bottlesey Green, containing 7A. 1R. 27P.," opposite to which, in the column showing the amounts which made up the 41A. 3R. 35P., was entered 4A. 0R. 38P. The conditions provided that any error, misstatement, or omission in the particulars should not annul the sale, nor should any compensation be allowed except such (if any) as the judge in chambers should direct. G. bought the property in his own name, and was certified as purchaser. He in fact bought as agent for B., who was the owner of immediately adjoining property. On investigating the title it turned out that the vendors were only entitled to four undivided sevenths of 490a, which was a narrow close containing 7A. 1R. 27P., having a long frontage to a highroad, and at one end adjoined B.'s property. B. alleged that it was of great importance to the enjoyment of his property that he should have the whole of 490a, and G., by his directions, refused to complete. The vendors then entered into an arrangement with the owner of the other three-sevenths to give them up, receiving an equivalent out of another part of the farm having a frontage to another road:—Held, by the Master of the Rolls, that, as B. had not been substituted as purchaser, G. must be treated as the real purchaser, and could not take any objection depending on the circumstances of B.'s property, and that, as the arrangement would give the purchaser all he contracted to buy, he must complete without compensation:—But held, on appeal, that G., having only purchased as agent for B., could take any objection which B. had been the nominal as well as the real purchaser, could have taken. Re Arnold, Arnold v. Arnold, 14 L. R., Ch. D., 270; 42 L. T. 705; 28 W. R. 635.

2. Of Sub-purchaser.

12. Where a purchaser of a bankrupt's estate re-sells it before a conveyance is executed to him by the assignees, the Court will, at his instance, order the assignees to convey the estate direct to the second purchaser if no imputation is thrown on the fairness of the first sale, notwithstanding the estate has been re-sold at a profit. Exp. Anderdon, 1 Dea. 585; 3 Mont. & A. 698.

1. A purchaser under a decree agreed to sell the lots he had purchased to A., and died, his heir being abroad. Ordered that A. should be substituted for him as the purchaser, and should be at liberty to pay the purchase money into court, and be let into possession. Pearce v. Pearce, 7 Sim. 138.

2. A purchaser in this court having re-sold with a profit before his purchase was confirmed, the person to whom he has sold it is to be considered as a substituted purchaser, and must pay the additional purchase money into court for the benefit of the parties to the suit. Hodder v. Ruffin, Tam. 341.

3. The Court will not grant an application by a sub-purchaser to be substituted as the purchaser of an estate sold by auction under an order of the Court where neither the original purchaser nor the vendor consents to the application. Re Goodwin, 32 L. J., Ch., 70; 1 N. R. 46.

At a sale by auction, under an order of the Court, H. was declared the best bidder and purchaser, at 3,095*l*. Before the purchase had been certified by the chief clerk, L. and H. entered into an agreement for the purchase and sale of the property at an advanced price of 500*l*., both of them being in ignorance of the rule of the Court in reference to sub-contracts before confirmation of certificate by the chief clerk. L. subsequently applied by summons (which was opposed by H.) to be substituted as purchaser, but the application was refused; and the Court, upon H. undertaking to bid 3,595*l*., and to pay 500*l*. into court, ordered a re-sale of the property. S. C. nom. Re Goodwin, Exp. Legard, 8 Jur., N. S., 1170; 11 W. R. 54.

VIII. REPORT OR CERTIFICATE.

1. Purchase Completed by, 7341.
2. Practice on Confirmation, 7341.
3. Inquiries other than Matters of Title, 7342.

1. Purchase Completed by.

4. A purchase before the Master is not complete before confirmation of the report; therefore a loss by a fire after the report, but before confirmation, falls upon the vendor, and the circumstance that the sale had been delayed by the purchaser having opened the biddings was not attended to. Exp. Minor, 11 Ves. 559.

5. Purchaser under decree considered only as owner from time he pays the purchase money, and not from confirmation of report by which he is declared the best bidder, he having taken objections to title. Mackrell v. Hunt, cited 2 Madd. 34.

6. Sale of an annuity before the Master takes effect from the confirmation of the report; and the sale being on the 11th August, and the report confirmed in Michaelmas term, interest was given upon the purchase money from the first day on which the report could have been confirmed, viz., the first seal before the term. Twigg v. Field, 13 Ves. 517.

7. The Court will not recognise a party as a purchaser at a sale made under a decree until the Master has made his report. M^cCulloch v. Gregory, 2 Eq. Rep. 1088; 2 W. R. 575; 23 L. J., Ch., 636.

An affidavit of payment of the deposit money is not the proper evidence of such purchase. Id.

The only proper evidence of a purchase under decree and payment of deposit is the Master's report, which must be confirmed before a purchaser can apply to the Court to be discharged from his contract. S. C. 23 L. J., Ch., 656.

8. Lands having been sold under a decree, W. became the purchaser, and his purchase was approved, and the certificate of approval signed by the Vice-Chancellor. More than eight days after signature of the certificate, but before any conveyance to W., he entered into a contract to sell to M. at an advanced price:—Held, that eight days having elapsed since signature of the certificate, W. was so far the absolute owner of the estate that he might sell at an advanced price for his own profit. Demell v. Tuffnell, 1 Kay & J. 324.

9. After the expiration of eight days from the filing of the chief clerk's certificate upon the sale of an estate, the Court will not entertain an application to discharge or vary the certificate without special circumstances; and negotiations pending between the plaintiff and a third party for a re-sale of the estate were not considered sufficient for that purpose. Hewell v. Kightley, 4 W. R. 477; 25 L. J., Ch., 341; 2 Jur., N. S., 455.

10. At a sale of an estate by auction under the direction of the Court, E., having previously been informed of the value of the timber, purchased lot 2, and agreed to take the timber at the price named by the auctioneer. The chief clerk confirmed the sale and filed his certificate. It was subsequently discovered that the value of the timber on a portion of the lot had been, by the mistake of the auctioneer, omitted:—Held, that the purchaser was entitled to hold the property without submitting to a valuation of the timber. Griffiths v. Jones, 15 L. R., Eq., 279; 42 L. J., Ch., 468; 21 W. R. 470.

See also IX. infra.

2. Practice on Confirmation.

11. It is irregular to confirm the Master's report, approving of a contract for sale of an estate being carried into effect, by a petition of course, with the consent of the clerks in court of all parties. Such a report ought to be confirmed by a special petition, stating all the facts. Bailey v. Todd, 1 Beav. 95.

12. A plaintiff may obtain the order absolute to confirm a sale under the Court though the order nisi has been obtained by the purchaser; but the application was in this case refused, on the ground of there having been great laches on the part of the plaintiff. Lidbetter v. Smith, 5 Beav. 377.

13. In a creditor's suit an application to confirm absolute the Master's report of last purchaser, made by consent before the expiration of the time limited by the order nisi refused. Vernon v. Thellusson, 10 Beav. 462.

14. One notice of motion to confirm the Master's report of best purchaser, and to pay the purchase money into court, is irregular. Duffield v. Elwes, 13 Beav. 85.

1. Where a sale is had in the country under the 139th Order, the bidders are not entitled to have notice of the confirmation of it by the Master. O'Grady v. Brady, 11 Ir. Eq. R. 400.

2. A purchaser of lands sold under the decree of the Court, pursuant to a rental, which stated that they were demised for a term therein mentioned, is entitled to confirmation if it should appear that they are demised for a longer term; but he may, by his acts, waive his title thereto. Horner v. Williams, Jon. & C. 274.

3. Inquiries other than Matters of Title.

3. This Court will not refer it to the chief remembrancer to report generally what proceedings should be taken as to certain lands. Cottingham v. Whyte, Hay. & J. 411.

4. Motion by purchaser under the Court for a reference to inquire whether it would benefit the parties that the contract should be rescinded, on the ground that the executor had stated he was unable to comply with the conditions:—Held, irregular. Stubbs v. Sargon, 4 Beav. 90.

Order held irregular, first on the ground of its having been made and passed without due notice to the other parties to the cause; and secondly, as not specifying the evidence on which it was grounded. Id.

An executor, who was under an obligation to deliver a book to a purchaser under the Court, made an affidavit that it was lost:—Held, that the purchaser was not bound by that affidavit, but was entitled to an inquiry before the Master. Id.

IX. RENTS LOSS AND DETERIORATION.

1. Casualties and Outgoings, 7342.

2. On Sale of Life Interests or Reversions, 7342.

3. Rents and Profits, 7343.

1. Casualties and Outgoings.

5. The purchaser, under a decree, must bear any loss which accrued after the sale was confirmed, and before he entered into possession, if it would have fallen on him had he been in possession; but the funds in the cause must make good to him any loss occasioned by the misconduct or mismanagement of the parties or the receiver. D'Espard v. Head, 1 Hog. 486.

6. A purchaser from the Court is in equity the owner from the order confirming the report, and any deterioration of the property arising from accident or by fire, without the default of the vendor, falls upon the purchaser. Robertson v. Skelton, 12 Beav. 260; 19 L. J., N. S., Ch., 140; 14 Jur. 323.

If, between the contract and conveyance, a loss arises by accident, which brings with it legal obligation, which must be immediately satisfied, the expense incurred by the vendors is payable by the purchaser. Id.

After the confirmation of the report, a part of the premises fell down and damaged the neighbouring property, the owner of which threatened to bring an action, and the remainder was ruinous and dangerous to the public. The vendor having reinstated and repaired the premises, the Court held, that the purchaser was bound to indemnify him, and, on petition, ordered a reference to ascertain the expenses properly incurred. Id.

7. When difficulties arise to delay the completion of a sale had under a decree, and during the interval of making out the title ordinary dilapidation takes place, that is a case for compensation; but if a destruction of ornamental timber, that is a ground for the purchaser to apply to be discharged. Magennis v. Fallon, 2 Moll. 585.

8. A purchaser of an estate sold under a decree of the Court of Chancery, who confirmed his sale on the 29th April, but whose purchase deed was not executed until the December following, is liable for the tithe composition which accrued due in November, the lands being in the occupation of tenants from year to year. Stewart v. Alexander, 2 Jones 530.

A person who has been declared the purchaser on a sale under the Court of Chancery has, in the contemplation of a court of equity, after the confirmation of the report, an estate in the lands. Id. 535.

A purchaser of an estate buys it subsequent to the outgoings incident to it. Id.

9. A purchaser of real estate upon a sale by the Court was kept out of possession for a year through the opposition of the plaintiff in the cause, who was himself in occupation of the estate; and was ultimately let into possession by virtue of a writ of assistance issued by the Court:—Held, that the purchaser was entitled to have paid to him out of the purchase money in court sums in respect of the following items: first, the costs of obtaining the orders under which he succeeded in getting possession; secondly, an occupation rent for the time during which he was kept out of possession; thirdly, compensation for deterioration of the property during the same period; and fourthly, arrears of tithes which he had been compelled to pay. Thomas v. Buxton, 8 L. R., Eq., 120; 38 L. J., Ch., 709.

2. On Sale of Life Interests or Reversions.

10. Where a life interest was sold under a decree, and the tenant for life died subsequently to the lodgment of the one-fourth of the purchase money, but prior to confirmation of sale:—Held, contract not complete till sale confirmed by order of Court, and purchaser not bound to complete. Vincent v. Going, 3 Dr. & War. 75. n. Reversing Fl. & K. 250; 3 Ir. Eq. R. 480.

11. The purchaser of an estate pur autre vie, sold under a decree of the Court of Chancery:—Held, not entitled to be discharged from his purchase in a case in which the sole cestui que vie died subsequently to the bidding, and before the Master's report could have been confirmed, according to the practice of the Court. Vesey v. Elwood, 3 Dr. & War. 74; 2 Con. & L. 47. Affirming Fl. & K. 668; 5 Ir. Eq. R. 184.

In sales under the Court, the title of the purchaser has relation back to the time of the bidding, as in other sales it has to the date of the contract. Id.

Semble, the case of the purchase of a fee-simple estate is distinguishable from that of a life estate with respect to compensation for casualties. Id.

1. A reversion expectant on an estate for life is decreed to be sold. B. is confirmed the best purchaser, and the order made absolute 1st January 1724. On the — day of January 1726 B. is ordered to bring his money into the bank, the life drops; if the life had dropped the next day after the report of B.'s being the best purchaser made absolute, the purchase must have stood; and as from that time the life was wearing, so from that time the purchaser ought to pay interest. Exp. Manning, 2 P. W. 410.

2. A purchaser under the Court of a reversionary interest having made default in completing, a re-sale was ordered, and the purchaser was to make good any deficiency. Before such re-sale it was discovered that the reversionary interest had previously fallen into possession. The Court gave the purchaser four days to complete his purchase. Robertson v. Skelton, 13 Beav. 91; 19 L. J., N. S., Ch., 561.

3. Rents and Profits.

3. A purchaser under a decree, having lodged the whole of his purchase money, is entitled to the rents from the preceding gale day. Gowan v. Tighe, Ll. & G. temp. Plunk. 168.

4. A purchaser under a decree is entitled to the rents from the gale day preceding the lodging the three-fourths of the purchase money without reference to the order confirming the sale absolutely. Prendergast v. Eyre, Ll. & G. temp. Plunk. 180.

5. Rents received by receiver after the gale day next succeeding the lodgment of three-fourths of the purchase money by a purchaser of lands under a decree are applicable first to the payment of solvent arrears, and then to rent due to purchaser, whether or not he has gone into possession or purchase deed has been executed. Lee v. Moorhead (2 Moll. 509) and Hargrave v. Holland (5 Ir. Eq. R. 169) overruled. Doorley v. Power, 11 Ir. Eq. R. 577.

6. Purchaser under decree is entitled to rents of lands purchased from the gale day next preceding the payment of purchase money into the bank, and to have all outgoings of the estate cleared off up to that time. Montgomery v. Coslett, 2 Jones 174.

7. The Court does not insure to a purchaser of lands sold under its decree the rents which accrued due between the lodgment of the purchase money in court and the execution of the injunction to put him into possession, except in cases where they are in the hands of its own receiver. An application to have the rents paid out of the purchase money refused with costs. Nunn v. Mahon, 2 Jones 181.

8. Where the lands were sold under a decree of the 30th April 1840, one-fourth of the purchase money deposited, a conditional order to confirm the sale, and subsequently the remaining three-fourths lodged in bank to the credit of the cause, all upon the following day, and the order to confirm the sale made absolute on the 12th May:—Held, that the purchaser was not entitled to the rents from the 1st November, the gale day next preceding the day of sale. Vincent v. Thwaites, 2 Ir. Eq. R. 426.

9. Where before a purchaser under decree was put into possession rents to which he was entitled became due, and payments were made by the tenants to the receiver in the cause:—Held, that the payments made after the rents to which the purchaser was entitled had become payable should be applied in payment of those rents, and not of the arrears of rent previously due. Hargrave v. Holland, 5 Ir. Eq. R. 169.

10. Where the gale days were the 1st May and 1st November, and the purchaser lodged one-fourth of the purchase money on the 28th April, and the remaining three-fourths on the 1st May, though the sale was not confirmed until afterwards:—Held, that the purchaser was entitled to the rents due on the 1st May, when the remaining three-fourths of the purchase money were lodged. Scott v. Rothe, 1 Ir. Eq. R. 105.

11. Where a reference had been directed to inquire whether an offer for the purchase of leaseholds was beneficial and ought to be accepted, and the Master reported in favour of the purchase:—Held, that the purchasers were entitled to the rents from the date of the order of reference. Cheetham v. Surterant, 3 De G. & Sm. 468.

12. Purchaser under a decree, having paid in his entire purchase money, was not entitled to compensation out of the fund, for the difference between the amount of rent received by the receiver, in the interim before possession given, and the amount which ought to have been received according to the rental, which was erroneous, it appearing that he was aware, when he purchased, of the discrepancy between the rental and the true rent payable: otherwise, if rents had been lost, and the claim had been for compensation for loss accrued after he paid his purchase money, and before he could get possession. Campbell v. Hay, 2 Moll. 102.

13. Loss or deficiency of rents arising while vendor was in default, by not completing the conveyance, the purchaser not having taken possession or changed the receiver, ordered to be made good out of the purchase money in court. Blennerhassett v. M^r Namara, 1 Moll. 81.

14. A manor was sold under the decree of the Court, as part of the real estate of the testator, and an order was made on the 13th March that the purchaser should, on or before the 17th May, pay his purchase money into court, and be let into possession of the profits from Lady day; several deaths and admissions had taken place prior to Lady day, but the fines due thereon had not been paid or assessed until after that time, no Court having been holden; these fines belong to the vendors, and not to purchaser. Garriock v. Camden (Earl), 2 Cox 231.

15. The purchaser of a life interest in stock sold before a Master, is entitled to a dividend becoming due on the day following the sale. Anson v. Tongood, 1 Jac. & Walk. 637.

1. The rule that a purchaser shall have possession as from the quarter day preceding the sale, does not apply to a colliery, which is an article of trade, the profits accruing daily. The proper period is the month or week in which the period takes place according to the usual course of taking the account. Wren v. Kirton, 8 Ves. 502.

X. ENFORCING COMPLETION.

2. One reported the highest bidder compelled to complete his purchase. Cunningham v. Williams, 2 Anstr. 344.

3. A person who bids in trust for another at a letting in the Master's office, will be attached if the bidding is not completed. Re Studderts, 1 Hog. 320.

4. Motion that a person reported best purchaser should complete his purchase by a certain day, refused, the report not being absolutely confirmed. Anon., 2 Ves. J. 335.

5. A purchaser cannot be attached for not completing his purchase, until the Master has reported that a good title can be made out. Dick v. Barrett, 1 Hog. 351.

6. An application for an attachment against a party for not executing the purchase deed pursuant to the decree, should be on notice, and the order will be absolute in the first instance. Brennan v. Carroll, 7 Ir. Eq. R. 196.

7. Not having been served with a copy of a decree for a sale is a good cause against an attachment, for not executing the conveyance to a purchaser. Keogh v. Wood, Vern. & Scriv. 118.

8. Purchaser of bankrupt's mortgaged estate sold before the commissioners under the General Order, upon petition in the bankruptcy, ordered to complete his purchase. Exp. Gould, 1 G. & J. 231.

9. Upon a sale of a bankrupt's mortgaged property made under the General Order, the Court of Review has jurisdiction to enforce a specific performance of the contract by the purchaser. Exp. Sibbitham, 3 Dea. & Ch. 818; 1 Mont. & A. 655; 3 L. J., N. S., Bky., 122.

10. A person who bids in trust for another at a letting in the Master's office, will be attached if the bidding is not completed. Re Studderts, 1 Hog. 320.

XI. CONVEYANCE.

1. In General, 7344.

2. Order to Convey, 7344.

3. Parties (Incumbrancers), 7344.

4. Release by Equitable Incumbrances, 7345.

5. Other Parties to, 7345.

6. Conveyancing Counsel. See PRACTICE (CONVEYANCING COUNSEL).

1. In General.

11. Conveyances made under a decree are to be settled by the like rule as men of judgment among conveyances would direct. Lloyd v. Griffith, 3 Atk. 279.

12. The decree for a sale does not direct the remembrancer to settle the draft of the deed of conveyance to the purchaser, and a special application for that purpose is necessary. Hogg v. Waldron, 6 Ir. Eq. R. 218.

13. Upon a sale of lands under a decree in a cause where judgment creditors, prior to the plaintiff, had not been made parties to the original suit, and a supplemental bill had been filed, making them parties, but no decree had been obtained in the supplemental suit, the remembrancer ordered to execute the deed of sale, upon the consent of the parties in the supplemental suit. O'Kelly v. Bodkin, 7 Ir. Eq. R. 338.

14. Where copyhold is under commission, good title is made by bargain and sale from commissioners direct to purchaser. Exp. Holland, 4 Madd. 483.

15. Upon sale in court of copyhold, vendor coming for aid is compelled to surrender in person if conveniently it can be done. Noel v. Weston, 6 Madd. 50.

16. Practice as to conveyances on sales in Master's office. Smith v. Gibbons, 1 W. R. 74.

17. In a sale by the Court, one of the conditions was that, in case of dispute, the form of the covenants was to be settled by the judge. On disputes arising, the judge settled the covenants:—Held, that the order of a judge settling the form of a conveyance is subject to appeal. Pollock v. Rabbits, 21 L. R., Ch. D., 466; 47 L. T. 637; 31 W. R. 150.

2. Order to Convey.

18. A peremptory order on the wife to execute a conveyance of estate not settled to her separate use, refused. Jordan v. Jones, 2 Ph. 170.

19. When an estate has been sold under a decree, and all proper parties have been ordered to join in the conveyance to be settled by the Master, if a party to the suit whom the Master considers a proper party to the conveyance refuses to convey, the right course for the purchaser to take is, to move, against that party, that he be ordered to convey; and not to move, against the plaintiffs, that they be ordered to procure him to convey. Stimwell v. Mellersh, 4 Myl. & C. 581; 10 Sim. 367; 9 L. J., N. S., Ch. 39; 4 Jur. 175.

3. Parties (Incumbrancers).

20. A., being entitled under a settlement to £5,000. secured upon an estate of his father's, and payable at his father's death, assigned it to B. as a security for money lent, with a power to B. to sell the same, and "give effectual discharges to the purchaser," and afterwards borrowed money of other persons upon the security of the same sum. The estate being afterwards sold under his father's will:—Held, that B. was not competent, under the above clause, to give a discharge for the whole sum, but that the other incumbrancers must be parties to the conveyance; the Court observing, that the clause above stated had reference not to a sale of the estate, but to a sale of the charge. Brasier v. Hudson, 9 Sim. 1.

1. A defendant, who is an incumbrancer on an estate sold under the decree of the Court, and who has concurred in settling conditions of sale, describing such estate as being to be sold free from incumbrances, will be ordered to concur in carrying the sale into effect, and to execute the conveyance of the estate to the purchaser, free from his incumbrance. Tomlin v. Hatfield, 9 L. J., N. S., Ch., 119.

See also v. 6 (o) supra.

4. Release by Equitable Incumbrancers.

2. A purchaser under a decree for a sale for the payment of equitable incumbrances, has not a right to have the estate released therefrom, the effect of the decree being to extinguish them as to the estate sold. He must have a conveyance of the legal estate discharged of all incumbrances, legal and equitable, but he is not entitled to any other evidence of the exoneration of the estate from equitable incumbrances extinguished by the decree, than such as the decree itself, and the proceedings under it, afford him. Webber v. Jones, 6 Ir. Eq. R. 142.

3. A purchaser under the decree of a court of equity, obtaining a conveyance of the legal estate, is not entitled to have, at the expense of the funds in the cause, a release from equitable incumbrancers, who were parties to and paid under the decree. Keatings v. Keatings, 6 Ir. Eq. R. 43.

Upon the sale of an estate, if there be an outstanding trust term, the vendor must (if so required) have such term surrendered at his own expense; or, if the terms be so circumstanced, that, although the trusts have been fulfilled, it has never been assigned to attend the inheritance, the vendor must, if required, have it so assigned at his own expense; but if the term have been already assigned to attend, and the purchaser requires it to be further assigned to a trustee nominated by himself, such further assignment must be at the purchaser's expense. Id.

The lands of B. and D. being subject to a jointure secured thereon by a trust term, by condition of sale it was stipulated that, without prejudice to the rights of the jointress, the lands of B. should be sold as if exclusively liable to the jointure, and D. as if exonerated therefrom; and that, to this end, the purchaser of D. should have from the purchaser of B. a deed of indemnity: the costs of the preparation of such deed must be borne by the vendor, the condition being silent on the subject. Id.

5. Other Parties to.

4. Purchasers under a decree which is impeached for fraud and error are not necessary parties, if there is a proper undertaking to abide by the sale. Creed v. Creed, 2 Hog. 215.

A trustee named in a will, who has refused the trust, is not a necessary party. Id.

5. E. K., being entitled for life to the income of a fund, and trustee of it with K., allows K. to sell out 1,000*l.* on his giving a promissory note and deposit of deeds of freeholds. K. is bankrupt, and under an order of a commissioner the freeholds are sold, and the conditions provide that the order in bankruptcy shall be conclusive: on objection that cestuis que trustent were necessary parties:—Held, that they were not, the deposit and the memorandum being a personal indemnity only by one trustee to another. Groom v. Booth, 1 W. R. 423.

XII. DEEDS AND OTHER DOCUMENTS

6. The Court will not order the bargain and sale from the commissioners to the assignees to be given by them to the purchaser, upon his allegation merely that the bankrupt had no other freehold property than what was conveyed to the purchaser under the commission. Exp. Pocock, Re Chapman, 1 Dea. & Ch. 104; 1 L. J., N. S., Bky., 18.

7. A purchaser relied on the memorial of a deed as creating an objection to the title, and succeeded on an exception founded on it:—Held, that he could not afterwards object that the deed itself was not produced, although there was no condition of sale to dispense with its production. Stewart v. Conyngham (Marquis), 1 Ir. Ch. R. 534.

8. A purchaser entitled to title deeds having paid his purchase money into court, the Court will not order the money to be divided, and the deeds to remain in the hands of the Master, until the completion of the sale of another lot. Hobson v. Neale, Taml. 446.

9. A plaintiff who has not established his title has a right to the production of documents in the defendant's custody, by which he alleges that his title will be established. Moons v. Bernales, 1 L. J., Ch., 185.

10. The Court will not entertain an application that further searches should be furnished to a purchaser, being an application to be made to the Master in Chancery. Lalor v. Drew, 7 Ir. Eq. R. 202.

11. In Ireland a plaintiff who has obtained a decree for a sale, and cannot procure the title deeds, must make out a statement of title from searches in the registrar's office and elsewhere, or the Court will not allow the lands to be sold. Hamilton v. Royse, 1 Hog. 236.

12. In Ireland a purchaser under a decree is not entitled to the opinion of counsel on the title procured under the Order of the 17th June 1805. Foster v. Foster, 1 Hog. 224.

13. The purchaser of lands sold under the decree of the Court is not entitled, before the title has been accepted by him, to see the opinion of counsel on the statement of title given pursuant to the 138th General Order. Stack v. Baxter, 10 Ir. Eq. R. 102.

14. The purchaser of lands sold under a decree:—Held, to be entitled to a map and survey of them, prepared during the progress of and for the purposes of the cause. Jepson v. Minton, Fl. & K. 95.

15. A purchaser under the Court, not being able to obtain an account book delivered over to him, to which he was entitled under his contract, brought an action of trover against some parties to the cause. He was restrained by injunction. Stubbs v. Sargon, 4 Beav. 90.

XIII. TAKING POSSESSION.

16. A purchaser under a decree, who takes possession without the order of the Court, by an arrangement with the solicitor in the suit, accepts the title. Wilden v. Andrews, 4 L. J., Ch., 208.

1. Purchaser under a decree of the Court is not entitled, upon an affidavit that he has had his money lying ready some time, to be let into possession of estate, and receipt of rents for all such time so passed. Barker v. Harper, Coop. 32.

2. An injunction may be obtained, on motion to restrain purchaser under decree not party to cause, who has not paid his purchase money, from committing waste on property purchased. Casamajor v. Strobe, 1 Sim. & S. 381.

Injunction.] 3. The Master in the cause having executed the deed of conveyance for the principal defendant, does not preclude his giving the usual certificate to enable the purchaser to obtain an injunction to be put into possession. Lamlor v. Drew, 7 Ir. Eq. R. 637.

4. Where, after lands had been sold, and the purchase deed approved by the Master's counsel, though not signed, the purchaser was put into possession by injunction, in consequence of the defendant having entered on the lands and committed waste. Gray v. Stanford, 8 Ir. Eq. R. 678.

5. A purchaser under the decree having, under colour of the injunction to put him into possession, dispossessed persons who claimed adversely to the title of the parties in the cause, it was ordered that a writ of restitution do issue to restore them to the possession, and it was referred to the officer to ascertain the amount of damages sustained by them in consequence of the ouster; and the purchaser was ordered to pay such damages with full costs, the applicants undertaking not to bring an action. Anderson v. Barry, 2 Jones 631.

See also v. 4 (b) supra.

XIV. COSTS AND EXPENSES.

1. On Discharge of Purchaser, 7346.
2. Of Investigation of Title, 7346.
3. Of Conveyance, 7347.
4. Of Payment into or out of Court, 7348.
5. Fees of Court, 7348.
6. Other Cases, 7348.
7. On opening Biddings. See III. 11 and 12 supra.

1. On Discharge of Purchaser.

6. Under a decree for a sale of lands, a trustee for the inheritor was declared the purchaser. There was a report of bad title:—Held, that the trustee was entitled to his costs out of the fund in court, it appearing that the inheritor was ignorant of his own title, and never had the means of knowing it, and that he had acted bonâ fide. Kirby v. O'Shee, 1 Jones 164.

7. A purchaser under decree is entitled to his costs when Master reports against title, though no fund in court. Smith v. Nelson, 2 Sim. & S. 557; 4 L. J., Ch., 175.

8. Where there has been great delay, and there is little hope of perfecting the title within a reasonable time, the Court will dismiss a purchaser with costs. Fraser v. Wood, 8 Beav. 339; 14 L. J., N. S., Ch., 270.

9. Costs to which a purchaser under the Court is entitled, on its being found that a good title cannot be made. Perkins v. Ede, 16 Beav. 268.

10. The costs of an unsuccessful application by a purchaser under a decree to be relieved from his purchase, on the ground of defective title, must be paid by the applicant. Osborn v. Osborn, 18 W. R. 421.

11. Where, upon a sale under the Court, the title turned out to be bad:—Held, that the purchaser, on being discharged, was not entitled to his costs as against a party to whom the conduct of the sale had been committed by the Court. But his rights as against any fund which might come into court were reserved. Mullins v. Hussey, 35 Beav. 301.

See also VI. 6 supra.

See also Next Subdivision.

2. Of Investigation of Title.

12. Where an estate has been sold under a decree, and the Master reports against the title, the purchaser is entitled to be paid out of the fund in the cause his costs of and consequent upon his becoming purchaser, and of investigating the title. Att.-Gen. v. Newark (Corporation), 8 Sim. 71.

13. If the Master reports against the title to an estate purchased under a decree, the purchaser will be paid the costs of the reference out of the funds in the cause. Reynolds v. Blake, 2 Sim. & S. 117. S. C. nom. Anon., 3 L. J., Ch., 83.

14. A purchaser under decree is entitled to his costs where Master reports against title, though no fund in court. Smith v. Nelson, 2 Sim. & S. 557; 4 L. J., Ch., 175.

15. Where an estate was sold under a decree of the Court, and one of the conditions of sale was, that the purchaser pay the purchase money into court on a given day, at his own expense, it was:—Held, that the purchaser was entitled to the costs of a reference as to the title reported good by the Master. Camden v. Benson, 1 Keen 671.

16. The purchaser at a sale in the Master's office has a right to bind the seller to the title shown in the abstract first furnished; but if that title is not sufficient, the purchaser has a right to have a further abstract, and the purchaser gets his costs up to the time when the proper abstract is furnished. Goffe v. Mitchell, 2 Moll. 508.

17. Purchaser under decree is entitled to his costs of investigating the title when there has been a substantial variance from the abstract first brought into the Master's office; otherwise the uniform practice of this Court, when the title proves good, on a reference of title upon a sale under a decree, is to make the purchaser abide his own costs. Where, therefore, further documents were produced establishing a new case in answer to objections taken, but the original abstract was not varied from in substance, costs were refused. Leland v. Griffith, 2 Moll. 150.

18. Where a sale had been directed under a decree, but there was no reference to the Master as to the title, and no available fund in court:—Held, that the purchaser was entitled to be reimbursed by the plaintiff the costs of investigating the title and confirming the purchase. Berry v. Johnson, 2 Y. & Coll. 564; 1 Jur. 474.

1. If solicitor of inheritor is employed by creditor to make out title to purchase, he will be paid his costs out of fund in court. Thompson v. Cooke, 1 Hog. 28.

2. A purchaser under a decree, who succeeds on exceptions to the Master's report approving the title, cannot then have the costs of the reference on title; but must obtain the report in his favour, and then present a petition to be discharged from his purchase and to have his costs. Hyde v. Hyde, 3 L. J., Ch., 130.

3. A discharged purchaser is not entitled, as against a bidder opening the sale, to the costs of investigating the title, where he has proceeded to do so before the order to confirm was made absolute. Digby v. Browne, 1 Ir. Eq. R. 377.

4. In sales under decree, as in private sales, the plaintiff or vendor is not bound to furnish to the purchaser a fee for counsel, with the abstract of title, unless by special condition. If the purchaser require the opinion of counsel, he must take it at his own expense, but he will have only a qualified property in the opinion until the sale is complete. Alexander v. Crosbie, 2 Ir. Eq. R. 141.

5. When, in consequence of a defect in the title to lands sold under a decree, the purchaser is discharged, he is entitled to the full amount of his purchase money, interest, and taxed costs, without deduction; therefore, where the interest and costs are to be paid out of a fund consisting of rents of the lands, the discharged purchaser is entitled to an order, including the amount of the usher's poundage, payable in respect of the sum which he is entitled to receive out of the fund. Johnson v. Reardon, 3 Ir. Eq. R. 200.

6. A purchaser, who having lodged one-fourth only of his purchase money, was discharged upon a report of bad title:—Held, entitled to the costs incurred by him in investigating the title, but not to interest on the one-fourth. Feely v. Kilkenny, Fl. & K. 456.

7. A purchaser discharged upon a re-sale under an order opening the biddings, is not entitled against the plaintiff, or his solicitor, to the costs which he may have incurred in investigating the title, there not having been any reference to the Master to report as to good title. Sullivan v. Bayly, Fl. & K. 460.

8. A purchaser under the decree of the Court took several objections to the title, in some of which he failed, and succeeded in others:—Held, that he was entitled to the costs properly and necessarily incurred by him in investigating the title, after deducting thereout the costs occasioned by the objections in which he failed. Brown v. Lynch, 4 Ir. Eq. R. 59.

9. A purchaser under decree is not entitled to require, at the cost of the estate, a further opinion of counsel in favour of the title, besides that which he gets with the abstract under Lord Redesdale's rule. But he may, if he pleases, take a further opinion; and, if afterwards discharged from the purchase by reason of defects of title discovered by such further opinion, he will be entitled to be re-paid the reasonable costs incurred in obtaining it.

Barton v. Downes (Lord), 4 Ir. Eq. R. 607; Fl. & K. 633.

10. Where property sold under a decree is bought by a defendant in the suit, he is entitled to his costs of a reference to the Master as to title. Holland v. King, 1 W. R. 80.

11. Where a purchase under a decree goes off on account of defects in the title, a defendant having the conduct of the cause will not be ordered personally to pay the purchaser's costs of investigating the title, though there are no funds in court, and the plaintiff is insolvent. Mullins v. Hussey, 1 L. R., Eq., 488; 35 L. J., Ch., 348.

3. Of Conveyance.

12. Where, under a decree for sale of an estate in a creditors' suit, containing a direction that the Master should settle the conveyances if the parties differ, an application is made to the Master respecting the conveyance, the purchaser must pay the costs of his attendances before the Master, unless he makes out a special case for exemption from them. Hodgson v. Sham, 16 L. J., N. S., Ch., 56; 11 Jur. 95.

13. When, in consequence of the defendants' refusal to execute the conveyance to the purchaser under the decree, it becomes necessary to apply, that the Master may execute in their names, the estate is not to bear the costs of such application, but the defendants, whose improper refusal made it necessary. Clarke v. De Burgh, 2 Ir. Eq. R. 19.

14. A plaintiff having charged A. B., who was named a party defendant, to be out of the jurisdiction, but omitted to pray process against him on his coming within the jurisdiction:—Held, nevertheless, entitled to the costs of a supplemental suit, instituted for the purpose of compelling him to join as a conveying party in the deed to the purchaser under the decree. Oldham v. Wilkins, 1 Dr. & Wal. 717.

15. Under a decree in a creditors' suit, the real estates of a debtor who had died intestate, leaving an infant his heir, were ordered to be sold. The estates were accordingly sold by auction in lots. Under the conditions of sale was this note:—"N.B.—This sale is made by an order of the Court of Chancery, etc., and the property being vested in an infant, the purchaser will have no covenants for title." A. purchased one of the lots:—Held, that the costs attending the settling of the deed of conveyance from the infant to A., by the Master, by reason of the infancy of the heir, ought to be borne by the intestate's estate, and not by A. Brown v. Lake, 15 L. J., N. S., Ch., 34.

16. Where the real estates of an intestate were sold under a decree in an administration, and the heir-at-law was a feme covert, who declined acknowledging the conveyance to the purchaser, semble, that the heir was a trustee within 1 Will. 4, c. 60. Billing v. Webb, 1 De G. & Sm. 716; 12 Jur. 427.

In such a case, where the costs of the suit exceeded the funds in the cause, the Court directed the costs of the purchasers, occasioned by the refusal of the married woman to make the acknowledgment, to be first taxed and an arrangement with the solicitor in the suit, accepts the title. Wilden v. Andrews, 4 L. J., Ch., 208.

1. Purchaser under a decree of the Court is not entitled, upon an affidavit that he has had his money lying ready some time, to be let into possession of estate, and receipt of rents for all such time so passed. Barker v. Harper, Coop. 32.

2. An injunction may be obtained, on motion to restrain purchaser under decree not party to cause, who has not paid his purchase money, from committing waste on property purchased. Casamajor v. Strobe, 1 Sim. & S. 381.

Injunction.] 3. The Master in the cause having executed the deed of conveyance for the principal defendant, does not preclude his giving the usual certificate to enable the purchaser to obtain an injunction to be put into possession. Lamlor v. Drem, 7 Ir. Eq. R. 637.

4. Where, after lands had been sold, and the purchase deed approved by the Master's counsel, though not signed, the purchaser was put into possession by injunction, in consequence of the defendant having entered on the lands and committed waste. Gray v. Stanford, 8 Ir. Eq. R. 678.

5. A purchaser under the decree having, under colour of the injunction to put him into possession, dispossessed persons who claimed adversely to the title of the parties in the cause, it was ordered that a writ of restitution do issue to restore them to the possession, and it was referred to the officer to ascertain the amount of damages sustained by them in consequence of the ouster; and the purchaser was ordered to pay such damages with full costs, the applicants undertaking not to bring an action. Anderson v. Barry, 2 Jones 631.

7. On opening Biddings. See III. 11 and 12 supra.

1. On Discharge of Purchaser.

6. Under a decree for a sale of lands, a trustee for the inheritor was declared the purchaser. There was a report of bad title:—Held, that the trustee was entitled to his costs out of the fund in court, it appearing that the inheritor was ignorant of his own title, and never had the means of knowing it, and that he had acted bonâ fide. Kirby v. O'Shee, 1 Jones 164.

7. A purchaser under decree is entitled to his costs when Master reports against title, though no fund in court. Smith v. Nelson, 2 Sim. & S. 557; 4 L. J., Ch., 175.

8. Where there has been great delay, and there is little hope of perfecting the title within a reasonable time, the Court will dismiss a purchaser with costs. Fraser v. Wood, 8 Beav. 539; 14 L. J., N. S., Ch., 270.

9. Costs to which a purchaser under the Court is entitled, on its being found that a good title cannot be made. Perkins v. Ede, 16 Beav. 268.

10. The costs of an unsuccessful application by a purchaser under a decree to be relieved from his purchase, on the ground of defective title, must be paid by the applicant. Osborn v. Osborn, 18 W. R. 421.

11. Where, upon a sale under the Court, the title turned out to be bad:—Held, that the purchaser, on being discharged, was not entitled to his costs as against a party to whom the conduct of the sale had been committed by the Court. But his rights as against any fund which might come into court were reserved. Mullins v. Hussey, 35 Beav. 301.

See also VI. 6 supra.

See also Next Subdivision.

2. Of Investigation of Title.

12. Where an estate has been sold under a decree, and the Master reports against the title, the purchaser is entitled to be paid out of the fund in the cause his costs of and consequent upon his becoming purchaser, and of investigating the title. Att.-Gen. v. Newark (Corporation), 8 Sim. 71.

13. If the Master reports against the title to an estate purchased under a decree, the purchaser will be paid the costs of the reference out of the funds in the cause. Reynolds v. Blake, 2 Sim. & S. 117. S. C. nom. Anon., 3 L. J., Ch., 83.

14. A purchaser under decree is entitled to his costs where Master reports against title, though no fund in court. Smith v. Nelson, 2 Sim. & S. 557; 4 L. J., Ch., 175.

15. Where an estate was sold under a decree of the Court, and one of the conditions of sale was, that the purchaser pay the purchase money into court on a given day, at his own expense, it was:—Held, that the purchaser was entitled to the costs of a reference as to the title reported good by the Master. Camden v. Benson, 1 Keen 671.

16. The purchaser at a sale in the Master's office has a right to bind the seller to the title shown in the abstract first furnished; but if that title is not sufficient, the purchaser has a right to have a further abstract, and the purchaser gets his costs up to the time when the proper abstract is furnished. Goffe v. Mitchell, 2 Moll. 508.

17. Purchaser under decree is entitled to his costs of investigating the title when there has been a substantial variance from the abstract first brought into the Master's office; otherwise the uniform practice of this Court, when the title proves good, on a reference of title upon a sale under a decree, is to make the purchaser abide his own costs. Where, therefore, further documents were produced establishing a new case in answer to objections taken, but the original abstract was not varied from in substance, costs were refused. Leland v. Griffith, 2 Moll. 150.

18. Where a sale had been directed under a decree, but there was no reference to the Master as to the title, and no available fund in court:—Held, that the purchaser was entitled to be reimbursed by the plaintiff the costs of investigating the title and confirming the purchase. Berry v. Johnson, 2 Y. & Coll. 564; 1 Jur. 474.

1. If solicitor of inheritor is employed by creditor to make out title to purchase, he will be paid his costs out of fund in court. Thompson v. Cooke, 1 Hog. 28.

2. A purchaser under a decree, who succeeds on exceptions to the Master's report approving the title, cannot then have the costs of the reference on title; but must obtain the report in his favour, and then present a petition to be discharged from his purchase and to have his costs. Hyde v. Hyde, 3 L. J., Ch., 130.

3. A discharged purchaser is not entitled, as against a bidder opening the sale, to the costs of investigating the title, where he has proceeded to do so before the order to confirm was made absolute. Digby v. Bromme, 1 Ir. Eq. R. 377.

4. In sales under decree, as in private sales, the plaintiff or vendor is not bound to furnish to the purchaser a fee for counsel, with the abstract of title, unless by special condition. If the purchaser require the opinion of counsel, he must take it at his own expense, but he will have only a qualified property in the opinion until the sale is complete. Alexander v. Crossbie, 2 Ir. Eq. R. 141.

5. When, in consequence of a defect in the title to lands sold under a decree, the purchaser is discharged, he is entitled to the full amount of his purchase money, interest, and taxed costs, without deduction; therefore, where the interest and costs are to be paid out of a fund consisting of rents of the lands, the discharged purchaser is entitled to an order, including the amount of the usher's poundage, payable in respect of the sum which he is entitled to receive out of the fund. Johnson v. Reardon, 3 Ir. Eq. R. 200.

6. A purchaser, who having lodged one-fourth only of his purchase money, was discharged upon a report of bad title:—Held, entitled to the costs incurred by him in investigating the title, but not to interest on the one-fourth. Feely v. Kilkenny, Fl. & K. 456.

7. A purchaser discharged upon a re-sale under an order opening the biddings, is not entitled against the plaintiff, or his solicitor, to the costs which he may have incurred in investigating the title, there not having been any reference to the Master to report as to good title. Sullivan v. Bayly, Fl. & K. 460.

8. A purchaser under the decree of the Court took several objections to the title, in some of which he failed, and succeeded in others:—Held, that he was entitled to the costs properly and necessarily incurred by him in investigating the title, after deducting thereout the costs occasioned by the objections in which he failed. Brown v. Lynch, 4 Ir. Eq. R. 59.

9. A purchaser under decree is not entitled to require, at the cost of the estate, a further opinion of counsel in favour of the title, besides that which he gets with the abstract under Lord Redesdale's rule. But he may, if he pleases, take a further opinion; and, if afterwards discharged from the purchase by reason of defects of title discovered by such further opinion, he will be entitled to be re-paid the reasonable costs incurred in obtaining it.

Barton v. Downes (Lord), 4 Ir. Eq. R. 607; Fl. & K. 633.

10. Where property sold under a decree is bought by a defendant in the suit, he is entitled to his costs of a reference to the Master as to title. Holland v. King, 1 W. R. 80.

11. Where a purchase under a decree goes off on account of defects in the title, a defendant having the conduct of the cause will not be ordered personally to pay the purchaser's costs of investigating the title, though there are no funds in court, and the plaintiff is insolvent. Mullins v. Hussey, 1 L. R., Eq., 488; 35 L. J., Ch., 348.

3. Of Conveyance.

12. Where, under a decree for sale of an estate in a creditors' suit, containing a direction that the Master should settle the conveyances if the parties differ, an application is made to the Master respecting the conveyance, the purchaser must pay the costs of his attendances before the Master, unless he makes out a special case for exemption from them. Hodgson v. Shaw, 16 L. J., N. S., Ch., 56; 11 Jur. 95.

13. When, in consequence of the defendants' refusal to execute the conveyance to the purchaser under the decree, it becomes necessary to apply, that the Master may execute in their names, the estate is not to bear the costs of such application, but the defendants, whose improper refusal made it necessary. Clarke v. De Burgh, 2 Ir. Eq. R. 19.

14. A plaintiff having charged A. B., who was named a party defendant, to be out of the jurisdiction, but omitted to pray process against him on his coming within the jurisdiction:—Held, nevertheless, entitled to the costs of a supplemental suit, instituted for the purpose of compelling him to join as a conveying party in the deed to the purchaser under the decree. Oldham v. Wilkins, 1 Dr. & Wal. 717.

15. Under a decree in a creditors' suit, the real estates of a debtor who had died intestate, leaving an infant his heir, were ordered to be sold. The estates were accordingly sold by auction in lots. Under the conditions of sale was this note:—"N.B.—This sale is made by an order of the Court of Chancery, etc., and the property being vested in an infant, the purchaser will have no covenants for title." A. purchased one of the lots:—Held, that the costs attending the settling of the deed of conveyance from the infant to A., by the Master, by reason of the infancy of the heir, ought to be borne by the intestate's estate, and not by A. Brown v. Lake, 15 L. J., N. S., Ch., 34.

16. Where the real estates of an intestate were sold under a decree in an administration, and the heir-at-law was a feme covert, who declined acknowledging the conveyance to the purchaser, semble, that the heir was a trustee within 1 Will. 4, c. 60. Billing v. Webb, 1 De G. & Sm. 716; 12 Jur. 427.

In such a case, where the costs of the suit exceeded the funds in the cause, the Court directed the costs of the purchasers, occasioned by the refusal of the married woman to make the acknowledgment, to be first taxed and paid, and, subject thereto, that the costs of plaintiffs and defendants should be taxed and paid ratably. Id.

1. A purchaser under the decree of a court of equity, obtaining a conveyance of the legal estate, is not entitled to have, at the expense of the funds in the cause, a release from equitable incumbrancers, who were parties to be paid under the decree. Keatinge v. Keatinge, 6 Ir. Eq. R. 43.

Upon the sale of an estate, if there be an outstanding trust term, the vendor must (if so required) have such term surrendered at his own expense; or, if the term be so circumstanced, that, although the trusts have been fulfilled, it has never been assigned to attend the inheritance, the vendor must, if required, have it so assigned at his own expense; but if the term have been already assigned to attend, and the purchaser requires it to be further assigned to a trustee nominated by himself, such further assignment must be at the purchaser's expense. Id.

The lands of B. and D. being subject to a jointure secured thereon by a trust term, by condition of sale it was stipulated that, without prejudice to the rights of the jointress, the lands of B. should be sold as if exclusively liable to the jointure, and D. as if exonerated therefrom; and that, to this end, the purchaser of D. should have from the purchaser of B. a deed of indemnity: the costs of the preparation of such deed must be borne by the vendor, the condition being silent on the subject. Id.

2. The costs of covenants to produce title deeds which cannot be delivered up fall, by the practice of conveyancers, on vendors; yet where, by the conditions of sale of property, in lots, under an order of the Court, provision was made for the largest purchaser to have the deeds, and to covenant to produce them, or give copies thereof to the purchasers of smaller lots, without reference to the manner in which the costs were to be paid, each purchaser, and not the estate, was ordered to bear his own costs of such covenants. Strong v. Strong, 4 Jur., N. S., 943; 6 W. R. 455.

4. Of Payment into or out of Court.

3. Where the purchaser has been the cause of delay in the completion of the title, he will be ordered to pay the costs of the motion for payment by him into court of the purchase money; but, on the reference, he will not be restricted to the objections taken by him to the title previously to the date of the notice to pay the purchase money into court. Flomer v. Hartopp, 12 L. J., N. S., Ch., 39.

4. A purchaser under a decree, one of the conditions of sale being the payment of the money into court by a certain day:—Held, liable to pay the costs of the order for that purpose. Camden v. Benson, 1 Keen 671.

5. Where, on the same motion by which the purchaser asks to pay his purchase money into court and be let into possession, it is also asked that one purchaser may be substituted for another upon the affidavit of no underhand bargain, no additional costs are incurred by the parties to the cause, and costs are not ordered to be paid by the purchasers. Chris- tian v. Chambers, 4 Hare 307; 14 L. J., N. S., Ch., 340; 9 Jur. 393.

6. In a sale under the Court, after a purchaser has obtained his conveyance the costs of his appearance on a petition for payment out of court of the fund will not be allowed. His right course is, not to appear, but to inform the petitioners that he has no claim on the fund. Barton v. Latour, 18 Beav. 526.

7. Although purchasers were informed, in a notice of a petition for the payment of their purchase moneys out of court, that they would not be required to appear, and that if they appeared their costs would be objected to, yet the Court held that they were entitled to appear, and to be paid the costs of such appearance. Strong v. Strong, 4 Jur., N. S., 943; 6 W. R. 445.

5. Fees of Court.

8. Upon a sale by the Master in lots, the proper fee to be paid according to the schedule annexed to the Orders in Chancery issued under the 3 & 4 Will., 4, c. 94, is 5*l.* where the whole produce of the sale does not exceed 2,000*l.*, and 5*s.* on every 100*l.* beyond that sum, without regard to the number of lots or purchasers. Re Allen's Charities, 2 Myl. & K. 627.

6. Other Cases.

9. Purchaser of lands under decree, who has obtained an absolute order to confirm the sale, and has paid in his entire purchase money, is not liable to deduction for receiver's fees upon the rents collected in the interim, before he could get into possession. That expense falls upon the vendor; but the circumstance that the purchaser, by taking an assignment of the plaintiff's interest, assumed the duty of making title, makes a distinction. Dutgean v. Nangle, 2 Moll. 96.

10. A purchaser who allows the receiver to continue in possession until the title is declared good, is bound to pay receiver's fees, as he might have gone into possession himself on an undertaking to account if the title turned out defective. Brown v. Dondall, 2 Hog. 198.

11. A party who obtained possession of estates by a conveyance from a tenant for life and equitable incumbrancer, decreed the estates as his own; part were sold in a suit to administer his estates. In a subsequent suit by a party claiming the estates as devisee of the former owner, the purchaser was directed to pay his own costs. Incorporated Society for Protestant Schools v. Richards, 1 Dr. & War. 258; 1 Con. & L. 58; 4 Ir. Eq. R. 177.

12. A purchaser, under the Court, who had not obtained his conveyance, paid his money into court, subject to a stop-order:—Held, that he was entitled to his costs of appearance on further consideration, he having been served with notice. Noble v. Stow, 30 Beav. 272.

13. A purchaser under a decree has no lien for his costs on the funds in court, arising out of the sales of other property, so as to prevent any distribution of the fund until the report of the title being bad has been confirmed. M' Cann v. O'Farrell, 1 Hog. 137.

Taxation.] 1. Charges of a sale to be taxed under the head of just allowances, not of costs. Crump v. Baker, 18 Ves. 285.

2. Costs, charges, and expenses of, and incidental to, the sale of the real estates of the testator, in the cause, were by the decree ordered to be taxed and paid. On making out these costs, charges, and expenses, it appeared that $404. had been paid for surveying and selling the estates, upon which the fee of taxation of 36 per cent. attached. In order to avoid this fee, a motion was made, all parties consenting, to vary the order by only directing taxing master to add to the amount of the taxed costs of the plaintiffs any sums which he should find to have been properly paid by them to any surveyor or other person, as his charge for valuing or otherwise, in reference to the sales. The Court varied the order accordingly. Bellas v. Harmer, 3 De G. & Sm. 454.

XV. SALE SUBJECT TO INCUMBRANCES.

See also v. 6 (c) and (d) supra—VI. 3 supra—XI. 3 supra.

3. Purchaser under decree bound to see directions of decree observed. Colclough v. Sterum, 3 Bligh, 181.

Lands in strict settlement, with power to grant leases, being subject to prior incumbrances, are by decree in a suit instituted by incumbrancers directed to be sold, subject to charges prior to deed of settlement. Pending suit, tenant for life under settlement grants leases not authorised by power, and raises money upon annuities for his life, which he charges upon the lands, and they are sold subject to those charges:—Held (reversing decree in court below, on suit by remainderman in tail), that the sale, subject to charges not warranted by decree, is void. Id.

4. Two of four co-heiresses-at-law residing out of the jurisdiction, sale of the inheritance decreed in their absence, at the suit of judgment creditor of ancestor. The heir-at-law being absent from the jurisdiction, sale of real estate may be effectuated under the decree of the Court, the particular of sale stating the fact, and the purchaser buying with notice. Leahy v. Dancer, 3 Moll. 108.

5. Where lands are decreed to be sold subject to an annuity, it is conclusive evidence that the annuity is prior to the claims of all persons claiming under the decree; and a report, on a reference to ascertain priorities, finding that the arrears of the annuity are posterior to some of those claims, is erroneous, and will be varied accordingly. Sparrow v. Cooper, 1 Jones 72.

6. The decree directing a sale of a competent part of the lands, and the claim of dower subject to which the sale was to be had, overriding the whole lands, Lord Chancellor observing that he did not know an instance:—Held, that on consent of all parties he had jurisdiction on a petition in that cause in which the sale was decreed to direct a commission to set out dower, a sale discharged of dower being clearly for the benefit of the inheritor, without requiring a bill to be filed for the purpose. Chambers v. Davenport, 1 Moll. 490.

7. A decree for the sale of an incumbered estate does not, of itself, alter the rights of parties. Wild or Lee v. Lockhart, 10 Beav. 320; 16 L. J., N. S., Ch., 519.

8. Confirmed purchaser under a decree having paid in his entire purchase money, which was invested in stock, on the motion of the parties in the cause, on the question whether he was entitled to the option of money or stock for an aliquot part of his purchase money, the amount of an incumbrance, which there was no authority to receive until infants entitled become adult:—Held, entitled to elect either his money with interest, or the stock bought with it; Lord Chancellor expressing at the same time his opinion against the eligibility of the rule permitting the payment of the entire purchase money before the title is made out. Scott v. Rothe, 2 Moll. 548.

I. PURCHASER WITHOUT NOTICE. GENERAL RIGHTS OF.

9. Plea of purchase for valuable consideration without notice of plaintiffs' title is good as a plea in bar, and protects defendant from answering to title set up by plaintiff. Fitzgerald v. Fauconberge, Fitz. 207; 2 Madd. Ch. Pr. 321.

He who would entitle himself to protection of equity as a purchaser, must claim under actual conveyance, but need not have the legal estate. S. C. Fitzg. 207, 213.

He that is purchaser in law, as by taking estate in right of wife by his marriage, is not a purchaser in notion of equity. Id. 212.

1. Whoever has the best right to call for the legal title, can avail himself of the plea of purchase for valuable consideration without notice. Medlicott v. O'Donnell, 1 Ball & B. 171.

2. A purchaser without notice shall not be hurt in equity, not only where he has got a prior legal title, but where he has a better right to call for the legal estate than another, who has got an incumbrance prior to his title. Wilkes v. Bodington, 2 Vern. 599.

3. Title of purchaser for valuable consideration is a good ground of defence, but not for relief. Patterson v. Slaughter, Amb. 293.

4. Purchase for a valuable consideration bonâ fide paid:—Held, a good defence, though the consideration was much less than the real value. Bullock v. Sadlier, Amb. 764.

5. Purchase for valuable consideration without notice, is not available as a defence against a plaintiff who relies upon a legal title. Collins v. Archer, 1 Russ. & M. 284.

6. Semble, that a purchase for a valuable consideration, without notice, is available as a defence against a plaintiff who relies on a legal title. Payne v. Compton, 2 Y. & Coll. 457.

7. A purchase for a valuable consideration, without notice, is a defence as well against a legal as an equitable title. Joyce v. De Moleyns, 2 J. & L. 374; 8 Ir. Eq. R. 215.

8. The defence of being a purchaser for valuable consideration without notice is available in equity against a legal as well as against an equitable title, and also as against a charity. Att.-Gen. v. Wilkins, 17 Beav. 285; 17 Jur. 885; 22 L. J., Ch., 830.

In the year 1641 a legal rent charge was granted to trustees for charitable purposes. The trustees had not been filled up, and it was not known in whom the legal estate was now vested. The rent charge had been nevertheless paid to the charity by the successive owners of the land until 1832, when the land was sold to the defendant, who never made any payment in respect of the rent charge:—Held, in an information and bill on behalf of the charity, that the purchase for valuable consideration without notice was a good defence, although the plaintiffs claimed under a legal title. S. C. 1 W. R. 472; 1 Eq. Rep. 574.

9. The defence of purchase for valuable consideration, without notice, is available when the subject matter purchased is an equitable estate. Ernest v. Virian, 33 L. J., Ch., 513; 12 W. R. 295; 9 L. T., N. S., 785.

10. A court of equity does not restrict the protection it will afford a purchaser for valuable consideration without notice, to a case in which he has got the legal estate. Colyer v. Finch, 5 H. L. C. 905. And see 2 Eq. Rep. 117; 2 W. R. 655.

11. The Court will protect a purchaser for valuable consideration without notice, even though his estate may be merely equitable. Hunter v. Walters, 24 L. T., N. S., 276; 11

L. R., Eq., 292. Affirmed 7 L. R., Ch., 75; 41 L. J., Ch., 175; 25 L. T. 765; 20 W. R. 418.

12. The defence of a defendant, that he is a purchaser for value without notice, is only available where the plaintiff is seeking to take something away from the defendant which he already has. Barnard v. Hunter, 2 Jur., N. S., 1213.

The plea of a purchaser for value without notice is not available to the mortgagee of an assignment of a chose in action as against the assignor, even though the assignor seeks to enforce a personal equity against his assignee. Cockell v. Taylor (15 Beav. 105; 21 L. J., Ch., 545) observed upon. S. C. 5 W. R. 92; 2 Jur., N. S., 1213.

13. The purchaser of a chose in action (whether with or without notice) cannot be in a better position than the person from whom he purchased. Brandon v. Brandon, 2 Jur., N. S., 981; 25 L. J., Ch., 896; 7 De G. M. & G. 365.

A purchaser (even for valuable consideration without notice) of a share of a fund in court cannot be in a better position than his vendor. S. C. 5 W. R. 1.

14. A purchaser cannot plead no notice if he abstain from calling for information to which he is entitled by law. Parker v. Whyte, 2 N. R. 157; 11 W. R. 683; 8 L. T., N. S., 446; 1 Hem. & M. 167; 32 L. J., Ch., 520.

15. The rule with respect to the consequence of a purchaser abstaining from making inquiries does not depend exclusively on a fraudulent motive for such abstinence. Jones v. Williams, 24 Beav. 47; 3 Jur., N. S., 1066.

When the circumstances of a case put a purchaser on inquiry, a false answer or a reasonable answer given to any inquiry may dispense with the necessity of further inquiry; but where no inquiry has been made, it is impossible to conclude that a false answer would have been given if an inquiry had been made, or such as would have precluded the necessity of any further inquiry. Id.

16. Purchase for valuable consideration without notice, may be a good defence, although the legal estate is outstanding in a mortgagee. Penny v. Watts, 2 De G. & Sm. 501.

17. A man who purchases without notice of a prior incumbrance or prior right, shall not have his title impeached in equity, nor shall he be compelled to discover any writings which may weaken his title, neither shall any advantage be taken from him which may defend him at law. Harding v. Hardrett, Rep. temp. Finch. 9; Heyman v. Gornelton, id. 34; Snelling v. Squibb, 2 Ch. Ca. 47; Wilkes v. Bodington, 2 Vern. 599; Stephens v. Gaulle, id. 701. He must plead himself a purchaser, without notice. Bodmin v. Vandenbendy, 1 Vern. 179.

18. Equity will not relieve the assignees of a bankrupt against a purchaser of the bankrupt's lands without notice of the Act of Bankruptcy. Chandos v. Brownlow, 2 Ridgw. P. C. 425.

19. Purchase for valuable consideration without notice of any incumbrance, is a good plea. Anon., 3 Salk. 85.

20. Plea of purchase for valuable consideration, not good to a bill for dower. Williams v. Lambe, 3 Bro. C. C. 264.

21. If the persons claiming under the breach of trust have notice of it, then they are subject to the same trust; so, if the conveyance be voluntary, or without a valuable consideration; but if for a valuable consideration, and without notice, the purchaser will hold the land discharged, and the trustees must buy and settle other land to the same uses. Mansell v. Mansell, 2 P. W. 681.

1. Defendant, stating by answer a purchase for valuable consideration without notice, shall not be compelled to answer farther. Jerrard v. Saunders, 2 Ves. J. 454.

This Court will not take the least step against a purchaser for valuable consideration without notice, not even to perpetuate testimony against him. Id. 458.

2. Devisee shall not examine witnesses in perpetuum rei memoriam, to prove a will against a purchaser without notice, till the will has been established by a verdict at law. Bochinall v. Arnold, 1 Vern. 354.

3. The rule that a purchaser for valuable consideration without notice, is protected by the legal estate, extends not only to cases where his title is impeached by reason of some secret act done by the vendor, or those under whom he claims, but to cases also where his title is impeached by reason of the falsehood of a fact of title asserted by the vendor or those under whom he claims, provided such asserted title is clothed with possession, and the falsehood of the alleged fact could not have been discovered by reasonable diligence. Jones v. Pomes, 3 Myl. & K. 581; 3 L. J., N. S., Ch., 210.

4. Quare, whether purchaser for valuable consideration, under a decree fraudulently obtained, though ignorant of fraud, can protect himself, when fraud appears on face of proceedings. Gore v. Staapole, 1 Dow 30.

5. Lease of lands in Ireland, made after the lessor's estate has been put under sequestration for contempt of Court of Exchequer in that kingdom, was held good, the lessee having no notice of sequestration. Vicars v. Colelough, 5 Bro. P. C. 31.

6. Purchaser of an equitable title to a rent charge, claiming against some purchasers of the land for a valuable consideration without notice, must try his title at law in the name of his vendors. Whitfield v. Fausset, 1 Ves. 387.

7. Legal interest prevails against a prior equitable interest. Wilson v. Stafford, Amb. 181.

8. Bill by purchaser without notice of mortgage and assignment for delivery up of deeds, and conveyance of legal estate, upheld. Bennett v. Harrison, 7 Jur. 436.

9. One seised of an estate, subject to several equitable incumbrances, sells it to a purchaser, and conveys the legal estate to him free from incumbrances, except some of the equitable incumbrances, which were later in date to the others; the purchaser, having no notice of the other incumbrances, was held a trustee for the excepted creditors only, and they were preferred to the other creditors. Ingram v. Pelham, Amb. 153.

10. Plea of valuable consideration without notice is no protection against adverse claim, of which purchaser might have had notice by using due diligence. Jackson v. Rome, 2 Sim. & S. 472; 4 L. J., Ch., 118.

11. Plea of purchase for valuable consideration without notice:—Held, good. Gordon v. England (Bank of), 8 Jur. 1132.

12. Purchasers for valuable consideration not bound by private Act of Parliament. Pomfret (Earl) v. Windsor (Lord), 2 Ves. 480.

13. A party claiming to be a purchaser for a valuable consideration without notice, under a marriage contract, must show that he had no notice at the time of the settlement; proof that he had no notice at the time of the articles is not sufficient. Davies v. Thomas, 2 Y. & Coll. 234; 7 L. J., N. S., Exch. Eq., 21.

14. An owner of a leasehold house mortgaged to first and second and third mortgagees. He then sold it, subject to the first two incumbrances only, to a purchaser who paid for it by a cheque of his trading firm, and took the assignment; but, owing to misgivings, he countermanded payment of the cheque, and then, for the first time, received notice of the existence of the third mortgage. Being, however, threatened with summons in bankruptcy, he withdrew his countermand and the cheque was paid:—Held, that he was not a purchaser for value without notice, but was bound to redeem the third incumbrance. Tildesley v. Lodge, 3 Sm. & G. 543; 3 Jur., N. S., 1000.

Held, also, that as D. had unsuccessfully contested C's equitable right against him, he must pay the costs occasioned by his disputing C's title. Id.

15. The doctrine, that no relief whatever will be given against a bona fide purchaser without notice, requires qualification, as the Court will make a declaration of priority adversely to a claim of a defendant who is a purchaser without notice of an equitable interest. Stackhouse v. Jersey (Countess), 1 John. & H. 721.

Accordingly, where a plaintiff was interested in a moiety of a fund invested on mortgage in the name of a trustee, who fraudulently deposited the mortgage deed with the defendant to secure a debt of his own, the defendant having no notice of the plaintiff's interest, the Court declared that the plaintiff was entitled, in priority to the defendant, to one moiety of the fund; and, the money having been paid into court, an order for payment to the plaintiff was made accordingly. Id.

16. There is no general rule that a court of equity will never assist a plaintiff against a defendant who is a purchaser without notice; and an incumbrancer for value of an equitable interest may successfully file a bill against a subsequent incumbrancer for value to have a priority declared and enforced. Phillips v. Phillips, 4 De G. F. & J. 208; 8 Jur., N. S., 145; 31 L. J., Ch., 321. Affirming 3 Giff. 200; 7 Jur., N. S., 1094; 5 L. T., N. S., 108.

17. A cestui que trust of an annuity, secured by a term in an estate, filed a bill against the trustee of the term and the purchaser for value of the estate, praying that the trusts of the term might be administered. The purchaser, who was in possession of the estate, had no notice of the term, or of any interest of the cestui que trust in the estate, and denied the existence of any term in the trustee:—Held, that until the trustee had established his right to the term at law, the cestui que trust could have no such relief as prayed in equity. Clemow v. Geach, 19 W. B. 53.

18. The plaintiff, previous to his marriage with A's daughter, wrote to A, inquiring what fortune his daughter was entitled to. A, in his reply, stated that certain houses were entailed on his daughter after his decease. A. died, leaving his daughter his only child, and having devised all his real estates to his wife. It was then discovered that A. was tenant in tail male of the houses, with reversion to himself in fee. In January 1816 the plaintiff and his wife filed a bill against A.'s widow (who was in possession of the houses) to have the houses conveyed to the plaintiff's wife, conformably to the representation in the letter, and for a receiver, and an injunction to stay proceedings at law. An injunction was granted, and the widow having put in her answer, the injunction was, in January 1818, continued. The plaintiff did not take any further proceedings till May 1820. In April 1818 the widow mortgaged the houses for 500 years to H.; and in May 1819 she sold an annuity to M., and secured it by a conveyance of the houses to trustees in fee; and in May 1819 she sold and conveyed the houses, subject to the mortgage and annuity, to W. in fee. H., W., and M. had none of them then any notice of the suit or of the plaintiff's claim. In January 1820, at which time M. had notice, the houses were purchased by M., and conveyed to him by H. and W. In May 1820 the bill was amended. The widow having gone abroad without answering the amended bill, a decree was taken pro confesso against her in November 1822. In December following the plaintiff had notice of the conveyance to M.; and in March 1831 filed a bill against M., stating the proceedings in the original suit, and praying that M. might be decreed to convey the houses to the plaintiff's wife, and for a receiver. M. by his answer relied partly on the want of notice in H. and W., and in himself when he purchased the annuity, but the Court, on motion, granted a receiver. Landon v. Morris, 5 Sim. 257; 2 L. J., N. S., Ch., 35.

1. A trader directed his trustees and executors, with all convenient speed, to convert into money his residuary estate, but he provided that three (or in case of any substantial reason, seven) years might be allowed for withdrawing his capital from the business in which he was a partner. Parties beneficially interested under the will filed their bill against the surviving partners and the legal personal representatives, insisting that the administratrix had improperly allowed the testator's capital to remain in the business beyond the prescribed period, and asking to have a share in the profits made while the capital remained in the business. The defendants pleaded, that before the testator's death, the partners made a valuation, when the share of the testator appeared to be 63,000*l.*; that a year after his death, it was agreed between the surviving partners and the administratrix, that the new firm "should take to" the whole stock, on payment to her of 63,000*l.*, and should become purchasers of the testator's share at that sum; that they gave her a bond for 40,000*l.*, and placed the residue at her disposal, which was drawn out from time to time at her pleasure. It appeared that the capital had not been finally withdrawn till 1845. By the plea they insisted, that they had thus become purchasers of the share for valuable consideration, and without notice of the trusts of the will.—Held, that this was a valid defence to the claim to participate in the profits. Chambers v. Howell, 11 Beav. 6; 12 Jur. 905.

2. Where A., the heir of lessee, having a right to perpetual renewal, had entered into an agreement with B. respecting the independent lease of lands, held under renewable lease by ancestors of B., which independent lease B. had obtained from landlord by fraud and circumvention:—Held, that heir of A., and purchasers for valuable consideration claiming under him, were entitled in equity to benefit of agreement between B. and A., and that heir of landlord was entitled to benefit of agreement, so far as B. took an interest. Butler v. Mulvihill, 1 Bligh. 137.

3. Real estate belonged to three partners; one retired and conveyed his share to the two others, "subject to all charges and mortgages affecting the same," and the two made an equitable mortgage to the defendant. There were three charges on the property, but the defendant knew of two only, and made no inquiry as to there being more:—Held, that having notice of the terms of the conveyance to the surviving parties, the defendant was bound to inquire whether there were any other charges, and not having done so, that he could not, as against the third equitable charge, insist on being purchaser for valuable consideration without notice. Jones v. Williams, 24 Beav. 47; 3 Jur., N. S., 1066.

4. A purchaser of a lease, under a condition not to inquire into the lessor's title, cannot protect himself against a suit to set aside a lease as being invalid in equity on the ground that he is a purchaser for value without notice. Robson v. Flight, 11 Jur., N. S., 147; 34 L. J., Ch., 226; 13 W. R. 893; 11 L. T., N. S., 725. Affirming 10 Jur., N. S., 1228; 13 W. R. 195; 4 De G. J. & S. 608.

5. Where purchaser has given a full value for estate, mistake of some party to conveyance of their claim thereto under a marriage settlement shall not turn to the prejudice of the purchaser without notice. Malden v. Menill, 2 Atk. 8.

6. A purchaser of real estate, upon signing the contract, assigned and delivered a negotiable bond as a deposit to T., who (though never admitted) alleged himself to be a solicitor, and the solicitor for the vendor. T. transferred the bond to the defendant, as a security for his own debt. The vendor of the real estate was a fictitious person, and the contract a fraud. The purchaser filed a bill to get back the bond from the defendant:—Held, that the deposit did not make T. a trustee for the plaintiff; and that the defendant, being a purchaser for value without notice, could not be restrained from dealing with the bond. Ashwin v. Burton, 9 Jur., N. S., 819; 32 L. J., Ch., 196; 7 L. T., N. S., 589; 11 W. R. 103.

7. Voluntary settlement of personal property, in trust for such one or more of his children as the settlor shall appoint. Appointment to one child exclusively, upon a secret understanding that the child shall re-assign a part of the fund to or in favour of a stranger. This appointment is a fraud upon the settlement, and void, not only to the extent of the sum assigned back, but in toto. Bill, by purchaser for valuable consideration, without notice, under this appointment, dismissed as against the person entitled under the settlement, in default of appointment; such person having also the legal estate in the fund which was the subject of the appointment. Daubeny v. Cockburn, 1 Meriv. 626.

Payment of a valuable consideration by person, not having the legal estate, and not being an object of the power, cannot set up an invalid appointment in favour of such purchaser. Id. 638.

Secus, where the power is unlimited as to its objects, and the appointment is only impeachable on the ground of its being voluntary. Id.

1. When a person seised in trust for himself and another in common in fee retains the entire rents, the debt arising in favour of the co-tenant will not be charged on the trustee's beneficial interest as against a purchaser without notice from him. British Mutual Investment Co. v. Smart, 10 L. R., Ch., 567; 44 L. J., Ch., 695; 32 L. T. 849; 23 W. R. 800.

2. Trustees of a marriage settlement, where by a mortgage debt was settled substantially for the benefit of A., cannot set up the defence of purchasers for valuable consideration without notice, independently of A., when the mortgage is attempted to be set aside on the ground of fraud. Spaight v. Cowne, Edwards v. Spaight, 1 N. R. 550.

3. One seised of an estate, subject to several equitable incumbrances, sells it to a purchaser, and conveys the legal estate to him free from incumbrances, except some of the equitable incumbrances, which were later in date to the others; the purchaser having no notice of the other incumbrances, was held a trustee for the excepted creditors only, and they were preferred to other creditors. Ingram v. Pelham, Amb. 153.

4. A purchaser gives the vendor's bankers, in whose hands the title deeds of the estates are, an undertaking to give them his acceptance at a specified time, for a certain sum then due to them from the vendor, after the period specified; but before he has given his acceptance, he has notices of incumbrances on the estate:—Held, that as against the incumbrancer, he is not a purchaser for a valuable consideration without notice. Reid v. Tait, 1 L. J., Ch., 6.

5. In January 1848 A. demised an estate to his sisters by way of mortgage to secure a debt. The sisters allowed A. to retain the title deeds in order to enable him to give a first mortgage to secure another debt due by him to B. and C., for which he was being sued. In April 1848 A. covenanted with B. and C. to execute a mortgage of the estate as a security for the debt due to them; and the title deeds were at the same time deposited by A. with his own solicitor, by way of security, until the mortgage should be prepared, but no legal mortgage was ever executed by A. to B. and C. In 1850 A. made a legal mortgage of the estate to D., who had no notice of the incumbrances of 1848, and the title deeds were delivered to D. The mortgage by A. to his sisters was executed by him for his own purposes only, and it was intended to be used by him against the claimants on the estate, if any occasion for so doing should arise:—Held, that as D. acquired the legal estate without notice of the prior incumbrances, he became entitled to priority over B. and C. Lloyd v. Atwood, Atwood v. Lloyd, 5 Jur., N. S., 1322; 3 De G. & J. 614; 29 L. J., Ch., 97.

6. The defendant, who was in possession of a piece of land, under an agreement for sale, upon which he had built a granary, allowed his sons, who were partners, to have the occupation of the land and premises. The sons erected other buildings of considerable value upon the land, and supplied the father with goods for the amount of the cost of the granary erected by him. The sons afterwards applied to bankers, for a loan upon the security of the land and premises, and having obtained surreptitious possession of the agreement for the sale of the land to the father, without his knowledge, deposited the agreement with the bankers, alleging that the father had given up to them all his interest in the land, and would execute a conveyance to the bankers when required. The father had previously to this transaction become surety for the sons to another bank, and was called upon to pay a large debt in respect of this surety. The father alleged that he had never given the land to the sons, and had never intended to do so until he was released from his liability as surety. The bankers filed a bill to establish, as against the father, a charge on the land for the advances to the sons:—Held, that the sons had an equitable charge upon the land, as against the father, for the amount paid by them to the father, and for their own expenditure on the land; that although the deposit was made under false representations, and did not bind the father, yet that the bankers were purchasers for value without notice, and were entitled to a charge on the land to the full extent of the lien of the sons; and that although the father, in respect of his suretyship, had a right to set-off against his sons, yet it could not be enforced against the bankers, whose right accrued without notice of any claim of the father. Unity Joint Stock Banking Association v. King, 4 Jur., N. S., 470; 27 L. J., Ch., 585.

7. In 1873 D., in order to carry out a fraudulent scheme, obtained a transfer to himself of mortgages of freehold property, and after various dealings with it the legal estate was, in September 1875, conveyed by a mortgagee to H. in trust for M., and in March 1876 by H. to M. M. was alleged to have been an accomplice of and trustee for D. In August 1874, in pursuance of this scheme, T., claiming to be entitled to this property under a fictitious lease for ninety-eight years, purporting to have been granted to him in March 1870 by a merely fictitious freeholder (an agent and accomplice of D.), demised the property by way of mortgage to A. In November 1874, M., claiming to be entitled to the same property under a fictitious lease for ninety-nine years, also dated March 1870, and purporting to be granted to him by T., demised the property by way of mortgage to B., the mortgage deed being executed by M. only. In January 1877 M. (to whom the legal estate had been conveyed in March 1876) deposited the genuine title deeds of the property with C., upon a memorandum charging his estate and interest in the lands comprised in the deeds and a statutory declaration of title; and further advances were made to

M. and D., who came forward and stated that M. was merely a trustee for him of the property. In 1878 D., M., and T. were convicted and sentenced to penal servitude for forgery and fraud in connection with this property, and C., as equitable mortgagee, entered into possession. In an action by A. to settle the priorities of himself, B. and C. as incumbrancers on the property:—Held, that as purchaser for value without notice by deposit of the genuine title deeds, C., though subsequent in date, was entitled in priority over A. and B. Keate v. Phillips, 18 L. R., Ch. D., 560; 50 L. J., Ch., 664; 44 L. T. 731; 29 W. R. 710.

II. PROTECTION BY ACQUIRING LEGAL ESTATE OR OUTSTANDING INTERESTS.

1. Where the purchaser, for valuable consideration, claimed under a party who had obtained possession under a forged will, which no reasonable diligence could have discovered:—Held, that the legal estate acquired from a trustee of a satisfied mortgage protected him as a purchaser for valuable consideration without notice; the protection is to be extended, not merely to cases in which the title of such purchaser is impeached by reason of a secret act done, but also to cases in which it is impeached by reason of the falsehood of a fact of title asserted by the vendor, or those under whom he claims, when such asserted title is clothed with possession, and the falsehood of the fact asserted could not have been detected by reasonable diligence. Jones v. Pomes, 3 Myl. & K. 581.

2. Title deeds were deposited as a security for money; the defendant, a creditor of the mortgagor, fearing his immediate insolvency, took a conveyance of the same premises, without notice of the incumbrance; this was held good. Plumb v. Fluit, 2 Anstr. 432.

3. Purchaser for valuable consideration without notice shall not be impeached, especially when a settlement has been since made in his favour. Rocheport v. Nugent, 5 Bro. P. C. 351.

4. A purchaser or mortgagee shall not protect himself by taking a conveyance from a trustee after notice of the trust, for, by taking such conveyance, he becomes the trustee himself. Saunders v. Dehew, 2 Vern. 271.

5. S. executed mortgages to B. upon estates in Ireland. The deed contained covenants that the lands conveyed were free from incumbrances, and for further assurance. Before the deeds were registered it was discovered that a portion of the land was subject to a mortgage to E. B. thereupon applied to S., who, by means of assigning certain shares, which afterwards turned out to be fictitious, and a forged promissory note, procured a release from E. of the land so subject to the mortgage. B., in ignorance of the fraud, then registered his deeds. The Court in Ireland held that B. was a purchaser for value of the release as having been procured by S. in pursuance of the covenants in the mortgage deed, and that B., being ignorant of the fraud of S., was entitled to retain the advantage which the release had given him. On appeal the decision was reversed. Eyre v. Burmester, 10 W. R. 587.

E. was the equitable owner of the estate, and could at any time, by bill in equity, have set aside the fraudulent release, and his equitable title ought to be preferred to the claim of B. Ib.

6. Grants in reversion obtained by an agent and trustee from his employers and cestuis que trustent by fraud and misrepresentation, afterwards assigned, for valuable consideration, to a purchaser having notice of the facts and nature of the title, set aside. A conveyance taken after the grants, the fiduciary relations still existing, and the grantor ignorant of his rights, is a continuation of the fraud, and not a confirmation. Dunbar v. Tredennick, 2 Ball & B. 304.

7. A purchaser for valuable consideration, without notice, getting in the legal estate from a trustee, takes it subject to all those trusts upon which the trustee held it, and appearing upon the face of the instrument under which the trustee takes. Carter v. Carter, 3 Kay & J. 618; 4 Jur., N. S., 63; 27 L. J., Ch., 75.

8. A., who was entitled to a sum of money secured by a trust term in reversion after a life estate, went to Australia, and remained there many years; during which time B., representing him to be dead, obtained administration to his estate and effects, and a suit having been instituted in relation to the fund secured by the trust term, it was found by the report, and confirmed by a final decree, that he was dead. B. afterwards sold the charge to a purchaser for value, who took an assignment of the term from the trustee to a trustee for himself; and A. having come back on the death of the tenant for life, and filed a bill to set aside the sale of the charge:—Held, that, although the administration taken out by B. gave him no title to assign the charge, yet that the Court would not interfere to take away from a purchaser for value without notice the benefit of the legal estate which he had obtained by the assignment of the term. Monckton v. Braddell, 6 Ir. R., Eq., 352.

9. A person who has bona fide paid money without notice of any other title, may afterwards, even pendente lite, get a legal title if he can, and may hold it, though during the interval between the payment and the getting in of the legal title he may have had notice of some prior dealing inconsistent with the good faith of the dealing with himself. Blackwood v. London Chartered Bank of Australia, 5 L. R., P. C., 92; 43 L. J., P. C., 25; 22 W. R. 419; 30 L. T., N. S., 45.

10. A purchaser for valuable consideration without notice of any prior equity, having accidentally acquired the legal estate under a deed of which he had no notice at the time of the purchase, is not affected without notice of anything contained in such deed. Pilcher v. Rawlins, Joyce v. Rawlins, 41 L. J., Ch., 485; 7 L. R., Ch., 259; 20 W. R. 281; 25 L. T., N. S., 921. Reversing 11 L. R., Eq., 53; 19 W. R. 217.

Such a purchaser's plea of a purchase for valuable consideration without notice is an absolute, unqualified, unanswerable defence, and an unanswerable plea to the jurisdiction of the Court. Ib.

The defence of the purchase for value without notice may be sustained, although the defendant, in order to make out his title to the legal estate, must rely on an instrument which discloses the title of the plaintiff, the defendant, not having had notice of such instrument at the time of the purchase. Id.

B., a trustee, advanced trust money to A. in 1861, on a legal mortgage of land belonging to A. in fee, the mortgage deed reciting the trust. By collusion with B., A., in 1866, obtained the title deeds, and also a conveyance of the legal estate, and then, suppressing the mortgage and re-conveyance, conveyed as under his original title the legal estate to C. by way of mortgage. In a suit by B.'s cestui que trust:—Held, that C. was entitled to rely on the legal estate acquired through the suppressed re-conveyance, and was not affected with notice of any equities which, if he had seen that deed, he might have discovered upon inquiry. Id.

1. Two trustees, one of whom was a solicitor, advanced money on mortgage. The mortgagor, with concurrence of the solicitor trustee, sold part of the mortgaged property without disclosing the mortgage. Regular conveyances in fee to the purchasers were executed by the mortgagor, containing a recital that he was seised or otherwise well and sufficiently entitled in fee-simple. The solicitor trustee received the purchase money, and retained it. Eleven years afterwards both trustees executed a re-conveyance of the property so sold, the other trustee believing, on the representation of the solicitor trustee, that the property was then about to be sold by the mortgagor. Soon afterwards the solicitor trustee absconded, and the other trustee then filed a bill against the mortgagor and the purchasers, praying for foreclosure against them:—Held, that though the purchasers were purchasers for valuable consideration without notice, they could not avail themselves of any legal estate acquired by means of the re-conveyance, which, having been obtained by fraud, must be cancelled; and that they had purchased only the equity of redemption. Heath v. Crealock, 10 L. R., Ch., 22; 44 L. J., Ch., 157; 31 L. T., N. S., 650.

Held, that under the form of conveyance adopted, neither the plaintiff nor the mortgagor was estopped from denying that the legal estate had passed by the conveyance to the purchasers. Id.

Held, that a decree must be made against the purchasers, but for foreclosure and not for sale. Id.

Held, also, that the purchaser could not be ordered to deliver up the title deeds in their possession, the rule being that from a purchaser for value without notice the Court takes nothing away which he has honestly acquired. Id.

2. A subsequent purchaser protected by getting in an old satisfied statute. Stanton v. Sadler, 2 Vern. 30.

3. Assignee of a statute purchases the estate, having notice of a second statute. How far he shall make use of the first statute to protect his purchase. Huntingdon v. Greenville, 1 Vern. 49.

Conusee of a statute, having extended the land, assigns it to J. and dies. One that had a second statute gets administration, and acknowledges satisfaction on the first statute. Equity will relieve against this practice, and put the assignee in the same plight as if the statute was still in force. Id. 51.

III. SUB-PURCHASER WITHOUT NOTICE.

4. A. sells to B., who has notice of an incumbrance on the estate; B. sells to C., who has no notice; and he to D., who has notice; whether this revives the first notice to B. Harrison v. Forth, Pre. Ch. 51.

5. A purchaser with notice himself from a person who bought without notice, may shelter himself under the first purchase. Lowther v. Carlton, 2 Atk. 242; Ca. temp. Talb. 186.

6. One purchases, having notice of a settlement, whereby the vendor was but tenant for life, remainder to his first son in tail, and afterwards sells to one who had no notice; tenant for life dies leaving a son. Decreed, the last purchaser shall hold the land, but the first shall account for the purchase money, which he received with interest from the death of the tenant for life. Ferrars v. Cherry, 2 Vern. 383.

The settlement is made after marriage, in pursuance of articles before the marriage; but the articles are not taken notice of in the settlement. The purchaser, however, having notice of the settlement, it was incumbent on him to inquire whether it was voluntary, or made in pursuance of an agreement before marriage. Id.

7. A purchaser for a valuable consideration, with notice of voluntary settlement from a person who bought without notice, shall shelter himself under the first purchase, but he cannot defend himself in equity upon articles only. Brandlyn v. Ord, 1 Atk. 571; 1 West 512.

8. A person affected by notice, has the benefit of the want of notice by intermediate parties. McQueen v. Farquhar, 11 Ves. 478.

9. A. articles to sell lands to B. for 15,000*l.*, the whole to be paid in money, or so much land returned as would make up what he paid short of 15,000*l.* A. conveys part of the lands to B., and by persuasion values that part at an undervalue; and then B. sells this part to C., and afterwards would have returned so much of the lands as would make up the 15,000*l.* Articles set aside as unreasonable, but the sale to C. to stand. Whorwood v. Simpson, 2 Vern. 186.

10. One affected with notice conveys to another without notice; the assignee having legal estate shall not be affected with the notice to assignor, and so vice versa. Mertins v. Jolliffe, Amb. 313.

11. Assignee of a mortgage from persons not having notice of mortgagor's being only tenant for life:—Held, not bound to discover whether he himself had notice. Sweet v. Southcote, 2 Bro. C. C. 67; Dick. 670.

12. The plaintiffs sought to set aside a conveyance made by their ancestor, as they alleged while a lunatic, under undue influence, and for an inadequate consideration. The defendant, who claimed under a derivative title from the purchaser, insisted that he was a purchaser for valuable consideration without notice. No notice, actual or constructive, having been proved, the Court refused to interfere, and dismissed the bill with costs. Greenlade v. Darré, 20 Beav. 284; 1 Jur., N. S., 294; 24 L. J., Ch., 490.

1. A purchaser for value, without notice, from one who claimed under a conveyance obtained by fraud from the rightful owner, cannot defend himself as against such rightful owner, where the person who so claimed was not in possession as apparent owner at the time of the sale to the purchaser for value. Ogilvie v. Jeaffreson, 29 L. J., Ch., 905; 8 W. R. 745.

2. The only exception, and the well-known exception, to the rule which protects a purchaser with notice taking from a purchaser without notice, is that which prevents a trustee buying back trust property which he has sold, or a fraudulent man who has acquired property by fraud saying he sold it to a bonâ fide purchaser, without notice, and he got it back again. There are cases to show that a person shall not take advantage of his own wrong. Semble. Barrow's case, 14 L. R., Ch. D., 445; 49 L. J., Ch., 498; 42 L. T. 891.

3. A vendor of land situate in a register county, part of whose purchase money remains unpaid, is under no obligation to obtain for the unpaid amount any written security which can be registered, but is entitled to rely simply on his equitable lien, which he can enforce against sub-purchasers who have notice of it, actual or constructive; and such a vendor will not, by registering the conveyance to his purchaser, if he retains the deed in his possession lose his lien as against sub-purchasers from the original purchaser. Kettlemell v. Watson, 21 L. R., Ch. D., 685; 51 L. J., Ch., 281; 46 L. T. 83; 30 W. R. 402.

Land belonging to the trustees of a charity situate in the suburbs of Leeds, in the West Riding of Yorkshire, was sold by the trustees, with the sanction of the charity commissioners, to some estate agents who occupied a good position in Leeds. They bought the land with the intention of reselling it in small lots for building purposes. A receipt for the whole purchase money, signed by the vendors, was indorsed on the conveyance, but only part of it was in fact paid. The vendors retained the deed in their possession, but, at the request of the purchasers, the vendors' solicitors registered a memorandum of it in the West Riding registry. The vendors took no written security for their unpaid purchase money, but relied only on their equitable lien. The purchasers sold the land again in lots, some of which were very small. None of the sub-purchasers had actual notice of the lien of the original vendors:—Held, that the original vendors were entitled to enforce their lien against such of the sub-purchasers as had constructive notice of it. Ib.

IV. SALE OF ESTATE TO TWO DIFFERENT PURCHASERS.

4. A. agrees verbally to sell an estate to B., he afterwards agrees in writing to sell it to C.; and then conveys it to B., in pursuance of the first contract, B. having notice of the second. Semble. C. cannot call on B. for a conveyance. Darson v. Ellis, 1 Jac. & Walk. 524.

5. If a vendor contract with two different persons for the sale to each of them of the same estate, the Court will primâ facie enforce the contract which was first made; and if the party with whom the second contract was made should, after notice of the first contract, procure a conveyance of the legal estate in pursuance of the second contract, the Court will, in a suit for specific performance by the first purchaser, against the vendor and the second purchaser, decree the latter to convey the estate to the plaintiff. Potter v. Sanders, 6 Hare 1.

6. A. and B. having entered into a verbal treaty for the purchase of certain premises belonging to A., and not being able to agree as to the amount of purchase money, A. addressed a letter to C., a third person, stating that he would take a certain sum from B. for the premises, reserving a small portion of the same for his sister, if C. approved of it. B. subsequently lodged the sum named by A. with C., of which lodgment C. made a memorandum on A.'s letter, with a remark that it was "a great price." During the period of this negotiation between A. and B., A. entered into a contract with D. for the sale of the same premises, and although notice of the agreement between A. and B. was given to D., actually conveyed the premises to D.:—Held, that D. having had notice of the agreement between A. and B., the conveyance to him must be considered as fraudulent, and should be delivered up to be cancelled, and that the conduct of A. having been very fraudulent, the costs of B. should in the first place be paid out of the funds lodged by her in the hands of C. Field v. Boland, 1 Dr. & Wal. 37.

7. A parol agreement for the purchase and possession delivered, decreed to be performed against a subsequent purchaser with notice, who had a conveyance, and had paid his money. Butcher v. Stapely, 1 Vern. 363.

8. W., after completing a contract to buy premises, told M. that he had done so. M. was afterwards informed by the vendor that the treaty with W. was off. M. did not make any further inquiry, but bought and took an assignment of the premises himself:—Held, that he must be held to have had notice of W.'s contract. Waldron v. Jacob, 5 Ir. B., Eq., 131.

V. ACTUAL PAYMENT OF CONSIDERATION NECESSARY.

9. Where a defendant, by his answer, insists that he is a purchaser for valuable consideration, and without notice, proof of payment of the purchase money is an essential part of the defence. Molony v. Kernan, 2 Dr. & War. 81.

10. The plea must be of a purchase for valuable consideration without notice, upon money actually paid; otherwise, it is disallowed. Harrison v. Southcote, 1 Atk. 538.

11. On plea of purchase for valuable consideration, the consideration must be actually paid; if, in fact, it is only secured to be paid, the plea will be overruled. Hardingham v. Nicholls, 3 Atk. 304.

12. Purchase for a valuable consideration bonâ fide paid:—Held, a good defence, though the consideration was much less than the real value. Bullock v. Sadler, Amb. 764.

VI. DISCOVERY BY.

1. A man who purchases without notice of a prior incumbrance, or prior right, shall not have his title impeached in equity, nor shall he be compelled to discover any writings which may weaken his title, neither shall any advantage be taken from him, which may defend him at law. Harding v. Hardrett, Rep. temp. Finch. 9; Heyman v. Gorneldon, id. 34; Snelling v. Squib, 2 Ch. Ca. 47; Wilkes v. Bodington, 2 Vern. 599; Stephens v. Gaule, id. 701. He must plead himself a purchaser without notice. Bodmin v. Vandenbendy, 1 Vern. 179.

2. Equity will not compel a man to discover what goods he really bought of a bankrupt after the bankruptcy, and before the commission sued out, where the party has no notice of the bankruptcy. Abery v. Williams, 1 Vern. 27.

3. Assignee of a mortgage from persons not having notice of mortgagor's being only tenant for life, not bound to discover whether he himself had notice. Sweet v. Southcote, 2 Bro. C. C. 66; Dick. 670.

4. A plea of purchaser without notice, is a bar to the discovery as well as the relief, but not insisted on by the defendant; he must answer and confess the notice, or the plaintiff may except to the answer; but if he does not except, the affirmative of proving notice will be on him, semble. Eyre v. Dolphin, 2 Ball & B. 303.

5. Bill by tenant in tail in possession, under marriage settlement, for discovery and delivery of title deeds. Plea, mortgage by tenant for life alleging himself to be seised in fee, and in possession of premises and deeds as apparent owner. Walkyn v. Lee, 9 Ves. 24.

6. Claimant under a marriage settlement, without notice of prior incumbrances, shall not be compelled to a discovery. Williams v. Lane, 8 Bro. P. C. 291.

7. A title deed of the defendant was ordered to be produced where it contained a recital that might affect him with constructive notice of the plaintiffs' interest in the estate. Neesom v. Clarkson, 2 Hare 166. n.; C. P. C. 93; 12 L. J., N. S., Ch., 99; 6 Jur. 1055.

8. An information made claim on behalf of a charity to a farm, out of which a fixed annual rent charge had for many years been paid. The defendant admitted the right to the rent charge, but contended that he represented parties who were purchasers of the farm for valuable consideration without notice. He admitted he had in his possession title deeds which made out his own title, but did not make out or evidence the title of the charity.—Held, that the defendant was not bound to produce them. Att.-Gen. v. Strutt, 3 Beav. 396; 10 L. J., N. S., Ch., 248.

9. Where the purchase of a reversionary interest was impeached on the ground of fraud and inadequate consideration, the purchaser was held bound to produce the deeds by which that transaction was effected, and all subsequent documents relating to it, but not any of the other title deeds. Addis v. Campbell, 1 Beav. 258; 8 L. J., N. S., Ch., 306.

10. A deed in the custody of a purchaser for valuable consideration which the bill impeached for fraud, ordered to be produced. Kennedy v. Green, 6 Sim. 6.

11. Under a commission against a bankrupt mortgagor, the commissioners have authority, by the 6 Geo. 4, c. 16, ss. 33, 34, to enforce from a mortgagee of the bankrupt's property the production of his mortgage deed. The rule that a purchaser for valuable consideration, without notice, cannot be compelled to discover his title deeds, does not extend to the mortgage or purchase deed itself. Exp. Caldecott, Re White, Mont. 55.

12. Person interested in issue devisavit vel non, refusing to be party to it, is yet allowed to attend trial by counsel, and ordered to produce deeds, etc., except those she held as mortgagee. Pindar v. Smith, 6 Madd. 48.

13. Motion, on the part of a plaintiff, for the production of a deed alleged to be in possession of the defendant as tenant in common with the plaintiff, refused, it appearing by the answer that the defendant had sold his share, and was in possession of the deed in question only as mortgagee to the purchaser. A mortgagee has no right to show the title of his mortgagor. Lambert v. Rogers, 2 Meriv. 489.

14. A jointress had her own part of the marriage settlement in her custody, and became possessed of her husband's, as his executrix; on motion, she was ordered to produce it to the clerk in court, but not to deliver it up, that being the very end of the bill. Aston v. Aston, 3 Atk. 802.

A jointress or purchaser ought to produce their deeds, to see if the lands they claim are comprised therein. Id.

15. A., the owner of an estate, first mortgaged it to B., and afterwards sold and conveyed it to C., to whom he delivered the title deeds. In a suit by B. against C., insisting on his priority, C., by his answer, professed to state the contents of the deed of conveyance to A. He admitted the possession of this and the other title deeds, but insisted that he was a purchaser for valuable consideration without notice; and he said that B. had no right or title to the production of the deeds, or any interest therein.—Held, that B. was entitled to the production of the conveyance to A., but that the other title deeds were privileged. Hunt v. Elmes, 27 Beav. 62; 5 Jur., N. S., 645; 28 L. J., Ch., 680; 7 W. R. 471.

If the defendant in his answer sets out partially the conveyance made to his vendor, he must produce the deed to verify the statement. Id.

16. Two trustees, one of whom was a solicitor, advanced money on mortgage. The mortgagor, with the concurrence of the solicitor trustee, sold part of the mortgaged property without disclosing the mortgage. Regular conveyances in fee to the purchasers were executed by the mortgagor, containing a recital that he was seised or otherwise well and sufficiently entitled in fee-simple. The solicitor trustee received the purchase money, and retained it. Eleven years afterwards both trustees executed a re-conveyance of the property so sold, the other trustee believing, on the representation of the solicitor trustee, that the property was then about to be sold by the mortgagor. Soon afterwards the solicitor trustee absconded, and the other trustee then filed a bill against the mortgagor and the purchasers, praying for foreclosure against them:—Held, that though the purchasers were purchasers for valuable consideration without notice, they could not avail themselves of any legal estate acquired by means of the re-conveyance, which, having been obtained by fraud, must be cancelled; and that they had purchased only the equity of redemption. Heath v. Crealock, 10 L. R., Ch., 22; 44 L. J., Ch., 157; 31 L. T., N. S., 650.

Held, that, under the form of conveyance adopted, neither the plaintiff nor the mortgagor was estopped from denying that the legal estate had passed by the conveyance to the purchasers. Ib.

Held, that a decree must be made against the purchasers, but for foreclosure and not for sale; and that the purchasers would not be ordered to deliver up the deeds which were in their possession. Ib.

1. A plaintiff sought to set aside a lease and to obtain mesne profits. The defendant, the assignee of the lease, insisted on its validity, and that he was a purchaser for valuable consideration without notice:—Held, that the defendant was bound to answer as to the amount of rents and profits, the particulars of his underletting and of his receipts, and what charges he had created. Robson v. Flight, 33 Beav. 268.

2. A son who was heir-at-law to his father, who was one of the executors and trustees of his father's will, though he had not proved the will, and whose Christian names and description were identical with those of his father, after his father's death, executed mortgages of freehold and leasehold property of the father, and applied the mortgage money to his own purposes. He handed over the title deeds to the mortgagees. The transaction took place without the knowledge of his mother and sister, who were co-trustees and co-executrices with him, and who had proved the will. The will had not been registered in the Middlesex registry, though the property was situate in that county. The mortgage deeds were registered. They purported to be executed by the absolute owner of the property, and the solicitor who acted for both parties believed the son to be the absolute owner. The son told him nothing about the father's will. The solicitor searched the Middlesex registry. The son took a beneficial interest under the trusts of the father's will. After the son's death the fraud was discovered, and the mother and sister, as trustees of the father's will, brought an action against the mortgagees, claiming a declaration that the mortgages were void against them, and delivery up of the title deeds. The other beneficiaries under the will were made defendants:—Held, that the son in executing the mortgage deeds was personating his father; that the deeds were forgeries and passed nothing to the mortgagees, except the son's beneficial interest under the father's will; and that the mortgagees could obtain no title by virtue of the Middlesex Registry Act. Re Cooper, Cooper v. Vesey, 20 L. R., Ch. D., 611; 51 L. J., Ch., 862; 47 L. T. 89; 30 W. R. 648. Affirming 51 L. J., Ch., 149; 45 L. T. 532; 30 W. R. 148.

Semble, the son could have been convicted of forgery by reason of his executing the mortgage deeds. Ib.

Held, also, that the mortgagees must deliver up the title deeds to the plaintiffs. Since the Judicature Act the Chancery Division has jurisdiction on the application of the legal owner of title deeds to order them to be delivered up by a purchaser for value without notice. MoLeod v. Drummond (14 Ves. 353; 17 Ves. 152) distinguished. Ib.

VII. PLEADING.

1. Averments, 7358.
2. Denial of Notice, 7359.
3. Ore Tenus, 7359.

1. Averments.

3. In the pleading of a purchase or mortgage, the defendant must plead that the seller or mortgagor was, or pretended to be, seised in fee. Head v. Egerton, 3 P. W. 281.

4. Plea of purchaser from one having a reversionary estate, and consequently not in possession, overruled, because it did not set out how the person from whom the title was deduced became entitled. Hughes v. Garth, 2 Eden 168; Amb. 421.

5. Bill by tenant in tail in possession under marriage settlement for discovery and delivery of title deeds; plea, mortgage by tenant for life alleging himself to be seised in fee and in possession of premises and deeds as apparent owner, allowed. Wallwyn v. Lee, 9 Ves. 24.

Averments necessary to plea of purchase for valuable consideration, without notice, that vendor or mortgagor was owner, or pretended owner, and that he was in possession, not that purchaser was. Id. 32.

6. Plea of a purchase for valuable consideration must allege seisin and possession in the vendor. Trevanian v. Mosse, 1 Vern. 246.

7. To a bill stating a settlement, under which certain hereditaments were limited to A. for life, with remainder to the plaintiff, and praying a delivery of the title deeds, the defendant put in a plea of purchase for valuable consideration without notice, averring that "A., before the execution of the conveyance, alleged that she was seised," and was in possession. The Court held that such a plea must aver that the vendor was seised, or pretended to be seised, and was in possession at the time when the conveyance was executed. Jackson v. Rowe, 4 Russ. 514; 9 L. J., Ch., 32.

Quere, whether such a plea, not averring a title prior to, and independent of, the settlement, is a good defence to such a bill. Ib.

8. Plea of purchaser for valuable consideration, stating vendor seised, etc., but not adding in possession, overruled. Lancashire (Lord) v. Kilmaine (Lady), 2 Moll. 403.

9. Bill by tenant for life in possession for discovery and delivery of the title deeds. Plea, a mortgage in fee, by a former tenant for life, alleging himself to be seised in fee without notice, ordered to stand for an answer, with liberty to except. Strode v. Blackburne, 3 Ves. 222.

10. Defendant pleading purchase for valuable consideration without notice, must aver that the vendor was seised and was in possession, which would be satisfied by possession of his tenant. Daniels v. Davison, 16 Ves. 252. S. P. Att.-Gen. v. Brookhouse, 17 Ves. 290.

1. A plea of purchase for valuable consideration without notice of plaintiff's title; it is sufficient to aver that the person who conveyed was seised, or pretended to be seised, when he executed the purchase deeds; but where a fine or non-claim is the bar, averment of actual seisin is necessary. Story v. Windsor (Lord), 2 Atk. 630; 1 Ch. Ca. 34.

In pleading, there is the same strictness in equity as at law. S. C. 2 Atk. 632.

If a person purchases an estate which he sees has a defect upon the face of the deed, yet a fine will be a bar, for that defect is the very occasion of levying the fine. Secus, as to a purchase from a trustee or mortgagee. Ib.

2. Plea of purchaser for value need not set forth the consideration paid. More v. Mayhew, 1 Ch. Ca. 34; 2 Freem. 175.

2. Denial of Notice.

3. If special notice of title is charged by bill, such notice must be denied as specially; a general demurrer is not sufficient. Radford v. Wilson, 3 Atk. 815.

4. On plea of purchase for valuable consideration without notice of plaintiff's title, it is not sufficient to deny notice at or before the execution of the conveyance to him; he must aver that he had none at or before payment of the purchase money. Story v. Windsor (Lord), 2 Atk. 630; 1 Ch. Ca. 34.

If a person purchase an estate which he sees has a defect upon the face of the deed, yet a fine will be a bar, for that defect is the very occasion of levying the fine. Secus, as to a purchase from a trustee or mortgagee. Ib.

5. Denying notice of plaintiff's title at the time of the execution of the deed of payment of the consideration money is not sufficient; you must swear that you had no notice at or before the execution. Fitzgerald v. Burk, 2 Atk. 397.

6. In a plea of a purchase, it is a sufficient denial of notice to say that at the time of purchase he had no notice, without saying, or at any time before. Jones v. Thomas, 3 P. W. 243.

7. A defendant in a plea of a purchase for valuable consideration, omits to deny notice; if the plaintiff replies to it, all the defendant has to do is to prove his purchase, and it is not material if the plaintiff proves notice; for it was the plaintiff's own fault, that he did not set down the plea to be argued, in which case it would have been overruled. Harris v. Ingledew, 3 P. W. 94.

8. Notice must be denied positively, not evasively. Cason v. Round, Pre. Ch. 226.

9. Bill by a dowress to remove trust term; defendant pleads himself a purchaser, but does not deny notice; ordered to answer. Bodmin v. Vandenbendy, 1 Vern. 179.

10. If a defendant in his answer relies generally on his right as a purchaser for value without notice, but does not specifically deny notice of a particular matter, e.g., a private Act, with which he is charged in the bill, and which would invalidate his title, the plaintiff, not excepting to the answer, is bound to prove notice. Att.-Gen. v. Marrett, 10 Ir. Eq. R. 167.

11. The bishop brings a bill against one that was an assignee of a lease, charging that defendant knew that the lease was expired, and that the same did appear by writing in his custody. Defendant pleads that he was a purchaser of the lease, and was then informed that there were fifty-seven years to come in the lease, and therefore gave nineteen years' purchase for it; allowed a good plea. Worcester (Bishop) v. Parker, 2 Vern. 255.

12. Plea averring in answer to a charge of constructive notice, that to the defendant's knowledge and belief there was no notice, disallowed. He ought to answer the facts, and the Court is to make the construction. Jerrard v. Saunders, 2 Ves. J. 187; 4 Bro. C. C. 322.

13. A defendant, who means to rely on his being a purchaser for value without notice, must, by his answer, deny notice, although it is not charged in the bill that he had notice. Ireland v. Kidd, Jon. & C. 249.

14. A defendant claiming as a mortgagee, and by his answer denying notice of the plaintiff's title, which was neither alleged by the bill nor proved, an inquiry for the purpose of affecting him with notice was refused; first, upon a petition to vary the minutes, and again upon a re-hearing. An inquiry as to what sums he had advanced upon the security of the mortgage, and at what times respectively, was granted. Hardy v. Reeves, 5 Ves. 426.

15. In plea of purchase for valuable consideration without notice, it is enough to deny notice generally, in plea, unless facts are specially charged in bill, as evidence of notice. Pennington v. Beechey, 2 Sim. & S. 282.

16. Where in a plea of purchase for valuable consideration, the purchaser omitted to deny notice, and the plaintiff replied to it, instead of setting it down for argument, if the defendant prove what he has pleaded, the bill as against him must be dismissed with costs. Eyre v. Dolphin, 2 Ball & B. 302.

So of an answer to that effect, unless fraud proved. Ib. 303.

A plea of purchaser without notice is a bar to the discovery as well as the relief; but if not insisted on by the defendant, he must answer and confess the notice, or the plaintiff may except to the answer; but if he does not except, semble, the affirmative of proving notice will be on him. Ib.

3. Ore Tenus.

17. The defence of purchaser for valuable consideration, without notice, must be stated distinctly in the pleadings, else it cannot prevail. Therefore, where it was not claimed as a ground of defence in an answer, or a plea, but only in an affidavit on a motion for a decree, it was not allowed. Phillips v. Phillips, 3 Giff. 200; 7 Jur., N. S., 1094; 5 L. T., N. S., 108. Affirmed 8 Jur., N. S., 145; 31 L. J., Ch., 321.

A. being entitled to an equity of redemption in fee in lands, by a deed of family arrangement, in February 1820, granted to his brother B. an annuity of 20*l.* charged on those lands, and payable on the death of his mother, C. By a settlement made on his marriage in May 1821, A. settled the lands, subject to the mortgage existing thereon, and he at the same time covenanted that they were not otherwise encumbered. A. died in 1825, and C. died in 1839. The first payment of the annuity became due in March 1840. In 1859 B. filed a bill against those claiming under the settlement for payment of the annuity. The defendant set up orally at the bar the defence that they were purchasers for value, without notice of B.'s annuity:—Held, that such defence should have been pleaded formally, and could not be set up orally at the hearing, and a decree was made against the defendants for payment of the annuity. Id.

Although a cause is heard on motion for decree, the defence of purchase for value without notice must still be set up by the answer. Where, therefore, the defendants merely stated by their answer that the plaintiff was a volunteer whose charge was invalid as against a subsequent purchaser for value:—Held, that the defendants could not in evidence raise the question of absence of notice of the plaintiff's charge. 8. C. 4 De G. J. & F. 208.

VIII. PURCHASER WITH NOTICE. IN GENERAL.

1. A purchaser with notice is bound to the same manner as his vendor. Although a purchaser with notice be not a party to the original fraud, yet he is considered an accessory after the fact. Dunbar v. Tredennick, 2 Ball & B. 819.

Where the evidence of notice in the purchaser was very loose, and there exists only a suspicion of it, equity will not act upon it. Id. 301.

2. Purchaser with notice is bound in all respects as the vendor: therefore, where tenant for life granted leases for lives under a power, and bound himself, upon the dropping of a life, to grant a new lease, with the same provision for renewal on the death of any person to be named in any future lease, and afterwards joined in a sale, though the power is exceeded; yet, if a life drops in the life of the lessor, the purchaser, having notice, must specifically perform, by granting a new lease with the same provisions. Brydges v. Chandos (Duke), 2 Ves. J. 437.

3. If a man will purchase with notice of another's right, giving a consideration will not avail him. Mead v. Orrery (Lord), 3 Atk. 238.

4. A mortgagee with notice of the settlement cannot protect himself as a purchaser, or be distinguished from the tenant for life, the mortgagor. Eyre v. Dolphin, 2 Ball & B. 290.

5. Purchaser, with notice of agreement to settle:—Held, a trustee. Skirne v. Meyrick, 2 Com. 700.

6. Notice of ancient articles, by which the estate is agreed to be settled on the husband for life, remainder, subject to a charge by way of jointure for the wife, to the heirs male of the husband, by his wife, shall not affect the title of a purchaser claiming under the husband by reason of the modern method of carrying such articles into execution. Senhous v. Earle, Amb. 285; 2 Ves. 450.

7. Those who, with notice of his title, deal with a person entitled to a partial interest in an estate, are responsible for any dealing with the property which professes to encumber and embarrass the estate of the other persons claiming under the same instrument. They are not at liberty to deal with the estate so as to embarrass the other persons claiming under the same instrument. Nixon v. Robinson, 2 J. & L. 4; 7 Ir. Eq. R. 520.

8. Equity will not relieve against a contract entered into by a child with a parent, for an appointment from him; and a purchaser from the parent, with notice of the fraud, will be affected with it. Palmer v. Wheeler, 2 Ball & B. 30.

9. A person, agreeing to purchase the right and interest of another, under a contract for a lease with full notice of the nature of it, cannot object to the payment of the consideration, either on the ground that such contract is not binding on the other party to it, or for want of title. Baxter v. Conolly, 1 Jac. & Walk. 576.

10. On the marriage of a female infant, her reversionary interest in choses in action was settled under the Court for her separate use for life, with remainder to her children. She afterwards contracted two subsequent marriages, but no further settlement was executed on those occasions:—Held, that the third husband, who had notice of the settlement previous to his marriage, and had for some years acquiesced in it, was bound thereby, and had no interest in the settled property. Ashton v. M'Dougall, 5 Beav. 56; 11 L. J., N. S., Ch. 344; 6 Jur. 447.

11. Account of arrears of annuity against purchaser with notice, length of time not being sufficient to presume satisfaction. Wynn v. Williams, 5 Ves. 130.

12. Purchaser from tenant in tail, with notice of agreement by him, to renew a lease which the father, tenant for life, had covenanted to renew, is bound to renew. Brooke (Earl) v. Bulkeley, 2 Ves. 498.

13. Lord of manor (his tenants refusing to renew) makes a lease of the premises to his daughter for ninety-nine years, and afterwards sells the manor to J., who has notice of the lease, but has security that the daughter when at age should surrender; daughter decreed to have the benefit of the lease. Jennings v. Selleck, 1 Vern. 467.

14. A sold to B. an estate in fee-simple expressly subject to a lease which purported to have been granted by A.'s predecessor in title. The lease was in fact invalid:—Held, that B. was not bound to give effect to the invalid lease. Smith v. Widdale, 25 W. R. 52.

15. A consignor who had purchased goods on account and at the risk of his correspondent and delivered them to the carrier, has no right, by reason of the variation of the accounts between them, to depart from his duty and deliver them to another person; and a party taking from the consignor with notice of the circumstances, is subject to the rights of the correspondent. Green v. Maitland, 4 Beav. 524.

16. An executor in trust for an infant residuary legatee, renews a lease, part of the testator's personal estate, in his own name, and having mortgaged it, assigns the equity of redemption to a trustee to sell for payment of his own debts; the trustee sells it to one who had notice of the infant's title. Purchase set aside. Walley v. Walley, 1 Vern. 484.

1. A made an equitable mortgage to B., and afterwards agreed to grant a lease to C., who had notice of the mortgage: B. afterwards purchased the equity of redemption, with notice of C.'s agreement, and took a conveyance to himself:—Held, that B. was bound, out of his whole interest, to grant the lease to C. Smith v. Phillips, 1 Keen 694; 6 L. J., N. S., Ch., 253.

2. A. contracted to purchase real estate and died, having made his widow his universal devisee and legatee. The widow married B., who in 1793 took a conveyance of the premises contracted to be purchased by A. to himself, and a trustee reciting the contract by A., his will, and death,—the marriage of his widow with B., and that "thereupon B. became entitled to the beneficial interest in the purchase." B. in 1817 sold the premises to C., and C. took a conveyance from B., and his trustee, reciting that by certain good and sufficient assurances in the law, the premises stood limited to B. and the trustee, but not reciting the deed of 1793. The widow died, leaving her heir-at-law, an infant, who came of age in 1825, in the lifetime of B. The bill was brought by the heir-at-law in 1836, after the death of B., for a conveyance of the estate:—Held, that the recital in the deed must be understood as stating that the widow was devisee of the purchased premises, and that the title of B. accrued by the marriage; that the Court would not presume in favour of a purchaser that B. had any other title than was so represented; that C. must be presumed to have been cognisant of, and to have taken the title of, B. his vendor; that the equitable title of the heir-at-law of the widow was not affected by the lapse of time; and that the heir-at-law was entitled to the decree for conveyance of the estate. Neesom v. Clarkson, 2 Hare 163; 12 L. J., N. S., Ch. 99; 6 Jur., 1055.

3. A. voluntarily agrees to give certain houses to his niece and the heirs of her body, after the death of himself and his wife, in case they should have no issue; but no conveyance was executed by A., though he lived above twenty years afterwards. In the meantime, A. becomes indebted by mortgage, judgment, etc., and by his will devises all his estate, both real and personal, to his wife. This agreement is not good against a purchaser for valuable consideration, although he had notice by being a subscribing witness to it. Pomell v. Pleydell, 1 Bro. P. C. 124.

4. B. purchased a reversionary interest of A. at a gross undervalue, and under circumstances which rendered the transaction void in equity. C. had notice of the invalidity of the contract, but ten years afterwards he purchased the reversion of B., paying to B. the full value; A. joined in the conveyance and confirmed the sale. The Court, being of opinion that C. had not taken proper steps to protect A. in the second transaction, set it aside and decreed a re-conveyance, on re-payment of the consideration given by B. to A. in the first transaction. Addis v. Campbell, 4 Beav. 401.

5. A devisee obtains a decree to hold and enjoy against the heir, who, it was supposed, had suppressed the will. Pending the suit, a third person gets an assignment of a mortgage made by the testator, and then purchases the equity of redemption of the heir, with notice of the will. The Court would not admit the purchaser to dispute the justice of the decree, nor to try at law whether the will was not cancelled by the testator. Finch v. Newnham, 2 Vern. 216.

6. By marriage settlement a rent charge was granted to trustees and their heirs, upon trusts for the husband and the issue of the marriage; and the lands were granted to other trustees for a term of years, upon trust to secure the rent charge. One of the trustees of the rent charge admitted that, before the execution of the settlement, he had notice of a prior incumbrance on the lands; and one of the trustees of the term denied that he had such notice. No evidence of notice was given:—Held, that notice to the trustees of the rent charge was sufficient; but there being no issue of the marriage in esse, the Court would not declare that their interests were bound by the prior incumbrance, but declared that the trustee had notice of it. Wise v. Wise, 2 J. & L. 403.

7. A tenant for life of real estates, with a power to charge 20,000*l.* for the portions of younger children, mortgaged his life estate; he covenanted with some of the mortgagees that he would not execute the power without their consent. He subsequently exercised the power for the benefit of his children, and created a term of 1,000 years to secure payment of the 20,000*l.*, and upon the marriage of one of his daughters he appointed 5,000*l.* to her for a portion. The trustees, and also the appointees, had notice of the mortgages and of the covenant entered into by the tenant for life:—Held, that the appointees were not entitled to any priority, and that they must be postponed to the previous mortgage. Hurst v. Hurst, 22 L. J., Ch., 538.

8. By the 70th section of the Conveyancing Act 1881, the title of the purchaser is protected even where an objection to the order appears on the face of it. Re Hall Dare's contract, 21 L. R., Ch. D., 41; 51 L. J., Ch., 671; 46 L. T. 755; 30 W. R. 556.

XXVII. Easements.

9. A. buys a house and finds 12 flues in it, but 14 chimney-pots on the wall:—Held, that he has constructive notice of an agreement under which the owner of the adjoining house uses the two remaining flues. Hervey v. Smith, 22 Beav. 299.

1. Where an owner in fee of two adjoining houses, let to A. and B. as yearly tenants, allowed A.'s house to have a waterpipe running into the well of B.'s house, and at a subsequent sale of the houses by auction each tenant purchased his own house, such privilege of water supply does not pass as against B. under an ordinary reservation in the conditions of sale of "rights of way and water and other easements." Russell v. Harford, 2 L. R., Eq., 507; 14 W. R. 982; 15 L. T., N. S., 171.

2. If a purchaser buys the fee-simple of a tenement for a valuable consideration, and has it conveyed to him without any reservation, he is not bound to take notice of the manner in which the tenement has, prior to the sale, been used by the vendor for the convenience of the adjoining tenement, on the principle that a grantor cannot derogate from his own grant. Suffield v. Brown, 10 Jur., N. S., 111; 33 L. J., Ch., 249; 12 W. R. 356; 9 L. T., N. S., 627; 4 De G. J. & S. 185; 3 N. R. 240; 2 N. R. 378.

When a purchaser buys a house, and has it conveyed to him without any reservation, he takes the house, not "such as it is," but such as it is described in the particulars of sale, and conveyed by the deed. Id.

In 1845 an owner of two adjoining tenements, a dock and a wharf, sold the wharf. The owner had been in the habit of allowing the bowsprits of ships in his dock to project over his wharf:—Held, that this was neither a continuous nor an apparent easement. Id.

The wharf having been sold in fee without reservation, it not being shown that there was any existing easement of this kind prior to the unity of possession which ended in 1845, and as this was neither a continuous nor an apparent easement:—Held, that a subsequent purchaser of the dock was not entitled to restrain a grantee of the purchaser of the wharf from interfering with his use of the dock in the manner above mentioned; in other words, that the dock owner could not exercise any right of placing ships in the dock in such a manner as that their bowsprits should overhang the wharf. Id.

3. In December 1864, B., who was in possession of land adjoining the river Thames, under an agreement for a lease for eighty years, gave notice to the Board of Works for the district that he desired to divert a public footway which crossed the land, and that he proposed to substitute a better footway, and also to make a new roadway to the water-side between two points specified, and throw the same open to the public. The vestry agreed to the application, subject to the proposed new roadway being made and thrown open to the use of the public, and the new footway being properly made. In April 1865, the justices made an order for the stopping up and diversion of the old footway. This was done by B., and he also constructed the new road. The owners of the fee, however, did not give their consent, and there was, in the opinion of the Court, no sufficient evidence of any actual dedication of the way to the public. In May 1866, a lease of the land to B. was executed, in which it was described as "All that piece of land, etc., as the same are more particularly delineated and described on the plan drawn in the margin hereof," and the habendum was made "subject to the existing rights of way over the said land." In the plan the new road was shown, but was marked "Private road." There were other rights of way over the land. In June 1866, B. assigned the lease for value to the B. company, and there was nothing to show that they had any notice of B.'s agreement, or of the existence of a right of way over the road, other than such notice as was given by the lease itself, there being, in the opinion of the Court on the evidence, nothing in the appearance of the road or in the extent of its user by the public, to convey to a person inspecting the property any notice that there was a public right of way. After other assignments the lease became vested in W., to whom the defendants were tenants. In the sale plan, by reference to which W. purchased, the road was marked "Private road," but appeared to terminate at the Thames at a point marked "Ferry from Blackwall stairs." The defendants stopped up the road. An information was filed by the attorney-general at the relation of the vestry of the parish, to restrain the defendants during the remainder of their term from obstructing the road. The defendants, by their answer, alleged that W. was a purchaser for value without notice of the agreement between B. and the vestry:—Held, by Fry, J., that there was a valid contract between B. and the vestry for a license to the public to use the new road during his term which the vestry could have enforced against B., and that probably W. ought to be held to have purchased with notice of it; but that, looking at the lease and the plan together, no notice of the existence of a right of way over the new road was given to the B. company, and that as they had no other notice of its existence, they were purchasers of the lease for value without notice of the right of way, and therefore entitled to hold the property free from it, and that the defendants, as claiming through them, stood in the same position, even if any of the intervening assignees had acquired the lease with notice of the right of way; and that the information must therefore be dismissed:—Held, on appeal, that as the defendants had not by their answer alleged that the B. company had no notice of the right of way, they could not avail themselves of the defence that the B. company were purchasers for value without notice; but that the defence that W. was a purchaser without notice was sustained, there not being enough on the sale plans to affect him with notice that there was a public right of way; and that, therefore, assuming the existence of an agreement which could have been enforced against B., it could not be enforced against the defendants. Att.-Gen. v. Biphosphated Guano Co., 11 L. R., Ch. D., 327; 49 L. J., Ch., 68; 40 L. T. 201; 27 W. R. 621.

4. The owner of land situated on an acclivity conveyed by deed of 1816 a portion of lower land, with liberty to enter on upper lands and fetch water from a spring, and to cut, open, cleanse, and cover in such gutters and drains as might be necessary for the purpose of conducting the spring to the conveyed land; and also with liberty to pass and repass for ingress and egress on the upper land around or adjoining the conveyed land, and to put any ladders against the cottages then intended to be built upon the conveyed land. By another deed of 1820, other part of the lower land was conveyed, with liberty to take water from specified springs in the higher land, and to make such reservoirs in a particular field, part thereof, as might be necessary for taking up water for family use, and other necessary purposes, and with liberty to pass for ingress and egress in the upper land surrounding or adjoining the conveyed land. By other deeds of 1824, other portions of the lower land were released, with all watercourses, particularly as the same ran to an inn on the conveyed land, from the upper land. By other deeds of 1825, further portions of the lower land were released, with liberty to fetch water for family and domestic uses at a well on the higher land. By other deeds of 1834, other part of the lower land was released, with liberty to the re-lessee to make a covered goit, or watercourse, across the bottom part of a field, part of the upper land, and to open and repair the same when necessary. Several years afterwards the upper land was sold, according to a particular, describing it as fit for building, and subject to conditions of sale, providing that if any mistake were made in the description of the premises, or if any other error should appear in the particulars, such error or omission should not annul the sale, but compensation should be given or taken. The existence of the easements was not stated in the particulars or conditions:—Held, first, that the circumstances of the purchaser living in the neighbourhood, being acquainted with the property, and passing constantly some of the wells on the lower land, supplied from the upper land, did not affect him with notice of the easements; secondly, that the existence of the easements, granted by any one of the deeds of 1816, 1820, and 1834, alone constituted a material defect in the title to the upper land; thirdly, that the existence of easements granted by the deeds of 1824 and 1825 would have been alone sufficient to render the title subject to such serious doubt that a purchaser could not be compelled to accept it; fourthly, that under the circumstances, and inasmuch as the whole purchased land did not exceed thirty acres, the purchaser could not be compelled to take the title, with compensation as to lands prejudicially affected, which admeasured about four acres and a half. Shackleton v. Sutcliffe, 1 De G. & Sm. 609; 12 Jur. 199.

1. A deed of conveyance to a purchaser of lands held under a lease purported to grant the whole of the demised premises without exception or qualification, and the covenants for title corresponded with the granting part; the vendor had previously assigned a portion of the premises to a railway company by a deed which had not been disclosed to the purchaser, but the works constructed by the company upon that part of the premises were of such a character as to be apparent to any one approaching them, and the purchaser was aware of them before he purchased:—Held, that the condition of the premises being known to both parties at the time of the contract, they should be taken to have contracted as to them in that condition, and that the deed of conveyance should be rectified so as to carry out the real contract between the parties. Young v. Halahan, 9 Ir. R., Eq., 70.

2. Real estate, all belonging to the same owner, was sold by auction under the order of the Court of Chancery in lots. Lot 9 was sold as building land to S., with right of way over lot 16. At the time of the sale a right of footway only existed. But by the conveyance, which was duly executed, a right of way for carts and carriages was granted. S. conveyed lot 9 with the right which had been conveyed to him to C. Lot 16 was sold to T., who had no notice that a larger easement than the original one had been conveyed to the purchaser of lot 9. C. employed a builder to carry materials with carts over lot 16, but T., the owner of the latter lot, interfered. C. accordingly filed a bill for an injunction, and T. answered and filed a cross bill for a declaration that C. was entitled to a footway only. C. had not completed his purchase. Conflicting evidence was given as to inquiries and conversations at the sale, and it appeared that C. was present during the whole of the sale, and noted down the biddings; in consequence of which T. attempted to fix him with notice that lot 16 was subject only to the more limited right:—Held, that C. being in possession of the legal estate, and having purchased the land as building land, was entitled to an injunction against T., who was only an equitable owner, although T. purchased subject to the limited right only, and had no notice of the larger right actually conveyed. Curtis v. Thomas, Thomas v. Curtis, 33 L. T., N. S., 664.

3. The purchaser of lands situate below the level of the sea is bound to inquire how all walls necessary for the protection of his property against the encroachments of the sea are maintained. Morland v. Cook, 6 L. R., Eq., 252; 37 L. J., Ch., 825; 18 L. T., N. S., 496; 16 W. R. 777.

4. On the sale of a house or stables in coul de sac, the vendor is not bound to show a title to the roadway. Curling v. Austin, 10 W. R. 682; 2 Dr. & Sm. 129.
